ly march song of a patriotic character," "Molly Lee." Among the two-minute Standard records was a harp solo of "Annie Lauri," by Roxy P. La Rocca, "who," said the supplement note, "is at present associated with Manuel Romain in vaudeville as his accompanist. This is Mr. La Rocca's first record for the Edison phonograph." The June Phonogram also contained a list of ten special Amberol cylinders not offered for sale to the public but given as a bonus to Edison owners who bought an attachment that enabled their machines to play both two and four-minute records. One of the gift numbers was a characteristic Romain solo, which again was a composition of Fred Helf's: "If I Must Say Farewell, Kate, let Me Kiss Your Lips Goodbye."

Romain was described for the first time as an exclusive Edison artist in the Phonogram for September, 1910, when he sang "You'll Never Find Another Love Like Mine." Under the heading, "You Are Never 'Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway' if You Own an Edison Phonograph," the statement was made that: "Marie Delna, Carme Melis, Marguerite Sylva, Stella Mayhew, Marie Dressler, Marie Narelle, Murray K. Hill, Sophie Tucker, Manuel Romain and Victor Herbert . . . can be heard only on Edison records. They are absolutely under exclusive contract to sing only for the Edison Phonograph." (This statement certainly was not true of Hill, who was then merrily recording comic monologs for every American company).

In October, 1910, La Rocca made another harp solo — "The Mocking Bird" — while Romain had another Helf ballad listed in a special classification — a list of 24 records not for general sale, which would be given to Edison owners who persuaded their friends to buy phonographs. The title was the number which the Hayden Quartet had sung on the back of one of his Victors: "Where the Ivy's Clinging, Dearie, 'Round an Old Oak Tree." The tenor sang "When the Autumn Turns the Forest Leaves to Gold" for the November list, and Edison owners were told: "Songs of this type are the particular forte of this famous minstrel tenor whose sweet voice can be heard on none but Edison records."

This statement, however, soon ceased to hold true. When he returned in 1911 from a Western vaudeville tour, Romain also began to make Columbia records and he may never again have been an exclusive Edison singer. If that is true, it did not impair his association with Edison. The Columbia catalogs for several years carried this brief description: "Mr. Romain is one of America's best counter-tenors, and one of the most popular singers on the Columbia list. His records of popular ballads, periodically issued, are at all times sure of an extensive welcome and sale."

Just why Columbia considered Romain a counter-tenor I have never understood. His voice actually was a rather deep, "chesty" tenor, nearer the baritone range than it was to counter-tenor. At any rate, during the next five years or so, Romain made a large number of Columbia records. Occasionally he was coupled with some other artist, but more often both sides were by "Mannie." His first Columbia was No. A1192, "Let's Grow Old Together, Honey" on one side, with "I Love the Girl My Father Loved" on the other. He introduced Columbia patrons to many "hits," including "The Curse of an Aching Heart," "Daddy Has a Sweetheart," "I Miss You Most of All," "That's How I Need You," "When I Lost You," "What a Wonderful Mother You'd Be" and "When It's Orange Blossom Time in Loveland." His last Columbia, "The Ashes of My Heart," was issued late in 1916. I have not heard all his Columbia records, but the recording in those I do know strikes me as mediocre and doesn't give a true reflection on the genuine beauty of Romain's voice. One of his records, "She's the Daughter of Mother Machree," coupled with Henry Burr's "Dear Old-Fashioned Irish Songs My Mother Sang to Me" (No. A1951) stayed in the catalog until the early 1930's and was renumbered and issued in a special Irish series.

Returning to the tenor's Edison associations, his popularity most likely touched its highest point after the indestructible Blue Amberol cylinders were introduced in 1912. For years, Romain was one of the most prolific contributors to the four-minute cylinder list. Twenty-nine solos by him were listed in the 1919 Blue Amberol catalog and others had been previously cut out. In only three — "The Little House Upon the Hill," "Under Southern Skies" and "When the Old Folks Were Young Folks" — is he assisted by a chorus.

Edison Diamond Discs also came out in 1912 and for the first time made it possible to hear a perfect reproduction of a singer's voice. (That's a statement that some of my collector friends, who prefer the cylinders to the "Recreations," will dispute, but I insist I'm right. The Blue Amberols could not sustain a direct comparison "tone-test," such as was given the discs). But for some reason, Romain did not appear on discs until 1915, and many of his popular cylinders never were published in "platter" form. His first Diamond Disc, No. 50230, contained two highly popular ballads, "That's an Irish Lullaby" and "When I Dream of Old Erin." (This Spanish-descended tenor seems to have had a musical soft spot for Ireland!) Then, although he contributed steadily to the Blue Amberol list, he didn't have another disc until 1917 when he came through with a charming rendition of "Mammy's Little Coal Black Rose," coupled with "If I Had All the World and Its Gold." He followed through a month or so later with "My Sunshine Jane." In 1918, Edison coupled two Romain ballad "hits" — "It's Never Too Late to be Sorry" and "A Little Birch Canoe and you." And in 1919 came "Did You mean All You Told Me Last Night?"

After this, Romain seems to have done no more recording for Edison or any other company until 1926. However, in 1922, Edison issued his Diamond Disc of the English music hall ballad, "A Broken Doll," which he had recorded six years before. I have owned pressings of this record made from two different masters, and was struck by an oddity, that the words of the final refrain differ in the two versions. "A Broken Doll" apparently was Romain's least popular Diamond Disc, for it was catalogued only two or three years. Its coupling, a soprano solo by Margaret A. Hellar of a weak song, "Happy 'Happy Li'l Sal," may have handicapped it.

Two more Romain Diamond Disc offerings were combined in 1924 on No. 51231. One, "I Will Love You When the Silver Threads Are Shining 'Mong the Gold," was recorded in 1915, but had been shelved in keeping with Edison's peculiar custom of frequently not publishing a record until the song's popularity was past. Romain's cylinder of "I Will Love You," made in 1910, was always one of his best sellers. The other side of the disc was "Why Don't You Come Back Home Again? (We're Too Old to Go to You)," a pathetic plaint of aged parents who had been deserted by their son. It was made in 1916.

As a youngster I felt, as I still feel, a great admiration for Manuel Romain, and I distinctly remember a vivid dream I had in 1926. I had been wondering why Romain was no longer making records and worrying a bit as to what had become of him. Then, in the dream, I heard a Diamond Disc on which he sang "I'm Afraid of You," a ballad he had made popular on a 1910 cylinder. Still dreaming, I exclaimed joyfully, "The old boy is as good as ever!"

A day or two later I went to see my Edison dealer and found that "the old boy" actually was back on the job, although he hadn't again recorded "I'm Afraid of you." And indeed he was as good as he had ever been. His new record was the one that I played years later for Jim Winne. One side was "I Wish I Had My Old Gal Back Again" and the other was "Am I Wasting My Time On You?" The songs were tunelessly inconsequential, but the singing ranked well with the best that the 56-year-old "Mannie" had ever done. I rejoiced mightily at his return to phonograph activity—but how upset I would have been had I known that the man whose full-throated tones were thrilling me was even then wasting away from anemia and cancer! The fact remains that Romain's type of son~ as well as his singing style, remained unchanged, is shown by his having made a cylinder of a number called "I Wish I Had My Old Girl Back Again," in 1911. It was a different composition from the 1926 number, in which "Gal" was substituted in the title.

When Moving . . .

It is essential in order to receive your magazines regularly that subscribers notify the circulation department three weeks before the date of issue. Write old and new address to HOBBIES, 1006 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5. Ill.

A couple of months later came the next to the last record that Manuel Romain was to make for Edison or anybody else. It was 51786, a ballad with what now seems the sadly prophetic title of "Gone!" On the other side Arthur Fields sang "My Dream of the Big Parade." Romain's last Edison record came out in November, 1926, just a month before his death. It coupled two James Thornton songs of the 1890's, "My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon" and "She May Have Seen Better Days." It would be interesting to know how many unissued records by him Edison, out of the phonograph business since 1929, still has on file.

The story of Manuel Romain, sweet-voiced minstrel and vaudeville tenor, is almost told. But I have not yet mentioned the records that he made for Emerson in 1916-17, after his friend, Victor Emerson, the veteran Columbia recording expert, left Columbia to start his own company. Romain was one of many Columbia artists who let friendship with Emerson lead them into what must have proved a disappointing business association. Emerson began by producing single-faced six-inch records selling for a dime and double-faced seven-inch ones for a quarter, but in 1918 switched to making, first nine-inch, then ten and twelve-inch discs.

I have my heart set on finding two of the seven-inch Emersons, which are almost never seen anymore. One is the famous "Barbershop Monolog," by Jim Thornton, the several times mentioned composer of "When You Were Sweet Sixteen." The other is No. 7117, "The Hippodrome Minstrel Medley," called "a descriptive medley with effects by orchestra." On this, Romain apparently sang the refrains of nine old-time popular songs, some of them entirely out of his usual groove. Included were "A Hot Time in the Old Town," "Hear Dem Bells," "Lazy Moon," "Little Alabama Coon," "Hello, My Baby," "Oh I Don't Know, You Ain't So Warm," "Oh, Dem Golden Slippers," "Under the Bamboo Tree," and "Oh, Didn't He Ramble!" Don't ask me how all that could be squeezed onto one side of a seven-inch record! The other side was devoted to his famous interpretation of the great 1904 ballad hit, "Where the Sunset Turns the Ocean's Blue to Gold."

Also of reminiscent interest were No. 7115, on which Romain sang two favorite old Dave Graham Songs, "My Dad's Dinner Pail" and "Paddy Duffys' Cart," to an unusual accompaniment of cornet, xylophone and piano, and 757, containing his version of Paul Dresser's 1905 classic, "My Gal Sal," doubled with "Arrah

Go On, I'm Gonna Go Back to Oregon," by Samuel Ash

Two other 1917 Emerson records by Romain were No. 759, "The Old Flag Never Touched the Ground" (with "I've Got the Army Blues," by Morton Harvey") and 765, "The Trail to Sunset Valley" doubled with "Rackety-Coo," by Grace Nash (Grace Kerns) and Samuel Ash. In the same year Romain also sang "My Own Iona" on a vertical-cut Starr record. Starr records were the forerunners of Gennetts. If he made more for Starr or other little known companies, I have not heard of them. As far as I know, he never sang after 1917 for any company except Edison, but the infrequent and irregular appearance of his records suggests that he was not under contract and that he was devoting nearly all his time to stage appearances.

So here we take leave of Manuel Romain, a gallant trouper of the old school who, in spite of incurable illness and the depression his physical condition must have made him feel, kept his courage high and retained his glorious voice unto the last. As long as there are collectors of Edison cylinders and discs, and their number steadily increases, the name of Manuel Romain will remain not only one of the most glamorous of the minstrel and vaudeville history of his day, but he also will rank among the outstanding contributors to the popular repertoire of the old-fashioned phonograph. "Mannie's" himself has long been gone, but much of the good that his life's work accomplished still lives, and will live.

Since the foregoing was written, Raymond Walker, the song writer, has called my attention to references which Edward B. Marks made to Romain in his book, "They All Sang." The veteran music publisher declared that "to plant a song with Dick José or Manuel Romain was tantamount to having a nation-wide hit, because the minstrel tenors never missed. They had a practiced quaver in their high, pure, almost soprano voices that served them for years. They carried their audience in their pockets." Marks also recalled that Romain introduced "Where the Sunset Turns the Ocean's Blue to Gold." I might mention that my friend Ray Walker composed the music of Romain's first Columbia offering "Let's Grow Old Together, Honey," which was also a success on a 1911 Blue Amberol.

I have likewise received the following letter from Hattiemay Thomas, the city clerk of Quincy, Massachusetts, in reply to one from me, asking for a copy of Romain's death certificate:

"According to our records, Manuel A. Romain died in Quincy on December 22, 1926. Cause of death: Acute anemic hemorrhage—carcinoma of bladder. His birthplace is given as Spain and he was about 56 years old at the time of death. He was buried in the New Calvary Cemetery in Boston, Mass. We have no information concerning surviving relatives."

Miss Thomas' letter does little except confirm the statement that the tenor was born in Spain and seems to indicate that Romain was his real name instead of one assumed for the stage. The absence of a birth date is especially disappointing. Of course, it does reveal his middle initial to be A.—but we don't know what the A. stands for!

Next Month — ELIZABETH SPENCER

ADVERTISING CARDS

Mary Moore, 35 Noblock Court, Albany 5, N. Y. Buys Advertising Cards of the 80's. Sells Lists to Collectors. 25c each. s15

CIGARETTE CARDS

Charles Bray, East Bangor, Penna. Buys cigarette, tobacco, caramel cards. I will pay best cash prices for above. t25

AUCTIONEER

Simpson, Wendell S. Auctioneer, Wataga, Ill. Specializing in the sale of antiques. je25

BASEBALL — FOOTBALL ITEMS

Wirt Gammon, 512 Mount Vernon Circle, Chattanooga 5, Tenn. Pre-1920 baseball wants; caramel, cigarette cards, ball park post cards. Baseball or football, mugs, figures, etc. n15

BOTTLES

Gardner, Chas. B., Box 27, New London, Conn. Buy flasks, documents, advertisements and pictures from Early American Glass Works. aul6

HOOKEK RUG PATTERNS

Mrs. Royal F. Manson, Hudson, Mass. Hooked Rug patterns, books, frames, wool swatches & cutting machines. Write for price list. o15

NUMISMATICS

Max B. Mehl, 421 Mehl Bldg., Fort Worth, Tex. Largest coin firm in U. S. Est. 49 yrs. Everything in coins, etc. Send for free 60 pp. Ill. Coin Cat. You'll like it. ja25

RAILROADS

O. Davies, 1214 LaSalle St., Chicago 10, 14, buys R. R. time tables, histories, pamphlets, locomotive catalogs, etc. n15

OCCUPATIONAL SHAVING MUGS

L. W. Evans, Box 412, Lenexa, Kan. Collector will pay liberal prices for occupation and sporting designs. d15

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. (Except for change in address, no twelve months rate.) changes permitted on the low three and

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

ELIZABETH SPENCER

By JIM WALSH

A 1915 photograph of ELIZABETH SPENCER

Sometimes I am asked what I shall write about for HOBBIES when I have run out of recording artists. The answer is, I shan't run out. A set of books the size of the Encyclopaedia Britannica would be required to publish an exhaustive account of all the American performers who made records at some time from Edison's invention of the phonograph in 1877 to the advent of electric recording in 1925. This would leave the task of setting forth the exploits of "crooners" and swing bands to more willing hands than mine and would also bequeath the operatic stars and other "celebrity artists" to more capable commentators than I. And if my writing were extended to chronicling the achievements of the pioneer British artists another group of volumes almost of Britannica scope would become necessary.

It is often said that only a handful of artists could be recorded with reasonable fidelity in the acoustic era, but that is true of only the earlier years. When I wake in the middle of the night one of the things I worry about is the disconcerting knowledge that I could turn out an article a month for the next hundred years and still have left artists worth writing about at the end of my century of exertion. In other words, life is too short. But, since there's nothing much we can do about that, let's consider now the career of one of the most glamorous and popular of women record makers—the late Elizabeth Spencer, who was probably Thomas A. Edison's favorite soprano, just as Walter Van Burnt, with whom she frequently sang, was his best liked tenor.

This accomplished lady's career as a phonograph singer was comparatively brief. Her name first appeared in the Edison cylinder list for February, 1911, and she does not appear to have made records after suffering a nervous breakdown in 1926. But in those fifteen years she won great popularity and a loyal following that few other singers enjoyed.

Probably the first mention of Elizabeth Spencer as a singer for records appeared in the Talking Machine World for December 15, 1910, in an article headed "New Edison Artists":

"Among the artists recently secured for the domestic catalog, the one of whom the most is expected by the company is Elizabeth Spencer, the well-known mezzo-soprano. Miss Spencer, who has hosts of admirers among the patrons of vaudeville, also enjoys a splendid reputation in concert circles, and will be a regular contributor to the Edison catalogs, beginning with the February lists. Her voice is a rich, full mezzo-soprano of an unusually sympathetic quality, her vocal style is pleasing in the extreme, and her enunciation is delightfully distinct; all of which equips her in an unusual manner for record making. The National experts are delighted with her work and regard her as a rare 'find'—so much so that they have secured her for a number of years under an exclusive contract to sing only for Edison records. Frank Ormsby, tenor, who is associated with Miss Spencer in duet work on the concert platform, is another artist who has recently identified himself with the Edison catalog."

Before going on to consideration of Miss Spencer's first records, perhaps it would be well to give brief consideration to her personal background. Her maiden name was Elizabeth Dickerson and she was born in St. Louis, but I have not ascertained her birthdate. When I asked the registrar of the New Jersey State Department of Health at Trenton to let me have a copy of her death certificate, the request was curtly declined on the ground that I had no legal right to the information it contained. That was the only such refusal I have ever had in all my research work. I think we may assume that since Elizabeth Spencer's son, Allen B. Spencer, was with an engineering corps in the first World War, she was probably between 35 and 40 when her first records appeared. According to an obituary notice in the Denver Post for Tuesday, April 22, 1930, she was "born to the purple," and "her social traditions were linked to the French aristocracy of St. Louis through her mother" who married Captain John Dickerson, an officer of the Confederate Army. After Dickerson's death, his widow married William Gilpin, who became in 1861 the first governor of the Territory of Colorado. The Post article continues that the singer "as a child, with her sister, Lu and Louise, and her brother Sidney, was brought to Colorado, to live in the log house then known as the Gubernatorial Mansion."

That last statement gives me pause. Gilpin was territorial governor for only one year, being succeeded by J. Evans in 1862. If Elizabeth Spencer actually lived in the Colorado governor's "mansion" she must have been more than 50 when she began making records. Pending further evidence, I shall prefer to believe that Mrs. Dickerson's marriage to William Gilpin took place some years after the latter's brief experience as governor.

Quoting further from the Post obituary:

"She attended Loretta Convent and Eastern schools. Endowed with natural gifts, she became an accomplished linguist, played the violin and piano like a virtuoso, and possessed a singing voice of such loveliness that impresarios did not wait for her to seek them out, but they came vainly (to impress) on Mrs. Gilpin her duty to permit her daughter to make opera her career. Steeped in convention, the mother declined to permit her daughter to enter upon a career, so she crooned lullabies instead of singing arias. As years passed and her splendid gifts attracted more and more attention, she accepted an offer from Thomas A. Edison Recording Company, and her voice, a dramatic soprano, has added to the happiness of thousands of homes."

WANTED

The following Odeon records

by
ELISABETH RETHBERG

- 76215 Pastorale (Bizet) (8199)
- 76216 Die Einsame (Pataky) (8199)
- 76229 Freundliche Vision (Strauss) (8200)
- 80086 Staendchen (Strauss) (8200)
- 80160 AfricanaerIn-Leb'wohl (8009)
- 80161 Carmen-Arie der Micaela (81059) (8009)
- 80165 Zauberfloete-Ach ich fuehls (81061)
- 80167 Zigeunerbaron-Lied der Saffi (8010)
- 80168 Der Sylphe des Friedens (Mozart) (8010)
- Carmen and Madame Butterfly duets with RICHARD TAUBER

★ ★ ★
COLUMBIA

"GRAND OPERA RECORDS"

By MARCELLA SEMBRICH, EDOUARD DE RESZKE, SCHUMANN-HEINK, CAMPANARI, SUZANNE ADAMS, ANTONIO SCOTTI and CHARLES GILBERT.

★ ★ ★
VICTOR RED SEA DISCS with MONARCH and DE LUXE Labels.

★ ★ ★
BRUNSWICK classical vocal records by famous singers—"New Hall of Fame" series, etc.

ZONOPHONE (Disco Zonofono, etc.) records by EUGENIA MANTELLI, CARUSO, CALVE POL PLANCON, DELMAS and other great singers.

★ ★ ★
STEPHEN FASSETT

Box 285, West Falmouth, Mass.
Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Masoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

212 PAGES - 133 ILLUSTRATIONS
$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

Make checks payable to Lightner Publishing Corp.

ORDER YOUR COPY FROM

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

Later, I shall quote again from the Denver Post. But now I should like to fill in a few details omitted in that article, written by Frances Wayne. A 1914 Edison Blue Amberol catalog said:

"Miss Spencer was born in St. Louis, but has spent the greater part of her time in Denver. After studying under Bouny in Paris, Miss Spencer embarked upon the professional career which has proven such a success. She has toured the country in musical comedies. Her great popularity among music lovers is due to her superb voice, which is unquestionably one of the purest and sweetest sopranos which the phonograph has recorded. To the rare quality of her voice Miss Spencer adds a wonderful technique, singing with perfect poise and ease under all conditions." It is perhaps worth mentioning here that another Spencer — Grace Spencer, who was probably the first woman to make records professionally — also studied with the distinguished Belgian baritone, Jacques Bouhy. And Grace Spencer's parents also objected to her having a career in opera, so she gave up her dreams of acclaim at the Metropolitan in favor of marriage, as did Elizabeth Dickerson, whose first marriage was to a Denver man, Otis Spencer. Elizabeth Spencer's first vocal instructor was Hattie Sims, of Denver, who had been a pupil of Blanche Marchesi.

One of my faithful friends at the Edison laboratory, learning that I contemplated an article on Elizabeth Spencer, kindly volunteered the following comments:

"We knew very little of Miss Spencer's background. Just before she became an Edison artist she was singing at Churchill's restaurant, a very well known, high class place, and Elizabeth was a star performer there. She was a very likable person, a willing worker and tried to accommodate herself to the vagaries of horn recording. She never showed an 'artistic temperament.' She married Southworth after she had started on her record career, and moved to Montclair. Southworth was a broker in cotton, or so I understood.

"One time the Edison Mixed Quartet, of which Miss Spencer was a member, was trying to record the old gospel hymn, 'Bringing in the Sheaves,' but after a long session the best they could bring in was 'Cheese.' No matter how they tried to pronounce it the record played back 'cheese' and it was given up for the time, as the quartet was all in. I suppose it was the horn that caused it.

"Another time and another song, Elizabeth was to sing a solo and had trouble getting a word to sound right. I think it was 'neck' and it sounded like 'ke-neck.' Miss Spencer finally got to laughing so much she quit, but after practicing the thing she came back later and recorded it O. K.

"The only time I remember Elizabeth Spencer really mad was not because of recording but of something done to her car. She told us that she had an afternoon engagement to sing at the Montclair High School. She had taken her new car and parked in front of the school. When she came out she found the car covered with chalk marks. It was around Halloween and some kids had written on the car. While the chalk could be wiped off, the scratches still stayed on the paint. . . . Dave Kaplan was a member of the orchestra at Churchill's for three years, and was an admirer of her singing ability and character. Once in a while Elizabeth would make a remark about something she learned at a private school. Occasionally she might refer to some happening at home that struck her as funny and tell us about it."

From other sources I have learned that a delightful sense of humor was one of Elizabeth Spencer's engaging characteristics. This was amusingly exemplified when Thomas A. Edison thought that he had discovered a means of doing away with tremolo in his recording artists' voices. "The Old Man" hated wobbly tones worse than anything else, and he decided that this could best be remedied by tightly strapping the singer's upper chest with adhesive tape before a recording session began. The veteran Edison employee, Andy Webber, was much embarrassed when he was told that he had been assigned to approaching the women artists and getting their permission to do experimental taping. But he finally reflected, my informant says, that "Lizzie Spencer has told me all the best jokes I know," and decided that she wouldn't be offended. She wasn't. She laughed heartily and said she was willing to make the "sacrifice" for her art. However, a process of trial and error proved that adhesive tape didn't cure excessive vibrato and to Andy's intense relief the idea was abandoned.

Now let's go back to the beginning of Miss Spencer's recording career. Photographs of the soprano and her duet partner, Mr. Ormsby, appeared in the February issue of Edison's New Phonogram, and their first record was a four-minute Amberol of "Alma, Where Do You Live?" a waltz song from the musical comedy, "Alma." "The number," we read, "is presented exactly as in the show, Miss Spencer singing the solo parts, with the chorus rendered as a conversational duet. . . This is the first Edison record made by these artists, who are well known in church and concert circles as accomplished duettists, and it will be seen at once that they are a decided acquisition to the Edison catalog."

RECORDS

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. S6008

REGULAR AUCTIONS classical vocal records. Free lists.—S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colo. o 3652

WANTED: Phonograph records of cornet solos. Buy or swap.—Steve Gilman, 66 Sims, Newport, R. I. au1521

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 15 First Ave., New Town Square, Pennsylvania. o122741

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. au6476

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rareties. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan, Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

WE BUY contents of homes, furniture, and Victrola records and sell them.—Curlo Shop, 106A Court St., Brooklyn, N. Y. Phone - TR 5-2186 n60201

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. au3023

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants." For information write or visit —Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., N. Y. 28, New York. n126581

WILL BUY used phonograph records, collections or dealer's stock, any amount, made before 1940, $15 to $50 per hundred.—Jacob S. Schneider, 128 W. 68th St., New York 23, New York. au68801

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp please.—"Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d124461

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. S3004

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS wanted: Highest prices paid for vocal operatic and concert songs. Send for free buying list.—Ball, 1135 DuPont, Miami, Fla. d6257

(To be Concluded)

MISCELLANEOUS

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 617 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

WANTED: music rolls for a Mills Company violana virtuoso (two violins and piano combination)—and a western coin-operated electric piano. Box Z. L. M. c/o HOBBIES. aux.

MELODEONS, Melodeon organs. Beautiful restored instruments for sale. Will buy instruments needing repairs. Expert repairing service.—C-sharp Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich.

OLD TIME RECORDS. Operatic, instrumental, popular. All your favorite artists represented. Priced reasonably. Records bought. Write wants or visit.—Heyman, 628 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. d3844

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues.—Elmer Moore, 1085 14th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. s6844

Wanted: Miniature pianos and organs.—Mrs. Tufts, 9051 Riverview Road, Washington 20, D. C. au3633

FOR SALE: 90 Ampico player piano rolls by outstanding recording artists.—Dr. Herman L. Kretschmer, 200 East Pearson Street, Chicago, Ill. s3882

Rosewood square piano; Mathushek. Circa 1862. Excellent condition. Make offer. Write.—Raymond Devenport, R. R. 2, Madison, Mo. s3234

Rare Vocal Recordings, including imports. Free lists.—Music Den, 826 Irving Street, San Francisco, Calif. d6276

FOR SALE: One Nelson & Wiggins automatic player in walnut case. Contains piano unit, 2 drums, xylophone, castanet, tambourine, cymbals, etc. Has 10 tune perforated roll. New rolls currently available. Excellent condition. Send 25c for photograph and particulars.—H. R. Quinn, 105 Westmoreland, Montgomery 6, Alabama. o40001

HAMMOND ORGAN, Model B, 4 leg spinet type with speaker, $1,950.—Lee, 934 N. Lancaster, Dallas, Tex. au1002

OLD SMALL HOHNER accordion. Made in Germany.—Mrs. A. E. Clauss, P. O. Box 313, El Cajon, Calif. au1441

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Everything. Catalog 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 6, Colo. jly12867

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

ELIZABETH SPENCER

(Continued from the August Issue)

By JIM WALSH

Elizabeth Spencer is one of this group of Edison artists, photographed in September, 1914. The picture was recently found by Fred J. Rabenstein at the Edison laboratory. Mr. Rabenstein thinks the artists and technicians probably were assembled to record a medley of airs from a Gilbert and Sullivan operetta. In the front row, the second, fourth and fifth women, reading left to right, are not yet identified. The first is Marie Kaiser, soprano; third, Elizabeth Spencer; fifth, Helen Clark, mezzo-soprano; sixth, E. Eleanor Patterson, contralto; and seventh, Charlotte Kirwan, soprano. Second row: Albert Farrington, baritone; Edward Meeker, comedian; Frederick Wheeler, baritone (Wheeler's duet partner, John Young, tenor, is just behind him); Harvey Hindermeyer, tenor; Harvey N. Emmons, recording expert; Royal Fish, tenor; William F. Hooley, bass; Vernon Archibald, baritone; John F. Burckhardt, pianist; and Emory B. Randolph, tenor. Fred Rabenstein is behind Archibald and Burckhardt. The three men standing behind Emmons are: Walter H. Miller, Edison recording manager; H. Voorhis, technician, and W. H. A. Cronkhite, recording director. In the rear row are: Donald Chalmers, bass; Andy Weber, of the Edison staff; George Agnew, technician; Robert A. Gayler, pianist; and Eugene A. Jaudas, violinist and leader of Jaudas' Society Orchestra.

beth Spencer's being a hit. In March, she was represented by a four-minute solo, "The Songs My Mother Used to Sing." She and another well known soprano, Inez Barbour, also sang "Hear Me, Norma," from Bellini's opera, "Norma," on an Amberol record, and Miss Spencer contributed a solo; "Just a-Wearyin' for You," to the two-minute list. Thus, at the very beginning of her Edison association, the accomplished artist was giving proof of her remarkable versatility, which helped her to sing well all types of music from the frankest of "popular" tunes (she even did a duet or two with that happy-go-lucky, ragtime specialist, Billy Murray) to exacting operatic arias. But she was best loved in old-fashioned heart songs of the kind particularly dear to Mr. Edison, and which his company issued in more profusion than any other. Though she seldom essayed comedy, singing with Walter Van Brunt in 1912 she took part in a version of the catchy "Be My Little Baby Bumble Bee," which is remarkable for the "hard-boiled" manner in which she sings some of the lines. Her "buzz aroun', buzz aroun', buddy, keep a-buzzin' 'roun'" is exactly in the style of Mae West's "Come up and see me some time!" that became familiar nearly a generation later.

Going back to 1911, Edison's enthusiasm for the new soprano was well shown when a four-minute cylinder containing two songs, "Thy Beaming Eyes" and "Mighty Lak' a Rose," was offered in April. Said the supplement writer:

"In her treatment of these charming numbers Miss Spencer again displays vocal timbre and artistry of the highest order, and once again justifies our action in securing her exclusive services for the Edison catalog. The many compliments that reach us from Edison owners on Miss Spencer's records confirm us in our belief that she is without question one of the most valuable acquisitions we have ever secured in the way of talent." (In the same list, Miss

The other day I answered an ad offering $5.00 for Jos. C. Smith Victor record #18661. "Left Alone Again Blues" and found I had 3 copies. This goes to show that I have records not found elsewhere. I sold it to this man for $1.00 and have thousands of others like this. Let me know your wants.

AL McREA, SR.
Box 182, Westville, N. J.

"Rolls now available for SEEBURG and other 65-note automatic pianos. Old and new standard and popular songs. Rolls also for MILLS VIOLIN VIRTUOSO and other odd types. WRITE FOR LISTS, ETC.

J. LAWRENCE COOK
824 E. 165th St., New York, N. Y.
JL 250c

Miss Spencer also made a two-minute solo, "In Dear Old Tennessee," for the February list, as did Mr. Ormsby, whose title was "A Rose Fable." Of the soprano's offering the supplement said:

"A pretty dainty melody with an unusually catchy refrain in which a dainty's wistful musing opens up a charming vista of the Tennessee cotton fields. In her treatment of this melodious fragment Miss Spencer, who here makes her first solo record for the Edison catalog, displays an abundance of the wealth of voice and expression which have won her an enviable reputation in musical comedy and vaudeville circles."

Frank Ormsby made a few more records, but his singing doesn't seem to have been particularly attractive to Edison patrons, and his name soon ceased to appear in the monthly lists. But there was no doubt about Eliza-

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout.

Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

LLOYD G. KELLEY
Successor to

MUSIC BOX COMPANY

Complete line of old Swiss and disc type music boxes. Christmas tunes available for 15 1/2" Regina at $2.50 ea. Over 200 other tunes to select from.

Special: a new 30 note 4 1/2" diameter disc music box with 20 discs, $25.00. Choice of Christmas music, children's tunes, operatic tunes, etc. Machine 6 1/2" long, 5" wide, 2 1/4" high, and discs sold separately for installation in your own box — easily installed. Machine, $10.00. Discs 50c each.

Swiss musical movements for sale playing one to four tunes. Also Swiss musical movements in shells for stuffed toys. Send for catalogue and prices. Sole manufacturers of patented Minuet Dancing Doll. Send for catalogue and price.

P. O. Box 342

Hanover,

Massachusetts

Spencer and Ormsby sang "Swing Me High, Swing Me Low" from The Follies of 1910."

A month later, Miss Spencer was one of the artists taking part in an unusual Amberol cylinder at first listed as "Mother Goose Days" but later re-named "Jack and Jill Medley." Made especially for children, it included three verses of "Jack and Jill" sung by Billy Murray and William F. Hooley; "Humpty Dumpty," by Ada Jones; "Little Boy Blue," by Harry Anthony (John Young); "Hark! Hark! The Dogs Do Bark," by the Premier (American) Quartet; three verses of "Little Bo Peep," by Miss Spencer; "Little Tommy Tucker," by Ada Jones; "Hey, Diddle Diddle," Murray; "Baa, Baa, Black Sheep," the quartet again; and "Dickory Dickory Dock," Miss Spencer, Mr. Anthony and the quartet.

Obviously, it is out of the question to trace in detail the activities of so prolific a recorder, but the November, 1911, Edison list is unusually interesting from the standpoint of Elizabeth Spencer recordings. It also contains a photograph of her in one of the "hour glass" costumes then fashionable, one that well displayed her tall and stately figure. The soprano is represented by the old ballad, "Dream Faces," in which she was assisted by an all-star male quartet including Walter Van Brunt (Walter Scanlan), Harry Anthony, James F. Harrison (Frederick Wheeler) and Bill Hooley. She also sang a soprano obbligato to Van Brunt's record of a now completely forgotten song, "The Old Town is Looking Mighty Good Tonight," and took part in a medley of airs from "Pinafore" and the "Anvil Chorus" from "Trovatore" by the Edison Light Opera Company. In after years Miss Spencer sang obligatos to many tenor solos by Edison artists, especially Van Brunt. One of these, "On the Banks of the Brandywine," coupled on Diamond Disc 80160 with Van Brunt's "I'll Take You Home Again Kathleen," became the biggest selling record Edison ever made. Virtually every Edison owner had a copy of this record, partly, it may be, because dealers were always eager to point out that "Kathleen" was "Mr. Edison's favorite song."

In 1912 Miss Spencer made several duets with Charles W. Harrison, who, like the soprano, was just beginning his brilliant recording career. Their August offering was "A Night in Venice," issued with this comment:

"It is most delightful to hear artists whose singing is unquestionably done with consummate ease. It is immediately the case with Miss Spencer and Mr. Harrison, both of whom are singers of rare ability. Their clear, pure tones harmonize perfectly in this familiar duet, the graceful easy swing of which is suggestive of the quiet waters of the canals, and the silently gliding gondolas."

Other singers with whom Miss Spencer made duets from 1911 to 1914 were Irving Gillette (Henry Burr), John Young, Fred Wheeler, E. Eleanor Patterson and Harvey Hindermeyer.

The remarkable Edison Blue Amberol indestructible cylinders and the even more remarkable Diamond Discs were introduced late in 1912. With the Diamond Discs it became possible for the first time to hear not merely an approximation of a singer's voice but the real thing so perfectly recorded that listeners couldn't tell any difference between the actual tones and their reproduced version, when the artist sang in direct comparison on the stage with the New Edison phonograph. The first Edison disc I ever heard at close range was Elizabeth Spencer's duet with the baritone, Vernon Archibald, of "Somewhere a Voice is Calling." I was rather appalled at the amount of surface noise on an unusually scratchy pressing, but I realized that the blending of the

RECORDS

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. S6008

REGULAR AUCTIONS classical vocal records. Free lists.—S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colo. o 3652

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 15 First Ave., New Town Square, Pennsylvania. o122741

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought.—E. Hirschenman, 100 Duncan, Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

WE BUY contents of homes, furniture, and Victrola records and sell them.—Curlo Shop, 106A Court St., Brooklyn, N. Y. Phone - TR 5-2186 n60201

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. n3084

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants." For information write or visit.—Record Collectors Service, 602 East 88th St., N. Y. 28, New York. n126581

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp please.—"Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d124461

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. s3004

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS wanted: Highest prices paid for vocal operatic and concert songs. Send for free buying list.—Ball, 1135 DuPont, Miami, Fla. d6257

Rare Vocal Recordings, including imports. Free lists.—Music Den, 825 Irving Street, San Francisco, Calif. d6276

Records — Out-of-print, Dixieland, swing, sweet, vocals, blues, personalities. Want lists and inquiries receive prompt attention.—Les Zeiger, 1056 Sherman Ave., Bronx 56, N. Y. s1003

RECORDS: 50 15½" Regina records, each $2.—Guy Saulsbury, Spicer, Minn. sp

HAVE DUPLICATE Record Catalogs to exchange with other collectors.—G. Moran, Lodi, Wis. s1001

MISCELLANEOUS

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

MELODEONS, Melodeon organs. Beautiful restored instruments for sale. Will buy instruments needing repairs. Expert repairing service.—C-sharp Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich.

OLD TIME RECORDS. Operatic, instrumental, popular. All your favorite artists represented. Priced reasonably. Records bought. Write wants or visit.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. d3844

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues.—Elmer Moore, 1036 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. s6844

FOR SALE: 90 Ampico player piano rolls by outstanding recording artists.—Dr. Herman L. Kretschmer, 200 East Pearson Street, Chicago, Ill. s3882

Rosewood square piano; Mathushek. Circa 1862. Excellent condition. Make offer. Write.—Raymond Devenport, R. R. 2, Madison, Mo. s3234

FOR SALE: One Nelson & Wiggins automatic player in walnut case. Contains piano unit, 2 drums, xylophone, castanet, tambourine, cymbals, etc. Has 10 tune perforated roll. New rolls currently available. Excellent condition. Send 25c for photograph and particulars.—H. R. Quinn, 105 Westmoreland, Montgomery 6, Alabama. o40001

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Everything. Catalog 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. jly12867

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, $1.80. Direct from importer.—Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York City 7, N. Y. ja3306

REGINAPHONE music box with attachment for playing Victrola records also. One doz. 15" discs and some Victrola records. Write.—Lillian Shull, 1918 E. Colorado, Pasadena 8, Calif. sp

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 12c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. n3023

JEWETT AND GOODMAN, Melodeon type organ; rosewood case, refinished, and in excellent condition. Will send photo if interested. Zither, $20, never been used. Ukelin, $35, perfect.—Leda Williams, Smith Center, Kans. s1842

TANGLEY, 43 whistle calliope, restored to like new condition. Automatic or hand played. Complete.—Lee, 934 N. Lancaster, Dallas, Tex. s1291

DULCIMER. Perfect tone, beautiful case, $150.—Blanche E. Watson, Geneva, Illinois. s188

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6215

EDISON CYLINDER Phonograph, morning glory horn, stand. 25 records, $25. Express Collect.—Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. s1821

ANTIQUE ROSEWOOD square grand piano, large octagon legs, in perfect condition and a beautiful tone, over 100 years old.—Mrs. Ralph K. Duryea, 716 S. Main St., Reading, Mich. s1802

voices and the way in which each singer maintained a separate individuality was something I had never heard equalled before in reproduced music. The other side was "A Perfect Day," by the Metropolitan Quartet, in which Miss Spencer frequently sang, and in this the way in which it was possible to trace the individual contribution of the four voices to a harmonious ensemble was even more astounding.

That was a good many years after the discs made their debut. Meanwhile, Miss Spencer's career as a recording artist reached its height when she became one of Edison's tone test singers, traveling from coast to coast and proving by what the Edison people called "the acid test of direct comparison" that the human ear was incapable of detecting any difference between her own voice and its recorded facsimile—as long, of course, as she restrained herself to the phonograph's volume level. Early in 1915, Miss Spencer gave a demonstration in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and a newspaper critic wrote:

"The Edison Diamond Disc recital, with Miss Elizabeth Spencer as soloist, and singing in unison with the instrument, demonstrated the distinctly superior qualities of the transmitting features of the Edison phonograph.

"Miss Spencer alternated in phrases with the instrument, and when the phonograph supplanted the singer not a suspicion was aroused of the break from the real voice. This test was satisfying to those of musical understanding, and indicative of the marvelous progress Mr. Edison has produced in rendering true tones, colorings, accent and expression, in all that makes musical artistry."

The singer's home-town paper, the Denver Post, from which part of her death notice has already been quoted, published the following news story on March 4, 1916, under the heading of "Soloist Will Sing Duet with Record of Her Own Voice":

"A new field of music will be opened to Denver people Monday night at Trinity church when Miss Elizabeth Spencer, popular New York soprano, will compare her living voice to a re-action of her tones made in the laboratory of Thomas A. Edison. Miss Spencer will sing duets with the Edison records of her songs. She will take the contralto parts with her living voice, the tones blending exquisitely with the soprano of her record. Comparison of the living voice with its record, showing the exact reproduction made of the tones of the singer, forms the basis of a set of tone tests which have startled music lovers in the East and will revolutionize methods of teaching vocal music.

"Miss Spencer's musical ability is widely known in Denver, her home city.

"Until ten years ago Miss Spencer made her home in this city, receiving her early musical training here. She will be in Denver only for Monday night, being on her way from New York to San Francisco. Her tone test brings out the genius of Edison supreme. Music's recreation is the great inventor's latest and favorite invention. The tone test is as daring acid-testing a demonstration as any to which an invention has ever been submitted. If two singers were on the stage, singing simultaneously, the effect could not be more perfect than that obtained by the record and the voice of the singer.

"It will be a society event, the section of Denver society which cultivates a taste for music and art having been invited. The musicians and music critics of the city will gather to hear the great musical phenomena. Nowhere in the West has there before been a serious test of voice tones by the new method. The vaudeville stage, however, has embraced the new invention, the living voice and the record so similar they cannot be distinguished making the bases for a jest on the part of those who tread the vaudeville boards."

During the first years of the Diamond Disc, Elizabeth Spencer achieved permanent prestige as one of the foremost Edison artists. A book, "Edison Records of Music That Lives," listing the 300 most popular discs, was published a few years later, and her name appears in it repeatedly. Under the heading of "heart songs," she is mentioned as singing with Van Brunt in "On the Banks of the Brandywine" and with Hindermeyer in "In the Evening By the Moonlight, Dear Louise." Also listed are her solos of "Call Me Your Darling, Again," "Silver Threads Among the Gold," "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother," "Whisper and I Shall Hear," "I Hear You Calling Me," "O Promise Me" and "Love's Old Sweet Song." More popular duets are "Ever of Thee I'm Fondly Dreaming," with Archibald; "Somewhere a Voice is Calling" (Archibald); "Silver Sands of Love" (Charles Hart) and "The Mocking Bird" (Van Brunt.) The Metropolitan Quartet and Homestead Trio, in which she sang, are also well represented.

The list of best-selling sacred songs is full of Metropolitan Quartet records. Also extremely popular was "Silent Night," originally sung by Miss Spencer, Young and Wheeler; then remade by Spencer, Young and Archibald; and, in 1924, made again, with Hart taking Young's place. Highly popular, too, was the beautiful duet of "Abide With Me" with Thomas Chalmers.

In concert and operatic songs, Miss Spencer was represented by a double-faced coupling of "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice" from "Samson et Delilah," and "The King of the Shades" from "Ballo in Maschera." Edison had the peculiar custom of listing some artists in various price classifications, according to the type of music. Thus this record cost $2; most of the "heart songs" were in the $1.50 class, and ordinary popular songs by Miss Spencer were $1.) She also sang in a record of the Rigoletto Quartet, the other artists being Odette Le Fontenay, Max Bloch and Arthur Middleton. Turning to less serious music, the soprano took part in medleys from "The Mikado" and "Pinafore." Certainly an impressive list! Incidentally, since her voice extended to the contralto range, she sang contralto in the Rigoletto Quartet. Her remarkable range was referred to in the catalog description of "Somewhere a Voice is Calling": "Miss Spencer's voice, a soprano so flexible and of so great a range, that in this rendition it sounds almost like a true contralto—a characteristic that makes it especially suitable for this quiet, beautiful melody."

Elizabeth Spencer had become so prominently associated in the public mind with Edison that it was a shock to many Diamond Disc dealers and buyers of Edison records when the May, 1917, Victor supplement announced that she had signed an exclusive agreement with that company. Probably a higher paid contract and the opportunity of singing for a larger segment of the record-buying public were the considerations that persuaded the soprano to desert her first love.

Victor no doubt felt considerable exultation at having won the artist who had done so much to demonstrate the New Edison's unmatched realism. An entire page of the supplement was devoted to a photograph of "Elibabeth Spencer, who now makes records exclusively for the Victor." On the opposite page was a description of the first Spencer record, No. 18250, which combined "A Perfect Day" and "Love's Dream After the Ball." In part, it said:

"'A Perfect Day' has won its way into favor perhaps more quickly than any other high-class song of sentiment of the day. . . . Elizabeth Spencer, a talented young American singer, has chosen it for one of her first Victor records and she sings it with great tenderness, and a very beautiful 'cello obbligato makes the record additionally attractive. 'Love's Dream After the Ball' is an old familiar melody set to words. . . . As a waltz the melody has brought moments of delicious happiness to two or more generations of dancers and still retains its charm."

Edison displayed considerable ingenuity when it sought a way of combatting the loss of prestige involved in Miss Spencer's change of recording companies. Instead of adopting a hush-hush policy, the Diamond Disc people urged their dealers to play the Victor and Edison Spencer records one after the other and let music lovers decide for themselves which was best. The same procedure was adopted in 1920 when the pianist, Sergei Rachmaninoff, left Edison for Victor. Instead of trying to hide the fact, Edison advertised that "we are very glad to announce that Rachmaninoff has also made records for one of the standard talking machines. We invite comparison." To this Victor retorted that the pianist-composer became an exclusive Victor artist "only after a thorough test of other sound-reproducing media."

Elizabeth Spencer's name was not mentioned in an article "The Deadly Parallel," that appeared in the May, 1917, issue of Edison's publication, Diamond Points, but there was no mistaking who was meant:

Regrets have been expressed in some quarters over the subsidizing by a talking machine company of a certain singer of popular songs. Blessings often come in disguise. It is now apparent that no finer demonstration of the superiority of the New Edison over this particular talking machine can be staged than a comparison of an Edison Re-Creation of this singer's voice and one of her new talking machine records.

"Writes an Edison enthusiast of this singer's talking machine record: 'It does not sound like the Miss ***** I know. She was very kind in selecting for her first record one she had sung for the New Edison. I played these two records in comparison and the result is fierce. If she will only sing more of the same songs for the talking machine that she has sung for the New Edison, I think it will mean money for the Edison dealer.'"

(None of these comments about the comparative results obtained in the long-ago days of the abandoned system of acoustic recording should be interpreted as reflecting on the present-day output of RCA Victor and other companies. After all, Edison has been out of the record business since 1929, and the lateral cut system although technically inferior to Edison's hill-and-dale has completely supplanted vertical recording except that the vertical process is used in making the finest radio transcriptions. It is a scarcely questioned fact that Edison recording in its day was better than that offered by any competitor, but the science of recording has made many strides since then.)

An unbiased listener can determine for himself that what the Edison company maintained was true. No more devastating demonstration of the superiority of hill-and-dale acoustic recording over the lateral type can be given than is afforded by playing Miss Spencer's Edison and Victor records of "Love's Dream After the Ball" together, or one immediately after the other. The Edison record is the pure, undistorted human voice—of course with a background of scratch. The Victor has a mechanical, ground-out sound, is deficient in overtones, and with few indications of the gorgeous opulence of voice for which Elizabeth Spencer was famous. Victor recording of her tones later improved but never approached the Edison quality.

Thus it came about that Edison dealers enjoyed nothing better than using Spencer records to make what was known as a "turn-table test." In this picturesque demonstration, four phonographs of approximately the same size and price were placed on a large turn-table that could be revolved into any position. One of the instruments was an Official Laboratory Model Edison. Another always was a Victrola, because this was the most widely advertised and highly touted "talking machine." The others could be chosen from the Brunswick, Aeolian-Vocalion, Sonora, Columbia, Starr or any other well known makes. The dealer would play a record by Miss Spencer or some other well-known artist on each of the needle using machines, then swing the Edison into the same position and play an Edison record. It was a convincing demonstration—so convincing that it badly annoyed talking machine salesmen and in some cities Victor dealers tried to fight it by advertising: "Don't Have Your Victrola Demonstrated By A Dealer Who Wants to Sell You Another Make of Machine!" Not only that, but one of the makers of lateral cut records is said to have paid free-lance recording artists a double fee not to sing for Edison any numbers that they had made for the lateral records. If the performer had already made an Edison record of a song, the competing company allegedly chose some other artist to do its version. This eventually put a stop to the turn-table comparisons because Edison wanted to use up-to-the-minute records and could not get them done by the artists who were also recording for the other firm.

"Love's Dream After the Ball" was the only song that Miss Spencer recorded for both Victor and Edison, except that she remade "Love's Old Sweet Song," on a Victor that had previously been sung by Corinne Morgan. She also remade Miss Morgan's old record of "In the Gloaming" and Elise Stevenson's "Elegie." Because both singers had the initials E. S. there was some suspicion that Elizabeth Spencer and Elise Stevenson were the same soprano, but it was unfounded. Miss Stevenson (Mrs. Rusling Wood) is still living in East Orange, New Jersey.

Miss Spencer remained with Victor only three years. Her last Victor record—a duet with Charles Hart of "Let the Rest of the World Go By"—was probably her most popular. It must have been after leaving Victor that she made a few needle-cut records of old favorite songs—"Carry Me Back to Old Virginny," "Old Black Joe," "My Old Kentucky Home" and "Home, Sweet Home"—that appeared under the Emerson, Regal and Banner labels. While under Victor contract during the First World War, she did much singing for men in Army Camps and was a favorite with the troops, in 1921, the soprano was back on the Edison list and probably was happy at returning to her original "stamping grounds." The Edison Amberola Monthly for May thus announced this important event:

"EVERYBODY LOVES ELIZABETH SPENCER. Dealers may have noticed lately that Elizabeth Spencer is again making records for us after a period of silence. On the March Amberola list, she appeared as the singer of 'Son-of-Mine,' and on the May list she is programmed for a duet, 'Good-bye,' with Lewis James.

"Several years' silence has not dimmed the beauty of the soprano voice which Mr. Edison once declared he thought to be the finest in the United States. Her tones are just as pure and true as ever. The popularity of Elizabeth Spencer may be judged from the fact that, when after an absence of four years from the concert stage, it was announced that she was to make an extensive tour for the Edison Recital Department next fall, many Edison dealers clamored for her appearance in their respective towns. For some months prior to signing her up, the Recital Department had been deluged with applications from dealers for Miss Spencer's artistic services, but our own Elizabeth was loath to leave her beautiful home in Montclair, New Jersey, for a 'Pullman Car Vacation.' At last, however, she was persuaded that it was really her duty to the great American public to 'hit the trail' once more, and she consented to go on another Edison concert tour. There is not a shadow of doubt that her concerts will duplicate her extraordinary successes of former years. . . . At 9 a. m. on April 11, the Recital Department received a signed contract from Miss Spencer. At 1 p. m. of the same day her entire fall season was booked! We wonder if any other American concert artist has ever equalled this rapid-engagement feat?"

So once more Elizabeth Spencer took to the road, singing in comparison with the New Edison and proving that her reproduced voice was identical with her living tones. The Amberola Monthly for September, 1921, contained a full-page photo of the Homestead Trio, a popular Edison group composed of Miss Spencer and Betsy Lane Shepherd, sopranos, and Amy Ellerman, contralto. Of Miss Spencer it commented: "Her voice possesses the unusual quality which enables her to sing equally well in soprano, mezzo soprano and contralto regions." Also included was the following verse written by Miss Ellerman to accompany the picture:

"There were three crows sat on a wall,
They could not sing at all, at all.
The Homestead Trio sat on a fence—
And some folks think they sing immense.
They love to sing, they love to chaff,
But, most of all, they love to laugh."

Poetess Ellerman also wrote a jingle paying tribute to Mrs. Southworth's skill as a coffee maker:

"You think we mind prohibition?
Not so, say we,
When Elizabeth makes such coffee
As she served us three."

Four or five years more as a recording artist and concert recitalist were left to Elizabeth Spencer. Then, in 1926, she had a nervous breakdown from which she never recovered, followed in April, 1930, by her death. Here are some quotations from the Denver Post obituary:

"How is mother?"

"Across miles of space through the darkness of midnight, Monday, Allen E. Spencer asked the question of his sister, Mrs. Abbott Overdorfer, at their mother's home, 33 Aubrey Road, Montclair, New Jersey.

"There was a brief pause, broken by a sob, and the answer, 'As your call came over the phone mother passed away.'"

"Thus, followed by the love of her children, one in the East, one in the West, Mrs. Elizabeth Dickerson Spencer Southworth died as the result of a lingering illness. Mrs. Southworth was better known in Denver as Mrs. Otis E. Spencer. . . . and for years the best known vocalist in the West. Thomas A. Edison once described her as 'the woman with the perfect recording voice.'"

"The close bond existing between mother and son was revealed during the early hours Monday evening. Spencer, regarded as one of the cleverest young men in the publicity business, was engaged with two associates preparing a skit for the Gridiron Club dinner given Tuesday evening for the Press Club. He had received no alarming news from his mother, but again and again he rose from the table where he was working, walked to the window and returned, started to work, and finally at midnight rushed to the telephone and put in a call for Montclair, New Jersey, with a request for quick service. 'I was sure something was wrong,' was his only comment when he hung up the receiver.

"The West has produced no more vivid personality than that of Elizabeth Spencer Southworth. . . . Following her divorce from Spencer, she became the wife of E. B. Southworth, Jr., in 1912, and has made her home in Montclair, with occasional concert tours under the auspices of the Edison Company. On her last visit to Denver in 1926, Mrs. Southworth appeared in two concerts, and during her visit here suffered a nervous breakdown from which she failed to recover. Surviving Mrs. Southworth are her husband her daughter and son; a sister, Mrs. Louise Sherevon, of Washington, D. C., and a half sister, Mrs. J. E. Dodson, formerly 'Polly' Gilpin, of New York City."

An obituary notice in the Newark News of Wednesday, April 23, 1930, gave the name of Mrs. Southworth's daughter as Oberndorfer, instead of Ovendorfer; her son's name as Allen B., instead of Allen E., Spencer, and the sister in Washington as Mrs. Louise Taylor. It said:

"Mrs. Edward B. Southworth, Jr., died yesterday at her home, 33 Aubrey Road, Montclair. Mrs. Southworth had been in ill health the past four years and seriously ill the past six months. Born in St. Louis, Mrs. Southworth had lived in Montclair since 1916. She was formerly a singer in the Watchung Avenue Congregational Church of this town, and was also well known as Elizabeth Spencer. . . . Funeral services will be conducted at the home Friday at 3 p. m., by Rev. Dr. Thomas Travis, pastor of the Watchung Church. Burial will be in Mt. Hebron Cemetery."

And so ends the story of one of the most glamorous ladies of the phonograph—one whose memory is cherished by thousands of record collectors, many of whom have requested this biographical sketch. I wish I could include more precise details of her life and that I knew what has become of her son, Allen Spencer—whether, in fact, he is still living. A letter I wrote to him was returned by the Denver postmaster as undeliverable, with the explanation that his name had not been listed in any fairly recent Denver directory. But it is fortunate that lovers of beautiful singing may still hear Elizabeth Spencer's reproduced voice in all its luscious, velvety perfection and judge for themselves the accuracy of Mr. Edison's pronouncement that she was one of the most highly endowed sopranos of her time. As long as the means exist for reproducing her old Edison and Victor records, Elizabeth Spencer, now dead more than 21 years, will not lack admirers.

Next Month:

MR. & MRS. CHARLES HARRISON

Copy of HOBBIES Buried with Records in Roanoke's New Municipal Health Center

When a copper-lined steel vault in the wall of the new Roanoke, Va., municipal health center is opened 50 years from now, a copy of the April, 1943, issue of HOBBIES will be among the contents.

The HOBBIES was contributed by Jim Walsh, author of "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists," together with a number of phonograph records, old and new. City Manager Arthur S. Owens had asked that citizens give family letters, photographs, newspaper clippings and other material of historical interest, to be sealed up in the wall of the center, and not removed until the year 2001. Walsh gave his only duplicate issue of HOBBIES. He also presented several currently popular records by such artists as Patti Paige and Arthur Godfrey, to give the Roanokers of half a century hence an idea of what 1951 popular music is like, as well as several old-time discs and cylinders, including Arthur Collins' perennial classic, "The Preacher and the Bear." Included also were two Edison Diamond Discs, part of a batch recently rescued from the Roanoke city dump. Walsh learned that a man had intended to give him some 50 discarded Edison records, but his wife, not knowing his wishes, sent the records to the dump. When Walsh heard this, the records had been covered by several feet of miscellaneous rubbish, but at his urgent request they were finally "unearthed." More than half had been broken by striking on rocks, and others had been badly damaged by heavy rains. Walsh already had good copies of those still in playing condition, so he decided it would be appropriate to let a couple of them be preserved in the health center wall.

No John Bieling Day Party This September

It has been found necessary to abandon the plan of holding a John Bieling Day gathering of recording artists and record collectors this September. Various things, such as illness and lack of time, have served to handicap the New York collectors who in past years have made most of the arrangements.

Tentative plans called for holding the party on Saturday, September 8, and interest among both collectors and artists has seemed higher than ever before. Consequently, it is a source of regret to everybody that, this year at least, there will be no formal observance of John Bieling Day.

Musical Box Hobbyists Convention Plans

The third annual meeting of the Musical Box Hobbyists group will be held in Philadelphia, October 13 and 14, at the home of Herbert H. Meyer, 223 Virginia Avenue. Saturday, October 13, will be devoted to the regular business meeting of the organization, and Sunday, October 14, will be for the exhibition, discussions and social activities. Music box and clock collectors and non-members of the group are cordially invited to attend the Sunday, October 14, session. The aims of the organization are to perpetuate existing examples of this lost art, acquaint collectors with rare and unusual types, and place those instruments in their proper sphere in the world of arts and antiques.—R. C. Bornand, Secretary, Pelham, 65, N.Y.

New York Public Library Demonstrates Old Records & Early Model Phonographs

The New York Public Library gave a demonstration of early phonographs and records on the night of May 23, with about 100 invited guests attending. The occasion honored the memory of Emile Berliner, inventor of the lateral cut system of disc recording.

Phillip L. Miller, of the library music division, played recordings on a large number of ancient machines, including the first Berliner horn model, of the type made familiar by the Victor "His Master's Voice" trademark. Several Victor instruments were included, as were a primitive French cylinder machine, Edison Diamond Disc, Edison Amberola, and the Aeolian-Vocalion. After this came a demonstration of present-day electrical equipment.

Berliner's great rival, Thomas A. Edison, inventor of the phonograph, was not forgotten. Norman R. Speiden, curator of the Edison laboratory at West Orange, N. J., and Mrs. Speiden were present. An honor guest was the distinguished operatic soprano, Frieda Hempel.

The occasion was also the birthday of the foremost pioneer recording comedian, Billy Murray. Learning of this, Mr. Miller invited Murray to attend the party, but the veteran singer was unable to be present. Jim Walsh, writer of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists, also was invited, but could not make the trip from his home in Virginia. Murray's 43-year-old record of "Rainbow" was played in honor of his birthday.

The Library expects to give other programs of this nature.

Deaths of W. H. Berry, Lucy Gates, Dan Hornsby and Fannie B. Hard

W. H. Berry, one of the pioneer English recording artists, died May 2 at his home in Herne Bay, aged 81. Berry's career as a comedian began in 1890. When the Talking Machine News published its first issue in May, 1903, the first article it contained was an account by Berry of his record-making experiences. His recording career extended well into the electric era, and he appeared in more than 40 big London hits. He was offered the part of Micawber in the Hollywood film of "David Copperfield," but declined because of the illness of his wife. The part then went to W. C. Fields.

Mrs. Emma Lucy Gates Bowen, 70, known professionally as Lucy Gates, died April 30 in Salt Lake City, Utah. Lucy Gates' Columbia records were popular for several years prior to electric recording. She specialized in singing "heart songs" that peculiarly suited her pure, sweet soprano voice. The singer was a granddaughter of Brigham Young, second president of the Mormon Church. She studied voice at the Berlin Royal Conservatory of Music and at the age of 17 sang in the Royal Opera House. The soprano was one of the founders of the Society of American Singers.

Dan Hornsby, 51, died May 18 in Atlanta, Ga. Hornsby was one of the first entertainers to become popular over radio station WSB, and for several years in the late 1920's was a popular Columbia recording artist. He and his Trio and Quartet specialized in old-time comic songs, such as "Oh By Jingo," "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?" and "Cubanola Glide."

Fannie B. Hard, concert soprano, died April 5 at her home in Woodstock, N. Y. I am not positive, but believe she was Mrs. R. B. Hard, who made Columbia record A648 (1909), "Sleep, Little Baby of Mine." —J. W.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

CHARLES W. HARRISON & BEULAH GAYLORD YOUNG

By JIM WALSH

Recording the "Lucia Sextet" for an Edison talking picture of 1912. From left to right, Charles Harrison, tenor; Mary Jordan, contralto; Agnes Kimball, soprano; Royal Fish, tenor; Frederick Wheeler, baritone, and Donald Chalmers, bass. Mr. Harrison, who supplied this photo, believes he may be the only still living member of the group. Wheeler died August 7, 1950, and Miss Kimball and Chalmers had died several years earlier. Harrison says Miss Jordan "married an oil man and moved to Texas," and that he thinks, but is not certain, that Fish died a few years ago. Sound for the early Edison talkies was recorded on concert cylinders five inches in diameter. The large recording horn was so sensitive it could pick up sound from 30 feet away and was kept out of sight. Films were made at the same time as records. When an exhibit was given, the phonograph was synchronized, by wires and gears to the projection machine.

This article was originally scheduled for the September issue, but had to be postponed a month because of the Elizabeth Spencer biography appearing in two parts instead of one, as first planned. September would have been the most appropriate time for paying tribute to the recording accomplishments of Charles W. Harrison, because it is the month in which

"Rolls now available for SEEBURG and other 65-note automatic pianos. Old and new standard and popular songs. Rolls also for MILLS VIOLIN VIRTUOSO and other odd types. WRITE FOR LISTS, ETC.

J. LAWRENCE COOK
824 E. 165th St., New York, N. Y.
Jly25c

he first tried out his lungs and proved by his infant cries that he had the makings of a lyric tenor. But, regardless of birth dates, it is a particular pleasure to set down some of the achievements of Charlie Harrison's career because I not only admire his singing but, in spite of having met him only twice, regard him as a dear friend. When to this is added my being able to say something about his wife, the former Beulah Gaylord Young, who was a charming recording soprano in her own right, my gratification is great indeed.

I met Charles Harrison for the second time in September, 1950, at the annual John Bieling Day party for recording artists. Our first meeting had been almost exactly ten years before, in October, 1940, when Billy Murray and Jimmy Martindale had taken me, during my first visit to New York City, to a room in West 47th street where a group of performers were rehearsing a radio minstrel show. Among them were Gus Van, Joe White, the late Harry Donaghy, Everett Clarke, the late Frank Croxton — and Charles Harrison, who still looked like a matinee idol, although his recording career had begun, when he was a very young man, 29 years before. I was at once attracted by the handsome, slightly-built, blue-eyed and brown haired Harrison and was glad of the chance to talk with him when the rehearsal ended. We went down together in the elevator, and I remember that I asked him the name of the first record he made. He was wearing a Willkie button, and I complimented him for being on what I considered "the right side." He replied that he believed every other man in the rehearsal group was also for Willkie, although some ordinarily were Democrats. (It turned out, of course, that their combined influence wasn't enough to keep Mr. Roosevelt from getting a third term). I took a liking that day to Charles Harrison, and the liking has grown with time and the continuation of our friendship by mail. And now that this personal note has been intruded, let's get down to biographical business and consider the details of our subject's life.

Charles William Harrison was born on September 11, year not specified, in Jersey City, New Jersey. His middle name comes from both his grandfathers being named William. He was musically inclined from boyhood and when he was 17 began taking vocal instruction from a well known teacher, Leo Koeffler, of New

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX COMPANY

Complete line of old Swiss and disc type music boxes. Christmas tunes available for 15 1/2" Regina at $2.50 ea. Over 200 other tunes to select from.

Special: a new 30 note 4 1/2" diameter disc music box with 20 discs, $25.00. Choice of Christmas music, children's tunes, operatic tunes, etc. Machine 6 1/2" long, 5" wide, 2 1/4" high, and discs sold separately for installation in your own box — easily installed. Machine, $10.00. Discs 50c each.

Swiss musical movements for sale playing one to four tunes. Also Swiss musical movements in shells for stuffed toys. Send for catalogue and prices. Sole manufacturers of patented Minuet Dancing Doll. Send for catalogue and price.

P. O. Box 342

Hanover, Massachusetts

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout.

Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

York. However, he was earning his living as an office worker and singing "on the side" with an amateur male quartet when he received his first chance as a recording artist. Mr. Harrison recalls the date of this as January, 1912, but it must have been a year earlier, because his first record, "Cujus Animam," appears in the Columbia list for May, 1911. It is No. A5275, coupled with the "Inflammatus" from "Stabat Mater," by a soprano, Anna Grant Fugitt. Later it was renumbered 5833, and combined with the "Inflammatus," sung by the Columbia Oratorio Chorus.

Here is how the singer himself recalls it:

"The lead tenor of our quartet knew the manager of the Columbia laboratory, so we made some 'test' recordings. During the session he spoke about a test of his own solo voice, and I for once put on a bold front and said I would also like to make a test. Of course the manager did not know me, but he said they were looking for a tenor who could sing a high D flat. The other fellow said that I could do it and they need look no further, so after a confab I was booked for a test of the 'Cujus Animam' from Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' sung in English with piano, as I did not know Latin! The test came out well enough for them to book me with orchestra for the same selection in Latin. I had a friend in the office where I was manager (and a youngster, at that), whose brother was a priest, so he gave me the phonetic pronunciation, and I went to it. When this came through the processing I was handed a contract for six months.

"Right away, as my records began to come out, Victor and Edison got on my trail, but I was tied up, so could do nothing. Nearing the end of the six months, I demanded a raise in the fee or a new contract, but found that I had unwittingly signed for an additional year at the same rates. I at once refused to continue, as I apparently had been duped, so went to both Victor and Edison on a non-exclusive basis, designed to keep me at least with 'the big three.' After another year or so, I got raises, and more raises, then began free-lancing.

"In 1919-20, I was recording for 18 laboratories, working every day in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston, Montreal, etc. I think I can claim, without bragging or making any misstatements, to have made more recordings from 1912 to 1925 or so than any other singer, as I was in quartets, choruses and light opera groups, as well as duets and trios. I sang under several names besides my own, only two of which I recall — Hugh Donovan and Billy Burton. Some of these independent recording outfits sold master records to mail order and fly-by-night sales concerns. As I had been paid outright for my work, there was no way to restrain them or collect royalties. In 1925 I began radio work, singing on the first commercial programs over WEA and WJZ."

Because of his beautiful lyric tenor voice and his clear enunciation, Charles Harrison's first Columbia records sung in English were immediate successes and, as he has indicated, caused him to be sought by the two other large recording companies. His first popular song disc was A1141, "Take Me Back to the Garden of Love," in which he was assisted by the Columbia (Peerless) Quartet. Then followed the old Irish song, "Come back to Erin," sung as a straight solo.

Then Charlie Harrison, in returning thanks for the "wonderful time" he said he'd had at the John Bieling

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 55)

RECORDS

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. d6008

REGULAR AUCTIONS classical vocal records. Free lists.—S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colo. o 3652

FOR SALE. Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 1 First Ave., New Town Square, Pennsylvania. o122741

ASTOUNDING LISTS. Rarities. All types. Lowly priced. Collections bought.—E. Hirschenman, 100 Duncan, Ave., Jersey City 6, N. J. o126121

WE BUY contents of homes, furniture, and Victrola records and sell them.—Curio Shop, 106A Court St., Brooklyn, N. Y. Phone - TR 6-2136 n60201

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. n3084

MISSING

SWISS MUSIC BOX. Serial No. 28973, approximate size, 6x6x15", six melodies. Case is imitation rosewood with elaborate escutcheon in bone or ivory. Liberal reward for recovery.

BOX No. BHP

c/o HOBBIES, 1006 S. Mich., Chicago 5

Record Collection. Around 4900 records, (used condition) covering 40 years or more, mostly Victor & Columbia, some others, about 500 12". Will sell all. Collectors only. Stamp for reply.

H. E. ENGLISH
026 Mill St., S. W. Portland, Ore. op

CORRECTION

The third annual meeting of the MUSICAL BOX HOBBYISTS will be held at the home of HERBERT H. MEYER
223 Virginia Ave.
PITTSBURGH, PA.
October 13 & 14

The September issue stated erroneously that it would be held in Philadelphia.

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants". For information write or visit —Record Collectors Service, 502 East 84th St., N. Y. 28, New York. n126581

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp please. — "Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d124461

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS wanted: Highest prices paid for vocal operatic and concert songs. Send for free buying list.—Ball, 1135 DuPont, Miami, Fla. d6257

Rare Vocal Recordings, including imports. Free lists.—Music Den, 825 Irving Street, San Francisco, Calif. d6276

Rent LP's! Complete plays, operas, by mail. Write for details. Wakefield Record Library, Earlysville, Va. d3x

MISCELLANEOUS

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

MELODEONS, Melodeon organs. Beautiful restored instruments for sale. Will buy instruments needing repairs. Expert repairing service.—C-sharp Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich.

OLD TIME RECORDS. Operatic, instrumental, popular. All your favorite artists represented. Priced reasonably. Records bought. Write wants or visit.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. d3844

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues.—Elmer Moore, 1085 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. n6844

WANTED OLD Vaudeville and Theatrical posters, programs, records.—Ronald Slaughter, 8919 Gibson St., Los Angeles 34, Calif. d3042

FOR SALE: One Nelson & Wiggins automatic player in walnut case. Contains piano unit, 2 drums, xylophone, castanet, tambourine, cymbals, etc. Has 10 tune perforated roll. New rolls currently available. Excellent condition. Send 25c for photograph and particulars.—H. R. Quinn, 105 Westmoreland, Montgomery 6, Alabama. o40001

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Everything. Catalog 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. jly12867

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, $1.80. Direct from importer.—Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York City 7, N. Y. ja3806

OLD POPULAR SONGS. 1 buy and sell, trade. Send 12c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. n3023

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6215

ANTIQUE HARDMAN PIANO, harp shape, 3 leg. Beautiful rosewood, excellent mechanical condition, price $600. Cartage extra, photo on request.—Florence Alston, Carson, Ia. o1461

MUSIC BOX, 18 discs; also Ladies' Books, Godey, Petersen, Graham with colored plates. For details write:—S. Michaelis, 525 DeWitt St., Syracuse, New York. o 1002

WANTED: Supervia Spanish songs (Odeon). Also her Parlophone P051, R020193, R020344.—John Fryer, 903 Rio Grande Blvd., Albuquerque, New Mex. o 1021

PIANO, COIN OPERATED barroom type. Restored like new with rolls, $295. Wanted all kinds rolls.—Lee, 934 N. Lancaster, Dallas, Tex. o1002

(See other ads on page 109)

THE GREAT CARUSO

I have the Lucia Sextette, Rigoletto quartette Pagliacci, La Boheme, Aida, Cavalleria, Il Trovatore numbers with Enrico Caruso just as he sang them himself without benefit of amplification and just as natural as if they were there in your living room in person. Also John McCormack, Scotti, Amato, Journet and other great male stars. Galli-Curci, Sombri, Aida, Chick, Farrar, Shumann Heink. Mostly in excellent condition and most reasonable.

AL McREA, SR.

Box 182, Westville, N. J. oc

The Old Music Store

MUSICAL ANTIQUES

Melodeons. Pipe and Reed Organs. Coin Operated Pianos, Calliopes, and other smaller items.

Welte-Mignon Automatic Player
Concert Grand with 300 classical rolls.

— Expert Repairing —

WRITE

ESTHER SKERRITT SANDERS
Deansboro, New York

tr

MUSIC

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21)

Day party, asked if he might bring his wife next time, because she too had been a recording artist. "She made records," he casually wrote, "under the names of Beulah Gaylord Young and Molly Ames." (He might also have mentioned if he had thought of it that they made a Pathé record of "Georgia Moon" in 1916 under the team name of Charles Harrison and Beulah Gaylord). Perhaps you can imagine my "exhilaration when I realized that the mystery of "Molly Ames" was a mystery no longer!

I looked eagerly forward to the prospect of seeing not only my friend Charlie again but "Molly Ames" as well in September, 1951. Unfortunately, it turned out that there was no Bieling Day party this year, and I have still to meet "Pretty Molly." Perhaps it will be different next year. I certainly hope so!

Next month: WALTER VAN BRUNT

WILCOXEN'S BROOKVILLE, MAINE

6 PINK LUSTRE plates, 6", ea.	5.00
D. & B. THUMBPRINT amber tumbler	4.50
AMBER HONEYCOMB goblet	7.00
AMBER CRUET, Block & Daisy	12.50
RED BLOCK covered butter	12.00
RED BLOCK covered sugar	9.00
RUBY THUMBPRINT cheese dish base	5.00
BLOWN TUMBLER, elec. blue, decor.	5.00
CARNIVAL GLASS, water pitcher, 6 matching tumblers, raised grape design,
6 similar tumblers, lot	8.50
MIN. GREEN NUTMEG GLOW LAMP	4.00
PRINCESS FEATHER LAMP, CLEAR,
9 1/2"	8.50
GOTHIC WHALE OIL LAMP, 10 1/2"	15.00
FRINGED NAPKINS, Turkey red, 8, Ea.	1.25 HANGING BOOT MATCH HOLDER, fine
cut	4.50
AMETHYST JERSEY BLOWN VASE, 9"	8.50
STAFFORDSHIRE CHILDREN'S MUGS,
5, each	2.50
5 EARLY CHINA BONE DISHES, floral	5.00
The following items in early ironstone, wide copper lustre trim:
8 9" plates, ten sided, ea.	2.00
4 10 1/2" plates, ten sided, ea.	2.00
2 coffee pots, one w. bud finial, one with copper lustre finial, ea.	10.00
Milk pitcher	4.00
Open oval vegetable dish	3.00
Bowl, 5 1/2" diam., 3 1/2" high	3.00
Open gravy	5.00
Cov. sugar bowl, copper lustre fin.	8.00
MAPLE SALAD BOWL, 17" diam., polished	9.00
COFFEE MILLS, pine, one drawer, refin.	5.00
POST LANTERN GLOBE, blown, 13" hl.,
6 1/2" bottom diam., 12" top diam.	8.00
6 SANDWICH CUP PLATES, #339, Lot	7.00
WHITE MARSEILLES BED SPREAD	8.00
VASA MURRHINA VASE, yellow, 8 1/2" hl.	20.00
CALENDAR PLATES, 1914, Maine wood,
7"	1.50
OLD IVORY #11, footed c/s	9.00
ROSE BOWL, turquoise blue with silver
flecking, 6" diam.	20.00
IRONSTONE, cov. sugar, Lily of Valley SLANT TOP CHINA CHEESE DISH,
floral	5.00
ROUND BRASS WALL SCONCE, 13x17" deep, beveled mirror, two candle arms	10.00
Photos of items below, 10c each.
PR. FRENCH DESIGNED BRONZE URN
LAMPS	15.00
BRASS ANDIRONE, 19" high	28.00
EARLY CHINESE VASE in burnt orange on white, birds & flowers, 14 1/2" hl.	Write SMALL WALNUT MELODEON, lyre ends, bellows need attention	45.00
ROUND MAHOG. LIBRARY TABLE, 33x
29" hl.	28.00
MAPLE SWING LEG BREAKFAST
TABLE, 40x42", some good striping,
sat. fin.	50.00
WINDSOR SIDE CHAIR, 5 spindles, bamboo turnings, original finish	15.00
SHERATON MAHOG. CARD TABLE	85.00
PINE COMMODE, lift top, refinished	20.00
PR. WALNUT EARLY VIC. HANGING
WEAT NOTS, mirror in center and 5 small shelves on each, 47" long, 31" wide, pair	45.00
PINE CUPBOARD, glass doors, 4 shelves with drawers and doors below, 74 1/2"
hl., 34" w., 18" deep, fine finish	100.00

Death of Frederick James Wheeler Famous Recording and Concert Baritone

By JIM WALSH

One of the most famous pioneer recording artists — Frederick J. Wheeler, baritone of the famous "Anthony and Harrison" duet team—died in Yonkers, New York, on Tuesday, August 7, aged 73.

Mr. Wheeler was born on October 10, 1877, in Boonville, New York. His father was Harrison Wheeler and his mother's maiden name was Margaret Evans. As a youth he worked as a reporter for a Utica newspaper, before deciding on a musical career. The young baritone studied with Theodore Toedt and other prominent teachers, and in 1901, at the age of 23, was engaged by the old Universal Talking Machine Company to make Zon-o-phone records. His contract was for $1,200 a year. In 1903 he began making Edison cylinders as a duet partner of Albert Campbell, with whom he sang such famous songs as "Old Jim's Christmas Hymn," "Sweet Adeline" and "My Old New Hampshire Home." For Zon-o-phone he made some duets with the contralto, Corinne Morgan. In all his early recording he used the pseudonym of James F. Harrison, a name which he arrived at by reversing his Christian names and taking his father's given name of Harrison for the "surname."

The baritone's greatest advance in popularity came in 1905 when he and the tenor, John Young, began to record gospel hymns under the assumed names of "Harry Anthony" and "James F. Harrison." Their Edison and Columbia records were immediately and enormously popular, especially with phonograph owners in the rural areas, and they sang so many hymns that Billy Murray gave them the good-natured nickname of "The Come-to-Jesus Twins" — descriptive tag that stuck for years. They did not sing duets for Victor until 1910.

When Edison introduced his Diamond Discs, Mr. Young, who is still living and will observe his 81st birthday in October of this year, became an exclusive Edison artist. The two continued to sing duets for Edison, but for other companies, Mr. Wheeler formed a partnership with the South Carolina tenor, Reed Miller, who died in 1923. Meanwhile, in 1912 he had also become the recording partner of the charming young contralto, Elsie Baker, and they worked together for several years. I have Miss Baker's word that there was a sentimental as well as a business attachment between the two and that they were "sweethearts" for the duration of their partnership. However, the romance did not end in marriage. Miller called himself "James Reed" when singing with "Harrison" and Miss Baker was "Edna Brown."

During these busy years, Fred Wheeler not only made hundreds of records — solos as well as duets — but also sang with Mr. Young; George M. Strickett, second tenor, and Gus Reed, bass, as a member of Edison's Knickerbocker quartet. He and Young were also members of the Metropolitan Mixed Quartet. He sang in prominent church choirs; took part in many oratorio productions; toured with Walter Damrosch and Victor Herbert's Orchestras, and appeared in concert with Marcella Sembrich, as "The Golden Voiced Baritone." He also sang and acted in Thomas A. Edison's experimental talking pictures of 1912-13.

After Mr. Young's exclusive Edison contract ended, he and the baritone sang a few hymns for Emerson, and in 1926 Columbia received their old "Anthony and Harrison" name for a few electrically recorded discs. Mr. Wheeler retired in 1930. During late years he lived in the Yonkers Y. M. C. A. at Riverdale Avenue and Hudson Street.

The coroner's certificate says that the cause of death probably was cardiovascular disease, although there was no previous history of the singer's having a heart ailment. It also said that he was a widower, and that his late wife's unmarried name was Henrietta Schmidt. He has a daughter, Mrs. Ethel W. Jones, living in Yonkers. Cremation took place at Ferncliff Crematory on August 9.

I never met Mr. Wheeler, but corresponded with him occasionally for a good many years. The sponsors of the September, 1950, John Bieling Day were disappointed that he could not be present for a reunion with his old friend, John Young. In declining the invitation, Mr. Wheeler wrote to me:

"I received your letter upon my return from the country today. Well, it seems we just cannot get together . . . and I assure you it is with deep regret that I have to say this. I am leaving for a month at Utica, N. Y., my old home city (many years back, and let's forget time) this week, and so will be unable to join you and the old friends. I find myself going here and there, passing the time away as pleasantly as possible. As I have retired for the rest of my days, I plan my time day to day, try to keep moving and not become stale. Kindly remember me to any of my old associates who may be present at this reunion, and may I thank you for your kindly interest in me and again express my regrets at not being able to join you."

My last communication from Mr. Wheeler was a Christmas card, thanking me for sending him the December issue of HOBBIES with my account of the Bieling Day. Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists for July, August and September, 1945, was devoted to an account of the careers of "Anthony and Harrison."

MRS. RUSSELL L. INGRAM
Main St., U. S. 60, Olive Hill, Ky.
Delt blue & white diamond shaped tall teapot, handle and spout on corners, Davis, Victor, $18. Large matching sugar bowl, lift on lid cemented, $14. Set of 6 Carlsbad portrait plates, write. Lovely big crack-cr jar, aqua, wine scrolls and l.p. flowers. Chinese marks, $10. Beautifully enameled cranberry paneled spooner or large tumbler, $10. Big pear-shaped pewter covered sugar, $8. List 3 ready Oct. 1, with many nice Christmas items. Carriage extra. Stamp, please. 00

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

WALTER VAN BRUNT (WALTER SCANLAN) I

By JIM WALSH

WALTER VAN BRUNT

At an early age I fell in love with both records and books. Before I was old enough to go to school, my father bought me a second reader (the book store was out of primers), and in some way I have never understood I taught myself to spell and understand its words. Before long I read so well that I was making the rounds of the local record dealers, asking for the latest monthly supplements, and boys in the third and fourth grades brought be their Sunday funny papers to have me explain the hard parts of the Katzenjammer Kids' German dialect.

I'm pretty sure that the first full-length novel I read, still before my school days, was a grief-laden homily,

"The Wide, Wide World," written by a New York spinster, Susan Warner, and published in 1850 or 1851. This sad depiction of the physical sufferings and spiritual tribulations of teenage Ellen Montgomery was lent to—or, rather, forced upon—my mother by an old lady in her seventies, who thought it the greatest book ever written.

My mother hated books. She groaned her way through it to please the old lady, but I finished "The Wide, Wide World" much sooner than my mother did. Although I was enthralled by the amateurish story from the beginning, my interest reached its peak when Ellen went to live with her crotchety Aunt Fortune Emerson at Thirgwall in upstate New York, and it was revealed that the Dutchman who managed Miss Fortune's farm was named Brum (a corruption of Abram) Van Brunt. Brum at once became my favorite character. I was fascinated by the chance that he might be an ancestor, perhaps the grandfather, of one of my idols, Walter Van Brunt, who had then scarcely outgrown his distinction of being the "Boy Wonder" of American recording studios.

That was a good many years ago, but to this day I have never learned whether there was any kinship between Walter and Brum. I've never even remembered to mention the matter to Walter. But the admiration I felt for Van Brunt's singing when I was a very small child has only increased with time, and I am proud of the fact that today, a generation after I first read "The Wide, Wide World," I call Walter Van Brunt my friend.

From his youth to early middle age, Walter Van Brunt was one of the most popular singers on records. Today, although the formerly "golden-voiced tenor" (the late John Bieling's term for him) is still hearty and active, the name of Van Brunt is seldom heard. If you were to go to the New York headquarters of the American Broadcasting Company in Radio City and ask for "Mr. Van Brunt," it's doubtful that the receptionist would know whom you meant. But an inquiry for Walter Scanlan would bring a smile of recognition. That's because the singer, who became famous at the start of his career as the youngest professional recording artist, changed his name, for stage and record making purposes, to Scanlan some 34 years ago.

The name, however, isn't important. Whether as Van Brunt or Scanlan, the tenor was considered by millions of record buyers one of the most accomplished artists whose voice went forth into the world on discs and cylinders. Probably "Walt" had as large a percentage of admirers and as small a proportion of detractors as anyone who has ever sung for the phonograph.

Nor was this musical popularity confined to the mythical Man in the Street. The average citizen's verdict had the backing of genius. Thomas A. Edison felt no hesitation in terming Van Brunt his favorite tenor. Victor Herbert "adopted" Walter as his protege, wrote Irish light operas designed to bring out the beauty of his lyric tenor voice, and was responsible for "the Boy Wonder" changing his name from Van Brunt to Scanlan. This he did on the ground that Van Brunt was one heck—or words to that effect—name for an Irish tenor. The change was so successfully made that most of the theatergoers who heard Walter as Scanlan and knew nothing of the Van Brunt phase of his career, unhesitatingly accepted him as a true son of the Emerald Isle. So, as I shall show later, did critics who reviewed his singing.

Let's imagine that you are being introduced to Walter Scanlan—or Van Brunt, if you prefer the older name—as he is today. You will meet a stoutly built, blue-eyed gentleman, who has lost some of his brown hair. He is about five feet ten inches in height and appears to weigh around two hundred. His handshake is hearty and his manner warm and friendly. And, whether or not you realize it, you are standing in the presence of one of the most versatile and accomplished men in the history of "show business." Walter has been a star on records and radio, in vaudeville, musical comedy, light opera, and on the legitimate stage. He has operated a booking agency. And he has written many successful songs. Probably, even with this impressive enumeration, I'm forgetting some of the things he has done. For one thing, I haven't even said that he's now a production manager at ABC.

However, sad to say, Van Brunt is no longer the golden voiced tenor of whom John Bieling loved to speak.

Announcing Fassett's Recording Service

Standard 78 RPM and 33 RPM LP Acetate discs cut to order on high quality professional equipment.

Wide range FM off-the-air recording. Amateur tape recordings transferred to discs (7½" per second speed only).

Dubbing a specialty: Records from your collection or mine faithfully copied. Cylinders (both two and four minute types) re-recorded onto tape or discs.

Special variable speed turntable for dubbing odd-speed collectors' items (earliest Caruso's etc.) at correct pitch.

First Class Recordings at Relatively Low Prices

FASSETT'S RECORDING SERVICE

Box 362, West Falmouth, Massachusetts

tfx

ANTIQUE ROSEWOOD SQUARE PIANO
— Circa 1850 —

George Sleck & Co., New York.
Lovely tone. Make offer.

Address:
MRS. ALEC. H. GRAY
706 North Lafayette Street
BROWNSVILLE, TENNESSEE

nd

Several years ago, overwork during a "quickie" recording session impaired his voice and he no longer sings. For a long time after his throat mishap, Walter found it hard to speak above a whisper, but when I last talked with him, at the 1950 John Bieling Day party in Hempstead, New York, he told me that his voice was coming back. Here's hoping it plays a complete return engagement.

Meanwhile, regardless of whether he ever sings again, thousands of record collectors prize the tenor's huge output of Edison discs and cylinders (for some reason, his numerous later-al-cut records are in less demand) and feel for him a personal affection that they seem to have for almost no other singer. In the palmy days of Edison Diamond Discs, Van Brunt and Billy Murray, with whom Walter's life story has been curiously intertwined, probably shared honors as the most popular Edison artists; one specializing in sentimental songs and the other in comedy. They had longer record lists than any other Edison singers and, although Walter's voice displayed the greater range (the incurably modest Billy avers that "Walter always had a million dollars worth of voice compared to anything I ever had") their middle tones are so similar that in duet records it is frequently hard to tell one from the other. Recognizing this, Billy sometimes affected a deeper, chesty second as a comedy contrast to Scanlan's pure lyric tenor — and this deliberate lowering of pitch led some of Murray's admirers such as the late John L. Norton, Sr. — to believe mistakenly that his voice had changed from tenor to baritone!

Walter John Van Brunt was born in Brooklyn, New York, on April 22, 1892. As his name indicates, he is of old New York Dutch descent. His early life was not much different from that of the average boy in a large city, except that he was gifted with marked ability for music. He learned to play the piano and at the age of thirteen was boy soprano at Trinity and St. John's Churches, in New York City. Little Walter also was a phonograph enthusiast with a particular admiration for Billy Murray. He dreamed of growing up to be a recording star with a fame rivaling that of Billy, then the king of popular record makers.

Billy himself likes to recall the first time he met the youngster, upon whose subsequent career the great comedian was to have so much influence.

"It must have been around 1907," says Billy, "that I went to a minstrel show given by the Bayridge Athletic Club in honor of a district political leader. After the show, I was told, 'There's a kid here who wants to meet you. He says he's crazy about your records and does his best to sing

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 25)

RECORDS

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. d6008

REGULAR AUCTIONS classical vocal records. Free lists.—S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colo. ja3652

WE BUY contents of homes, furniture, and Victrola records and sell them.—Curio Shop, 106A Court St., Brooklyn, N. Y. Phone - TR 5-2186 n60201

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. n3084

ZONOFONO RECORDS by Caruso, others. G&T's Caruso, De Lucia, Sammarco, Boninsegna, others. Fonotipias. 50,000 records, operatic, oldtime, Americana, Hot Jazz. Want list to:—John Sicignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, New Jersey. mh60601

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., New Town Square, Pennsylvania. o120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122511

CYLINDER RECORDS: Edison, Columbia, 2 min., 4 min. wax, Amberol. All excellent, 45c ea. postpaid. List 10c (refunded). Also standard machine with large horn; plays both speed records.—V. A. Wheelless, Longwood, Fla. n1052

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants." For information write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 98th St., N. Y. 28, New York. n126581

RECORD COLLECTORS: Thousands, earliest to present day recordings. All makes for sale. Specify wants. No lists. Stamp please.—"Pastonow" Records, 211 N. Market St., Rockville, Ind. d124461

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS wanted: Highest prices paid for vocal operatic and concert songs. Send for free buying list.—Ball, 1135 DuPont, Miami, Fla. d6257

Rare Vocal Recordings, including imports. Free lists.—Music Den, 825 Irving Street, San Francisco, Calif. d6276

Rent LP's! Complete plays, operas, by mail. Write for details. Wakefield Record Library, Earlysville, Va. d8x

MISCELLANEOUS

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

MELODEONS, Melodeon organs. Beautiful restored instruments for sale. Will buy instruments needing repairs. Expert repairing service.—C-sharp Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. f126351

OLD TIME RECORDS. Operatic, instrumental, popular. All your favorite artists represented. Priced reasonably. Records bought. Write wants or visit.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. d3844

WANTED OLD Vaudeville and Theatrical posters, programs, records.—Ronald Slaughter, 8919 Gibson St., Los Angeles 34, Calif. d3042

FOR SALE: One Nelson & Wiggins automatic player in walnut case. Contains piano unit, 2 drums, xylophone, castanet, tambourine, cymbals, etc. Has 10 tune perforated roll. New rolls currently available. Excellent condition. Send 25c for photograph and particulars.—H. K. Quinn, 105 Westmoreland, Montgomery 6, Alabama. o40001

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Everything. Catalog 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. jly12867

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, $1.80. Direct from importer.—Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York City 7, N. Y. ja3806

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 12c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. n3023

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6215

PIANO, COIN OPERATED barroom type. Restored like new with rolls, $295. Wanted all kinds rolls.—Lee, 934 N. Lancaster, Dallas, Tex. o1002

WANTED: Player piano rolls, standard 88-note, classical; and Deagan catalogs, 1905-1920 showing big Marimbas with U-shaped tubes; other pictures of same. Who has such a Marimba? Write—F. K. MacCallum, 1815 E. Rio Grande, El Paso, Texas. d3806

OLD AUTOHARP and instruction book. In original box. Needs tuning. $8.50. Postage extra.—Morton, 414 E. Main, Greenville, Ohio. n1251

PORTABLE MELODEON, rosewood (no pedals). 100 rolls for old Hand Roller Organ; unusual collection of 50 old Hohner Harmonicas, like new, including concert harps, chimes, trumpets, etc. Stamp please.—Marie Stimeling, Box 12, Dixon, Ill. n1082

COLUMBIA CYLINDER Phonograph, morning glory horn, stand; rare, $25. Edison cylinder, morning glory, flowered horn, stand; like new, $40. Another plain horn, no stand, $25. 2 Edison cylinder table model, with built-in horns, $15 ea. Another larger size, built-in horn, $20. Table model Victor with built-in horn, disc records, $10. Electric Columbia cylinder dictaphone; plug-in cord missing; working order, $15. 25 records with each phonograph. 50 Edison thick disc records, $10. 50 player piano rolls, $7.50. Victor record cabinet holds 31, $7.50.—Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. n1027

WANTED

by
The following Odeon records
ELISABETH RETHBERG

76215 Pastorale (Bizet) (8199)
76216 Die Einsame (Pataky) (8199)
76229 Freundliche Vision (Strauss) (8200)
80036 Staendchen (Strauss) (8200)
80160 Africanerin-Lebwohl (8009)
80161 Carmen-Arie der Micaela (81059) (8005)
80165 Zauberfloete-Ach ich fuehle (81061)
80167 Zigeunerbaron-Lied der Saffi (8010)
80168 Der Sylphe des Friedens (Mozart) (8010)
Carmen and Madame Butterfly duets with RICHARD TAUBER

COLUMBIA

"GRAND OPERA RECORDS"

By MARCELLA SEMBRICH, EDOUARD DE RESZKE, SCHUMANN-HEINK, CAMPANARI, SUZANNE ADAMS, ANTONIO SCOTTI and CHARLES GILBERT.

VICTOR RED SEA DISCS with MONARCH and DE LUXE Labels.

BRUNSWICK classical vocal records by famous singers—"New Hall of Fame" series, etc.
ZONOPHONE (Disc, Zonofono, etc.) records by EUGENIA MANTELLI, CARUSO, CALVE POL PLANCON, DELMAS and other great singers.

STEPHEN FASSETT

Box 285, West Falmouth, Mass.
Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21)

with them and make himself sound like you.'

"The kid," Billy recalls, "was wearing short pants. He said his name was Walter Van Brunt, he lived in Brooklyn and would like to do recording." As Billy remembers it, he told the eager youngster to wait until his voice changed before trying to make money at singing for phonographs. But he gave Walter some tips on what recording company officials he should talk with later on, told him how to stand in front of the horn and touched on technical tricks that were useful in those days of acoustic performance.

"A year or two later," Murray carries on the story, "I had a recording date at Edison. When I went in there were playing a record of 'I Wish I Had a Girl' that sounded almost exactly like the one I had made for Victor. I said, 'Say who made that record?' and somebody laughed and said, 'You did!'"

"I knew better than that. 'Don't kid me,' I said. 'I did that song for Victor, but Mannie Romaine made it for you.' Then they told me that a boy named Van Brunt had sung 'I Wish I Had a Girl' on a home recorded cylinder, copied my style to the letter and submitted it as a sample of his work. The imitation was so good that it came close to fooling even me!"

This ingenious stunt did not, however, immediately win Walter an Edison engagement. He received his first trial with the Indestructible Record Company, which had been organized in 1907 to make unbreakable cylinders that preceded Edison's Blue Amberols by five years. Walter's clear, sweet tenor voice made an immediate hit with the Indestructible firm, which later changed its name to Federal, and he signed a contract to make 100 cylinders for $4,000 a year. That doesn't seem a large sum now, but it looked like plenty of money to the "Boy Wonder," particularly since the contract was not exclusive but left him privileged to sing for any other company.

Working for Indestructible, Walter sang mostly ballads but he occasionally did a comedy number, such as "Let George Do It," in which the Murray influence was apparent. Among those early cylinders was the only four-minute record I have heard of my favorite sentimental song, "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree." This Harry Williams and Egbert Van Alstyne classic had come out in 1905, so the fact that Van Brunt was called on to record it several years later was a tribute to its enduring appeal. The second stanza, never sung, I believe, on any other record, seems to confirm a story I have heard that the author and composer intended "The Apple Tree" to be a satire on the mournful ballads of that era and were surprised when it was taken seriously. The words of the second stanza certainly sound like an attempt at satire or burlesque.

The young tenor's first Victor recording session soon followed. His initial offering for Victor was issued, judging by its number, 16304, in April or May, 1909. Van Brunt occupied the "B" side with a tuneless George W. Meyer ballad, "Summer Reminds Me of You." On the other side, Harry Macdonough, the popular manager of Victor's New York recording studios and second tenor of the Haydn — later, Hayden — Quartet, sang a Harry Von Tilzer composition, "Just One Girl." Both numbers were pretty and catchy, in keeping with the sentimental standards of the day, but the record didn't strike the public fancy and stayed in the catalog only a couple of years.

Even the most experienced singers make records that turn out to be "dogs," so Victor wasn't discouraged by young Van Brunt's initial lack of success. Within a few months he had two other selections on the market, and they did well. The first was No. 16363, "When I Dream in the Gloaming of You," and it was paired with one of Manuel Romaine's three Victors, "When We Listened to the Chiming of the Old Church Bell." Walter's next Victor, "It's Hard to Kiss Your Sweetheart When the Last Kiss Means Goodbye," was not a hit in its own right, but it was lucky enough to be paired, on No. 16377, with the Haydn Quartet's version of that all-time classic, "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet." That assured its holding its place in the Victor list for many years.

Rather strangely, after the success of those last two songs, there were no more Victor records by Van Brunt until June, 1911, when he returned with two. One was "My Yiddish Colleen," combined with "Adventures in a Department Store," by Murry K. Hill; the other, a Halsey K. Mohr ballad, "Give Your Smiles to All the Boys But Keep Your Heart for Me," oddly combined with "Rag Pickin'," a banjo solo by Fred Van Eps. In July, Walter was on hand with one of the most appealing numbers Harry Von Tilzer ever wrote, the lullaby, "All Aboard for Blanket Bay," which he had sung at the Frank C. Stanley Memorial Concert on March 8, 1911. From then on, as long as he free-lanced, the name of Walter Van Brunt cropped up regularly in Victor lists. During this same year, he recorded three duets with John Bieling — "It's Time to Close Your Drowsy Eyes and Sleep," "The Owl in the Old Oak Tree" and "Her Bright Smile Haunts Me Still." The voices of the 19-year-old Van Brunt and the 42-year-old Bieling blended well. Presumably the records were made as a substitute for the formerly popular Macdonough and Bieling duets. Harry Macdonough had become so busy as a Victor executive he was having increasingly less time for singing.

Young Walter's popularity steadily increased. The Victor catalog for May, 1912, commented:

Mr. Van Brunt has become in a very short time one of the most popular ballad tenors who make records for the Victor. His sweet tenor, remarkable enunciation and talking style are much in evidence in the series of reproductions listed below. As will be seen, Mr. Van Brunt not only sings ballads extremely well, but essays a comedy selection now and then, which is always cleverly rendered — as a hearing of this singer's "Railroad Rag" or "Society Bear" will show.

"That Society Bear," a now forgotten Irving Berlin song, was combined with one of Al Jolson's first records, "Brass Band Ephraim Jones." The paragraph just quoted was accompanied by a thumbnail photo of Van Brunt. His hair was brushed back pompadour-style and he looked boyish.

Van Brunt began his recording career at an auspicious time. About the time his first Victor records appeared, Billy Murray had signed a contract restricting the Murray services to Victor for discs and Edison for cylinders. Murray's duets with Ada Jones were the most popular records of the time, and his "desertion" left Ada in a bad way when she wanted to make duets for Columbia. Indestructible and any other companies other than Victor and Edison. As Walter recalled at last year's Bieling Day party, Billy suggested that she team up with Van Brunt, whose voice and comedy style were so much like his own.

This was done. The team of Jones and Van Brunt never worked for Victor and Edison, but they made many records for competing concerns. (The Jones and Murry duets continued on Zon-o-phone, which was under Victor control). Walter's first appearance in the 1909 Columbia list was his duet with Miss Jones on No. A668, "I'm Looking for a Sweetheart and I Think You'll Do." It was completed with Bob Roberts and Chorus singing "Shine On, Harvest Moon," and it's a record I want but haven't found. The next duet was A782, "I'm Glad I'm a Boy—I'm Glad I'm a Girl," doubled with "Irish Blood," by Ada alone. Meanwhile, Walter had made his first Columbia solo, A725, "You've Got Me Goin', Kid," combined with "I'm Wait - Wait - Waitin'," by Yolande Noble, an English comedienne whose sister Nan, married the Australian basso, Peter Dawson.

By this time, Van Brunt had formed a partnership for comedy records with Maurice Burkhart, a tenor with an amusing, thin, piping voice. They sang together for both Columbia and Victor and made some entertaining duets. He also teamed up with Helen Clark, who was only a year or two older than he, and the young singers did scores of records together. They sang off and on as a duet pair for almost twenty years. Probably their last team work was the Diamond Disk of "A Precious Little Thing Called Love" and "When the World is at Rest," issued shortly before Edison went out of the record business in 1929.

I was recently surprised to dis-

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 23)

Courtesy of the New York Graphic Society

"The Country Auction"

A PRINT from the painting of that name by David Ellinger is now available for collectors.

The print is done by the silk screen process which simulates oils or water colors, and the bright, original colors, are fully portrayed — the gayest of red barns, green grass, colorful costumes of the country auction devotees, etc.

Those who love the American countryside, and "grass roots," of will be warmed day in and day out by it, be the days light or shadowful.

AMERICANA

The print is available unframed, at $18 and comes in one size only, 22x26 3/4". It's a natural for the collector's home.

Write: COUNTRY AUCTION

c/o HOBBIES Magazine — 1006 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

umes of prints which included subjects after Watteau, Teniers, Van Ostade, Boucher, Chardin, and several Dutch and Flemish artists. Engravers of the plates were, among others, Aveline, Flipart, Cochin, Sornique, and even Basan himself.

An engraver of that time was Jean George Wille who, though born in Prussia, became a Frenchman by choice and one of the great collectors of his day. In his youth he was trained in a gunsmith's shop to engrave the mounts which decorated the firearms. Urged by his love of art Wille went to Paris where he became well-known in the fashionable world, and dealers and patrons of art and artists were his friends and frequent visitors. He was an ardent collector and constant attendant at sales, and even during the Revolution and to the end of his life he added to and retained his collection of coins and medals. The catalogue of his own sale is now an interesting rarity. His best works are "Les Musiciens ambulants" after Dietrich, his engraved portraits of "Marquis de Marigny" and "Comte de Saint Florentin" after Tocque, while the most spirited portrait which he engraved was that of Marechal de Saxe, after Rigaud. Many of his pupils became excellent engravers, among whom were Massard, Tardieu, Avril, and Bervic (whose real name was Balvay) engraved "Louis XVI," after Callet, which is called one of the glories of the French School and about the best of the French royal portraits, and is in great demand always by collectors.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 25)

cover that Walter also sang at least one duet with the legendary, almost fabulous, Elida Morris. They appeared in the Indestructible list for February, 1911, with something called "I've Got Your Number." I'm not sure whether Walter did any other singing with Elida, but I'd like to question him about his recollections of this fascinating "sex appeal specialist" and find out if he knows whether she's still alive. He likewise made a Columbia duet, "Hannah, Smile A-while On Me," with Elise Stevenson.

Within two or three years after he made his first records, Van Brunt was singing for virtually every phonograph company in the United States. A Massachusetts millionaire, Henry M. Whitney, was persuaded to put up the money to finance the Boston Talking Machine Company which made Phono-Cut records. Because of patent restrictions, Phono-Cuts were vertical, as their name indicates, and played with a sapphire point, like the Pathé discs later introduced to this country. Fred Hager, the recording manager, had Walter come to Boston and sing for Phono-Cut several dozen of his most popular numbers in the Victor and Edison catalogs. But Phono-Cut didn't stay in business long. Fred explains: "We made a good record, but there just weren't enough hill-and-dale machines in the country for us to sell our discs."

Van Brunt's popularity as a record maker soon brought him vaudeville offers. Billy Murray recalls meeting the boy of 17 or 18 one day, on Broadway, just after he had come back from a vaudeville tour with Fred Hillebrand, a comedian still living who himself won some success singing into the recording horn. Billy laughingly says that Walter, elated at being a hit on both records and in variety, was "the cockiest kid I ever saw." "After he told me of how he and Fred had been 'knocking them dead,'" Billy chuckles, "he also told me of the recording dates he had lined up. When I left him he was doing a snappy little dance on the pavement.

"Walter," Billy continues, "always did have more life and pep in the way he sang or did anything else than just about any artist I can think of. He could take a song that other tenors, good in their way, would make sound flat or dead and liven it up so that it seemed something entirely different and better. Nobody else could sing his own song. 'Tho I Had a Bit of the Devil in Me,' the way he did it."

The association between Van Brunt and Murray was particularly close around 1911-12. It's not telling tales out of school to record that in those carefree years of great popularity, Billy was sometimes a bit forgetful about filling recording engagements. He was so devoted to baseball that he might be at the ball park, yelling for the Highlanders, who later became known as the Yankees, instead of being on the job at Victor or Edison. He might have slipped off on a spring training trip with his diamond heroes. Or possibly he was in a garage, working on somebody's car for the unpaid fun of tinkering with machinery.

Whenever something like this happened, Victor was likely to put Van Brunt into service as a Murray substitute. A few of the American Quartet records were made with Van Brunt, instead of Murray, singing the lead. A good example is 16992, "I Want a Girl Just Like the Girl That Married Dear Old Dad." (Incidentally, Harry Macdonough takes the lead in the quartet's record, No. 17397, of "On the Banks of the Wabash.") Walter also substituted for Billy in one or two of the Heidelberg Quintet records. John Bieling told me that Billy's amiable inclination to forget both recording and personal appearance agreements was so well known to the other members of the quartet that Bieling, Steve Porter, and Bill Hooley had an agreement with Walter to be on hand whenever the ensemble was scheduled to sing. If Billy didn't show up, Walter took his place and got his share of the talent fee. If "The Denver Nightingale" did come, the other three "cut in" Van Brunt for a slice of their own earnings.

Perhaps the most remarkable example of the close ties between Murray and Van Brunt occurred in a 1913 Victor record, No. 17244, of "Beautiful Doll, Goodbye," an answer to "Oh You Beautiful Doll," which the group had earlier recorded with great success. In the chorus, a high note occurs at the end of the line, "Oh, my beautiful doll, goodbye-e-e!" When the American began trying to record the number, Billy simply couldn't go that far upstairs — not that day, anyway. So Walter, who had probably been asked to stick around the studio, took the top note for his pal Bill. If you own that record, play it and listen closely. You'll hear that Billy begins the "goodbye" each time the chorus is sung, but that Walter takes the last syllable so smoothly that hardly anyone would suspect two voices were involved. This is also true of other lines ending "don't cry." The substitution, or addition, was possible because of the great similarity of their range. It's interesting to note that Walter never sang as a regular member of any recording quartet, although many years after his American Quartet experiences he was "lead" with a radio foursome.

One of the companies for which he worked in 1911-12 was U. S. Everlasting, which, like Indestructible, marketed an almost unbreakable cylinder. The 1912 U. S. catalog called him "undoubtedly the youngest performer that has met with marked success in the phonograph sphere." His age was given as 19, and he was said to be "lately a choir boy in Trinity and St. John's Chapel. He entered vaudeville with Billy Murray as a clever comedian as well as a fine singer."

The latter statement I am sure is a mistake. Murray's only stage appearances in those years were with the troupe that became known as the Eight Famous Victor Artists, and I have no idea that he and Van Brunt were ever a vaudeville duo. The "Eight" began making concert appearances in 1912. Regardless of whether he teamed with Billy, Walter continued in vaudeville for several years, part of the time as the partner of a noted song writer, Halsey K. Mohr, already mentioned as the composer of "Give Your Smiles to All the Boys."

Even though his "sample" of "I Wish I Had a Girl" must have been submitted in 1909, Van Brunt's first record for Edison, the company with which he was to be longest and most intimately identified, was not issued until September, 1911. It contained another song by the "Apple Tree" writers, Williams and Van Alstyne, but the new number, "I'm Just Pining for You," was not so big a hit. However, it received a cordial review in the Talking Machine News, an English publication usually not overly partial to American singers:

This is sung by a new tenor who promises to be a great favorite. Further than this, the song is of a new kind. It speaks of a sorrowful lover who because he has been flirting has been jilted by his true lady-love, and the song is an appeal to her to "make up again." For clearness and enunciation of tone we have never heard a more successful record, and though the song is essentially American doubtless it will win great popularity over here.

It is interesting to note that the English Columbia-Rena Company by this time had begun to import matrices of Columbia Van Brunt records from the United States and to issue them with the tenor's name given as "Herbert Scott." He became well known to disc and cylinder buyers throughout the British Empire.

"I'm Just Pining for You" was a four-minute record. Van Brunt's first two-minute cylinder was published in February, 1912, only eight months before Edison gave up wax cylinders for the unbreakable Blue Amberols. The two-minute "roller" was another song by George W. Meyer, for whose compositions Walter seems to have had a liking, and the title was "There's a Dixie Girl Who's Longing for a Yankee Doodle Boy." Said the monthly supplement: "For Mr. Van Brunt's first Standard record we have asked him to sing this new march song which was listed last month as Amberol No. 885. It fits his voice admirably and we predict much enthusiasm for it."

The Van Brunt records gained steadily in popularity, and the Edison Blue Amberol catalog for April, 1914, included a photo of the tenor, in which he looked somewhat older than in the picture Victor used, although he was only 22 when the catalog appeared. And in June there was an important announcement in Edison's house organ, the Edison Phonograph

Monthly. The front cover displays a large photograph of Van Brunt, in which his eyes look black instead of their natural blue, and the statement is made that he is "now under exclusive Edison contract." On page 80, this comment appears:

Mr. Van Brunt hails from Brooklyn, N. Y., where he was born April, 1892. He was boy soprano at Trinity and St. John's Churches, New York, when thirteen years of age, and was induced by his success to devote all his time to music. He has appeared in many musical entertainments in and around New York, always carrying off more than his share of the honors. Touring in vaudeville with Halsey Moore (a misspelling for Mohr—J. W.) he has popularized a number of "hits," his clear voice and delightful personality making him a great favorite.

It is unnecessary to tell those who have heard his records how great a favorite he has become with Edison audiences. He handles his fine tenor voice with such ease and sings so artistically that he cannot help be the admiration of all who like a versatile and gifted singer.

By special arrangement he will now be recorded exclusively by the Edison Laboratory.

(To be Continued)

OCCUPATIONAL SHAVING MUGS and Their Prices

By W. PORTER WARE

An authoritative treatise of valuable information for collectors and dealers in this popular subject.

A cloth-bound library book that will increase in value.

LIMITED EDITION

Illustrated profusely with the different groups, including fakes.

You can save the cost of the book in one purchase of a mug if you know the hobby and its various phases as portrayed by the author.

Price only $1.50

Postage Prepaid

Lightner Publishing Corp.

1006 So. Michigan Avenue,
Chicago 5, Illinois

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

WALTER VAN BRUNT (WALTER SCANLAN) I

By JIM WALSH

It would be hard to say just when Thomas A. Edison decided that Walter Van Brunt was his favorite tenor, but probably it was not more than a year or so after the singer made his Edison debut. However, the inventor's enthusiasm for the young man's style and technique must have been an important factor in Van Brunt's agreement to give up his well-paid career as a free-lance and sing only for Edison. About this time, too, the aging inventor adopted "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen" as his favorite song, with an important effect on Walter's career. The remainder of this installment must be devoted to chronicling the saga of "Kathleen."

Mr. Edison liked for his company to make records of songs popular when he was a boy or young man. Most were so-called "heart songs" of the old-fashioned sentimental order. Others were old-time minstrel tunes or song-and-dance specialists. Edison's taste was close enough to that of the average middle-class American for some of the resurrections to sell well, but many selections personally chosen by the Wizard had little appeal for the ordinary record buyer. This caused Edison to get the reputation of issuing a larger number of hard to sell records than any other company.

A legend goes that Edison bought old sheet music by the hundreds of pounds, looking for suitable numbers to record. In publishers' basements stacked high with obsolete sheet music, he found much rubbish. But, says the legend, he also found "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen." The touching story told by the rather poetic lyric set to a haunting melody fascinated "The Old Man" (who must also have heard the song when it first came out a year or so before he invented the phonograph) and in 1914 he suggested that Van Brunt should record it.

Mr. Edison's "suggestions" were commands to the laboratory staff. Nevertheless, Van Brunt was reluctant to sing "Kathleen," for he didn't think much of the song. Remember, he was only 22 and, no doubt, like most singers of popular music, he preferred to devote his talents to something currently popular instead of an old-fashioned "tear jerker," dating back 40 years. So he evaded making the record until he was told: "The Old Man's getting impatient. He says for you to quit stalling and make that record of 'I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen.' He says it'll be a big seller—and you know whatever the Old Man sets his head on has got to be done."

So Walter sang the antique tune. Even so, he was not the first Edison artist to record it. A fine Blue Amberol by Will Oakland had been issued in October, 1913. Will had used the song while singing for minstrel shows, an indication that the number had not been entirely forgotten before Mr. Edison's cellar "discovery." Oakland's Edison contract at that time called only for making cylinders, but Van Brunt was singing for both record types.

The disc of "Kathleen," sung with the help of a mixed chorus, met with immediate and amazing popularity, bearing in mind that Edison had been issuing the thick hill-and-dale records for only two years when it appeared. The tenor's voice was sweet and youthful, and the theme of the kindly husband promising that "when the fields are fresh and green" he would take his sorrowing wife back to her old home struck a responsive note in the American heart. Edison dealers learned that the record was "the Old Man's" favorite and they plugged it with enthusiasm. Everybody who came in to hear Diamond Discs was asked to listen to "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen," and nearly every customer bought it. Dealers said that Mr. Edison had signed Van Brunt as an exclusive artist to make sure he wouldn't sing that song for any other company. As long as Edison made records it was hard to find a New Edison owner who didn't have a "Kathleen" record. It was part of an orthodox Edisonian's pride of possession.

However, the records didn't necessarily sound alike. "Uncle Thomas" was so fond of "Kathleen" that Walter says he was obliged to make, at various times throughout his Edison association, some fifteen different sets of masters. These were done to give improvements in orchestration or to incorporate some other change that seemed desirable to Mr. Edison.

The serial number printed on the label remained 3087, but the letter denoting the "take" varied. A number followed by A, B or C indicates an original 1914 recording. A higher letter, such as F, G or H, indicates a later re-make. The subsequent records were better than the first, because the singer's voice gained in strength as he became more mature and his style showed consistent improvement.

Billy Murray recalls seeing Walter being made the hero, or victim, of one of the immortal inventor's recording stunts. Some singers were troubled by the roar of the orchestra pounding their ears while they caroled into the horn. This led "the Old Man" to construct a soundproof arrangement, much like a telephone booth, with which he experimented by having Van Brunt stand inside to sing without hearing the accompaniment, which was going into the horn from another room. When Billy gleefully observed his pal, Walter was almost perishing from heat and lack of air while doing his darndest to put the right expression and emotion into one of the perennial re-makes of "Kathleen." (Writing the first draft of this article on the sizzling hot night of June 25, with the thermometer seemingly glued to the 90's and not a breath of air stirring, I can thoroughly sympathize with Walter's long gone sufferings!) Van Brunt was unmercifully kidded by Murray and other artists about the uncomfortable things that happened to "the Old Man's pet." The experiment proved unsatisfactory and was abandoned. Walter wasn't sorry.

"Kathleen" became the most popular record in the Edison catalog, and Walter says more than one and half million copies were sold — a huge total for a vertical cut record that couldn't be played on an ordinary phonograph without an attachment. The 1925 booklet, "Edison Records of Music That Lives," contains the following elaborate description:

Thomas P. Westendorf, who wrote "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen," was a professor of music in a Kentucky College. In the years gone by he composed a great many songs, but until "Kathleen" came along he received very little recognition, and the success of "Kathleen" is largely due to Mr. Thomas A. Edison. More than ten years ago Mr. Edison purchased a lot of old music which he found stored in the cellars of music publishers. He bought this music by the ton and among it he found "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen." The melody was so unusual and exquisite

Announcing Fassett's Recording Service

Standard 78 RPM and 33 RPM LP Acetate discs cut to order on high quality professional equipment.

Wide range FM off-the-air recording. Amateur tape recordings transferred to discs (7½" per second speed only).

Dubbing a specialty: Records from your collection or mine faithfully copied. Cylinders (both two and four minute types) re-recorded onto tape or discs.

Special variable speed turntable for dubbing odd-speed collectors' items (earliest Caruso's etc.) at correct pitch.

First Class Recordings at Relatively Low Prices

FASSETT'S RECORDING SERVICE

Box 362, West Falmouth, Massachusetts

The Old Music Store MUSICAL ANTIQUES

Melodeons, Pipe and Reed Organs, Coin Operated Pianos, Calliopes, and other smaller items.

Wette-Mignon Automatic Player Concert Grand with 300 classical rolls.

— Expert Repairing —

WRITE

ESTHER SKERRITT SANDERS
Deansboro, New York

that Mr. Edison ordered that it be recorded immediately and predicted at that time it would be one of the most popular vocal records in the Edison catalog. This prediction has come true to an extent where this record is the biggest selling Edison record, and the demand for it continues about the same every year, despite the fact that it has been on the market more than ten years.

None of the other songs composed by Westendorf even approached "Kathleen" in popularity. Apparently they were just composed, while "Kathleen" was written in a moment of inspiration, just a glorious invention pulled out of the skies. You see, the name of Westendorf's wife was Kathleen. She was born in Germany and during her sojourn in America she had a continuous desire to return to her old home in Germany. It was Westendorf's wife, Kathleen, therefore, who inspired this tender ballad.

Some years ago Westendorf took his wife Kathleen back to Germany to see her old home, but as her old home was really a fairy-tale home, built up by her imagination, the reality was a great disappointment to Kathleen. She stated that she was now satisfied and wished to return immediately to her American home. A few years later, Kathleen died and passed on to her final home somewhere in the vast universe. This charming ballad remains as a perpetual monument to her memory, and is a source of consolation to her husband, who is still living.

On the reverse side of the disc is a typical love song ("On the Banks of the Brandywine") of the popular variety. It has a fine flowing melody that quickly "catches on" and a lyric that suits the music admirably. A feature of the recording here is the vocal obligato by Elizabeth Spencer. This obligato is just prominent enough to be beautiful without detracting from the main melody sung by Walter Van Brunt.

This seems a suitable place to say that "Brandywine" reveals one of the few oddities of Van Brunt's enunciation. Like Billy Murray, every word he pronounced was crystal clear, but in his earlier days as a singer Walter had a habit (I understand it's shared by many other natives of metropolitan New York) of inserting "h's" in some words where they didn't belong and leaving them out of others. He sings "Brandywine" as if it were "Brandywhine." And sometimes a word like "wheels" or "while" comes out as "weels" or "wile." He also occasionally pronounced "new" as "noo," as in "I'm Just a Ragged Newsboy But My Heart's True Blue." Of course, this may have been done in keeping with the normal accent of the "hero" of the song. Such exceptions aside, his enunciation and pronunciation were irreproachable, and the regional characteristics were less conspicuous in his later recordings.

Edison's successful promotion of the Westendorf ballad probably induced Victor to get on Kathleen's band wagon, for the Camden company soon issued a Red Seal version of the number by the Metropolitan Opera basso, Clarence Whitehill. This was not a big seller, but when Henry Burr and the Peerless Quartet recorded "Kathleen" in 1921 and coupled it with "When the Corn is Waving, Annie Dear," the double became one of the biggest sellers of Burr's entire career and was remade after electrical recording came in.

Columbia had needed no Edison impetus. In January, 1914, before the Van Brunt record came out, it had published "Kathleen," sung by an English tenor, William Thomas, and coupled with "The Better Land" by a noted British contralto, Carrie Herwin. Still later, a more popular Columbia was made of "Kathleen" by the Tennessee baritone, Oscar Seagle, and coupled with "Carry Me Back to Old Virginia." As long as Diamond Discs were made, "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen" held top place as the Edison record and a sort of Van Brunt trademark. Today, the song, now at least 76 years old, is becoming so much of a legend it's hard to separate fact from fiction. I have seen it called "an old Irish folk song" and, perhaps because of the romantic associations that song writers like to weave around Erin's Isle, most listeners seem to take it for granted that Kathleen was an Irish colleen, perhaps a descendant or namesake of Kathleen Mavourneen, yearning to return to the Ould Sod.

Actually, although the story in the Edison booklet is pathetic and pretty, it is doubtful that it's true. In his "History of Popular Music," "the Tune Detective," Sigmond Spaeth, says that Thomas Paine Westendorf was a Virginian who wrote both the words and melody of Kathleen, "under circumstances which have only recently been established by the researches of Richard S. Hill, of the Library of Congress."

Spaeth relates that the song was written in 1875 and in Plainfield, Indiana, not Louisville, Kentucky, as has been frequently claimed. He adds that "the sentimental story of Mrs. Westendorf's illness and unhappiness over the death of a son" has been found to be untrue. Instead, according to the Spaeth version, she merely wanted to go back to visit her home in Ogensberg, New York, shortly after their marriage while Westendorf stuck to his school-teaching job in Plainfield.

Dr. Spaeth also says that "Kathleen" was suggested by another song, "Barney, Take Me Home," written by Arthur W. French and George W. Persley, whose real name was George W. Brown. While his wife was away from home, Westendorf — again according to Spaeth — composed an answer to "Barney," but substituted Kathleen for his wife's real name of Jennie and took the liberty of placing her home "across the sea" for romantic effect. The Tune Detective goes on to say that the song was introduced at the Plainfield Town Hall and was published in July, 1876, by John Church and Company. It was popular in Great Britain as well as the United States, and was never entirely forgotten, as witness the imported Columbia record by the English tenor.

One or two more mentions of "Kathleen" and that heroine will be dismissed. The September, 1915, issue of the Edison Phonograph Monthly contains a brief article headed, "The Author of 'I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen' Receives a Check for $250 From Mr. Edison":

Forty-two years ago, just after he had been married, Thomas P. Westendorf, of the Shelby County Industrial Training School, wrote the words and music of the song, "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen."

Although nearly half a century old, the song has gained in popularity each year. It is one of the few selections of the present day which has reached the honored distinction of being "a new old song."

Early in August this year Mr. Edison wrote to Mr. Westendorf: "Your song is the most popular song in the United States. I felt like stealing when I used it, so I am sending you a little check by way of royalty."

In these days when the authors of many popular songs have difficulty in defending their copyrights and frequently receive nothing whatever in the way of royalty, it is refreshing to find one publisher or manufacturer cherishing such a fine sense of fair play.

(Possibly it should be explained that phonograph manufacturers were not required to pay royalties for using songs published before 1909, when the benefits of copyright or recorded music were extended by Congress to publishers and song writers. Mr. Edison's "little check" was a gesture of good will and not a legal obligation).

Westendorf himself was heard from in November, 1915, when the Monthly published the following, headed, "Presents the Cylinder to the Disc!":

The author of "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen," who recently received a "royalty" of $250 from Mr. Edison for the song, writes as follows:

"For the past two months I have been trying to make up my mind that I ought to get an Edison Disc, but, listen! Do you know I really prefer my Edison Cylinder that I have become so at-

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 27)

WANTED

by
The following Odeon records
ELISABETH RETHBERG

- 76215 Pastorale (Bizet) (8199)
- 76216 Die Einsame (Pataky) (8199)
- 76229 Freundschaft Vision (Strauss) (8200)
- 80086 Staendchen (Strauss) (8200)
- 80160 Africanerlin-Leb'wohl (8009)
- 80161 Carmen-Arie der Micaela (81059) (8009)
- 80165 Zauberfloete-Ach ich fuehl's (81061)
- 80187 Zigeunerbaron-Lied der Saffi (8010)
- 80168 Der Sylphe des Friedens (Mozart) (8010)
- Carmen and Madame Butterfly duets with RICHARD TAUBER

COLUMBIA

"GRAND OPERA RECORDS"

By MARCELLA SEMBRICH, EDOUARD DE RESZKE, SCHUMANN-HEINK, CAMPANARI, SUZANNE ADAMS, ANTONIO SCOTTI and CHARLES GILBERT.

VICTOR RED SEA DISCS with MONARCH and DE LUXE Labels.

BRUNSWICK classical vocal records by famous singers—"New Hall of Fame" series, etc.
ZONOPHONE (Disco Zonofono, etc.) records by EUGENIA MANTELLI, CARUSO, CALVE POL PLANCON, DELMAS and other great singers.

STEPHEN FASSETT

Box 285, West Falmouth, Mass.
Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

suggestion by the rhythmical arrangement of lights and the darks, of swirling movement of dancing figures. Again we see in "The Storm" the swift movement of the galloping horse with its rider racing before the fury of the tempest as achieved by the lines that seem to bring the road towards us, away from the dark cloud-burst behind the horseman.

Zorn was a master of form without the use of line in the pure sense, for he presented through planes, by which through their carefully studied lost and found edges he suggested contour, close observation of movement, and intricacies of light and shadow on the texture of flesh and objects. In some of his plates the composition is brought together with long diagonal lines, and they at times seem to be constructed so as to suggest a work of greater size and importance than the actual dimensions of the plates.

Though his water colors and oil paintings won him medals and the red ribbon of the Legion of Honor, it is as an etcher that we think of Anders Zorn in spite of the fact that he said etching and carving were his diversions. He was fortunate in having his work become famous while he was alive. And the etchings made from his acclaimed paintings became more famous than the original paintings so that his work was

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 29)

CLOSE-OUT SALE

of
"Price Guide to 5000 Currier & Ives Prints"
By Edwin G. Warman

A check-list and price guide for Dealers and Collectors

The handbook contains a history of the firms of N. Currier & Currier & Ives; a catalogue of over 5000 different prints with prices and a facsimile of a rare Currier & Ives catalogue.

PUBLISHED AT $3 - CLOSE-OUT $1

This book will not be republished—so rush your order for only a limited number remain.

Send cash, check or money order to:

EDWIN G. WARMAN

8 Frank Hoover St., Uniontown, Penna.

"1202 Currier & Ives"
Prints and Their Retail Values."

"Handbook of Currier & Ives Prints."

$1 ea. or both books for $1.50

EARL ROMEY

112 W. Washington St., Bluffton, Ind.

PRINTS WANTED

WANTED: Currier & Ives winter scenes, fruit and flower prints and sporting subjects.—T. M. Reece, Boonville, N. C. ap126121

WANTED: Winter scenes and sporting subjects by Currier & Ives, especially large folios.—T. M. Reece, Boonville, North Carolina. d6867

CURRIER & IVES, all subjects.—Jacques Schurre, 313 Maple Ave., Falls Church, Va. d6614

CURRIER & IVES and other American prints wanted; also early Michigan prints. Best prices; give details.—House of Antiques, 28 Chandler, Detroit 2, Mich. ja6867

Good Prices Paid for Currier and Ives prints.—Earl Romey, Bluffton, Indiana. je122511

WANTED: The following large folio Currier and Ives prints: The Road—Summer, The Road—Winter, Trotting, Cracks at the Forge, Winter in the Country—"The Old Grist Mill", Central Park—Winter, Home to Thanksgiving. Any large, medium or small winter scenes. For $1, we will send you a catalog of 1800 prints we want and the price paid for each.—A. N. Davison, East Aurora, N. Y. ja2770

PRINTS FOR SALE

FOR YOUR Family History. Costume prints; Baronial Mansions; Scottish Highlands. All with coats-of-arms. Early American portraits and places. Maps.—Mabel Louise Keech—"At the Sign of the Cross": 2522 Thayer St., Evanston, Illinois. Phone: University 4-5789. ttx

BAXTER PRINTS. Have over 100. many rare. Prefer sell whole collection. Write.—A. Edwards, 927 25th St., Santa Monica, California. d3023

CURRIER & IVES Prints. Send stamp for list, large and small folios.—Frank W. Mathews, Scottsville, N. Y. ja122511

COLOR PRINTS. Flowers, fruits, birds, views, costumes. Fine old lace paper Valentines. Wholesale and retail.—K. Gregory, 222 East 71st St., New York 21, N. Y. f124661

CURRIER & IVES, priced for resale; specify subjects wanted.—Jacques Schurre, 313 Maple Avenue, Falls Church, Virginia. d6446

CURRIER - IVES PRINTS: Horses, scenes, Westerns, Presidents, Historicals, Names, Ships, Indians, Animals. Stamp please. Stains removed.—Stuart Gast, 3421 Center St., N. W., Washington 10, D. C. d3234

ANTIQUE, ORIGINAL colored fashion prints (English or French 1810-1880) 60c. Fine Godeys (1855-75) $1.25. Peterson's, 75c. Stamp for complete list.—Blackford, 2002 N. 4th St., Harrisburg, Pa. ja6468

Pages From the Past. Rare, beautiful, original leaves from the priceless book treasures of the past! Every leaf mounted with printed descriptive notes telling of the rarity and history of that particular specimen. All subjects. Illuminated medieval miniature paintings on vellum painted in the brilliant colors and golds of the 15th century. Illuminated manuscript leaves, Shakespeare Folio pages, Oriental miniatures and leaves, Bible pages from 1100 A. D. on, early printing from 1460 on, woodcuts and engravings from 1470 on, papyrus leaves as early as 300 A. D. Private presses, early music, legal documents on vellum with seals, etc. Priced from 75c. Catalogues.—Harold J. Maker, 10 Mt. Vernon Ave., Irvington, New Jersey. d36162

THE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 19)

tached to the past two years. I admit the Disc has its good points (including the Diamond Disc point), but the Edison Cylinder also has the same good point... and it has become such a fixed habit to play the cylinder that I think I will stick to it, and so I am really going to buy now one of your new Edison Cylinder instruments in preference to the Diamond Disc."

Mr. Westendorf presumably is now dead, but I have no information concerning his later years. The Edison publication said his song was 42 years old in 1915. That would mean it was written in 1873, but I think the 1875 date given by Spaeth is right. There is a Shelby county in Indiana and a reform school for boys is situated there, but the town of Plainfield mentioned by Spaeth is in Hendricks county, some distance northwest of Shelby. The Edison assertion that "Kathleen" had become more popular every year since publication seems to throw an unintended damper on the claim that it had been forgotten only to be rediscovered and reviewed by Mr. Edison.

Several years after "Kathleen" became a hit, Edison issued a record of another Westendorf song, "Could I See My Boy Again," sung by a contralto, Elizabeth Lennox, but it never rivaled the Van Brunt classic in popularity. In 1929, Columbia catalogued a "cute" duet version of Vernon Dalhart and Adelyn Hood singing "The Frog Song" a Westendorf composition for children. Spaeth lists among Westendorf's other songs "Garfield Now Will Guide the Nation," published during the presidential campaign of 1880, and one in Negro dialect, "Dey All Put on de Blue."

And now let's get back to Walter Van Brunt, who was soon to display ability as a song writer as well as a singer.

(To be Continued)

OLD VIEWS OF CITIES. Early prints, hand-colored, of your native town are interesting Americana. These are neatly mounted and protected by cellophane. Prices, from $3 to $15. Handpainted Coats of Arms authentically prepared to order; family name only requirement. Framed in gold, 12½x17". English with solid-color mat, $25; Scottish, with hand-painted Tartan mat, $27.50.—Old Prints, 625 E. Argonne Dr., Kirkwood, St. Louis 22, Mo. au122534

Old color prints: large Provincial views, $5 pair. Paris views, 13x19, $2.50. Colored Hogarths, 9x12, $1. Victorian watercolors, $5 and $7 pr. Also, special assortment 8 prints, $2.—Paul Farron, Box 1031, Santa Monica, Calif. d1403

Godey Fashion Prints: exact duplicates drawn from originals. All indelibly marked with year made & artist's name. Pen and ink and water color. Any size. Any print duplicated; guaranteed as fine as originals. Samples and prices upon request.—Marguerite Forster, East River Road, Grand Island, N. Y. d1654

Please mention HOBBIES when
replying to advertisements

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

WALTER VAN BRUNT (WALTER SCANLAN) II

By JIM WALSH

Walter Van Brunt (Scanlan) in 1932 with his three daughters and his wife's mother, Mrs. William A. Young. From left to right, the girls are Ruthie, Patsy and Mary Jane.

Walter Van Brunt's decision in 1914 to become an exclusive Edison artist was an inconvenience to his free-lance duet partner, Ada Jones, just as Billy Murray's signing a joint Victor-Edison contract had been five years before. Once more the popular comedienne had to find a new tenor with whom to sing. As successor to Van Brunt, she chose Henry Burr, who made a fairly large number of Columbia duets with her under that name, and one or two as Irving Gillette. They also sang "In the Heart of the City That Has No Heart," a maudlin "sob song," on an Edison Blue Amberol. But the combination wasn't especially successful. Burr's style was too serious to blend well with Miss Jones' serio-comic "conversational technique."

The most popular woman singer of her day also made a few Columbia duets with a vaudeville tenor. Billy Watkins, as well as with M. J. O'Connell, George Wilton Ballard and Will C. Robbins. I suspect Robbins of being Sam Ash, because their voices are similar and they came into the Columbia catalog about the same time. Robbin's first record, "He'd Keep On Saying Goodnight," a duet with Miss Jones, appeared in March, 1915. In April they had two more duets, "She Used to be the Slowest Girl in Town" (composed by my friend, Ray Walker) and "Wrap Me in a Bundle and Take Me Home With You." Ash made his debut likewise in April with "Goodbye, Virginia" and "I'm Not Ashamed of You, Molly." Next month, Jones and Robbins sang another Ray Walker song, "That Southern Hospitality."

The following appeared in the complete Columbia record catalog dated November, 1914:

Walter Van Brunt's peculiar faculty for singing a popular song in a manner the public particularly likes has won him both fame and money, not only in the making of records but more latterly on the most important vaudeville circuits of the country. Mr. Van Brunt is in the first place a real singer and his records are excellent from a vocal point of view apart from anything else. Outside of this, his grasp of the humorous points of a popular song and his ability to put his personality into a record have made him one of the most liked and most valuable of those who entertain the great Columbia public.

The foregoing was published several months after Van Brunt had stopped singing for Columbia. His last solo record on the "Magic Notes" label was A1407, "Where Did You Get That Girl?" The last Jones-Van Brunt duet was A1425, "He Wants Someone to Call Him Papa." His final Victor record as Van Brunt appeared in October, 1914, and was a duet with Helen Clark, No. 17621, "Where the Red, Red Roses Grow." Since his exclusive Edison contract had been announced in June, the record obviously was given a belated release.

A year later, Walter Van Brunt ceased to be "The Youngest Edison Artist" when the soprano, Gladys Rice, began to make "Re-Creations." Miss Rice, a native of Philadelphia, was only 19 when her recording career began late in 1915. Van Brunt was then 23. Miss Rice's first record, "Auf Wiedersehn," was a Sigmond Romberg song from "The Blue Paradise," which she sang with a musical comedy tenor, Burton Lenihan, who came from Saginaw, Michigan. The Blue Amberol version was issued in January, 1916, and the Diamond Disc shortly after.

The soprano also made several duets with Irving Kaufman, but soon began to sing with Van Brunt. Their first work together included the Jerome Kern classic, "They Didn't Believe Me," and the 1916 Ernest B. Ball hit, "Goodbye, Good Luck, God Bless You." About a year later she adopted the name of Rachel Grant for serio-comic work and largely took the place of Ada Jones as Billy Murray's Edison duet associate.

Gladys Rice's father was a famous actor in the Nineties. He and his wife starred in vaudeville as John Rice and Sally Cohen, and he was the manager of a troupe with which Ada Jones, as an "infant phenomenon," gained some theatrical experience. In 1896 he and May Irwin acted in "The Kiss," the first motion picture in which a kissing scene was screened for the benefit of a pleasantly horrified or stimulated public. Today, Gladys Rice, still blessed with a beautiful voice and charming personality, is active in radio and television.

Speaking of Van Brunt's duets, it seems odd that he didn't team up for Edison with any male singer until he and his old pal, Billy Murray, formed their partnership in 1928. We already know that he had sung for Victor with John Bieling and with Maurice Burkhardt for both Victor and Columbia, but his Edison partners were all women—usually Miss Rice, Miss Clark or Elizabeth Spencer. Betsy Lane Shepherd sang an obligato on his 1923 record of "Marcheta." Charlotte Bergh and Helen Clark sang soprano and contralto, respectively, with him in "Madeira," and in "Pal of My Cradle Days" he had the help of the Homestead Trio—Spencer, Shepherd and Amy Ellerman. The Metropolitan Quartet of mixed voices chimed in on his record of "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" and many other Van Brunt numbers contained sup-

Announcing Fassett's Recording Service

Standard 78 RPM and 33 RPM LP Acetate discs cut to order on high quality professional equipment.

Wide range FM off-the-air recording. Amateur tape recordings transferred to discs (7½" per second speed only).

Dubbing a specialty: Records from your collection or mine faithfully copied. Cylinders (both two and four minute types) re-recorded onto tape or discs.

Special variable speed turntable for dubbing odd-speed collectors' items (earliest Caruso's etc.) at correct pitch.

First Class Recordings at Relatively Low Prices

FASSETT'S RECORDING SERVICE

Box 362, West Falmouth, Massachusetts

port by groups of male or mixed voices. But his Edison duets were all with women until he and Billy got together.

It was also in 1915 that Van Brunt began to display another side of his exceptionally gifted personality. The last record in the Blue Amberol list for May, 1915 (last because the list was arranged alphabetically) was No. 2596, "You're Plenty Up to Date for Me," which must have been recorded shortly after the disastrous fire that burned out the Edison plant in December, 1914. The following description was given:

Edison owners are familiar with Walter Van Brunt as a singer, for he is a tremendously popular artist. This record is a novelty, however, as it presents him not only as singer, but also as writer of both words and music of the song. The lyric is written around a very pretty sentiment and is skillfully handled. The melody is fascinating.

I have a copy of this record. There is nothing outstanding about the song, except what now appears to be its naivete. The hero compared his shy sweetheart favorably to the 1915 variety of "wild girls." Walter probably shocked his original listeners by saying that some girls preferred "a wine glass to a kiss." We are assured that our modest heroine would "never take a stronger drink than tea." The tune is pretty and, of course, the record, which was never issued on a disc, is well sung. In the same supplement, Walter and Helen Clark joined voices in a ballad that became a favorite, "When I'm Gone You'll Soon Forget." Some of the veterans at the Edison laboratory believe this was one of several numbers, including "As We Parted at the Gate," submitted to Mr. Edison in manuscript by a Massachusetts song writer, E. Clinton Keithley.

Having broken the ice with "You're Plenty Up to Date," Walter devoted considerable effort to song writing for a year or two. It was also during this period that he became a protege of the great Victor Herbert, the most successful light opera composer of the time, who suggested that Van

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 12c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. f3863

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6215

STANDARD player piano rolls, excellent, many classical, 50 for $6.50. Edison cylinder, phonograph, $10. Edison cylinder records, $2 per doz. Transportation extra.—Tronson, 2026 S. Sheridan, Minneapolis, Minn. ja1422

FOR SALE: Old sheet music; some dating back to 1836. Also Gay Nineties. Some Etudes, 1897-1907. Write for list.—Mrs. H. F. Bonsall, Belgrade, Me. f3863

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, cylinder records, music boxes, disc, parts, etc. Bought, sold, exchanged. Mira Music Box, Olympia Music Box, Regina disc for sale. Perfect condition.—A. Nugent, Jr., 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. f3215

FOR SALE: Collectors' Guide to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (200 page book) only $1.98.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City 19, N. Y. my6046

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues.—Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street Santa Monica, Calif. je6844

Wanted: Catalogs, operators' manuals, etc., and any information on the automatic coin operated pianos, nickelodeons, band organs, etc. Also wanted: piano rolls for the above.—Ed. Zelinsky, 11 Jordan Ave., San Francisco 18, Calif. f3618

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn.

EDISON CYLINDER Home Phonograph, morning glory horn stand, $30. Edison cylinder Standard, morning glory horn, $25. 3 Edison cylinder, built in horn, $15 ea. Victor disc, morning glory horn, $15. Victor disc, built in horn, $10. 25 records with each machine. Edison combination, 2 & 4 with 4 min. reproducer only, tuba shaped horn, $30.—Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. ja1084

FOR SALE: Exceptionally fine, old music, instrumental. Dating from 1800-1878, brought from Germany in 1878. Violin and piano duets, Violin etudes & sonatas. Bound books of classics, piano comp., and some hand written scores. List on request.—Mrs. Theo. M. Steinhart, 845 16th Ave., N. E., St. Petersburg, Fla. ja1678

REPAIRS

NOW AVAILABLE: Regina Music Box Repair Manual. 12 pages of instruction. Fully illustrated. $1 postpaid.—James N. Hirsch, Box 1788, Glenville, Conn. my6407

MUSIC SCORES

FOR SALE: Collection of old scores for orchestra; over 650 items; excellent condition. Dating from 1888-1910. Marches, waltzes, medleys, overtures, intermezzi, schottisches, polkas; selec. from Lt. Operas, Barn Dances, fox tr., two-steps. List on request. Highest offer.—Mrs. Theo. M. Steinhart, 845 16th Ave., N. E., St. Petersburg, Fla. ja1004

RECORDS

Choice Collection. Thousands of records. Mail auctions. Free lists.—A. H. Sles, 92-11 35th Avenue, Jackson Heights 72, N. Y. d120291

REGULAR AUCTIONS classical vocal records. Free lists.—S. J. Mitchell, 1280 Raleigh St., Denver 4, Colo. ja3652

ZONOFONO RECORDS by Caruso, others. G&T's Caruso, De Lucia, Sammarco, Boninsegna, others. Fonotipia. 50,000 records, operatic, oldtime, Americana, Hot Jazz. Want list to: John Sicignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, New Jersey. mh60601

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122511

RARE AL JOLSON Broadcasts. Other personalities: Chevalier, Churchill, Crosby, Fairbanks. Movie Sound-Tracks. For Sale.—ARG, Box 341, Cooper Station, N. Y. C. 3, N. Y. f3633

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants." For information write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., N. Y. C. 28, N. Y. my66501

NEW RECORD AUCTION! Records sold at slightly above second highest bid. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Largely celebrity vocal artists. Many are of the very rarest. All who received Auction List No. 1 or announcement card regarding it, will receive Auction List No. 2. All others may have list by request.—W. B. Harr, 103 N. Alameda, Carlsbad, New Mexico. f3468

We make no wild claims, but leading collectors concede we have the greatest collection of records in America, to draw from. We have supplied real record treasures to professional people, businessmen and bankers, records they never dreamed of ever possessing; also to beginners and advanced collectors. We invite you to write for lists. All mail will receive personal attention.—Record Treasures, 740 E. 183rd St., New York 57, N. Y. f30861

Latest player piano rolls, 75c. List.—Durell Armstrong, 222 S. Vassar, Wichita, Kans. n128421

Rare Vocal Recordings, including imports. Free lists.—Music Den, 825 Irving Street, San Francisco, Calif. mh3063

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists: Jones, Murray, Burr, Collins, Harlan, etc. Fine condition. Price 50c each. Free lists.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. mh3426

RARE OLD RECORDS: Write for sales lists. Operatic, vocal, instrumental, popular, jazz. Collector's items.—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. je6806

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices. Wanted: 18 1/2" New Century and 14" Perfection discs.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. mh3216

RARE OPERATIC, Symphonic records. Write for list. Wants supplied.—Goldfarb, 288 Crown Street, Brooklyn, N. Y. ja1421

OUR NEW recording service offers the great voices of the past and present in their best recorded interpretations cut to your order on top quality blanks at either standard or LP speeds. Send for our free list of hundreds of items from which to choose at low prices.—Milt Weiss, 715 Dickinson St., Memphis, Tenn. mh3088

WILL BUY phonograph records, collections or dealers' stock, any amount, made before 1940. Have many for sale. Send wants.—J. Schneider, 128 W. 66, N. Y. C., N. Y. je6468

WANTED: 15 1/2" metal discs for "Solyphon Excelsior", Schultz mark type.—M. W. Olsen, Beltsville, Md. ja1651

See our important offer on page 51

ANDREW J. RILEY

MISCELLANEOUS

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

MELODEONS, Melodeon organs. Beautiful restored instruments for sale. Will buy instruments needing repairs. Expert repairing service.—C-sharp Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. f126351

EDISON CYLINDER phonograph, complete in good condition, with 25 cylinder records, $35. Music box with 6 selections, $76.—A. Nugent, Jr., 12 North Third St., Richmond, Va. f3234

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Everything. Catalog 10c.—Fore's, 3151 Illeg, Denver 5, Colo. jlv12867

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, $1.80. Direct from importer.—Jules Wolff, 41 Park Row, New York City 7, N. Y. ja3806

Brunt sing the leading tenor role for an Irish musical show that Herbert had in mind. Thus was born "Eileen," which a Victor supplement described as "taking New York by storm."

Song writing and his friendship with Herbert, who persuaded him to change his name to Scanlan for stage use, must have caused Walter to lose interest in record making. The familiar Van Brunt names continues to appear regularly in the Edison lists through 1916, but thereafter it disappears, as far as recording new songs is concerned, even though an occasional Van Brunt disc or cylinder was still issued occasionally from a back log of older numbers. From 1917 to 1919, the "sensational new Irish tenor" appears to have been a stranger to the recording studios. It's possible that he had some disagreement with Edison, but that seems unlikely, for the Edison trade publications referred to his theatrical activities in an admiring way. Probably he merely wanted to be free of conflicting responsibilities so that he could concentrate on song writing and the stage.

The young singer-turned-song-writer was fortunate in having Harry Von Tilzer to set music to his lyrics and publish their combined efforts. Von Tilzer was then "The Dean of Tin Pan Alley" and was the most successful writer of popular melodies, with the exception of Irving Berlin. I believe the first Van Brunt Von Tilzer song to be recorded was "Tho' I Had a Bit O' the Devil in Me," which was prominent in the Victor list for January, 1917. It was sung by Reed Miller, under the assumed name of James Reed. An Edison Blue Amberol was by another tenor, George McFadden. A baritone, Wallace Cox, sang it for Pathé. Recalling Billy Murray's observation that nobody else was ever able to sing this lively and "devilish" composition with the swing and swagger that Walter himself gave, it's a pity that we have no Van Brunt recording.

Two months later, while Van Brunt, changed into Scanlan, was singing in "Eileen," Victor issued another of his songs, "Yukaloo (My Pretty South Sea Lady)," sung by the Sterling Trio. The catalog editor said it was "a little different from the general run of Hawaiian songs. Sousa once confessed that he put a barbaric touch in his marches 'to please the ladies' and evidently Harry Von Tilzer . . . has caught the same trick."

Still another Van Brunt-Von Tilzer offering came out in the April, 1917, Victor list, giving the pair a total of three numbers to receive Victor recognition in four months. It was "Love Will Find the Way," this time sung by Miller under his own name. He also recorded it for Edison.

"Love Will Find the Way" seems to have brought the Van Brunt-Von Tilzer collaboration to a close: at least I cannot trace records of any other of their joint efforts. In July, 1917, Victor issued several records of songs from "Eileen." Two were sung by John McCormack and others by Scott Welsh and Greek Evans, members of the cast. It seems a pity that no effort was made by Edison or Victor to have Van Brunt record some of the numbers Herbert had written for him.

For the next few years, Walter's interest appears to have been wholly taken with Irish plays. And it's quite likely that long before he knew Victor Herbert it had occurred to Van Brunt that his voice was peculiarly adapted to Irish singing roles such as those that had been made famous by a long succession of other tenors. As long ago as June, 1913, Edison issued a Blue Amberol of him singing a five-song medley, "Famous Songs in Irish Plays." He made a new record of the same medley for the Diamond Discs in 1915, but the record was withheld from the market until 1921, when Walter Van Brunt for years had been swallowed up in Walter Scanlan.

The medley includes the refrains of "Why Wild Irish Rose," "Killarney, My Home Over the Sea," "Mother Machree," "Sweet Inniscarra" and "Plain Molly O." There is an introduction, in which the singer says he will "try to bring a memory of the good old days gone by, when singers sang the songs that live and never die." He mentions Chauncey Olcott, Andrew Mack and Bill Scanlan as typical Irish minstrels. Probably he "borrowed" his own stage name from the latter.

In 1929 Edison issued another similar record, "Walter Scanlan's Irish Medley," displaying his ringing high notes at their best. I think it as fine a bit of singing as he ever did.

"Famous Songs in Irish Plays" was coupled with "For Love," by Rachel Grant and Billy Murray, but I have an unorthodox copy on which it is combined with a fox trot (No. 50824-R). "Just Because," played by Earl Fuller's New York Orchestra. It's hard to see how this mixed up pressing got past the inspector.

Of course, before his Victor Herbert association began, Van Brunt had sung many popular songs with an Irish theme. He had recorded "Mother Machree" and "My Wild Irish Rose" on one double-faced Edison; and "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling" and "Where the River Shannon Flows" on another. He had sung "Killarney, My Home Over the Sea" for Victor in 1912. His 1913 record of "When I Dream of Old Erin" stayed in the Columbia catalog until the early 1930's, after being renumbered, doubled with "Where the River Shannon Flows," by Henry Burr, and reissued in the extensive Columbia Irish series. However, the Edison medley seems to be the first indication of his serious concern with Irish plays — a field in which he was to star both as singer and composer.

As Walter Scanlan stepped upon the stage, Walter Van Brunt vanished into the wings. I have already said that Edison continued to issue some of his old records after he quit making new ones. One of these was a real oddity, No. 51002, combining "Where the Silvery Colorado Winds Its Way" and "The Humoreske Song," the latter a mixture of Dvorak's "Humoreske" and Foster's "Old Folks at Home." The oddity is that both sides had previously been listed in combination with other numbers but cut out of the catalog. Reissued as one double-faced disc, they became one of the 300 biggest selling Edison records, and the Humoreske side was termed "one of the most beautiful records ever listed."

"Whispering Hope," by Van Brunt and Helen Clark, also salvaged from the back files, likewise made the best seller list. Other Van Brunt, or Scanlan, records not already mentioned that were accorded the same distinction included "Climbing Up de Golden Stairs," "When You and I Were Young, Maggie"; "Wait Till the Clouds Roll By"; "Grandfather's Clock" (duet with Clark); "With All Her Faults I Love Her Still"; "Mocking Bird" (with Elizabeth Spencer), and "My Mother's Rosary." The exhumed records were issued, aside from one or two exceptions, with the name of Van Brunt instead of Scanlan on the label. However, in 1924 the rapid ballad, "I'm Just a Ragged Newsboy But My Heart's True Blue," recorded nine years earlier, was brought out as the companion to Billy Jones' version of "The Sidewalks of New York," and on this, in spite of the low serial number, the singer was called Scanlan. By that time the adopted name was far better known to the general public than the one with which Walter had begun both life and his phonograph career, while living in the Bay Ridge section of Brooklyn.

Van Brunt ended his exile from the recording studios in the fall of 1919. He became an exclusive Emerson artist, and his picture was published on the supplement cover, together with a drawing illustrating the theme of one of his first Emerson records, "Little Grey Home in the West." These Emerson discs were the first to appear under the name of Scanlan, and he was touted as a sensational Emerson discovery. Nothing was said about his having been for years one of the most popular recording stars under his real name of Van Brunt. The supplement also mentioned his appearing in Victor Herbert's "Eileen," "which, in fact, was written especially for him."

During the next two years Emerson issued a long list of Scanlan records, many with a modern Hibernian flavor but also including "old standard" Irish numbers and ordinary popular songs. Admirers were invited to send in lists of old-timers they'd like to have Scanlan record between touring engagements.

As for the records themselves, they were unfailingly well sung but technically, they ranged, in my judgment, from fairly good to lamentable. I never have considered Emerson recording more than mediocre, even by acoustic lateral-cut standards, and when compared to Van Brunt's Edisons — well, they just don't sound like the same golden voice. In fact, the average man, hearing an Edison record by the tenor and then listening to an Emerson, would find it hard to believe the same man made both.

Walter admits that his signing with Emerson was a mistake, but he tried to make the best of it. He was by this time widely accepted as "the real McCoy" among Irish tenors, and the Phonograph and Talking Machine Weekly for May 5, 1920, contained this item:

The Clark Music Company, of Baltimore, Emerson distributors for Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia, recently entertained dealers at a banquet and "dinner show." Eddie Canter and Walter Scanlan, brilliant Irish tenor who performs so successfully in "Somebody's Sweetheart" and who is now accounting for capacity audiences at "Always You," were the guests of honor.

Note that the trade paper seemed to accept Walter's Irish status without question.

Both Scanlan and Canter at that time were under exclusive Emerson contract. So were Irving and Jack Kaufman, Arthur Fields, the Six Brown Brothers, Sanford's Band and other famous artists. Scanlan and Irving Kaufman got together a troupe of Emerson performers, intended to rival Henry Burr's Eight Famous Victor Artists, and took to the road. But the venture was unsuccessful, for the Emerson name lacked the prestige that Victor had built up in the public mind through many years. The artists were first class, but the crowds stayed away. Becoming tired of losing money, Scanlan and Kaufman called it quits, and Walter returned to Irish plays.

The 1920 depression was hard on some of the smaller phonograph companies. Emerson didn't go out of business, but it got into difficulties and was glad to unload its expensive contracts. In 1921, presumably with a sigh of relief, Walter ended his Emerson association and returned to his old stamping grounds at Edison. Here, too, however, he sang as Scanlan instead of Van Brunt, who was regarded as practically dead and buried. His first Diamond Disc under his new contract was 50836, which coupled two songs from "Irish Eyes" in which he was then appearing. One was "Mavourneen," with words by John T. McDonough and music by Scanlan himself, and the other was the hauntingly pretty "My Galway Rose," by George A. Kershaw and Scanlan. In his days with Von Tilzer, Walter had written the words to Harry's music, but now he executed a switch by letting the other fellows do the lyrics while he composed the tunes. A little later he recorded "Judy," also from "Irish Eyes," with words by Kershaw, and in 1924 he made records of two songs for which he wrote both words and music. They were "Kitty" and "A Bit o' Pink and White," from "The Blarney Stone." I have just learned that the musical director of this production for a season "on the road" was Matt McNally, who describes Walter as "a good actor and a great singer;—a wonderful man to get along with."

Song Writer Ray Walker, from whom this information comes, says that McNally is an enthusiastic reader of "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists."

While we're on an Irish theme, it's worth mentioning that many listeners consider Scanlan's 1923 Diamond Disc to be the finest interpretation ever recorded of "The Wearin' o' the Green." As one enthusiast remarked: "Scanlan may be a Dutchman, but he sings that thing like a regular Mick!"

The "new tenor," Scanlan, received a warm welcome from Edison audiences, in spite of many listeners having no idea he was their old favorite, Van Brunt, back with a new name. Others insisted the two tenors couldn't be the same man. They pointed out voice differences, real and imaginary. Such variances as there were came from the contrast between youth and maturity, and Scanlan's having more of a "professional Irish" air than the Dutch-descended Van Brunt. Skeptics wouldn't believe the truth when it was pointed out that Van Brunt's picture disappeared from the Edison catalog as Scanlan's came in. Nor did comparing the likeness of the two and making the obvious claim that Van Brunt's face was just a younger edition of Scanlan's serve at first to persuade those whose minds were made up the other way.

Edison discs, not yet affected by radio competition, were at the peak of their popularity when Walter made his comeback, and Blue Amberols still sold fairly well in small towns and the country. So the Scanlan records went across dealers' counters in large quantities, with of course the perennial "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen," still listed as by Van Brunt, continuing to lead the procession. Besides keeping on singing as an Irish tenor, Walter also did some Edison tone test work. A 1924 supplement showed him singing in a Washington theatre in "direct comparison" with an Official Laboratory model Edison.

The Edison Amberola Monthly for November, 1921, contained an interesting article, "Walter Scanlan in 'Irish Eyes'" which I'd like to quote for the light it gives on his activities just thirty years ago:

Since the days of the lamented Billy Scanlan, few singing actors have met with such popular approval as young Walter Scanlan received last season on his first starring tour in an Irish melody-play. Continuing his success of last year, Walter Scanlan is appearing in "Irish Eyes" at present, a play that gives him every opportunity to display his engaging personality, his histrionic ability and his rich lyric tenor voice.

"Irish Eyes" is the work of an American author, Edward E. Rose. Of course, it is a romantic comedy. Its action takes place on both sides of the Atlantic—in Galway, Ireland, and in New York City. Unlike most Irish comedies of this nature, there is an air of mystery surrounding the characters until the final curtain.

Theatrical stars may come and go, but the Irish singing star is in perpetual favor. Time has failed to dull his popularity. He is dearly loved by the Irish born and their descendants in America. The Irish song-play has also stood the test of time, and is an appealing form of entertainment for all lovers of humor and melody. It may be noted in passing that the Irish song-play never has had to resort to questionable themes or risque situations to maintain its popularity.

Supporters of the Irish song-play usually emotional and dramatic and quick to discern the true and gifted artist. The instantaneous success of Walter Scanlan proves conclusively that he filled all the requirements. Indeed, his success astounded the prophets and critics of Broadway who thought that he was going to have a long, uphill flight to fame. The Edison Record of "My Galway Rose" (No. 4376), which appears on the November Supplement, is intensely realistic, and brings to mind vividly the hero singing to his sweetheart in "Irish Eyes."

In December the Monthly not only published Scanlan's photo on the cover, showing him as a good looking young man of 29 who wore his hair parted in the middle, but also featured an interview. It was called "Irish Ballads—How to Sing Them," and had the sub-title, Walter Scanlan, Whose 'Mavourneen' Is On the December List, Tells Us Something About His Art." It too is worth quoting because it reveals that Walter was a thoughtful student of his art and had carefully analyzed and striven to perfect the work he was doing:

We saw him between the acts of "Irish Eyes," an Irish-melody play, which Walter Scanlan is starring in this winter. Many admirers of Walter Scanlan consider him the equal of the famous John McCormack. He has the voice, personality, the stage presence, the physique, the gift of expression and the feeling so essential to become one of the really great artists of the stage.

"Tell us something about the essentials of singing as you do?" we inquired blandly.

"Well," answered Mr. Scanlan, thoughtfully, "for the successful rendition of any ballad, no matter whether it is Irish or of any other nationality, several qualifications on the part of the singer are necessary. The first and most important one is a distinct enunciation of every word of the text with a reading that will show its meaning to the audience. Words can be rattled off in a manner that will convey very little of the meaning of the poem to the audience, or they can be delivered in a way that will drive the sentiment of the song home to everyone who hears them. This is what is known on the stage as 'putting a song across the footlights,' and is the secret of the success of many singers."

The singer paused in his speech to sing a line for us to illustrate the point he was making. We noted that he brought out the tiniest syllable in his delivery.

"The second requisite for a good rendition of a ballad is a smooth delivery of the melody," resumed Mr. Scanlan. "While the melody should be subservient to the text, it is still a most important part of the song and should be given in a manner that will impress it upon the minds of the audience and give the greatest pleasure. The sentiment of the song is what makes it popular in most cases, though now and then a melody with a wonderful rhythm, such as 'There'll Be a Hot Time' and 'Over There' catch the public ear, even though the tune conveys no particular sentiment. Nevertheless, there are a great many tunes that, robbed of the sentiment behind them, would never awaken the enthusiasm now aroused by their rendition. Our 'America' and 'Star Spangled Banner' have but little in the melodies of great musical merit and, were it not for the national interest in the text, would be forgotten long ago. The same might be said of the national hymns of many other nations. This applies equally well to many of the love songs and other ballads. The text is most important and the first duty of invaluable material to our research facilities in the development of American agriculture and industry. We anticipate wide and fruitful use of this remarkable collection by scholars from all over the country."

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 25)

President Fred of the University commented: "Acquisition of the McCormick collection by our sister institution, the State Historical Society, is a major milestone in Wisconsin's progress as a national site for research and learning. At few places in the country could the McCormick collection be so fully utilized as at Wisconsin. Here, are located a University remarkable for the number of fields brought together on one campus and the facilities of the American History Research Center of the State Historical Society. We share the gratitude of the State Historical Society that this outstanding collection of Americana will come to Wisconsin."

The Virginia materials in the McCormick collection supplement effectively the State Historical Society's famous Draper manuscripts, a collection of reminiscences and manuscripts of the pioneers of the trans-Allegheny West including Daniel Boone, George Rogers Clarke, Robertson, Sevier and the King's Mountain Boys. The models and replicas of the original reaper and other farm machinery in the collection will play an important part in the collections of the farm museum the University and State Historical Society are gathering for the campus area at Madison.

The assembly of this wealth of material is the result of an effort to gather every existing record pertaining to the ideas, interests, and activities of the Cyrus Hall McCormick family, descendants of Thomas McCormick who came to this country from Ireland and settled in Pennsylvania in 1734. His son, Robert F. McCormick, grandfather of Cyrus, went to Rockbridge County, Virginia, in 1779, where Cyrus was born in 1809, and invented his reaper in 1831.

A great deal of supplementary data and source material has been added to set this family against its natural background in American life. As a result, the richness and depth of the collection has been greatly augmented and its research utility greatly enlarged.

The collection will be housed in the Society's building in Madison and will be available for study and research as soon as it is shelved and arranged. The University of Wisconsin is the residual beneficiary in case the State Historical Society ever ceases to exist or moves from the campus area at Madison.

Dr. Herbert A. Kellar was named coordinator of the collection. Dr. Kellar has been curator of the McCormick collection since 1915, and under his leadership it has grown from 10,000 manuscripts to more than 1,000,000.

Household Appliances in New Jersey Exhibition

Nearly 200 household appliances and farm tools of a century or more ago are featured in a new exhibition at The New Jersey Historical Society, in Newark. Included in the exhibit are the forerunners of many present-day home mechanical devices such as the equivalent of today's waffle iron, a 17th century substitute for an electric blanket, and the "better mousetrap" of the early 19th century.

Of particular interest to the housewife of today is that part of the gallery devoted to the story of spinning and weaving. Here is shown the long process by which the early homemaker produced clothes and other materials for the family. The instruments and tools used in this work are on view and their operation will be demonstrated to groups on request.

It is believed that this exhibit, the first in a series of educational exhibits to be put on by the Society, will be of special value to school groups who are studying early American life. The appeal of the exhibit is increased by the fact that most of the items on display are in working order and can be demonstrated in their original uses.

Do You Remember?

By E. E. MEREDITH

When grapes sold at a dollar a bushel?
When restaurants cut pies in four pieces?
When children wrote on slates when at school?
When we had a cellar instead of a rumpus room?
When most motion pictures had a happy ending?
When bulldog shoes and pegtop trousers were the rage?
When we could visit a cider mill and drink all we wanted free?
When sons of the household had to break in a new pair of boots each autumn?
When one could place a dime on a carnival number and win a ham or a side of bacon?
When willow and birch proved a fine remedy for children when applied by both parents and teachers?
When grandma's work basket contained a red silk strawberry filled with emery dust to keep her needles sharp?
When children venturing out on the street were cautioned to watch for runaway horses and people riding bicycles?
When an accepted sign of affluence was having a barrel of big, red apples in the cellar when cold weather came around?
When people wore flannel night shirts, wool robes and bed socks in order to be comfortable in unheated rooms on winter nights?
When lingerie was called "under muslins?"

When writers put their risque phrases in French?

When "boughten" bread was looked upon as a rare treat by youngsters?

When lace curtains at the parlor windows marked you as one of the elite?

When the slogan of the Jackson automobile was "No hill too steep, no sand too deep?"

When shopping was done in the central business areas of towns and cities and not along the road?

When no mention of a blessed event was made in the public press until the babe appeared on the scene?

When a young man suggested to his sweetheart when the horse and buggy brought them to the crowded bridge — "Give me a buss?"

When a horseshoe, heated redhot, was dropped in a churn when the cream was too cold?

When a dime's worth of soup vegetables bought at the grocery store was often the largest bundle in the market basket?

When we were reluctant to play kissing games at parties but only because we were afraid our parents would disapprove?

When kids wore long jersey leggings with dozens of buttons down the side?

When a morning duty was to wipe the smoky lamp chimneys all over the house?

When big music boxes played flat circular metal records about three feet in diameter?

When a big red enamel coffee mill was found in every grocery store, its wheel operated by a crank?

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 23)

the student of ballad singing should be to learn the art of distinct enunciation, then the smooth rendition of the melody. This should also be practiced as though the voice were an instrument and the melody were all that the audience is to hear.

"The Irish melodies are often trying to the singer trained in the more modern school, on account of the peculiar intervals in the scale used. Flat sevenths and augmented thirds are difficult of rendition to the ear trained to present day modes, but they can be learned by constant practice and correctly given. The native singer of Irish melodies is brought up to them from childhood and knows them well and to him there is no difficulty in singing them."

"How do you cultivate the sentimental side of singing?" we interrupted.

"The art of infusing pathos and other emotions in the voice while rendering a song or ballad is a gift given to but few singers. A certain amount of it can be learned or acquired by a careful study of the lines of the text of the ballads and then reading them as though they were expressing your own emotions. This is something that all singers should do, as ballad singing is really the reading of a poem in a musical way and the emotions should be suitably expressed in the rendition."

In addition to the foregoing, the November issue of the Edison "fan magazine," "Along Broadway," showed a cover photo of Scanlan, costumed as an Irish harper.

(To be Continued)

Announcing Fassett's Recording Service

Standard 78 RPM and 33 RPM LP Acetate discs cut to order on high quality professional equipment.

Wide range FM off-the-air recording.
Amateur tape recordings transferred to discs (7½" per second speed only).

Dubbing a specialty: Records from your collection or mine faithfully copied. Cylinders (both two and four minute types) re-recorded onto tape or discs.

Special variable speed turntable for dubbing odd-speed collectors' items (earliest Caruso's etc.) at correct pitch.

First Class Recordings at Relatively Low Prices

FASSETT'S RECORDING SERVICE

Box 362, West Falmouth, Massachusetts

Antique MUSIC BOXES CHOICE ITEMS FOR SALE BIRD BOXES & BIRD CAGES

Expert Repairing — Old Instruments
Completely Restored to New Like Condition

A. V. BORNAND CO.
139 4th Avenue, Pelham 66, N. Y.
(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825)

- |       |  |        |
|-------|--|--------|
| 65728 | Meistersinger—Verachtet mirTannhauser—Abendstern                         | B22148 |
| 65729 | Tosca—Spaet in der Nacht ist'sMaskenball—Ja, du warst's                  | B22149 |
| 65806 | Traviata—Hat dein heimatisches LandFaust—Valentin's Gebet                | B22150 |
| 65807 | Troubadour—Arie des Grafen LunaDer fliegende Hollander—Wie aus der Ferne | B22151 |
| 66000 | Fridericus Rex (Loewe)Heinrich der Vogler (Loewe)                        | B22192 |
| 66001 | Die beiden Grenadiere (Schumann)Prinz Eugen, der edle Ritter (Loewe)     | B22193 |
| 62300 | Suesses Begraebnis (Loewe)Spirito Santi (Loewe)                          | B22194 |
| 62301 | Tom der Reimer (Loewe)Part 2 of above                                    | B22195 |
| 62354 | Undine—O kehr' zuruckSiegfried—Auf wolkigen Hoh'n                        | B22210 |
| 62408 | Troubadour—Arie des Grafen LunaNachtlager von Granada—Ein Schuetz        | B22211 |

HEINRICH SCHLUSNUS, Staatsoper, Berlin

- |       |   |        |
|-------|---|--------|
| 72780 | Die Afrikanerin—Dir, O Koenigin   | B22054 |
| 72783 | Die Afrikanerin—Wie hat mein Herz   | B22088 |
| 72785 | Zar und Zimmermann—Sonst spielt'ich mein Szepter(Martha aria sung by T. PATTIERA—see Part III of this list) | B22189 |
| 72800 | Caro mio ben (Gordani)Largo (Haendel)   | J22005 |
| 72865 | Barbier von Sevilla—Ich bin das Faktotum (in Ital.)Zaza—Zaza, kleine Zigeunerin (Ital.)                     | J22006 |
| 70644 | Tannhauser—Als du in kühnem Sange(Tosca aria sung by T. PATTIERA—see Part III of this list)                 | J22030 |
|       | Der Musikant (Wolf)   | J22031 |
| 70658 | Der Freund (Wolf)   | B2029  |
| 70660 | Verschwiegene Liebe (Wolf)Der Rattenfaenger (Wolf)  | B2055  |
| 65457 | Maskenball—Für dein GlückTannhauser—Blick' ich umher  | B2054  |
| 65458 | Maskenball—Ja, du warst'sUndine—O kehr' zuruck  | B2056  |
| 35486 | Barbier von Sevilla—Ich bin das FaktotumRigoletto—Gleich sind wir beide                                     | B2057  |
| 65490 | Troubadour—Arie des Grafen LunaRigoletto—Feile Sklaven  | O42518 |
| 65494 | Hans Helling—An jenem TagFaust—Valentins Gebet  | O42517 |
| 65514 | Hamlet—TrinkliedBajazzo—Prolog  | O42518 |
| 65574 | Tannhauser—Blick ich umherWalkure—Feuerzauber   | O42519 |
|       |   | O42525 |
|       |   | O42526 |
|       |   | O42431 |
|       |   | O42532 |
|       |   | O42542 |
|       |   | O42543 |
|       |   | O42547 |
|       |   | O42558 |
|       |   | O42580 |
|       |   | O42589 |

(To be Continued)

WANTED

by

The following Odeon records
ELISABETH RETHBERG

- 76215 Pastorale (Bizet) (8199)
76218 Die Einsame (Patalaky) (8199)
76229 Freudliche Vision (Strauss)
(8200)
80086 Staendchen (Strauss) (8200)
80160 Africanaerin—Leb'wohl (8009)
80161 Carmen—Arie der Micaela (81059)
(8009)
80165 Zauberfloete—Ach ich fuehls
(81061)
80167 Zigeunerbaron—Lied der Saffi
(8010)
80168 Der Sylphe des Friedens (Mozart) (8010)
Carmen and Madame Butterfly duets with RICHARD TAUBER

COLUMBIA

"GRAND OPERA RECORDS"

By MARCELLA SEMBRICH, EDOUARD DE
RESZKE, SCHUMANN-HEINK, CAMPANARI, SUZANNE ADAMS, ANTONIO SCOTTI and CHARLES GILBERT.

VICTOR RED SEA DISCS with MONARCH and DE LUXE Labels.

BRUNSWICK Classical vocal records by famous singers—"New Hall of Fame" series, etc.
ZONOPHONE (Disc—Zonofono, etc.)
records by EUGENIA MANTELLI, CARUSO, CALVE POL PLANCON,
DELMAS and other great singers.

STEPHEN FASSETT

Box 285, West Falmouth, Mass.

Persons offering material not specified above, or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

Surprise!—EDISON TALKING RECORDS

by John Charles Thomas and a "North Pole" Lecture by Dr. Cook

By JIM WALSH

The surprising discovery has been made that the noted baritone, John Charles Thomas, made three Edison Diamond Disc talking records at the beginning of his career 36 years ago.

This startling fact was unearthed when Henry M. Shaw, of North Carver, Mass., wrote to me to ask if Nat M. Wills, "The Tramp Comedian," had recorded explanatory talks on the back of Edison operatic records. Mr. Shaw said he had a copy of Edison record No. 82541, "Ai Nostri Monti," from "Il Trovatore," sung by Julia Henrich and Guido Ciccolini, with an explanatory talk on the reverse side and that the voice of the unnamed speaker sounded like Wills'. Whoever it was, Mr. Shaw said, he was positive it wasn't Harry E. Humphry, who ordinarily gave the "explanations."

I replied I was equally positive the speaker wasn't Wills, but that I would ask Fred Rabenstein, of the Edison laboratory, to check into the Edison company's files. Mr. Rabenstein came up with the information that in September, 1915, the company paid one J. C. Thomas to record three explanatory talks, but no information was available as to the serial numbers or titles of the records with which the songs were coupled. He said, however that the three probably were numbered consecutively, so that it was likely the three would be 4141 (the serial number of Mr. Shaw's record), 4142 and 4143. (If any reader of HOBBIES has Edison discs with the latter two serial numbers, will he please notify either Mr. Shaw or Jim Walsh, Box 131, Vinton, Virginia)?

Mr. Rabenstein also revealed that Thomas made a singing record, "By the Dreamy Susquehanna" (serial No. 3254) on August 26, 1914. He did not identify J. C. Thomas as the concert baritone, but I immediately assumed that the singer and speaker must have been John Charles Thomas. Both Mr. Shaw and I wrote to the baritone and received the information that it was he who made the recordings—which he has never heard. The song, incidentally, though recorded, was never issued.

This discovery of John Charles Thomas as an Edison operatic spokesman is one of the most surprising bits of information to be turned up in a long time, but Bryant Burke, well known Hempstead, Long Island, record collector, has provided an

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 30)

Please mention HOBBIES when
replying to advertisements

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

WALTER VAN BRUNT (WALTER SCANLAN) III

(Continued from the January Issue)

By JIM WALSH

All music lovers familiar with Walter Scanlan's records can testify that he put his high ideals of ballad singing into practice.

As long as Edison stayed in the record business, no name was more familiar in the Diamond Disc and Blue Amberol catalog than that of Scanlan. He sang scores of the latest popular successes, in addition to many Irish and standard songs. But I have an idea it was at the personal "request" of Thomas A. Edison himself that he recorded a large number of popular tunes of an earlier day. I have already mentioned typical examples, such as "Whispering Hope," "The Mocking Bird," "Grandfather's Clock" and "With All Her Faults I Love Her Still." Here are other examples: A 1923 disc coupled two hits of the Nineties, "When You Were Sweet Sixteen" and "She Was Bred in Old Kentucky." In 1926 came two others of the same period, "The Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee" and Harry Von Tilzer's first hit, "My Old New Hampshire Home." "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" and "When the Harvest Moon is Shining On the River" was a double of 1927. Another was "Red Wing" and "I'll Be With You When the Roses Bloom Again."

Then, in 1928, Billy Murray's contract as an exclusive Victor artist expired, and he and his old friend, Walter, formed a singing partnership. Walter by this time had obtained a release from his exclusive Edison arrangement, and the Murray-Scanlan team began to freelance with considerable success. Their records in effect were miniature vaudeville sketches and included talking as well as singing. As I have already said, Billy sometimes affected a husky, rough-and-ready comedy voice as a foil to Scanlan's lyric tenor. Their first Edison, issued in November, 1928, combined "My Blackbirds Are Bluebirds Now" with "The Twelve O'Clock Waltz" and both sides were extremely good.

Many others followed during the less than a year that Edison remained in the record business. When the company yielded to the trend of the times and introduced a needle-cut record, just ten weeks before deciding to quit the "game" altogether, Murray and Scanlan made several lateral-cut duets. One of these, "Sergeant Flagg and Sergeant Quirk," was such a hit with Edison recording officials that the company offered to pay the pair a retainer fee of six thousand dollars a year each, on condition that Edison would be given the opportunity to record all similar sketches before they were submitted to any other company. Murray was both funny and pathetic in his role of the very baritonish top sergeant trying to conceal his attachment to his less robust pal.

The two tenors also sang together for many of the smaller companies, as well as doing a set of four double-faced records for Brunswick, all of which were excellent. One of the Brunswicks contained something of an innovation. The pair carried on a conversation supposed to be between a postman (Murray) and a bashful swain, (Scanlan), then sang "That's My Idea of Heaven." On the other side, the same characters appeared, but by this time "Walt" was engaged, to Billy's disgust (he feared he'd lose his best horseshoe pitching partner), and they wound up singing "Building a Nest for Mary." The other Brunswicks were paired as follows: "My Wife is On a Diet" with "Icky, the Lollipop Song"; "Last Night, Honey" with "The Whoopee Hat Brigade;" and the generally funny "Shut the Door, They're Coming Through the Window" with "Sergeant Flagg and Sergeant Quirk."

The pair did not work together for Columbia, but in the summer of 1929, Victor issued one record by them, "Oh Baby, What a Night!" which they had already sung for Edison. Scanlan's name was spelled as Scanlon on the label of this, his first Victor record in 15 years. The other side contained the last Billy Murray-Aileen Stanley duet, "Katie, Keep Your Feet On the Ground."

During these years of recording partnership, the old cronies occasionally had good-natured disagreements over technique. Both Billy and Walter have laughingly told me of the time when they were disputing over how a record should be made, and Billy snapped: "Oh, shut up. Walter! I was making records before you were born!" To which Walter gleefully replied: "O. K., brother, that's ALL I wanted to know!" Actually, Billy exaggerated a bit. Walter was all of five years old when the Murray recording career began.

Edison's going out of business and the onset of the 1929 depression played havoc with the activities of Murray and Scanlan and most other recording artists. However, they continued to work for some of the smaller firms, such as Banner, Crown and Cameo. Cameo records also were made for the Kress five-and-ten cent stores under the Romeo label and on them the singers were called "Saunders and White," despite being identified as Billy and Walt in the spoken parts.

A year or so ago I found one of the most surprising records in which they took part. It was a Romeo called simply "Minstrel Show," and it was made by an aggregation of talent that I think never worked together on any other record. James Stanley, basso of the Peerless Quartet in its final form, was the interlocutor. Billy Murray and Irving Kaufman's brother, Jack, were end men. Al Campbell, who left the Peerless as Stanley joined it, also took part. The feature of the first side is Murray's singing "Goodbye, Eliza Jane." But the real surprise comes in part two when Stanley announces that "the golden voiced tenor, Mr. Walter Van Brunt, will sing 'Dear Old Girl.'" This announcement almost bowled me over the first time I heard it, and I'm still wondering why Van Brunt, a name that Walter hadn't used since 1916, was chosen for this record made in 1929.

More recently, I have discovered another Romeo record on which Van Brunt, singing alone, is disguised as John O'Brien. To complete the list of "aliases," the late John L. Norton, Sr., used to have a Federal cylinder on which the tenor was called "Ely."

In the early 1930's the record business was so badly damaged the competition of radio and the effects of the depression that even Victor seriously considered following Edison's example and calling it quits. At the same time, road shows were almost exterminated by the talkies. Naturally, the team of Murray and Scanlan turned its attention to broadcast work. They became associated with a comedienne, Marcella Shields, whose singing style resembled Aileen Stanley's and whose conversational mannerisms had a touch of Gracie Allen. For a considerable time the three were featured on an NBC network program sponsored by Dutch Masters cigars.

Later, in 1932, the trio became an attraction on WOR, with Horton's ice cream as the sponsor. I have a clipping from an unidentified publication, which is headed "Scanlan, Murray and Shields on WOR," and which reads:

The program of Murray, Scanlan and Shields, which was presented over station WOR for the first time last Friday, will continue to be a weekly feature. The entertainment consists for the most part of comical dialogue and songs, with Roger Bower as master of ceremonies.

Marcella Shields made her stage debut at the age of five and has appeared in nearly every vaudeville house in the country. She has played with De Wolfe Hopper, Gallagher and Shean, Fay Bainter and others equally well-known. Miss Shields has been in radio since 1928, when she was asked by the Ever Ready Company to play the part of Dixie Dugan in the first of a series of broadcasts they were presenting. She was heard with them for a whole season and followed their program with a leading part in the Fleischmann Yeast program with Phil Cook, Ben Pollock and Graham MacNamee before Rudy Vallee was even thought of. Miss Shields has done vaudeville work whenever she has been able to find time for it, and she also appears quite frequently at private benefits.

Walter Scanlan was discovered by his partner, Billy Murray, more than twenty years ago while playing in a minstrel show in Brooklyn. After his minstrel days he toured the country on the old Keith Circuit and in 1917 played the leading role in Victor Herbert's operetta, "Eileen." He then appeared in several Arthur Hammerstein productions, and later organized his own road show for Irish romantic comedies.

Here I'll comment that the story of Murray's finding Scanlan in a minstrel show appears to be a garbled account of their first meeting, which I described last month. You may remember that the meeting took place at a minstrel, given in Brooklyn by the Bay Ridge Athletic Club. I don't believe that Miss Shields made records.

After 1933, the trio split up, with Murray dropping out, but Miss Shields and Scanlan continued to work together, off and on, for a year or two later. Finally, though, the lady decided it was too much trouble making the trips from Washington where her husband was an assistant to General Hugh Johnson, administrator of the National Recovery Act, and she left Walter to go to it alone. He then became a member of a popular comedy program. "Ray Knight's Cuckoos." Two other members of the troupe were Carl Mathieu and Jim Stanley, first tenor and bass, respectively, of the final edition of the Peerless Quartet. In this same period Walter also sang with a radio male quartet. The ensemble was engaged to go to Washington and entertain at a party given by Vice President Garner for President Roosevelt. Will Rogers also was there. Walter obtained Garner and Rogers' signatures for the autograph album of his eldest daughter, Mary Jane, but when he thought of seeking FDR's his courage failed him and he went back to New York without it. (Or so I was told by his wife!)

My own friendship with the Scanlan family began at about this time. I wrote a letter to Walter, expressing my long standing admiration for his records and radio performances and asking for an autographed photo. I signed the latter as Ulysses Walsh, because I hadn't then acquired the nickname of "Jim," which has made my own given name almost as obsolete as Scanlan has made Van Brunt. In return I was sent a fine picture, which I hope will be reproduced in HOBBIES. I also received a long, cordial handwritten letter, signed "Walter Scanlan," which I highly appreciated.

The correspondence continued, but finally Mrs. Scanlan's conscience began troubling her — or so she said — and she made a "confession." She said that Walter was always glad to hear from his admirers and enjoyed learning they enjoyed his art, but that that, like many other singers, he had an incurable aversion to letter writing and left all the correspondence to her. Consequently, the letters which I treasured as being from Walter Scanlan himself were really penned by his wife, the former Miss Ruth Young, whom he had married in 1919. As consolation, she assured me that Walt had come to think of me as his "Number One fan."

Mrs. Scanlan went on to explain she had decided she couldn't keep on fooling me because she regarded me as "home folks." At that time I lived in the Southwestern Virginia town of Marion, about 100 miles west of my present home of Vinton, and Ruth herself had been born in Radford, half way between Marion and Roanoke. She had a grandmother living at Elk Creek, in Grayson County, and herself had spent several summers in Roanoke as the guest of relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur A. Slusher. (After I moved to Roanoke in 1943, Mr. and Mrs. Slusher became my warm friends, and I was shocked, while writing this article on June 29th to read in the morning paper of Mrs. Slusher's death). Because of this warm "home folksy" feeling, Ruth Scanlan felt that she had to "level" with me about her well-meant "forgery" of Walter's correspondence.

I have since found out that this practice isn't uncommon in the families of singers. I had several letters from Irving Kaufman which I later learned were written by his wife, Belle, and Billy Murray usually turns over any letter that he feels must be answered to his crony, Jimmy Martindale. A gift for music and a disinclination for letter writing seem to go hand in glove.

The "revelation" didn't at all interfere with my friendship for Walter and Ruth, who had been a member of the cast of one of his productions before their marriage. I learned all about them and their daughters, Mary Jane, "Ruthie" and "Patsy" ((Patricia)). In turn, they learned most of what there was to be known about me.

Our first meeting occurred when I was visiting Billy Murray at his home in Freeport, Long Island, in October, 1940. He took me to Walter's office, and as soon as we entered, Walt burst into a hearty laugh and said to Billy: "You don't have to tell me who this fellow is! I recognize him from his pictures!" Well, I also recognized him by his pictures. He looked just like the snapshots Ruth had sent me.

"I suppose," Walter smilingly added to me, "You still don't smoke or drink! You see I know all about your vices — or lack of vices!"

Walter took me that afternoon to the NBC studios to see a rehearsal of a program called "Harlem Quiz." Among the performers were Irving Kaufman and the late Al Bernard, both of whom became my dear friends from that meeting, and "the Silver-Masked Tenor," Joe White. A couple of evenings later I visited in the Scanlan home. There, for the first time, I met my fellow Southwest Virginian, Mrs. Scanlan, and the three girls. Mary Jane was then 20, and one of the loveliest blondes I have ever seen. She was a quiet, serious, sweet girl, working as a secretary in a radio office. Ruthie was 16 and Patsy 13. The visit was made more memorable by Walter and one of the younger girls — I believe it was Patsy — singing several duets of songs he had written: It was a thrill to know that the erstwhile "Boy Wonder" idol of the "Wide, Wide World" period of my childhood was singing for me alone. It was an equally great delight when he presented me with an autographed copy of a book, "Songtime in Erin," containing Irish songs written by himself. I returned to Virginia with a feeling of affection and admiration not only for Walter but the whole Scanlan family.

For a few years after our meeting Walter continued to do radio singing. I have saved two clippings from The Billboard, in which Eugene Burr, frequently the most merciless of critics, comments on some of Scanlan's work. The first appeared in 1941 when Scanlan was giving the "Songs of Ireland" program from WOR:

"Walter Scanlan, who in his 30th year in the show business has been in minstrel shows, vaudeville and practically every other amusement field, offers a pleasant quarter-hour on WOR, singing old melodies of Ireland. He acts as his own announcer, and . . . sells the songs with a sure knowledge of practically every trick in the trade. Program caught included, among others, "Kathleen Mavourneen," "Kitty" and "By Killarney's Lakes and Fells." Only suggestion would be to include some of the more stirring Irish ballads . . . Scanlan asks his listeners for requests. "Kevin Barry" and "Wrap the Green Flag Round Me, Boys," among others of their ilk, are hereby requested."

Probably you have remarked that even the knowing Mr. Burr accepted Scanlan without question as an authentic Irish tenor instead of the Dutch-descended New Yorker he actually is!

The second Billboard review appeared in 1942, when Scanlan was master of ceremonies on "Tintypes," a program from WMCA, New York: "Tintypes," a musical journey back to the 1890's, is a thoroughly pleasant session for anyone who likes the lilt and lift of the old ballads—and, quite possibly, for a number of people who think they don't. As played by Joe Rivers and his excellent musical crew and sung by Walter Scanlan and an unbilled male quartet, surprising number of the musical old-timers shape up as potential hit tunes of today. There was a flair and a verve about them, an unabashed sweep of melodic line that few modern tunesmiths seem able to equal — and that are guaranteed to tear down any house anywhere, when properly delivered.

The session is given form by Scanlan flipping through an imaginary family album, lighting on pictures of old-time songwriters and performers, and introducing the melodies. On the show caught he and the quartet did "Just Tell Them That You Saw Me," "Love Me and The World is Mine," and others. He has a very Irish tenor and is inclined to dip too deeply into the schmaltz on some of the oldies, trying to kid the sillier ones instead of letting them kid themselves. But on the whole he does a pleasing job. The quartet is excellent and Rien's crew offers outstanding work. . . . There's life in the old songs yet!"

Then, half a dozen years ago, while he was still singing in top form, came the loss of Scanlan's voice — that golden voice which he now has reason to think may return, although he probably has no idea of resuming a singing career. In fact, Walter has said to me that the loss of his voice may have been a "blessing," since it compelled him to concentrate on his position as producing manager with the American Broadcasting Company — a job which he says is exactly to his liking.

Within the past three years, two other losses, more serious than that of his voice, have saddened the life of Walter Scanlan. In September, 1947, he was living in Forest Hills, Long Island, where his home still is, and I paid another visit to the Scanlan home in company with the Oklahoma City record collector, Quentin Riggs. There I renewed my acquaintance with Mrs. Scanlan. Mary Jane by this time was married and, as Mrs. R. C. Rowley, was living in another part of Forest Hills. Ruthie had become Mrs. Frank Kerekes, of Magnolia, Ohio. Only Patsy, who was employed by a telephone company, was still living at home, and Quentin and I had to leave, much to her mother's distress, before Patsy returned from work. We were assured she had developed into a very lovely girl. The photographs that Ruth showed me seemed to prove it!

A few months later, I was saddened to learn from my Roanoke friends, Mr. and Mrs. Slusher, that Ruth Scanlan had died on February 27, 1948, of a cerebral hemorrhage, after injuring herself in a fall. And a few months later I was again distressed to learn that the lovely Mary Jane had died with equal suddenness following an unexpected heart attack. Besides her husband, she left a small son.

Truly, the loss of a devoted wife and daughter must have been very hard for Walter Scanlan to bear with fortitude. But he has had the consolation of his work, and there must be easement, too, in the knowledge that his talents have given pleasure to millions of persons since he began his professional career as a "boy wonder" forty-odd years ago. I hope with all my heart, and I'm sure you also do, that he has many years of productive activity ahead of him and that these years will be happy. And wouldn't it be wonderful if his voice should regain its former pristine beauty and we could again have more Walter Scanlan records! Or do you suppose that if he decided to begin another singing career he'd prefer to start from scratch (no reflection intended on the surface of some of his old-time records!) and be known again as Walter Van Brunt?

THE END

MISCELLANEOUS

Wanted: Catalogs, operators' manuals, etc., and any information on the automatic coin operated pianos, nickelodeons, band organs, etc. Also wanted: piano rolls for the above.—Ed. Zelinsky, 11 Jordan Ave., San Francisco 18, Calif. f3618

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Masoriak & Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

MELODEONS, Melodeon organs. Beautiful restored instruments for sale. Will buy instruments needing repairs. Expert repairing service.—C-sharp Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. f126351

EDISON CYLINDER phonograph, complete in good condition, with 25 cylinder records, $35. Music box with 6 selections, $75.—A. Nugent, Jr., 12 North Third St., Richmond, Va. f3234

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Everything. Catalog 10c.—Fore's, 3151 Ithigh, Denver 6, Colo. jly12867

WANTED: Edison Diamond Disc phonograph, Model B375, Louis XV style cabinet.—H. B. Willis, 110 S. Dearborn St., Chicago 3, Ill. an3673

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 12c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. f3863

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f6215

FOR SALE: Mason and Hamlin Portable organ; closed, 33x30" high. Fine walnut finish. 78 years old. $100 clear. For information write:—Mrs. James McSpaden, Hampton, Iowa. f1232

FOR SALE: Old sheet music; some dating back to 1836. Also Gay Nineties. Some Etudes, 1897-1907. Write for list.—Mrs. H. P. Bonsall, Belgrade, Me. f3863

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, cylinder records, music boxes, disc, parts, etc. Bought, sold, exchanged. Mira Music Box, Olympia Music Box, Regina disc for sale. Perfect condition.—A. Nugent, Jr., 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. f3215

FOR SALE: Collectors' Guide to American Recordings, 1896-1925 (200 page book) $3.75, postpaid.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City 19, N. Y. my6046

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues.—Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street Santa Monica, Calif. je6844

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. f3084

THREE RARE MUSIC BOXES to be sold on the second day of H. O. Boyd antique shop auction, Markle, Ind., Feb. 11, 12, 13. Regina, Console upright (3x7) 15 25" records. Automatic. Regina round cabinet (3½" hi.) 45 15" records. Automatic. Regina Corona, console, mahogany case (3x6") 12 27" records. Automatic. All in playing order. For particulars, write — S. E. Leonardson, Sales Mgr., Decatur, Ind. f1825

EDISON CYLINDER HOME phonograph; nice record case. 72 records. Brass rimmed horn; nickel individual stand. Extra nice, $50. Others without stand; not so good condition, 25 records, $30 and $35.—Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. f1272

FOR SALE: Old songs, musical post cards, books, operas, librettos & others.—B. Kassal, 1222 N. E. Tillamook, Portland, Ore. f1061

1901 MODEL portable Edison phonograph in good playing condition. Also 65 roller type records, $25.—Guy Eccles, Underwood, Wash. f1251

For Sale: Lovely antique square grand piano, completely restrung and refinished. Reasonable.—Tom Bishop, 234 Western Ave., Benton Harbor, Mich. f1042

REPAIRS

NOW AVAILABLE: Regina Music Box Repair Manual. 12 pages of instruction. Fully illustrated. $1 postpaid.—James N. Hirsch, Box 1788, Glenville, Conn. my6407

RECORDS

Choice Collection. Thousands of records. Mail auctions. Free lists.—A. H. Sles, 92-11 35th Avenue, Jackson Heights 72, N. Y. d120291

ZONOFONO RECORDS by Caruso, others. G&T's Caruso, De Lucia, Sammarco, Boninsegna, others. Fonotipias. 50,000 records, operatic, oldtime, Americana, Hot Jazz. Want list to: —John Sicignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, New Jersey mh60601

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o 120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o 122511

RARE AL JOLSON Broadcasts. Other personalities: Chevallier, Churchill, Crosby, Fairbanks. Movie Sound-Tracks. For Sale, —ARG, Box 341, Cooper Station, N. Y. C. 3, N. Y. f3633

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants". For information write or visit —Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., N. Y. C. 28, N. Y. my66501

NEW RECORD AUCTION! Records sold at slightly above second highest bid. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Largely celebrity vocal artists. Many are of the very rarest. All who received Auction List No. 1 or announcement card regarding it, will receive Auction List No. 2. All others may have list by request. —W. B. Harr, 103 N. Alameda, Carlsbad, New Mexico. f3468

We make no wild claims, but leading collectors concede we have the greatest collection of records in America, to draw from. We have supplied real record treasures to professional people, businessmen and bankers, records they never dreamed of ever possessing; also to beginners and advanced collectors. We invite you to write for lists. All mail will receive personal attention. —Record Treasures, 740 E. 183rd St., New York 57, N. Y. mh30861

Latest player piano rolls, 75c. List. —Durrell Armstrong, 222 S. Vassar, Wichita, Kans. n128421

Rare Vocal Recordings, including imports. Free lists.—Music Den, 825 Irving Street, San Francisco, Calif. mh3063

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists: Jones, Murray, Burr, Collins, Harlan, etc. Fine condition. Price 50c each. Free lists.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. mh3426

RARE OLD RECORDS: Write for sales lists. Operatic, vocal, instrumental, popular, jazz. Collector's items.—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. je6806

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list, offering above average prices. Wanted: 18½" New Century and 14" Perfection discs.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. mh3215

OPERATIC, Symphonic records. Free list! Wants supplied.—Goldfarb, 288 Crown Street, Brooklyn, N. Y. ap3612

OUR NEW recording service offers the great voices of the past and present in their best recorded interpretations cut to your order on top quality blanks at either standard or LP speeds. Send for our free list of hundreds of items from which to choose at low prices.—Milt Weiss, 715 Dickinson St., Memphis, Tenn. mh3088

WILL BUY phonograph records, collections or dealers' stock, any amount, made before 1940. Have many for sale. Send wants.—J. Schneider, 128 W. 46, N. Y. C., N. Y. je6463

BELL NOTES

By D. TUDOR HARRELL

Sometimes with secure delight,
The upland hamlets will invite;
When the merry bells ring round,
And the jocund rebecks sound;
To many a youth and many a maid;
Dancing in the chequered shade;
And young and old come forth to play,
On a sunshine holiday

—JOHN MILTON

In the year A. D. 400 came the custom of hanging bells in towers. To Paulinus, The Bishop of Nola, goes the credit for this idea. They were first used in churches about A. D. 900.

oOo

Bede, English historian of the 7th century tells us that church bells were first brought from Italy into England, and have been more closely identified with church services more than any other instrument.

oOo

About the 8th century, the first peal of bells was hung in an English belfry and a decree issued that any Saxon peasant who owned 500 acres of land, and had on his estate a

BELLS WANTED

WANTED: Bells. I give bell talks. —
Mrs. Tilden Patton, Lexington, Illinois.
dl2407

FOR SALE

Get FROM INDIA: Elephant bell, Worship bell, cowbell, any, $2.—Motiwala, Third Bhoiwada 38H, Bombay 2. f3652

TRAVEL SEARCH FOR BELLS

By A. C. MEYER — $2.50 Ppd.

In the last 10 years, semi-retired, Mr. Meyer and his wife, also a bell enthusiast, indulged their hobby of bell collecting, which has taken them to many parts of the world. In every city and virtually every cross-roads, they added interesting specimens to their collection. Mr. Meyer has summarized it all in a down-to-earth story.

■ ■ ■

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING CORPORATION

1006 So. Michigan Ave.,
Chicago 5, Ill.

church with a bell tower, could become a freeman.

oOo

The earliest Christian bells were metal, riveted together into a four-sided shape, similar to our cowbell. The clapper swung from the upper inside of the bell, and the figures which struck it were called "Jacks."

oOo

In England every bell had its story and every note recalled tradition. The Sermon Bell, The Pardon or Angelus bell, so-called because of indulgence formerly bestowed for reciting the angelus, the Pudding bell, the Pancake bell, a shriving-bell rung on Shrove Tuesday as a signal for housewives to prepare their pancakes, the Holy bell, the Evening bell, the Storm bell, the Harvest or Seeding bell, the Fair bell, and Owen bell. Fritter's bell rang at 4 A. M. to begin Lent.

oOo

The story goes that Henry VIII, who was as fickle about bells as he was wives, lost four "Jesus" bells to Sir M. Partridge at cards, the bet being 100 pounds and one of the belfries in London containing four of the largest bells. Cynical bells rang out as he led his wives to the altar.

oOo

The tide of the Reformation returned with Elizabeth and the most common bell ornaments were, the cross, the fleur-de-lis, the crown, the lion's head, Tudor badges, and heads of kings.

oOo

Many pretty things have been said as to the power of ancient bells. Collectors, at great cost, set up carillons of their own, and a good bell, when struck, yielded one note so true that a person with an ear for music could identify it.

oOo

The Romans put bells on their horses and sheep to locate them.

oOo

In the book of Exodus we find reference to bells, made of gold and fastened to the blue vestment the high priest wore.

OoO

There is an old legend connected with the church of St. Andrew near Romford, England. It is said that on this spot bells may be heard on St. Andrew's Day.

oOo

Also, that centuries ago, an earthquake swallowed up a village, leaving a valley near Raleigh, Nottinghamshire, England, and it is said people assembled here on Christmas Day to hear the church bells, their ears close to the ground.

Paul Revere was an early American bell-maker, his foundry in Boston casting some 200 bells.

oOo

In 1819 a church was built in Eatonton, Ga., which was the Union Church. It belonged to four denominations, who used it successively. On the 5th Sunday, it was used by the Masons. It was abandoned by the Methodists in 1857, and by the others in 1897, torn down and removed.

oOo

The silver tone of its old bell, furnished the inspiration for a poem entitled "The Old Church Bell," written by Col. Wm. H. Spars, a native of Putnam Co., Georgia.

Ring on, ring on, Sweet Sabbath Bell,
Thy mellow tones, I love to hear—

—o—

EDISON TALKING RECORDS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 20)

equally intriguing one. Mr. Burke recently found in a New York store a copy of Victor Black Label record No. 31755, "Discovery of the North Pole," by Dr. Frederick Cook. This record is so rare almost no one except Burke seems to own a copy or to have heard of it, and it appears not to be listed in any Victor catalog. It obviously was made late in 1909 or early in 1910, when Cook was acclaimed as the discoverer of the North Pole and before the controversy arose which caused the explorer to be denounced, rightly or wrongly as an impostor. Public opinion veered to Lt. Robert E. Peary as the true discoverer, and by November, 1910, Victor had issued Purple Label Record No. 70012, by Peary, under the same title as that of the Cook record, which must have been hurriedly withdrawn from circulation after only a few copies were made.

Mr. Rabenstein has also obligingly looked up the identities of artists in several organizations or other groups that have puzzled collectors. The Weary Willie Trio, which made "Sons of Mother Earth" (Diamond Disc No. 50329), was composed of Billy Murray, Edward Meeker and Donald Chalmers. "We Girls Quartet," singers of "Goodbye, My Baby" (50944) consisted of Gladys Rice, Betsy Lane Shepherd, Marion Evelyn Cox and Amy Ellerman. And the "Laughing Record" — Henry's Music Lesson" (No. 51063) on which no artists were named was made by Edward Meeker and Sallie Stembler, the latter known in vaudeville as "The Laughing Girl," with burlesque cornet playing by A. Fantelli. Miss Stembler was a well known entertainer, who made a "Laughing Son" record for Victor in 1904 and "Everything's Funny to Me" on a two-minute Edison cylinder in 1906. In October, 1918, Edison issued a Blue Amberol of the same selection, and Miss Stembler's photo appeared that month on the cover of the Edison Amberola Monthly.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

CHARLES W. HARRISON & BEULAH GAYLORD YOUNG

By JIM WALSH

(NOTE—This article originally appeared in the October, 1951, issue of HOBBIES, but through an unfortunate error only a small portion of the manuscript was published. Because of many requests from admirers of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, the sketch is being reprinted substantially in its first complete form.)

It is a particular pleasure to set down some of the achievements of Charles Harrison's career, because I not only admire his singing but regard him as a dear friend. When to this is added the privilege of saying something about his wife, the former Beulah Gaylord Young, who was a charming recording soprano in her own right, my gratification is great.

Charles William Harrison was born on September 11, year not specified, in Jersey City, New Jersey. His middle name comes from the fact that both his grandfathers were named William. He was musically inclined from an early age and when he was 17 began taking voice instruction from a well known teacher, Leo Koefler, of New York. However, he was earning his living as an office worker and singing "on the side" with an amateur male quartet when he received his first chance as a recording artist. Mr. Harrison recalls the date of this as January, 1912, but it must have been a year earlier, because his first record, "Cujas Animam," appears in the Columbia list for May, 1911. It is No. A5275, coupled with the "Inflammatus" from "Stabat Mater," by a soprano, Anna Grant Fugitt. Later it was renumbered A5833, and combined with the "Inflammatus," sung by the Columbia Oratorio Chorus.

The singer recalls:

"The lead tenor of our quartet knew the manager of the Columbia laboratory, so we made some 'test' recordings. During the session he spoke about a test of his own solo voice, and I for once put on a bold front and said I would also like to make a test. Of course the manager did not know me, but he said they were looking for a tenor who could sing a high D flat. The other fellow said that I could do it and that they need look no further, so after a confab I was booked for a test of the 'Cujas Animam' from Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' sung in English, with piano, as I did not know Latin! The test came out well enough for them to book me with orchestra for the same selection in Latin. I had a friend in the office where I was manager (and a youngster, at that), whose brother was a priest, so he gave me the phonetic pronunciation, and I went to it. When this came through the processing I was handed a contract for six months.

"Right away, as my records began to come out, Victor and Edison got on my trail, but I was tied up, so could do nothing. Nearing the end of the six months, I demanded a raise in the fee or a new contract, but found that I had unwittingly signed for an additional year at the same rates. I at once refused to continue, as I apparently had been duped, so went to both Victor and Edson on a non-exclusive basis, designed to keep me at least with 'the big three.' After another year or so, I got raises, and more raises, then began free-lancing.

"In 1919-20, I was recording for 18 laboratories, working every day in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston, Montreal, etc. I think I can claim, without bragging or making any misstatements, to have made more recordings from 1912 to 1925 or so than any other singer, as I was in quartets, choruses and light opera groups, as well as duets and trios. I sang under several names besides my own, only two of which I recall — Hugh Donovan and Billy Burton. Some of these independent recording outfits sold master records to mail order and fliv-ver-night sales concerns. As I had been paid outright for my work, there was no way to restrain them or collect royalties. In 1925 I began radio work, singing on the first commercial programs over WEAF and WJZ."

Because of his beautiful lyric tenor voice and clear enunciation, Charles Harrison's first Columbia records sung in English were immediate successes and, as he says, caused him to be sought by the two other large recording companies. His first popular song disc was A1141, "Take Me Back to the Garden of Love," in which he was assisted by the Columbia (Peerless) Quartet. Then follow the old Irish song, "Come Back to Erin," sung as a straight solo.

The young tenor's first Edison cylinders were issued in July, 1912. The initial offering was a four-minute Amherst, No. 1045, a duet of "Absent," with Edison's favorite soprano, Elizabeth Spencer. Harrison's first Edison solo was No. 1057, an English version of "All Hail, Thou Dwelling Lowly," from Faust. The monthly supplement said:

"Famous in itself, the great Cavatina from the garden scene of Gounod's 'Faust' has been the goal of many a tenor. Mr. Harrison, who recently left Calvary Church of East Orange, New Jersey, to become tenor soloist for the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York, has made a remarkably clear record, while the orchestra shades its beautiful accompaniment from violin obbligato to full rich chords."

This seems the best place to remark that Charlie Harrison credits his obtaining the New York church singing job to the influence of a fine singer with whom he was intimately associated for many years — that distinguished basso, the late Frank Croton. He says: "Frank put me on the track of the big church job in New York — Fifth Avenue Brick Presbyterian Church. Acting on his tip, I crashed the gate and got the job, which I held for four years, until my recording and concert work necessitated resigning."

In August, 1912, Harrison showed his versatility by making an Edison cylinder of Louis A. Hirsch's catchy "Oriental Rose" from "The Winter Garden."

"The New York Winter Garden," said the supplement, "is usually associated with ragtime 'hits,' but the fact that this exquisite melody is one of the greatest successes of the show proves that the idea is mistaken. For this is a beautiful love song of tenderest sentiment, placed in a truly Oriental musical setting. . . . Mr. Harrison is in fine voice, his beautifully shaded tones and the graceful ease of his performance adding greatly to the charm of the enchanting air."

Until he had a disagreement with Mr. Edison several years later, Charles Harrison was one of the outstanding Edison artists. His name did not appear in a Victor list until May, 1913, when record No. 17317 coupled his rendition of "When I Met You Last Night in Dreamland" with a Harry Macdonough version of an all-time hit, "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling." Speaking of the Harrison side, the monthly supplement termed it "a pleasing ballad which introduces another new tenor to Victor audiences. Mr. Harrison's clear tenor and good enunciation will be much appreciated by our customers." This brief description was accompanied by a photograph of the singer.

The same photograph appeared in June, with a listing of what must have been one of the biggest selling Harrison records, combining two ballads that had been made famous by John McCormack, "I Hear You Calling Me" and "A Dream." The catalog editor commented:

"Two of the greatest favorites among modern concert songs are now issued for the first time in double-faced form, and the combination seems a most happy one. Mr. Harrison has given these two highly popular songs in a most effective manner."

This record, No. 17321, established Charles Harrison as a Victor favorite. It also caused him to incur the displeasure of Mr. McCormack. As Charlie himself says:

"When I began recording for Victor, they wanted a tenor who could make McCormack records on a cheaper disc — someone with a voice and appeal that he had — so I was told to do some of these McCormack songs. The first two were 'I Hear You Calling Me' and 'A Dream,' then 'Mother Machree' and 'A Little Bit of Heaven.' A few months after these were released I was switched to other ballads and songs, and when I inquired about this was told by the recording manager that McCormack had raised h—— because Harrison records were cutting into his royalties."

Meanwhile, Harrison was being extensively used by Columbia, for whom he did more singing than for any other company. The Columbia recording manager decided that the company needed a male quartet, composed of four artists, each of whom would be a star soloist but capable of finished harmonious team work. The new quartet was to record music of a less ephemeral type than the popular songs in which the Peerless Quartet had a virtual Columbia monopoly, and to specialize in numbers that could be sung without accompaniment. Thus originated the Columbia Stellar Quartet — Stellar meaning that each member was a star in his own right.

"The Stellar Quartet was organized by the recording manager, George Jell, and Charles A. Prince was delegated to rehearse us. I had done up to this time, all a capella (without accompaniment) work and was one of the group who wanted to try it out on records, so that is why we began, or experimented, with these numbers without any kind of accompaniment. It was a complete success, and Prince was instrumental in arranging and conducting us in subsequent recording work. If my memory does not fail me the first of these numbers to be recorded was 'Absent,' and it so deeply struck the vice president of Columbia that he ordered a series of 'a capella' numbers. Whether this was one of the first to be released, I do not know. . . . Incidentally, Leo Koefler was the choirmaster who coached me on breathing and sight reading in his choir at Old St. Paul's Chapel, Broadway and Fulton Street, New York. Later, after I had progressed in church solo work, I went to Frederick Bristol, an old singing master, who did the finishing touches on my voice production. Up to that time I had been a 'natural' and required no real instruction. (You see how lucky I was). He wanted me for opera, but I turned down contracts for the Metropolitan and two free trips of three years each in Europe, which I did not want."

Now, back to the Stellar Quartet.

The new quartet's first published record, No. A1440, was issued in January, 1914, and consisted of "Sally in Our Alley" and "The Girl I Left Behind Me." The supplement termed them "superb male quartet numbers . . . an introduction par excellence for our new quartet, made up of four of the best concert voices now heard in the United States." The singers were Harrison, first tenor; John Barnes Wells, lead; Andrea Sarto, baritone; and the already mentioned Frank Croxton, bass. In April, the quartet sang "Annie Laurie," doubled with "Meet Me By Moonlight," by the Columbia Mixed Quartet, in which Harrison also was heard. "Absent" did not appear until February, 1916.

Other members of the mixed quartet — all dead now — were Grace Kerns, soprano; Mildred Potter, contralto, and Croxton. Its personnel later changed, and Harrison recalls that "the Columbia Mixed Quartet — Beulah Gaylord Young, soprano; Rose Bryant, contralto; Croxton, bass, and myself tenor — did a lot of club and concert work at about the 1918-19 period." The original mixed quartet was the nucleus of a group that recorded a double-faced combination of the Rigoletto Quartet and the Lucia Sextet, sung in English and issued in the October, 1915, Columbia list. The quartet was sung by Kearns, Potter, Harrison and Albert Wiederhold, baritone; and the Sextet by Kearns, Potter, Harrison, Croxton, Wiederhold and another tenor, Reed Miller. On occasion, Clara Moister sang contralto in the mixed quartet, and Wiederhold took the place of Croxton.

After Wells had been used for only a few records, he dropped out of the Stellar Quartet. Henry Burr served briefly, but also soon gave it up — probably because he was so busy with his solo and duet recordings and leading the Peerless Quartet. Reed Miller then became the second tenor, and there were no further personnel changes, other than that other tenors sometimes filled in for Miller when he went on long concert tours and oratorio engagements. When I talked with Lewis James a few months ago, Mr. James, now program director at Radio Station WGN, Chicago, recalled that he sometimes sang with the Stellars in Miller's place. The quartet disbanded after Miller's death in 1923.

Columbia gave the Stellar Quartet the following glowing description in record catalogs published while the ensemble was at the height of its popularity:

"The admirers of the four-part singing of the Columbia Stellar Quartet are so many that a short personal introduction to the individual members of this unexcelled ensemble will be of real interest. This quartet sings together only for the Columbia Company and each new record is a veritable sensation.

"Charles Harrison, first tenor, whose clear voice is so often heard brilliantly carrying the air, is a New Jersey man. He commenced voice culture at the age of 17 under Leo Koefler and has been tenor at the New York Fifth Avenue Church . . . until he entered the concert field. He has been forced to give up a professional career at the call of public admirers of his musical ability.

"Reed Miller, second tenor, is a native of the South. Miller came to New York with nothing in his pocket but ability. With a voice no less than a gift, he has achieved fame as one of the greatest oratorio soloists the country has ever known. From coast to coast he has been called to sing in chorus productions.

"Andrea Sarto, baritone, is above all a singer. From a boy he sang for himself and his friends. In 1910 he left his church position to step up on the concert and operatic stage. Conried, of operatic fame, selected Sarto for baritone work at the Metropolitan, and from that time he has grown in popular esteem throughout the country as a concert singer of rare excellence and sterling character.

"Frank Croxton, bass, was born in Kentucky and was educated at the Kentucky University. At the youthful age of six his remarkable voice was developing under the tutelage of his father. At twenty-one he came to New York and built up a reputation as soloist with orchestras and choral societies throughout the United States. The outstanding quality of Croxton's voice is an unusual clearness seldom found in a voice of such low bass register. In his solo passages this clarity is particularly noticeable."

Reading the foregoing, Columbia patrons must have felt that the Stellar Quartet was the finest group of its kind in the world. A 1919 article attributed much of the credit for the quartet's success to Charles Prince:

"Practically the only conductor who has spent his entire career in the recording field, Prince has unquestionably been one of the moving spirits which have made Columbia records what they are today. The Stellar Quartet . . . is another of Prince's musical children. His remarkable pianism enables Prince to go over selections and instruct the perfect interpretation before artists stand before the horn. This he does over and over with tireless interest — his one aim being a perfect record."

Like many other popular recording groups, the Columbia Quartet used more than one name. In singing popular music it was known as the Broadway Quartet, and I suspect it may also have been, on Columbia records, the Knickerbocker Quartet a different group from the Edison organization of the same name. Sarto sometimes called himself Edgar Stoddard, and Harrison and Albert Wiederhold made duets as Billy Burton and Herbert Stuart. As has already been brought out, Hugh Donovan was another disguise for Harrison, and some of his Columbia solos were issued in the 1920's under the Harmony and Velvetone labels and credited to "Charles Hilton." I have a National Music Lover's record (made, I believe, by Grey Gull), of an operatic aria sung in English by "Hugo Donivetti!"

Once, discussing various Columbia artists in a letter to me, the veteran Columbia executive, Frank Dorian, who died in 1939, remarked:

"Charles Harrison was a tenor soloist on records long before the Stellar Quartet was organized. His repertoire was almost unlimited, but he specialized in ballads and grand opera arias. In his heyday he was probably one of the largest selling recording artists in the world." Mr. Dorian said he thought Harrison belonged on any list of the greatest popular recorders.

As a member of the Edison recording staff, the blue-eyed, brown-haired, slightly-built Charles Harrison had the supervision of Thomas A. Edison himself. He was the subject of this flattering description in a 1914 Edison Blue Amberol record catalog:

"Up to the past year his work has been confined principally to church singing, but in the short time which he has devoted to concerts and recitals he has gained a pronounced and well-deserved success. His voice is notable for its freshness and vivaciousness of tone. It has life and is absolutely free from the deadly monotony of so many tenor voices. It responds perfectly to his sympathetic touch. His voice has power, tonal purity and sweetness."

Equally flattering were the newspaper comments on Harrison's recitals. A typical example is the following from a 1916 issue of the Sedalia (Mo.) Democrat:

"Charles Harrison fulfilled every expectation and surpassed any tenor Sedalia ever heard. His voice is beautiful, even and sympathetic, with never a harsh tone—and his wonderful artistry made every song a gem."

There were plenty of unusual experiences in Charlie Harrison's recital career. He was called on to sing for a few days with the Eight Famous Victor Artists, while the troupe was touring Texas, because of Henry Burr's being summoned home, owing to the death of his wife's daughter by a former marriage. He says, "Henry Burr was a fine fellow and thought a lot of his stepdaughter." Almost the same remark was made to me by Burr's widow, Mrs. Cecelia McClaskey, in a telephone conversation I had with her during my visit to Chicago last October. She said, "He was a wonderful man. I was a widow when he married me, and nobody could have been better to my daughter than he was."

Harrison says that he ran into every sort of weather, but mostly bad, during his travels as a recitalist. "I recall," he writes, "going through all kinds of snow and stuff one winter while concertizing; again, while in Houston, Texas, one spring, the floods were so bad I had to go in and out of a back door, then 'float' to the other side of the street in a boat, to get to the Auditorium and back the same way. The house was packed for the recital! I think I still prefer Maine in summer and winter, for I've experienced every month there and like them all. Maybe if I live long enough I'll end my days there."

In the late 1920's Harrison sang briefly with the famous radio and recording ensemble, the Revelers. He also organized for radio work the Eveready Mixed Quartet, consisting of Beulah Gaylord Young, soprano; Rose Bryant, contralto; himself, tenor; Wilfred Glenn (founder of the Revelers), bass, and Tom Griselle, pianist. (Griselle won a $10,000 prize for a symphony that took first place in a contest sponsored in 1927 by the Victor Talking Machine Company). The tenor also sang in a male ensemble consisting of himself; Arnold Morgan, lead; Theodore Webb, baritone; Ellsworth Sliker, bass, and Stuart Ross, pianist.

But, getting back to the days of acoustic recording, some of the most picturesque experiences of Charles Harrison's career were those he had with the great, but crotchety, inventor, Thomas A. Edison. "The Old Man" had brought out his wonderful Diamond Disc phonograph, which perfectly "re-created" the exact quality of a singer's voice and couldn't be detected, in direct comparison, from the living tones as long as the singer was careful to sing exactly as loud as the phonograph and not to use his full power. In other words, while the quality of the reproduction was precisely like the real thing, the singers, in making records, didn't sing as loud as they would naturally do when appearing before a huge audience in a large concert hall. Obviously, this meant, that in giving "tone tests," they couldn't cut loose with all the strength of their lungs, but had to keep on "the phonograph level." It was this compulsory restraint that caused envious dealers for other makes of phonographs to insist that singers "imitated" the Edison instrument. In 1926 Edison brought out the Edisonic soundbox which gave a louder reproduction than the original light-weight equipment.

Now I shall let Charlie Harrison tell in his own words the story of his misadventures with Mr. Edison, which removed him for a time from the roster of Edison artists:

"I was making tone tests at the Orange 'cage' each week, and at the same time was recording operatic arias in English. The 'cage' was the glass room which 'the old man' had in his Orange laboratory. I used to go there one hour a week to sing vocal exercises and anything he might ask me to do. This was a separate arrangement from my recording contract."

"Well, Mr. Edison criticized one of my opera arias and laboratory workers kidded me about it, so I foolishly made the remark that he couldn't hear, anyway, so why should he be the judge as to whether it was suitable for the Metropolitan but not on his record? After the report of my criticism got to the old man, I went to Orange for my weekly testing period, and after waiting for almost the full hour, motioned to his secretary that I wanted an audience. He finally got Mr. Edison to call me in;

and what a surprise I got! He told me to sit down, and when I did he put his hand to his ear and asked me, 'What was it you said about my being deaf and couldn't hear your record?' I was quite at my wits' end for a reply and before I could think up what to say he told me I was through making records and to go on home! My guarantee was paid each month for the full year or more it ran. When I was asked to sing for one of their big banquets and shows in Orange I thought it strange, but went to it, sang 'Celeste Aida' on the stage where the banquet tables were set, and at the conclusion Walter Miller, the Edison recording manager, came to me and said Mr. Edison wanted me to sing that again, and to stand beside him. After I had finished he took my hand and told me I was improving. A short time later I resumed Edison recording."

Apparently, Harrison did not record "Celeste Aida" for Edison, or if he did it wasn't issued, but he did sing the tenor part in an English version of the Misere from Trovatore; Diamond Disc No. 82516. This record had a checkered career. It was first sung by Agnes Kimball, soprano, and John Young, tenor. A few years later it was remade by the late Mrs. Kimball with Harrison, and in 1923 was done over still again by Esther Nelson and Charles Hart. Remaking disc records was a common practice with Edison; and sometimes the artists were changed when the original singers, for one reason or another, were not available.

The tenor reminisces concerning his "tone testing" experiences:

"That Edison 'tone test' business, which was carried on throughout the country at one time, was quite a trick. Fortunately, I could hold my voice volume down without losing the quality of tone. It was used in churches principally, though I did them for stores where the records were sold, and in clubs where special meetings were held. My last one was in Newark, at I think, the Centenary Church, where I had been engaged for a recital. I had sung there on numerous occasions and they were familiar with my voice. After the demonstration of the tone test, I was asked to sing a group of songs, and although I tried to hold my voice in check, so to speak, the pastor interrupted to ask why I did not sing out and give my full voice to the listeners. As I was in this instance being paid by the church and not by Edison, I had to comply, and of course everyone noticed the difference. The fellows who came there with the machine and records of mine were disgusted and left early, so I was 'bounced' from this work and never did any more of it."

When a performer has made many thousands of records, as Charles Harrison did, it is virtually impossible to pick out a few and say they are his finest. But, like every other artist I have known who sang for all the companies, he considers Edison recording the best of its period. His comment is, "Edison records were the nearest to the real thing that I've ever heard." Among his acoustically recorded Diamond Discs, "Funiculi, Funicula" and "Love Me and the World is Mine" are particularly good. However, I believe that the Edison electric recordings which he sang in 1928 and 1929 are the most admirable of his entire career. Take, for instance, a trivial song called "Momsy," which he did with a fine male chorus. The words and music are cheap, but the voice quality is gorgeous. "Love's First Kiss" is beautifully sung, and Harrison is the only artist I can recall who made "Sonny Boy" sound like respectable music instead of trash. To compare his recording with that of Al Jolson or Ruth Etting is to realize the vast difference between his dignified restraint and their wallowing in pathos. John McCormack also recorded "Sonny Boy," but I — no McCormack admirer at any time — consider his effort poor beside Harrison's.

The tenor was under contract to Edison for two records a month when the inventor's company went out of the phonograph and record business in October, 1929. By that time he had organized a fine male quartet, much on the order of the Columbia Stellars, which, while under contract to Edison, also recorded by the electric method for Victor and Columbia. The new group was known as the American Singers. At first it consisted of Harrison as top tenor; the Canadian, Redferne Hollinshead, who made Edison records in 1915, second tenor; Vernon Archibald, another Edison artist, baritone; and our old friend, Frank Croxton, bass. Hollinshead was soon replaced by Lambert Murphy, who previously had been an exclusive Victor artist from the beginning of his recording career in 1911. (Mr. Murphy is still living, and delighted me a few years ago by letting me know that he regularly reads Favorite Recording Artists).

I have an undated newspaper clipping which contains a blurry cut of Harrison, Murphy, Archibald and Croxton. It says that they "comprise the Old Company Singers, who with Dr. Sigmond Spaeth broadcast every Sunday at 7 P. M. over WEA and associated stations." The article gives this amusing thumbnail sketch of the idiosyncrasies of the four singers:

"Charles Harrison spends his idle hours at his home in Summit, N. J., with a can of weed killer in one hand and a book on horticulture in the other. Lambert Murphy spends as much time as he can on his New Hampshire farm, with his collection of firearms (he's planning to visit Chicago) and his prize-winning bird dog. Vernon Archibald is hailed as the perfect disciple of Izaak Walton. He went two weeks without a bite and never gave vent to profanity. And Frank Croxton is still trying to equal the 84 he made on the links way back in 1905."

Concerning the American Singers, Harrison wrote to me in 1948:

"We serviced Columbia Broadcasting System the first year of its life, contracting for ten hours of broadcasting per week at a very handsome salary for each one of us, and two women to make a sextet. We then free-lanced and then did a four-year stretch for Lehigh or Old Company Coal and various other spot commercials. The war ended all that, and so it ended me for radio, too, as I would not hang around the offices looking for a job. I took to business, as did Lambert Murphy."

A few months earlier he had written:

"I would love to do some recording work, as my voice is still youthful, but for radio only glamour is wanted. Voice and musical ability come second."

Last year, in a reminiscent mood, he said: "You know, Jim, it's difficult for me to try to recall some of the artists who recorded with me, as I used various names, and I know

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 24)

HEIRLOOM ANTIQUES

By Appointment — Telephone Reading 4-1510

201 E. Lancaster Ave., Shillington, Penna.

ILLUSTRATED

Very old, French classic Temple design mantel clock. Original French works. Dark wood with brass ornamentation. 8-day strike. 18 1/2" high, 10 1/2" wide.

PRICE $48

French early 1800's black marble clock with delicate gold decoration.
Unusual white porcelain and brass compensating pendulum. Porcelain dial with exposed escapement. 16 1/2" high,
9 1/2" wide.

PRICE $44

French brass and glass mantel clock. Solid brass case with 4 solid pillars. Heavy bevelled glass in all 4 sides. Glass in front door curved. French works, time only. Porcelain dial. 12" high, 7 1/2" wide. $75.00
Marked Royal Bonn china clock. Shaded brown background with beautiful floral decoration on white. 8-day strike. 10 3/4" high, 8 3/4" wide. 40.00
Jungheims Westminster chime mantel clock. Chased brass dial. Rect. design. Chimes on 1/4-hour and chimes and strikes on hour. 16" high, 12" wide. 8-day. 70.00
Small cottage alarm clock. 1-day works. Plain case with rosewood veneer on base and door. 11 3/4" high, 7 3/4" wide. 20.00
Forestrille Mfg. Co. 8-day weight clock. Mahogany Empire case in beautiful, original condition. Original dial and paper. 35" high, 21" wide. 60.00
M. Gilbert carved chestnut mantel or wall clock. 1850. 7" dial. Beautiful brass pendulum. Full glass door. Rare in chestnut. Original usable finish. 32.00
Seth Thomas rosewood shelf clock. 1850. Empire case with pillars and mirror in lower part of door. Bulseye panel in base. 8-day strike with alarm attachment. 16" high, 10 1/2" wide. 45.00
E. N. Welch single steeple in rosewood veneer. Unusually good, original condition.

8-day strike with odd pendulum. 1880-90. 20 3/4" high, 11" wide. 31.00
Wm. L. Gilbert mantel clock in walnut. Case refinished. Nice decoration on door. 1-day works. 15" high, 11" wide. 21.00
E. Ingraham carved walnut mantel clock. Ifas drop finials and upright finials in case. Glass painting nice gold horseshoe with pink rosebuds. Regulator pendulum. Refinished. 8-day strike. 23" high, 14" wide. 22.50
E. Ingraham carved mantel clock in chestnut. Refinished in natural wood. 8-day strike. 17" high, 12 3/4" wide. 30.00
Ansonia ebonyized metal case with gold dec. and animal feet. Visible escape mechanism. Beautiful dial. Bevelled glass door. 8-day strike. 10 1/2" high, 12 1/2" wide. 25.00
Ansonia Brass & Copper Co. 1840's. All rosewood, tall mantel clock. Original dial, original painting on door and original paper. Case solid rosewood throughout. Door rosewood veneer. 8-day weight. 33" high, 19 1/2" wide. 60.00
French caramel color onyx with brass feet and nice brass and onyx pediment decoration. Simulated gold dial with beautiful filigree work in center. Bevelled glass door. Good French works. 8-day strike. 16" high to top of finial. 8 3/4" wide. 38.50

ALL ABOVE CLOCKS IN RUNNING CONDITION.
OVER 100 OTHER OLD CLOCKS IN RUNNING CONDITION. SEND FOR FREE LIST.
PHOTOS 20c EACH. ALSO CHINA AND GLASS. WRITE WANTS.
SUBJECT TO PRIOR SALE. NO C. O. D.'s. SHIPMENTS BY EXPRESS COLLECT.

mhp

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 23)

some of them did also. I did record duets with Sarto, Wiederhold, Croxton, James, Miller, Glenn, Clifford Cairns and Reinald Werrenrath; also Helen Clark, Elizabeth Spencer, Nanette Flack, Grace Kerns, Lucy Isabelle Marsh, Elsie Baker, Margaret Woodrow Wilson (daughter of President Wilson) Lucy Gates, and others." Charlie might have added another tenor, Everett Clarke, to this list of duet partners. I don't question his statement that he recorded with all these singers but in some instances the records may not have been issued. Off-hand, I can't recall any published duets with Werrenrath, Margaret Wilson and Lucy Gates. And he seems to be one of the few Victor singers who never did a duet with Billy Murray! Of course, Harrison has never tried to be a comedian, and his style and that of "The Denver Nightingale" are poles apart.

Charles Harrison, the "tenor with a voice in a million" (as the Victor supplement writer termed him in commenting on his 1917 record of "Any Place is Heaven if You are Near Me" and "When I Found the Way to Your Heart") is now back in the music business. Since December, 1947, he has been teaching voice for the Newark Conservatory of Music, which specializes in musical training for former service men and women. He teaches five days a week and does church singing on Sundays. Those who had the good fortune to attend the September, 1950, John Bieling Day will remember that Harrison brought with him one of his pupils,

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 58)

Why You Should Join
The National Association of Watch and Clock Collectors.
Write for free, eight-page descriptive folder.

NAWCC Box 299-H Bronxville 8, N. Y.

mhr

IMPORTED CUCKOO CLOCKS

A real Cuckoo clock! The bird pops out of the swinging door and "Cuckoos" the time every hour and half hour. SPECIAL NO. 103H, $13.75, wholesale only. Other models to choose from.

Replacement parts for all Cuckoo clocks: New bellows, bellows re-leathered, hands, chains, weights, pendulums, birds, dials, numerals, gongs, etc.

Each piece burned in the wood,
"Made in 1951".

Write for 32 page catalogue, 25c.

RALPH HERMAN CLOCK HOUSE

628 Coney Island Avenue,

Brooklyn 18, New York

tfc

TIMEPIECES

RESTORED ANTIQUE CLOCKS. Large stock, all running. Stamp for list. Dial refishing. — Vandervort, 308 Bertley, Moberley, Mo. jly6045

COLLECTORS! DEALERS! Do your own clock repairing, refishing. Complete instructions in "Clock Collector's Handbook," $1, postpaid.—Kenneth Karsten, Compo Parkway, Westport, Conn. ja122741

FOR SALE: Watches and watch movements for collectors. Send for free list to—C. E. Ham, P. O. Box 1745, Boston 5, Mass. mh1481

HOOR GLASSES

Wanted to buy one or more hour glasses. Give price and description. —F. L. Meadow, San Marcos, Texas. mh1152

Clock movements, full chime grandfather and grandmother regulator, 30-hour insert units, clock supplies, dials, bezels, barometer insert units.

WANTED: Old movements, dials, cases, etc.

Write for Brochure - Stamp, Please

R. W. HOLWICK
177 S. Anacapa St., Ventura, Calif. jlyc

CLOCK DIALS STEEPLE CLOCKS

4 1/4" or 5" Dials. Can be cut to fit any Steeple Clock. Cards, 5 1/2 x 7" and 7 x 11" overall.

OTHER CLOCKS DIALS

Size Dials: 2 1/4"-2 3/4"-3 1/4"-4 1/4"-5"-6 1/4"-7 1/4" & 8", with 1" margin. Can be assorted lots.

One 50c; 3 for $1. Doz. $3. Postfree.

Printed on Glazed Index Bristol

8 smallest sizes also, on glazed gummed paper. State Preference. tfc

W. L. KENDALL

629 W. Willis, Detroit, Michigan

ANNOUNCING

A superb, authoritative book with pictures and descriptions of hundreds of the finest pieces of furniture made in America during the Queen Anne and Chippendale periods.

Joseph Downs AMERICAN FURNITURE

Illustrated with 401 Gravure pictures and 10 Color plates!

A remarkable opportunity to know and appreciate the distinguishing characteristics of the various classes of furniture made in America during the eighteenth century is offered in this important volume. Here more than 400 examples of the finest craftsmanship, selected from innumerable pieces of the Queen Anne and Chippendale styles in the Winterthur Museum, are illustrated in gravure, and described on facing pages. Most of these masterpieces have never before been pictured. Among them are signed pieces by William Savery, Thomas Tufft, John Goddard, John Townsend, Adam S. Coe, John Plimm, Benjamin Frothingham, Adam Hains, Reuben Beman, Jr., John Elliott, Kneeland and Adams and numerous others. Expert cabinetmakers of Salem, Boston, Newport, New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Philadelphia and Maryland are represented.

Joseph Downs, Curator of the Henry Francis du Pont Winterthur Museum, is universally recognized as the outstanding authority on American decorative arts. He was for nearly twenty years Curator of the American Wing of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York.

The illustrations were carefully selected to show not only rare and beautiful pieces of furniture but also the skill and independence of American cabinetmakers. Numerous examples of each class of furniture are shown. The items pictured include: beds, chairs, chests of drawers, tall clocks, couches or daybeds, desks and bookcases, fire-screens and candlesticks, looking glasses, sofas and settees, tables.

The detailed description of each piece includes: Place of origin, date of construction, name of maker, kind of wood, dimensions, special features, etc.

Every effort was taken to make this a volume of particular distinction. The pages are large, 9x-12 inches, beautifully printed on paper of superior quality, bound in fine cloth with title and decorations in gold.

This handsome volume is scheduled for publication on March 25 at $17.50.

Special Prepublication Offer

All orders placed before March 25 will be filled at the special price of $14. Order now to receive your First Edition copy and save $3.50.

Absolute Satisfaction Guaranteed

PAUL A. RUDDALL
461 Ben Franklin Station
Washington 4, D. C.

Send for free catalog of "America's Largest Selection of Books on Antiques"

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 28)

Charles Pinto, who gave an excellent rendition of Toselli's "Serenade."

The tenor explains his fondness for Maine, and makes clear the pleasure he finds in his present home at 49 Fairview Avenue, New Providence Township, New Jersey, in the following:

"I followed my teacher, Bristol, with quite a few of his other pupils, to Maine for summer study and was sold on the idea. This was 1917. I purchased a 'camp' in Harrison, which I had made over into a cottage with two cabins, and from which I commuted to New York and Camden for recording work, and then radio programs. When my wife and I were married we carried on a summer school of instruction, to which students and teachers came for refresher courses. The war ended all that, so in 1946 I sold the place, as we could not spend summers there any more. Back in 1928 I purchased a 'show place' in Summit, New Jersey, but it was too much for me to carry, what with caretakers, etc., so that was sold and we came to New Providence Township in 1942. Not liking that neighborhood, we finally located our present home, which I bought, and we moved in on December 17, 1946, the most comfortable and satisfactory bungalow we've ever been in. We hope we are set for the rest of our lives, as we can go to Maine each summer for a short stay in another camp."

On this buoyantly optimistic note let's dismiss the brilliant tenor and lovable gentleman, Charles Harrison, and pay our respects to the distaff side of the family. Though few record collectors suspect it, Mrs. Harrison was for several years a recording artist of considerable distinction. She was in fact, Beulah Gaylord Young, who has already been mentioned more than once in this article.

The lady with the beautiful high soprano voice recalls that she had an audition with Columbia in 1911 and made some solo numbers. Like nearly everybody else who worked for Columbia, she sang with the Peerless Quartet and did duets with Henry Burr. She was top soprano of the Victoria Ladies' Quartet when she began her recording activities, and during an audition the recording manager asked if she would like to do some solo work. She would — and did.

Then Beulah Gaylord Young heard Charles Harrison's first record. She admired his voice and decided she wanted to meet him. That record of "Cujas Animam" was an historic disc in more than one respect, for it not only launched Charles Harrison's recording career, but also resulted, eventually, in the marriage of Soprano Young and Tenor Harrison in 1925. Prior to that, however, they had done much singing together on records and in recitals throughout the East.

During her active Columbia period, Mrs. Harrison was the soprano of the Columbia Mixed Quartet, usually with Clara Moister, Harrison and Wiederhold as the other members. These singers also were the soloists in the Columbia Light Opera Company, together with another soprano, Idelle Patterson, Frank Croxton and Reed Miller. A charming duet by "Young and Harrison" is the 1912 Columbia record of "Are You Going to Dance?"

from "The Count of Luxembourg" with "Where the Edelweiss is Blooming," from "Hanky Panky," sung by the soprano, with Henry Burr as her partner, on the other side.

Although Mrs. Harrison recorded mostly for Columbia, she was represented in the February, 1914, Edison Blue Amberol list with cylinder No. 2218, "My Chain of Memories," written by Mrs. Herbert Ingraham in memory of her husband, who had won prominence during his short life as a composer of song hits. The February Edison Phonograph Monthly Review contained the soprano's photo, one that showed her smiling happily, and a biographical note:

"Beulah Gaylord Young, for three seasons of the Victoria Ladies' Quartet, is well known in club, concert and church work. She sang for nearly ten years in Summit, New Jersey, at the Methodist Episcopal Church; at present she is soloist at the 33rd Street Collegian Baptist Church, New York City. Her voice is of beautiful quality, perfectly placed, and her songs are always exquisitely rendered. That her records are bound to become favorites seems already assured, although she is a newcomer to the ranks of Edison artists."

I have one association concerning Mrs. Harrison, whom I have yet to meet in person, with which this sketch may close. For a good many years one of my favorite records has been a Columbia of a 1912 Irving Berlin success, "Run Home and Tell Your Mother." It is sung by Molly Ames, soprano, with the Peerless Quartet in the refrain. The soprano's voice is so fresh, youthful and attractive that on first hearing the record I wondered who the mysterious Molly Ames could be. In my imagination I gave her the nickname of "Pretty Molly," because I imagined her to be an extremely pretty girl. "Molly Ames" made only one record, and I decided that she probably was a now forgotten vaudeville singer who had experimented briefly with recording. I remember asking the late Albert Campbell, the top tenor of the Peerless Quartet, who Molly Ames was, and he replied that he couldn't remember working with anybody by such a name.

Then Charlie Harrison, in returning thanks for the "wonderful time" he said he'd had at the John Bieling Day party, asked if he might bring his wife next time, because she too had been a recording artist. "She made records," he casually wrote, "under the names of Beulah Gaylord Young and Molly Ames." (He might also have mentioned, if he had thought of it, that they made a Pathé record of "Georgia Moon" in 1916 under the team name of Charles Harrison and Beulah Gaylord — probably the last record they sang together). Perhaps you can imagine my glee when I realized that the mystery of "Molly Ames" was a mystery no longer!

I eagerly looked forward to the prospect of seeing not only my friend Charlie again, but "Molly Ames" as well, in September, 1951. Unfortunately, it turned out that there was no Bieling Day party last year, and I have still to meet "Pretty Molly." Perhaps I shall have that privilege in 1952. I certainly hope so!

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

ESTELLA LOUISE MANN

(And Some "Forgotten Woman" Singers)

By JIM WALSH

For the past twenty years talk about "the Forgotten Man" has been a commonplace of American politics. But anyone studying the record catalogs of the early phonograph companies is likely to think more about "the Forgotten Woman." Most men who made records in the 1890's and early 1900's are still well remembered, but their feminine counterparts are a forlorn, forgotten group, whose names mean little to music lovers today.

Fifty years or so ago the soprano voice was so difficult to record that it nearly always emerged from the phonograph as a blasting, squawking travesty of the real thing. The Edison Company did not claim complete success in its efforts to remove the "blast" from soprano cylinders until it began to issue records in September, 1905, by an accomplished Australian singer, Marie Narelle. Her renditions of "Killarney" and "Silver Threads Among the Gold" were widely praised as "the first perfect soprano records."

Contraltos usually fared somewhat, if not a great deal better, with the result that most of the brown wax cylinders by feminine artists were the work of ladies esteemed for their deep, chesty tones. Top notes of tenors also came out often as a screech and caused baritone recordings to be preferred. Even so, it was not so hard to make decent tenor records as it was to avoid caricaturing the soaring tones of soprano. Yet, in spite of all handicaps, reasonably satisfactory soprano records sometimes were achieved.

I imagine that few, if any, readers of HOBBIES own solo records by Estella Louise Mann, whose phonograph career began in 1896 and ended around 1900, when the brown wax cylinder, although still the dominant medium of recording and reproduction, was soon to give way to the black gold-moulded cylinder and the scratchy, but much less fragile, disc.

Perhaps a few of the cylinders in which Miss Mann sang as a member of the once noted Lyric Trio have escaped destruction, but it's doubtful that any of her unassisted efforts have survived. As veteran collectors know, the "brownwaxes," besides being easy to break, lacked volume and easily fell victims to fungus growths that destroyed the sound even if the cylinders remained intact.

So it happens that Estella Mann has become such a "forgotten woman" that her name is recognized by few record specialists today. Instead of being, by current standards, a "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artist," she is the most obscure singer about whom I have written during the ten years in which this department has appeared. But it should not be forgotten that Miss Mann, who died so recently as 1947, was a favorite with the comparatively small number of persons who bought cylinders for home use in the Spanish-American War period, and the much larger number who listened through ear-tubes in "slot machine parlors."

This illustration shows Estella Louise Mann, the first and perhaps the only woman to own a record company, as she sings into a group of horns.

Estella Mann may have been the first woman to make a career of singing for the new-fangled "talking machines," and she was almost certainly the first feminine artist to operate her own record company, which began issuing Lyric cylinders (named, I imagine, for the Trio) in 1898. I don't think I have ever heard the recorded voice of Miss Mann, but all available information agrees that she was a concert singer of high standing, an accomplished artist with a beautiful, well controlled, soprano voice. A pioneer of pioneers, she deserves to have her life story told and the history of her accomplishments preserved.

Although I have said Miss Mann probably was the first professional woman recording artist, I do not mean that she was the first woman to sing into a phonograph. It may be impossible to determine to whom that honor belongs. From the earliest days of Edison's original crude tin-foil device, both men and women were eager to hear their voices issue from experimental "phonograms." Tradition says that the first record made in England was sung by Mrs. Pierre Ronalds, a lifelong friend of Sir Arthur Sullivan. In 1877 Sir Arthur set music to Adelaide Proctor's poem, "The Lost Chord," while he watched by the bedside of his dying brother. Shortly after its publication the song became the greatest ballad, or "semi-classic" success England had known in 40 years. Sullivan gave Mrs. Ronalds the original manuscript of the song, and she sang it into a tin-foil phonograph. By her instructions, the manuscript was buried with her. I wonder what became of that record!

There is a persistent story that "the Swedish Nightingale," Jenny Lind, who died in 1887, ten years after the invention of the phonograph, also made a record, but no one seems to know whether it still exists. In the early 1890's an enterprising Edison dealer in San Francisco engaged a talented young soprano, name unrecorded, to sing cylinders of "Ave Maria," which were sold to the somewhat gullible public as replicas of the voice of Mrs. Thomas A. Edison. Many opera stars, among them Nellie Melba and Adelina Patti, made Bettini cylinders in the '90's, but these were chiefly for Bettini's private collection rather than commercial distribution. "Edison House," in London, even had a woman announcer, who officiated on August 2, 1890, when Kenneth Landfrey recorded the bugle call that he had sounded 36 years before at the Charge of the Light Brigade in the Crimean War. (The same bugle had been used at the Battle of Waterloo.)

The still charming Edith Helena, one of the finest coloratura sopranos of her day, sang in 1898 for the crude seven-inch Berliner discs, and Alice Nielsen and her "double quartet" made records that same year. A Miss Helen Jenyngne also sang "The Meba Waltz" for Berliner. In preceding articles I have referred to Grace Spencer, yet happily with us, as "The First Lady of the Phonograph," but Miss Spencer (Mrs. Willard Foster Doolittle) says her diary shows that she made her first cylinders, under the personal supervision of Mr. Edison, in 1897. She therefore was preceded by Miss Mann, but Miss Spencer does appear to be the first woman who made a Victor record. About a year ago The Billboard published a notice of the death in New York on January 19, 1951, of Mrs. Kate Ellis Hobby, 90, "who made some of the first song recordings for the late Thomas A. Edison on the original gramophone. . . . The wax cylinders used in cutting the songs were lost when a fire destroyed Edison's laboratory."

The Edison fire occurred in December, 1914. The Billboard displayed the layman's usual inaccuracy in referring to recorded music. Edison of course had nothing to do with the gramophone invented by Emile Berliner. Wax cylinders could not be played on a gramophone, and it was the Edison phonograph for which Mrs. Hobby sang. Until I read the death notice I had never heard of this lady and have no idea when and what she recorded.

Since beginning to make notes for this article I have been going through old catalogs, tracing the first appearances of "the forgotten women," and I should like to mention more of them, even though this involves a brief postponement of my account of Estella Mann's career. I feel an obligation to give the other erstwhile sopranos and contraltos at least this passing mention, because they are unlikely to become the subjects of later individual sketches.

In 1894 the United States Record Company, which made "New Jersey" cylinders in Newark, issued what the distinguished banjo virtuoso, Fred Van Eps, tells me was the first complete record catalog ever published by any company. It contains no records by women. The 1896 Columbia list also lists no feminine performers. In 1897, however, there were 14 by a contralto, Maud Foster, with the comment that "Miss Foster's records are well known. They rank among the best of female voice records, and are in great demand."

The Foster numbers ran from 2255 to 2268, and the titles were "Down in Poverty Row," "Oh, Uncle John!" "Arrah, Go On!" "Little Alabama Coon," "Girl Wanted," "The Picture in My Heart," "Sliding Down Our Cellar Door," "The Sunshine of Paradise Alley," "I Want Yer, Ma Honey," "Henrietta," "Dad's the Engineer," "The Midway in the Moon," "I Don't Want to Play in Your Yard" and "Mama Says It's Naughty." A few of these songs are still well known after 54 years. Most are ballads, but a few are humorous.

Maud Foster's eminence as the only woman singer for Columbia didn't last long. There were as yet no permanent master records, and it may be that her voice couldn't endure the strain of singing the same songs dozens of times by the "round." Her name is not in the 1899 catalog, but there is a list of 19 solos by Miss Minnie Emmett. According to the annotator, "The records of Miss Minnie S. Emmett's songs are the most successful and popular ever made of the female voice. Miss Emmett has a clear and strong soprano voice of great range and sweetness." The songs were nearly all the "old standard" type, with no comedy included, but in 1903 Miss Emmett sang a Columbia disc, No. 731, of a humorous selection, "If Money Talks It Ain't On Speaking Terms With Me." She made several Columbia records in 1905, but gradually disappeared from the lists before coming back from 1910 to 1913 as one of the singers for Albert Benzler's U. S. Everlasting cylinders.

Although Minnie Emmett is entitled to only incidental mention in this article dealing with the life of Estella Mann, I can't resist setting down here a rather pathetic story which the late Albert Campbell once told me about Miss Emmett, who may just possibly still be alive.

Al said he had gone to see an old friend in a home for retired actors. In the lobby he glanced at an elderly woman wearing dark glasses. Not recognizing her, and assuming she was blind, Campbell didn't mean to stop. But the old lady wasn't blind. She imperiously exclaimed: "Albert Campbell, how dare you come in here without speaking to me!" It was Minnie Emmett, whom he had imagined dead long ago. Her sight was bad, but not so bad that she couldn't recognize black-haired, twinkly-eyed Al Campbell. I have never heard of the soprano's death, so it may be that she yet lives in the actors' home, peering wistfully or commandingly at casual visitors through those dark glasses.

The 1899 Edison cylinder catalog contains solo records by four women, with three listed as contraltos—Anna Barthold, May Kelso and Marguerite Newton. I know nothing of Anna Barthold, except that she was represented by half a dozen sentimental songs. May Kelso also sang a few solos but is now best remembered as a duet partner of the late John Bieling. Marguerite Newton was the most prolific of Edison's 1899 lady recorders. Although it is generally believed that Ada Jones was the first woman to sing comic numbers successfully, and she probably was the first to take part in humorous spoken sketches, this ancient Edison list includes many so-called "coon songs" by Miss Newton, with such titles as "Mr. Johnson, Turn Me Loose," "Kiss Your Goosie Woose" and "The Lady Friend of Mr. Rastus Jackson." Marguerite also sang an occasional sentimental trifle, of which "She Is More to Be Pitied Than Censured" is characteristic.

Marguerite Newton died ten years ago, aged 76. John Bieling told me that she was the wife of the famous German yodler, George P. Watson, who had 18 records in this 1899 list. However, no mention is made of Watson in a Billboard obituary, which tells of Miss Newton's death on January 1, 1942, at her home in Gallitzin, Pennsylvania. The article says that "she began her career at the age of 14 on the concert stage in New York. Later she appeared in vaude and in Chautauqua shows. She was the first woman whose voice was recorded by the late Thomas A. Edison after he perfected the phonograph."

The last quoted sentence need not be taken at face value. Whenever a pioneer recording artist dies, the publications using death notices say that the performer was one of the first—or usually the first—to sing for Edison. And just when did Thomas A.

A profile view of the late Estella Mann, as she appeared at the height of her career.

Edison "perfect" the phonograph?

Also listed in the 1899 Edison catalog are several records sung in Spanish by Senorita Godoy, whose voice quality isn't indicated. The senorita and the Misses Newton and Kelso are the only women shown in a 1900 group photograph of 42 Edison artists.

Likewise in the 1899 list—and here we get back for a moment to the ranking heroine of this article—is a list of eight songs by "the original Lyric Trio"—Estella L. Mann, John Havens and Wm. F. Hooley." These cylinders, one or two of which we may hope are still extant somewhere, were No. 4804, 4800, "Attila" (presumably the "Praise Ye" trio); 4801, "The Flowers That Bloom in the Spring"; 4802, "You Remember 'Twas Six Months Ago"; 4903, "No, No, 'Tis You"; "Farewell, My Own"; 4805, "Bell Trio"; 4806, "Unchain the Dogs of War"; and 4807, "When I Was a Boy." Numbers 4802 and 4806 were from Sousa's opera, "The Bride Elect"; 4803 was from "Olivette"; 4801 from "The Mikado," and the remaining three from "Pinafore." "When I Was a Boy" surely should be "When I Was a Lad."

By May, 1901, May Kelso and Marguerite Newton still had some records in the Edison catalog, but poor Anna Barthold was missing. No new women singers had been added, and the "Original Lyric Trio" was now composed of Grace Spencer, soprano, in the place of Estella Mann; Harry Macdonough as tenor, instead of John Havens, and Hooley remaining as bass. In the fall of 1902, when the gold-moulded cylinders had been introduced (no more Edison "brown waxes" were made after July 25 of that year), all the women just mentioned were missing, and the only feminine vocalist was a contralto, Miss Louise Roberts. The January, 1903, supplement contained a rendition of "I Am the Merry Postillion," by a soprano, Miss Hallie White, while Miss Minnie De Rue Fay, contralto, sang "a coon love song," "Moon, Moon, Moon." Corinne Morgan, the first woman recording artist to gain a large following on Edison cylinders, had begun making duets with Frank C. Stanley in 1902, and Edith Chapman, soprano, singing as "Miss Chappell," appeared in 1903 as a duet partner of George M. Stricklett.

In 1904 a mysterious Miss Daisy Boulais, who took "soubrette" parts in a few "rube" sketches with Byron Harlan and Frank Stanley, and Grace Hornby, a New York choir singer, became one of Stanley's duet partners under the pseudonym of Grace Nelson. And then, in March, 1905, came Ada Jones, beside whom all the other Edison women singers of that period pale into insignificance. (Ada, incidentally, appears to have made test records some eight or ten years before this.)

We are already several years past the period at which Estella Mann retired from phonograph work. But before leaving the Edison lists, it may be interesting to note that what seems to have been the first comic monolog recorded by a woman came out in October, 1905. It was "The Village Seamstress," adapted from a character sketch by Kate Douglas Wiggin, and made on Edison cylinder No. 9103 by Miss Elene Foster—presumably no relation to Columbia's Maud. This, apparently the only record Miss Foster ever made, was described as "something entirely new in the way of a phonograph record. Miss Foster, who makes it, is a well-known elocutionist, having given readings and recitations before many of the leading clubs and at select entertainments in various parts of the country. She is an unusually clever mimic, as those who hear this record will admit. Her portrayal of the garrulous village seamstress, with the latter's characteristic repetition of the gossip of the day, will be readily recognized as lifelike by all familiar with country life."

Now, just a glance at the early Victor lists before proceeding on to a detailed account of the career of Estella Mann. The first Victor ten inch records, beginning with 3000, were issued in 1901. The list I have is incomplete, but no woman appears as an artist, although I believe that Grace Spencer sang a few selections, which were later renumbered. The Lyric Trio, in its later stage of Spencer, Macdonough and Hooley, however, is present. She also made duets with Macdonough for Victor, Zonophone and Edison.

After some of the 3000 series records were renumbered and others were discontinued, Victor started over at No. 1. In the 700 series there are a number of records by the Trinity Choir, in which unidentified women sang. Probably Miss Spencer was the soprano. A comedienne, Mina Hickman, first appears with No. 1918, issued in 1902 or 1903. Several months afterward, there were solos by Edith Helena, and Sallie Stembler sang her famous "Laughing Song" in 1904. Corinne Morgan's first contralto solos belong to 1903 or 1904, a year in which Mina Hickman did some more recording. Ada Jones was first heard on Victor discs early in 1905.

And this seems a fairly adequate covering of the field of pioneer women recording artists, except that it occurs to me I have said nothing about feminine instrumentalists. American companies made no records by women musicians for many years, considerably after they had been given recognition in England. Lillian Bryant, who was associated with the Edison Bell and Pathé companies, made piano solos in 1900. The first woman violinist to record in England, seems to have been Marie Hall, whose Gramophone and Typewriter Company discs were popular for many years, beginning about 1904. (However, I believe the American player, Maud Powell, made experimental white wax cylinders for Edison that were demonstrated at the Paris Exposition of 1889.) Also worthy of mention are the bird imitation records made by Maud Dewey, a whistler, for English companies as early as 1900.

And now, as an afterthought, before proceeding to the belated story of Estella Mann, I find myself wondering about the identity of an old-time woman recording artist mentioned in the Talking Machine World for September 15, 1910. Under the heading, "A Real Captain of Industry," the article describes the career of Eldridge R. Johnson and tells of his struggles to make a success of the Victor Talking Machine Company in its fledgling days. I shall quote a few sentences that fit appropriately into this study of the "forgotten women" of the phonograph:

"I remember," said one who worked with the inventor in the early days, "that we had no place for the singers to record in except a loft that you got to with a ladder. I would scurry around and get some poor devil to come and sing for a dollar in real money and then I'd push him up the ladder and try to get a record. Sometimes the voice would record and sometimes we would have nothing but failure."

"I sometimes think as I watch Melba and Tetrassini and Farrar singing in our laboratory, of a woman I got to sing for us once in the beginning. I can see her now, a stout, good-natured creature who had come in the rain without an umbrella, to sing for a dollar or so. She had a long feather in her hat and it hung over one ear and dripped water on the floor of the loft. What a time I had getting her up the ladder, too! She was a kindly soul, for she enjoyed singing into the machine so much that she wanted to come back every day and work with us."

Judging from her photograph, this description rather aptly fits Marguerite Newton, but I don't know that she ever sang for Victor around the turn of the century. Alas, the buxom lady with the feather in her bonnet probably always will be a "woman of mystery." And now, at last, to Estella Mann, who in those days, was managing her own record company.

Frequent reading of old record catalogs had made the name of Estella Mann familiar, but it remained the name of a soprano about whom I knew nothing until I attended a radio newsmen's convention last April in Washington. Then Rudolph E. Anderson, editor of NADA, the National Automobile Dealers Association's magazine, and author of "The Story of the American Automobile," took me for a visit to the Library of Congress. There I found a bound volume of the first talking machine trade publication, The Phonoscope, for the years 1896 through 1899. The Phonoscope was edited by one of the leading recording artists of that far-away period, Russell Hunting, originator of the famous "Casey" monologs.

Checking back through the notes I made then, I find a few mentions of records by women that had previously escaped my attention. There is actually a reference to a cylinder made by Mrs. Ulysses S. Grant and her children for "the famous Chinese statesman, Li Hung Chang." That was in November, 1896. A couple of months later, the magazine mentioned that the French chanteuse, Yvette Guilbert, while visiting in America, made records, which she sent to her mother, describing her trip.

In addition to being editor of The Phonoscope, Russell Hunting in 1897 was manager of the Universal Phonograph Company, which offered "high class original records" by Dan W. Quinn, Ailen May, Hunting himself, George Gaskin, Lottie Gilson (the vivacious "Little Magnet" of many Weber and Fields productions), the Diamond Quartet and Len Spencer. A music publisher, Joseph W. Stern, was financially interested in the Universal Company, one of whose advertisements said:

"In the last ten years the record business has been handicapped by having only about ten vocalists, three bands and a few instrumental soloists." The ad continued that the company was planning to offer records by many famous vaudeville stars, including Lottie Gilson, Bonnie Thornton (wife of Song Writer James L. Thornton), James Thornton, Sam Devere (composer of "The Whistling Coon") Johnnie Carroll, Sam Bernard, Weber and Fields, Leona Lewis, Meyer

Cohen, ("The California Baritone"), Lottie Mortimer, Annie Hart, Maude Nugent (composer of "Sweet Rosie O'Grady"), Allen May, William Jerome, Margaret Gonzalez, May Howard, Walter Talbot, the La Porte Sisters, Ed. Latell, May Lowry, the Gotham Comedy Four, Anna Willmuth Curran and John P. Curran."

However, it's doubtful that many, if any, of these records appeared. The voices of the the average vaudeville singer of the day usually didn't record well.

In March, 1897, a list of new cylinder records was printed for the benefit of traveling phonograph demonstrators and penny arcade operators, but names of the companies were not given. Yvette Guilbert was listed as singing "I Wants Yer, Ma Honey" in both French and English versions. There were even two cylinders by Sarah Bernhardt, "Passage dans Izeyle" and Victor Hugo's "Un Pende Musique", while Madame Regane recited "Passage dans 'Divorcons." (At a guess, the Bernhardt and Regane records were issued by Bettini.) Both Lottie Gilson and Len Spencer had made cylinders of "You're Not the Only Pebble on the Beach." Maud Foster was the only woman in the month's Berliner list.

And then I came upon what to me was the most interesting item I had so far seen. In February, 1898, The Phonoscope quoted an article from the New York World about the leading lady of this sketch. Written in the typical World feature style it said:

"Estella Louise Mann, a pretty young woman of this city . . . makes a living singing into the phonograph. She used to be a concert soloist but now it pays her to go up into the recording room of the phonograph and 'talk' into the machine several hours each day. She was soloist for Sousa's Band for some time and studied in the College of Cincinnati under Professor Tito Mattioli and won a gold medal and certificate."

The article said that Miss Mann sang mostly classical music and was a member of the original Lyric Trio, consisting of herself as soprano; John C. Havens, tenor, and William F. Hooley, bass. "People of the other half of the world," the article went on, "can hear just how this extraordinary girl with a voice sings into five tin horns under the skylight of the building on Broadway."

I was even more interested when I learned that Miss Mann operated the Lyric Phonograph Company at 114 West 34th Street. The company advertised that it would make special records by her to order at short notice. Presumably, the services of the Trio were also available. No mention was made of any other artists.

In March, 1898, The Phonoscope commented: "The plucky lady phonograph singer, Miss Estella Mann, who lately opened a record making plant, has certainly met with great success in her new venture, and we understand that she can scarcely keep up with the demand." On page 18, there was a Lyric advertisement, which also appeared in several other issues, showing Miss Mann singing into a row of horns. I had a copy made of the picture and hope that it is sharp enough to reproduce with the article. I didn't copy the reference, but I recall an editorial remark that "the wise boys" who had predicted that Miss Mann's business couldn't last were going to be disappointed.

The April, 1898, issue mentioned that the "plucky" soprano was the daughter of E. H. Mann, assistant manager of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company. Meanwhile, the young lady's records were meeting with new competition from Columbia. In July, readers were informed that Harry Spencer (brother of the more famous Len and a handy man around the Columbia establishment) had invented a new device for recording the female voice. Records of "Snow Baby" from "The Bride Elect" and "On the Banks of the Wabash," by Minnie Emmett, were described as "loud, clear and distinct and free from blast or screech." That same issue contained a group photo of "the galaxy of talent making Columbia records." Feminine interest was provided only by Minnie Emmett, whose career was described as "from church choir and opera to talking machine." No one then foresaw her latter-day destiny as a half-blind old lady in a home for retired actors and musicians.

Unfortunately, I didn't have time to read all the way through the volume, and there may have been some interesting references to Estella Mann that I missed. But what I did find was enough to stimulate my interest. It was nothing unusual for male recording artists to imagine they could make more money by operating their own company than by singing for U. S., Columbia, Edison or Leeds and Walcott at 75 cents to a dollar a round. In the first number of The Phonoscope, Editor Russell Hunting advertised his own series of "Casey" and "Hiram Wilkins" records, saying he'd had more than six years experience in recording and had already made over 50,000 cylinders. Then followed this indignant complaint: "Certain unprincipled individuals and organizations are duplicating my work, thereby deceiving the public and furnishing a record about one-third as loud as the original."

George J. Gaskin also had his own company for a time. The July, 1897, issue contained a letter from an exhibitor in Portland, Oregon, maintaining that Gaskin's records were too short. The Irish tenor, born in Belfast, was implored to "sing two verses and sometimes a refrain, and the phonograph men all over the country will rise up and call you blessed." Editor Hunting suggested that Gaskin should not confine himself to using light colored blanks, but might get better results from dark ones.

Roger Harding, who died in 1901, was a true pioneer in the juvenile field. He was reported to be having great success in making records, such as "Who Killed Cock Robin?" and "Little Red Riding Hood," especially for children. And in 1896, J. W. Myers was operating his own Globe Phonograph Record Company, making his own cylinders, which he sold for $1 each. He laid claim to having the largest repertoire of any American singer.

But before Estella Mann there seemingly had been no woman with sufficient confidence in her vocal abilities to set up her own company. Hurriedly turning the pages of The Phonoscope and wishing I hadn't arranged to leave Washington by an early afternoon train, I made up my mind that I must write a HOBBIES article about the soprano who some long gone New York World feature writer had called "this extraordinary girl."

Determination to do the article was one thing, but how to get the fill-in material was another. I didn't even know whether Estella Louise Mann were dead or alive, but since more than 50 years had elapsed since she started her Lyric Record Company, the odds were in favor of her having passed on. Assuming she was only 25 in 1898, she would be 78 if she were still alive. And I knew nothing of any surviving relations.

However, The Phonoscope articles gave a couple of clues. They mentioned that her father had been an official of the L. and N. Railroad, and that she had been graduated from the Cincinnati College of Music.

So, with this slender lead, I wrote to the Superintendent of the L. and N., at Louisville, Kentucky, and to the College. Both letters brought helpful replies.

Thomas E. Owen, editor of the Louisville and Nashville Employees' Magazine, wrote:

"This is in answer to your letters . . . asking to be put in touch with Miss Estella Louise Mann or some of her relatives."

"Miss Mann and her father are dead, but her brother, W. J. Mann, a retired city ticket agent of this railroad, lives at 814 S. E. Riverside Avenue, Evansville, Indiana. He says if you will write him at that address he will be glad to furnish any information possible."

Naturally, although I was sorry to learn of the hardly unexpected death of Miss Mann, I was glad to know she had a brother living, and I wrote immediately to Mr. W. J. Mann. Then came an interesting letter from Miss Marjora W. Shank, registrar and dean of women at the College of Music of Cincinnati:

"We are very glad to be of whatever help we can in helping you gather information regarding one of our former students, Estella L. Mann. Your 'labor of love' sounds most fascinating."

"Miss Mann took a Certificate in Voice from the College of Music in 1893. In 1894 she was granted a Diploma as a Vocal Artist. Although our terminology has changed somewhat over the years, a student awarded a Diploma was sure to have been an outstanding musician. Today this is the highest performance award which we grant."

"Our records reveal no more. Unfortunately, those who may know of Miss Mann or who may have been her teachers have now passed from our scene. Mr. Mattioli died a year or two ago, and others of that contemporary scene are no longer here at the College. If we can find further information relating to Miss Mann we shall be glad to pass it on to you."

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 33)

RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27)

Meanwhile, I had heard from Mr. W. J. Mann, in the first of a series of letters he has written to me, answering as best he can the many questions I have asked him about his accomplished, history-making sister.

Mr. Mann wrote:

"... My sister, Estella L. Mann . . . was born in Nashville, Tennessee, November 1, 1871. Her father was E. H. Mann; mother, Marie S. Mann. No sisters. In addition to myself, two brothers, A. E. Mann and A. H. Mann. 'She never married. She died at my home in August, 1947.

"She studied voice at the College of Music, Cincinnati, Ohio, under tutorship of Lino Mattiola. She sang with several recording studios in New York and made many records successfully alone as well as with the Lyric Trio.

"I was associated with her in New York and the Lyric Recording Company, but owing to financial difficulty it was necessary to dissolve. She returned to the theatrical stage and sang with the Mantelli Grand Opera Company, also in comic opera and vaudeville and was soloist with John Philip Sousa's Band.

"About a year ago I made a transcription over the local radio station WJPS of the American Broadcasting Company, being interviewed by Mr. Vernon Paule relative to her records.

"I am forwarding the only photo I have of her and after it has served your purpose, please return. I am only too glad to be of help and will appreciate it if you will favor me with a copy of the article you write. If you can locate one of her records, the station here would like to have it. If I can be of further service just let me know."

Mr. Mann's letter calls for a few notes. Nashville was also the birthplace, in 1876, of Alice Nielsen, the concert and opera star who became a popular Victor and Columbia singer after having, as I have already mentioned, sung for Berliner in 1898.

Notice that Mr. Mann's spelling of the name of his sister's teacher differs somewhat from that in the New York World story. I wonder if the Mantelli Opera Company was headed by Eugenia Mantelli, whose old Zonophone records are so much prized by collectors.

Mr. Mann's kindness and thoughtfulness in letting me borrow his only photo of his sister was typical of the generosity and cooperation I usually meet with in seeking information for these articles. I expressed my gratitude, and he replied:

"I have a lot of faith in humanity, so had no hesitation in forwarding you the photo of my sister.

"My father, a native of New York, was a corporal in the Union Army and an orderly to General U. S. Grant. After the war, having had railroad experience, he was sent to Nashville by the government to straighten out the freight car situation. He met and married my mother there, where my brothers and sister were born. He accepted a position with the L&N Railroad after his release from the government as trainmaster, in Louisville, Kentucky.

"They moved to Louisville, where I was born in 1881. He was appointed Assistant Superintendent at Evansville, date unknown, and lived there until his death in 1912.

"My sister was a niece of W. A. Sheetz, manager of the Vendome Theatre for many years. It was at the Vendome Theatre that Al Jolson made his debut as a minstrel. My sister's eyes were dark brown. She had black hair and was five feet eight inches tall. She died August 24, 1947. She began making records in 1896 through 1899. I do not recall any hobby she had outside of her music. She never made any disc records. John Havens was an opera tenor but I do not know if he is living or not."

I had some excellent copies made of the photo of Estella Mann before I returned it to her brother, and have submitted one for reproduction with this article. To me the outstanding impression made by this picture, taken at the height of the soprano's career, is her appearance of quiet dignity and determination. That rounded chin and the straightforward gaze seem to indicate a nature that would not easily give in to obstacles. I can imagine that when the tall, raven-haired brunette stood on the concert stage, or sang in opera or with Sousa's Band, she was an impressive figure who looked every inch a prima donna. But circumstances were against her in founding her own record manufacturing company just when she did. The moulded process of making permanent masters would inevitably have doomed her methods to defeat, even if the disc record had not eventually removed the cylinder from competition.

Another kind act of Mr. Mann's was his lending me the recording of his interview on Vernon Paule's program, "A Penny for Your Thoughts." The interview took place on October 28, 1949, and, judging by the traffic noises, must have been of the "Man On the Street type," except when an Edison cylinder of a band record was played from the WJPS studio. The spoken parts sound as if they were recorded out-of-doors.

The transcription tells little that is new about Estella Mann, but it reveals that the brother was a friend of Thomas A. Edison, and that he became acquainted with the inventor when he was in the phonograph business and used to make business trips to the Edison laboratory. I suppose that these trips took place when he was associated with his sister in the Lyric Company, and that he went to West Orange to buy blank cylinders. Mr. Mann told of how Edison presented him with a phonograph, which he kept for many years but eventually presented to the Evansville Museum. It was this instrument, borrowed from the museum, that was played on the program.

Mr. Mann described Edison as "a very fine man—easy to talk to." He explained that his interest in the phonograph business started because of his sister making records, and said that since the female voice has many more vibrations than the male, it was much harder to record when the talking machine was new. The companies, he went on, had a great deal of trouble finding women whose voices would record, but his sister tackled the problem, "worked it out in some way or other," and made a great many records. For the benefit of listeners who didn't know what an old-time cylinder phonograph looked like, he described it as "a kind of little box, with the machine in the bottom, and a belt running up to the mandrel."

Another letter from Mr. Mann gave the names of the male members of his family in more detail than previously.

His own name is William J. Mann; his father's, Eugene H.; his eldest brother, a retired railroad man, is Albert E., and his second brother, now dead, was Arthur H.

I had asked if any of Estella Mann's cylinders were still in the family's keeping, but he replied:

"Sorry, all her records were destroyed. Being made of wax, they were warped, and melted — our hot summers were responsible."

Mr. Mann added:

"My acquaintance with Mr. Edison was through a Mr. Torres, a friend of his. On several occasions I accompanied him to the Edison plant. He was a very fine gentleman.

"My sister never made records direct through Edison, but the blanks were Edison made."

The latter statement, however, obviously is in error, since I have shown that Lyric Trio records, in which Miss Mann sang, are listed in the 1899 Edison catalog. I think it's also worth mentioning that six cylinders by "the Original Lyric Trio" appear in the catalog for that year of the Talking Machine Company of Chicago. Numbered from 6000

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 35)

Have just purchased a large collection of records of 1920 period that includes Paul Whiteman, Duke Ellington, Benny Goodman, Harry James & others; some with Bing Crosby vocals. Also Harry Lauder, Nora Bays, Moran & Mack, Van & Schenk.

AL McREA, SR.
Box 182, Westville, New Jersey

"Rolls now available for SEEBURG and other 65-note automatic pianos. Old and new standard and popular songs. Rolls also for MILLS VIOLIN VIRTUOSO and other odd types.

WRITE FOR LISTS, ETC.

J. LAWRENCE COOK
824 E. 165th St., New York, N. Y. 11230

MONTHLY RECORDS SALES

OF

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive free of charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

Single rarities and entire collections purchased for cash

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Room 1135, DuPont Bldg., Miami 32, Florida

Established 1935

The Old Music Store

MUSICAL ANTIQUES

Melodeons, Pipe and Reed Organs, Coin Operated Pianos, Calliopes, and other smaller items.

Welte-Mignon Automatic Player
Concert Grand with 300 classical rolls.

— Expert Repairing —

WRITE

ESTHER SKERRITT SANDERS
Deansboro, New York

RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 33)

through 6005, they are "Attila," "Flowers That Bloom in the Spring," "You Remember 'Twas Six Months Ago," "No, No, 'Tis You," "Farewell, My Own" and "The Bell Trio"—in other words, the same selections that the Edison catalog contained.

Its no secret that the Chicago firm, which later became Babson Brothers, the famous Edision distributors "dubbed" its record supply from Edison and Columbia originals in addition to making its own cylinders by "the King of Coon Shouters," Silas Leachman. Its Lyric Trio records consequently were only copies of those issued by Edison. The catalog mentions Estella L. Mann as one of the company's artists, but the only solo records listed by women are taken from Marguerite Newton's Edisons and Minnie Emmett's Columbias.

Still later I learned from Mr. Mann that his sister "was in her early thirties when she retired. My memory is a bit foggy, however, as to the exact year. She did no church or solo work thereafter. My mother was quite a care in her old age, and she absorbed most of my sister's time. My mother died in her 87th year."

So there ends the story of the career of Estella Mann. Gifted with a beautiful voice and the courage and determination to organize her own phonograph company and to undertake the grueling task of making records to order by the round, she was self-sacrificing enough to give up her career as a young woman and spend most of her many remaining years, ministering to the needs of her mother. And then she herself died at the advanced age of 75.

It is impossible for me to repress a feeling of sadness at the way most of the life story of Estella Mann must remain obscure. I don't like to think of the destruction of all the wax cylinders that once contained the impress of her voice but now no longer exist. So accomplished and courageous an artist deserved a better fate.

But I have one surprise for her brother, whose courteous help I have so much appreciated. While I was assembling the notes for this article, I found in my card index a list of seven-inch Zonophone records which someone offered to sell me at some time in the past. I wish I had kept the owner's name, but I didn't. However, one of the records is No. 9461, "The Prince of Peace"—and it is sung by Miss Estella Mann. This shows that her brother, who was only about twenty when she gave up making records, was mistaken in his belief that she never sang for discs. Since she sang at least this one Zonophone, of the "etched" type issued around 1900, she may have made more. I hope she did, and that they will be brought to light.

Scratchy and imperfect as were those early discs, it is well worth knowing that the recorded voice of Estella Mann still exists. I only wish I had bought the record when it was

REFERENCE DIRECTORY

$10 a year for three lines

ADVERTISING CARDS

Mildred K. Moore, 35 Niblock Court, Albany 5, N. Y., has advertising cards of the '80's. Sells lists to collectors. 25c ea. s26

APPRAISALS

Send to Clark L. Bennett & Associates, 309 S. Cole, Lima, Ohio, for value, age and potter of your antique porcelain. $1.50 per item. Thousands of dollars lost, not knowing values. ja35

BASEBALL — FOOTBALL ITEMS

Wirt Gammon, 312 Mount Vernon Circle, Chattanooga 5, Tenn. Pre-1920 baseball wants; caramel, cigarette cards, ball park post cards. Baseball or football, mugs, figures, etc. n25

BOTTLES

Gardner, Chas. B., Box 27, New London, Conn. Buy flasks, documents, advertisements and pictures from Early American Glass Works. au25

CIGARETTE CARDS

Charles Bray, East Bangor, Penna. Buys cigarette, tobacco, carmel cards. I will pay best cash prices for above. au25

HOOKED RUG PATTERNS

Mrs. Royal F. Manson, Hudson, Mass. Hooked Rug patterns, books, frames, wool swatches & cutting machines. Write for price list. ja35

NUMISMATICS

Max B. Mehl, 421 Mehl Bldg., Fort Worth, Tex. Largest coin firm in U. S. Est. 49 yrs. Everything in coins, etc. Send for free 60 pp. Ill. Coin Cat. You'll like it. ja35

RAILROADS

O. Davies, 1214 LaSalle St., Chicago 10, Ill., buys R. R. time tables, histories, pamphlets, locomotive catalogs, etc. n25

RUBBER STAMPS

STAMPICO, Detroit 4, Mich. 35c per line. Signatures, $1 up. Pictorial Stamp Sets, $2.98. "Good Work" stampers, 50c. Pads 60c. Cat. Free. ja35

SOUVENIR SPOONS

Schwarz, 1806 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Penna. Sterling souvenir spoons, $1.50 each. Assortments sent on approval. mh35

SHELLS

Nick Iamarino, 3564 N. W. 46th St. Miami, Fla. Florida sea shells, 250, good mixture, $1. ap1021

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By Masorick &amp; Heckert

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

$5.00 Postpaid—Insured

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

offered to me, along with others by such completely unknown "Forgotten Men" as Lempiere Pringle, Dick Thomas and A. R. Stewart, and such well remembered favorites as S. H. Dudley, Collins and Harlan and J. W. Myers!

Once more I thank Mr. W. J. Mann for his generous and sympathetic help and hope this article will serve to bring the memory of his talented sister a bit farther out of the shadows. From now on, she should not be, as she might otherwise so easily have become, one of the completely "Forgotten Women" of the 1890's.

NEXT MONTH

THE FIRST TEN YEARS OF

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

A NEW ALBUM OF BANJO RECORDS BY FRED VAN EPS

Millions of record buyers have acclaimed Fred Van Eps as one of the greatest banjoists who have ever lived. Now there's a pleasant surprise for admirers of this noted player. Mr. Van Eps, whose life story will be told later in "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists", and whose address is R. D. 2, Plainfield, New Jersey, has made a new album of six recordings, which he is issuing under the "Five String Banjo" label. Accompaniments are by his son, Robert, a brilliant pianist.

Included in the six selections are "Maple Leaf Rag", Scott Joplin's masterpiece which Rudi Blesh and Harriet Janis declare in "They All Played Ragtime" to be the greatest ragtime composition; James Scott's "Ragtime Oriole", which they rate almost as highly; Percy Wenrich's "Smiler Rag"; Felix Arndt's "Nola"; "Dell Oro" and Moszkowski's "Bolero." They are splendidly recorded and played in the masterly style that has always been typical of Van Eps.

These records probably make Mr. Van Eps the champion long-distance recording artist. He began in 1897 when he was in his teens, and he's still at it 55 years later. If this album meets with the success it deserves he undoubtedly will issue others. Meanwhile, he has a large business, manufacturing radio equipment at Plainfield.

—J. W.

When I hear music I fear no danger,
I am invulnerable, I see no foe. I am related to the earliest times, and to the latest.

—THOREAU

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

THE FIRST TEN YEARS

By JIM WALSH

This department has now appeared in HOBBIES for ten years. The first instalment was published in January, 1942, under a short-lived title, "The Coney Island Crowd." I hope that it is beginning a second decade of increased usefulness.

Up to this time, a pioneer artist has been defined, for my purposes, as one who was recording before double-faced discs became popular in 1909. (Exceptions were made, however, in favor of Elizabeth Spencer and Charles Harrison.) But I am aware that many of the most outstanding recording stars came along after 1909, and it seems only fair that their life stories also should be told. With this in mind, I have considered changing my title to "Favorite Popular Recording Artists" or something similar, but have decided that since the heading I am now using is so well established, it may as well stand. Some veteran phonograph men have contended that no artist really is a "pioneer" who was not recording before 1900, but I intend from now on to stretch the term to include anyone who was making records before electric recording was introduced in 1925. This will let me write about such deservedly popular stars as Billy Jones, Ernest Hare, Irving Kaufman, Elsie Baker, Vernon Dalhart, Frank Crumit and many others whom a rigid interpretation of "pioneer" would compel me to pass by.

Needless to say, there remain many earlier artists, such as Albert Benzler, Charles D'Almaine and Frank P. Banta, to whom I shall pay tribute as enough information becomes available. I shall merely reserve the right to chronicle also the achievements of those whose careers began later.

Meanwhile, this seems an appropriate time to review the contents of the first ten years of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists. My knowledge of the early recording days has increased since I began writing for HOBBIES, and I now know that in past issues I have unintentionally made mistakes. Besides my own errors, the printers on occasion have been guilty of confusing and sometimes misleading typographical errors.

With this in mind, I have recently gone through all my preceding articles, marking any misstatements or other errors. This I have found a valuable lesson in humility. The process on the whole, however, has been enjoyable, for I have read not only my own writings, but those of my senior partner, Stephen Fasset, and have found much valuable information in Steve's Historical Records that had escaped my memory.

So, indeed, had some of the details of my own articles.

And now, as a prelude to going into the next ten years with clean hands and a clear conscience, I propose to devote my efforts this month to correcting and expiating past "sins." This, I hope, will be a valuable service to the readers who have kept complete files of my articles.

EDWARD M. FAVOR (March, 1942).—A printer's error changed the date of an Edison catalog from April, 1914, to 1941. The year Billy Murray saw Favor recording in San Francisco should be 1897, instead of 1896. The first song, "The Lass From the County Mayo," which Murray and Matt Keefe sang into a phonograph during that period, was not copyrighted until the former year. The name of the Edison distributors in San Francisco should be Bacigalupi Brothers not Bocigalupi. The cylinder of "Will You Please Pass the Salt?" and "Now We Can Both Laugh Together" was a Federal, not a U. S. Everlasting.

Favor died January 10, 1936. In some of his early vaudeville and recording work he used the name of Le Fèvre. He and his wife, known professionally as Edith Sinclair, made a four-minute Edison Amberol cylinder in 1909, with the assistance of Steve Porter, and under the name of the Empire Vaudeville Company. It was a comic sketch, "Casting Bread upon the Waters," which may have been adapted from one of their variety acts. In his later years, Favor won distinction as a legitimate actor. Eugene Burr, who formerly reviewed theatrical productions for the Billboard, showed no mercy to slipshod performers, but here is what he said of Favor's impersonation of "James Caesar," a grocer, in the production of St. John Ervine's play, "John Ferguson," at the Belmont theater in New York, in July, 1933:

"Edward Favor, in the meaty part of Caesar, turned in a performance which was, literally, without a flaw. Every effect to be achieved he got without a single false note or any concession to the obvious. It was a grand job." And Favor was then 78!

BILLY MURRAY (April, 1942).—Again Bacigalupi is misspelled, and Al G. Field's name appears as Fields. Thanks to the painstaking help of my dear friend, Ed Forman, the RCA Victor record sales manager, I have definitely established that No. 2048, "Absinthe Frappe," was not Billy Murray's first Victor record, despite its low number. Ed says that the record was made August 8, 1905, about two years after Murray began his Victor career, "and according to the file card, it was a special for V. D. & E." whatever that was. Apparently it was never released for general sale. The master is no longer available. The serial number is B2707. My interpretation of the entry quoted by Mr. Forman is that the record was made for Victor Dealers and Exhibitors to play for special demonstration purposes but not to be sold. It looks as if some of the numbers in the 2000 series had been skipped when they would normally have been reached in 1903, or had been reserved for special discs. Another example of this type of record, with numbers 2025 and 2036, will be found under Len Spencer's name. The first Victors by Murray were listed in November, 1903, and the one with the lowest number was 2452, "I Never Could Love Like That." The comedian's initial Edison cylinders, issued in August, 1903, were 8452, "I'm Thinkin' of You All the While" and 8453, "Alec Busby, Don't Go Away." Murray's earliest Columbia disc that I have traced is 1648, "Under a Panama," issued in January, 1904, and his earliest Columbia cylinder, 32356, "It Takes the Irish to Beat the Dutch," came out that same month. June—The statement that "I Wonder Where My Baby is Tonight" was the only Murray-Burr duet is incorrect. In 1910 they recorded "They're All Sweeties" (No. 216068) for the Canadian His Master's Voice Company.

JOHN BIELING (August, 1942).—Mr. Bieling had blue eyes, not brown, as I wrongly said. The last Victor catalog in which his photo was published as a member of the American Quartet was dated November, 1917. However, there is now little doubt that his career as a recording artist ended early in 1914 when the Hayden Quartet disbanded. The last Hayden records, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" and "Cross the Great Divide," were issued in April, 1914. This makes it probable that the final American Quartet records in which Bieling sang were two issued a month later, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" (17534) and "Do You Take This Woman for Your Lawful Wife?" (17554). There were no more American Quartet records until November, when "It's a Long Long Way to Tipperary" appeared, presumably with John Young as first tenor. However, records by the Heidelberg Quintet which was the quartet with the addition of Will Oakland were issued in August, September and November, probably also with Young. But, to make it complicated, an American Quartet record, "Tennessee, I Hear You Calling Me," was published in January, 1915, and Bieling's photo is reproduced with those of the other quartet members, Murray, Porter and Hooley! This was the last time Bieling's likeness was shown in a monthly Victor supplement. However, Young sang top tenor in the Edison record of the same song, so he almost certainly did likewise for Victor.

ALBERT CAMPBELL (September, 1942).—Berliner discs were seven inches in diameter, not five and one-half. Although Campbell said he sang only under his own name and the assumed one of Frank Howard, I believe he made a Berliner record (No. 158) of "Sweet Marie," sung on December 12, 1894, and pressed on semi-flexible vulcanite. Name of the tenor soloist is given as A. C. Weaver. October—The Peerless Quartet was formed in 1907, instead of 1905, when Henry Burr was 25. The first Campbell-Burr duet, "While the Old Mill Wheel is Turning," was issued by Columbia in October, 1906. There seem to have been no others until after Frank Stanley's death in December, 1910. Burr's record company probably restricted itself to the seven-inch Par-O-

Ket discs and had nothing to do with the ten-inch Phonotype or Phono-Cut brands. Campbell made solos for Zonophone under his own name in 1910 and 1911.

BYRON G. HARLAN (February, 1943).—Harlan was born August 29, 1861. An old Edison catalog gives his birthplace as Lynn, Kansas, but Mrs. Harlan says it was Paris, Kansas. Oddly, the Encyclopaedia Britannica doesn't list a Kansas town by either name. He was the son of George Winchester Harlan, and his grandfather was George Washington Harlan. The tenor was christened George Byron Harlan (possibly in honor of Lord Byron, the English poet), but reversed his given names for theatrical use. His partnership with Arthur Collins began in 1902. March—His daughter is Mrs. Frank Olson, not Lucas.

HENRY BURR (April, 1943).—Burr's birth date should be January 15, 1882, instead of 1885. His first records were made for Columbia in 1902. May—Elise Stevenson's "married name" is Mrs. Rusling Wood. June—Burr's middle name probably was Haley. I have an electrically recorded Cameo dance record in which he sings the vocal refrain under the name of Harry Haley. One of his electrical recordings not mentioned in the article is a 1928 Okeh of "Somewhere a Voice is Calling" and "Good Night, Little Girl, Good Night." On page 129, the name of Sammy Herman is misspelled as Hermany.

STEVE PORTER (July, 1943).—Began making records in 1895, not 1897. October—The statement that the Harmonizers "free-lanced exclusively" should read "extensively." Porter died January 13, 1936. Death notices gave his age as 73, so he probably was born in 1862. During his stage career he appeared with Lillian Russell.

HARRY MACDONOUGH (November, 1943).—His full name was John Scantlebury Macdonald. The two Christian names honored a friend of his mother's. According to John Bieling, Macdonough was born in Windsor, Ontario. Both Macdonald and Macdonough should be spelled with small d's. "Crestfallen" got into print as "chest-fallen" and "affected" as "affectad." December—When this article was written, I thought that the "Miss Spencer" who sang with Macdonough around 1900 was Elizabeth Spencer. I have since learned that it was Grace Spencer.

WILLIAM F. HOOLEY (March, 1944).—The name of the Lyric Trio soprano should be Estella—not Estelle—Louise Mann. Again, Elizabeth Spencer is confused with Grace Spencer. John Bieling told me that Hooley was born in the Whitechapel section of London, where his father, an Irish political agitator, was in hiding. The Hooleys came to America, and Bill is said to have worked as a carpenter in Lowell, Mass., before he began making records. When the Hayden Quartet went to England in 1902, his Irish sentiments were so strong he refused to join in singing "God Save the King." The singer has a son, William F. Hooley, Jr., who is an official of the Selsby Shoe Company in Portsmouth, Ohio.

BOB ROBERTS (April, 1944).—Besides being a phonograph and vaudeville singer, Roberts also took part in automobile and six-day bicycle races.

PERFORMERS WHO "DOUBLED UP" (May, 1944).—Some additions and corrections: Vernon Dalhart called himself Tom Watson on Grey Gull records. Annette Hanshaw recorded also as Patsy Young and Dot Dare. Another name for Billy Jones was William Johnson. He also sang for Black Swan, a Negro Company, as "Howard Lewis." (A typographical error in the Jones paragraph was corrected later.) Add to list of Irving Kaufman pseudonyms: Noel Taylor, Frank Harris, Frank Christy, Confidential Charlie and Buzzin' Bob. Frankie Marvin also sang as George White. Corinne Morgan was not Grace Nelson. The latter's real name was Grace Hornby. M. J. O'Connell was not Billy Watkins, a well known vaudeville tenor who died a few years ago. Gladys Rice was called Victoria Marsden on Phantasia records. Herbert Stuart was

Albert Wiederhold. Walter Van Brunt made electric Romeo records as John O'Brien. John Barnes Wells was not De Los Becker. Later research has shown Becker to have been a New York concert singer. Arthur Fields, who is Jewish, made Irish patriotic songs for Emerson as "Padric O'Brien."

BILLY GOLDEN (June, 1944).—Golden made several Berliner records with George Graham.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES (August, 1944).—Harvey Hindermeyer began making records in 1907. He is not of Pennsylvania Dutch descent. His father was German and his mother of Bohemian ancestry. Eddie Morton was a policeman in Philadelphia, not New York.

CUT LINES FOR GROUP PICTURE OF PIONEER EDISON ARTISTS (September, 1944).—The name of No. 9 should be W. C. Deusing, not Densing.

GEORGE J. GASKIN (October, 1944).—Gaskin was born in Belfast, Northern Ireland. The group photo mentioned in this article was taken in 1898, instead of 1902, and was made when a group of exclusive Columbia artists visited the factory at Bridgeport for a demonstration of the new large-size "Columbia Grand" cylinder, five inches in diameter.

RUSSELL HUNTING, SR. (December, 1944).—Edison two-minute cylinders were discontinued when Blue Amberols were introduced in October, 1912—not 1914. January, 1945—The HOBBIES linotype appears to have been puzzled by English money values. Twice, when I referred to records selling for one-and-six (one shilling and sixpence) the amount was changed to "one-sixth." February—When I used the slant, the conventional English mark to indicate a shilling, the bewildered printer simply inserted six question marks to denote his lack of understanding. Where I said the price of Edison cylinders was reduced from one-and-six to one, it appeared as "from one-sixth to one?????"—probably also to the befuddlement of the average reader.

DAN W. QUINN (April, 1945).—"Bristol" at the top of column two, page 16, should be Boston.

"ARE THESE THE SUPREME FIFTEEN?" (June, 1945).—"Ada Jones" of course should be Ada Jones. The name of Freddie Maisch, veteran Victor recording engineer who retired in 1950, was printed as "Mesch."

August, 1945.—"Miss Chappel" was a New York church singer, Edith Chapman. September—As has already been pointed out, John Bieling left the American Quartet in 1914, not 1918.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS (December, 1945).—Eddie Morton's name is misspelled as Norton.

EDWARD MEEKER (February, 1946).—Col. 2, "in favor of just one recording career," should read "recording company." William A. Hayes' name is misspelled as Hays.

ADA JONES (June, 1946).—Once more, Grace Spencer is referred to as Elizabeth. I have written to the Registrar of Vital Statistics at Manchester, England, in the hope of learning when Ada Jones was born and the names of her parents. August—Although Miss Jones' recording career is considered to have started when she became Len Spencer's associate in 1904, L. B. Odell, of Brooklyn, has two ancient faintly recorded brown wax cylinders announced as by her, which were made years before she became world-famous. The titles are "Sweet Marie" and "The Volunteer Organist." Both songs were copyrighted in 1894, so they may have been made that year, two years before Edison records were issued regularly. These may have been sung by Miss Jones on the occasion she speaks of, when her stepmother took her to the North American Phonograph Company, for a try-out. The late John L. Norton told me he had learned that Ada Jones made tests for Columbia in 1897, and that a man who saw her then described her as appearing to be about 19. September—Len and Harry Spencer were not twins. Len was a few years older. October, second column, fifth paragraph—The sentence beginning,

"The first duet by Jones and Murray" should be "The first Victor duet—." December—column two, the statement should be: "From 1917, he (Billy Murray) sang much oftener with Gladys Rice than with his veteran partner." Among the last Victor records by Jones and Murray was a re-make of "The Widow Dooley," which she had originally done with Len Spencer.

LEN SPENCER (March, 1947).—Again, the Spencer boys were not twins. Readers should not overlook the Albert Campbell death notice, page 101. May, 1947.—Harry Spencer made many more spoken records than he is given credit for here. The double-faced Victor demonstration record, said to have 1903 labels, shows, on closer inspection, the date November 3, 1905, scratched into it. One side is numbered 2035, the other, 2036. (See discussion of "Absinthe Frappe" by Billy Murray).

SAD NEWS ABOUT S. H. DUDLEY (September, 1947).—The last two paragraphs of this article are confusing because they refer to a poster which was to have been reproduced but was omitted for lack of space. The poster contained photos of the Tavery Grand English Opera Company, with which Dudley appeared in 1895.

EUGENE C. ROSE (October, 1947).—The title of "I'll Be Waiting in the Gloaming, Sweet Genevieve," is divided, by a printer's error, as if it were two songs.

JOHN BIELING GIVES ANOTHER PARTY (January, 1948).—Name of the Suburban Hotel should be capitalized. Charles Edison is referred to as the former governor of Jersey, instead of New Jersey. In cut lines, Jere Mahoney's first name is wrongly spelled Jerry.

GILBERT GIRARD (February, 1948).—Russell Hunting went to England in 1898, not 1899.

JOE BELMONT (March, 1948).—"The three original Floradora girls," should be "three of the original—."

GRACE SPENCER (April, 1948).—End of the fifth paragraph is garbled. It should read: "Meanwhile, she wrote to her friend, Mrs. Lewis M. Wilson, of New York City, that I had records by Grace Spencer (Mrs. Wilson's mother). Mrs. Wilson then sent me a note, asking what I would charge for them." May—By a misprint, the 3,000 Victor Monarch series is called the 6,000. Last paragraph: This should be, "The former Miss Spencer's tones" instead of "the former's Spencer's tones."

FREDERICK C. FREMANTEL (July, 1948).—The 16000 Victor double-faced list is referred to, by a printer's error, as 160000.

REINALD WERRENATH (August, 1948).—In mentioning Sir Edward Elgar's opera, "Caractacus," Elgar's last name is omitted. Calvin G. Child's last name is wrongly spelled Childs.

YESS L. OSSMAN (September, 1948).—Fred Van Eps began making banjo records in 1897, rather than after 1900. Through typographical errors, Princess Henry of Battenburg is mentioned as President Henry, and the Duchess of Manchester is called the Duchess of Lanchester. October—The one billionth pressing of a Victor record got into print as a "passing." November—The mystery of the Ossman-Dudley Trio has now been solved, and a full account of its activities will appear in a 1952 HOBBIES. Roy Butin was not one of the members.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS (December, 1948).—Mrs. J. W. Hulihan's name is misspelled as Houlihan. Bill Hayes' last name is wrongly printed as Hays. It should have been said that Russell Hunting had his son Harry's assistance, not "assistant." By a slip of my own, Mrs. Katherine Tully is called Mrs. Grace Tully. A sentence in the last paragraph should read: "I was already tired before I left Virginia, and by the time I returned home was so much more so that I set a new record for myself by sleeping 25½ hours at a stretch." On page 32, "Death of Three Recording Artists," the final sentence about Vernon Dalhart should be: "Between 1925 and 1931, under many different names, he made thousands of hill-billy records."

VESS L. OSSMAN (January, 1949).—A sentence in the fifth paragraph should be: "... The second banjoist obviously is not Vess, Jr." John H. Meyer's name is spelled Myers, and John Bieling gets in as Biehling. February—In the first sentence, Mrs. Vess Ossman, Jr., is called "Mr." A death notice of the great flute and piccolo player, Marshall P. Lufsky, is on page 70.

FRANK C. STANLEY (March, 1949).—The name, Grinsted, is repeatedly spelled as Grinstead in this installment and occasionally in others. The "a" should be omitted.

DEATHS OF RECORDING ARTISTS (May, 1949). — Brahams should be Brahms. William Brown is called Williams.

FRANK C. STANLEY (June, 1949).—"The late Campbell" should be "the late Albert Campbell." "The three original Floradora girls" should be "three of the original Floradora girls." In the last sentence, "career" should be substituted for "carefully." July—Mrs. Grinsted's son, Alan, now lives in Pensacola, Florida. Mrs. Grinsted broke her hip in a fall more than two years ago and has since been confined to her bed. The fall occurred in her apartment at Wicksford, R. I., but she was removed to Pensacola, where she is under treatment in the Waite Convalescent Home.

DEATHS OF THREE RECORDING ARTISTS—John Meyer's name is wrongly spelled throughout as Myers. In the August issue, under the heading of "Death of Noted Male Quartet Basso," Meyer's name is omitted by mistake in the first sentence, which should read: "Recently I wrote of the death of John Meyer, basso, of the world-famous Peerless Quartet." September—The fifth paragraph of the Stanley article is garbled. This sentence should be omitted: "Mrs. Grinsted's daughter, Mrs. Repelow, says: 'Mr. Lenox, the tenor, died after moving to California.'" This reminds me that the noted baritone, Vernon Archibald, told Fred Rabenstein, of the Edison Laboratory, a year or so ago, that George Seymour Lenox is still living.

FRANK C. STANLEY (October, 1949).—The concert given as a memorial to Stanley took place in the New Amsterdam Opera House, New York. Ernest R. Ball's first name is misspelled as Ernst.

WILL OAKLAND (November, 1949).—Oakland recorded his "Old-Time Song Medley" for U. S. Everlasting as well as Victor. "At Night at the Club" was a 12-inch double-faced Victor. "Just for Tonight" had a revived, not revised, vogue.

NOTES FROM EARLY VICTOR CATALOGUES (December, 1949). — Stephen Gilman, of Newport, R. I., tells me that Claude Spary was the trombone soloist of the American Band of Providence. The Old Homestead Double Quartet records came out in March, 1905, not 1906. January—The claim that Victor was the first company to make records by two tenors is incorrect. George Gasikin and John Bieling sang together, as "Gasikin and Livingston," for Columbia in the 1890's.

BILLY WHITLOCK (February, 1950).—"Madame Paule" should be "Paula."

RICHARD JOSÉ (April, 1950).—"Mr. Kith" should be Keith.

DEATH NOTICE (page 32, May, 1950).—Franklyn Baur's first name is wrongly spelled as Franklin. James Melton is referred to, by a printer's error, as James Walton.

SIR HARRY LAUDER (August, 1950).—Stanley Johnston, of Lansing, Michigan, has called my attention to Lauder's statement in his book, "Roamin' in the Hoamin'." That when he first began to make records he received only five pounds for singing six songs—less than five dollars a record!! Lauder said that, as a former miner, this looked like big money because he couldn't earn that much in a fortnight digging coal. The Gramophone Company, Lauder related, obtained his exclusive disc services at a ridiculously low figure, but "made it right" when the time came for a new contract.

BERT WILLIAMS (September, 1950).—"Assay," column two, should be "essay." Page 24—Williams and Walker came East in 1898, not 1898. November—"The New World World" should be "New York World."

CAL STEWART (February, 1951).—On page 24, "explosions" should be "explosions." March—The title of the song written by Stewart was "I Want a Graphophone" — not "Want." Albert "Benzlar." I said that Reuben Hendricks Benzler's last name is misspelled as was the only Punkin Center resident I could think of who was "killed off," but Mr. C. L. Helden, of Millinocket, Maine, has reminded me that a dynamite explosion killed Hank Weaver in "Fourth of July at Punkin Center" and left Abe Sprosky unaccounted for. Page 23, the sentence beginning "If the exclusive Edison contract," should read: "If the about our archive and what we hope to do. . . Both times Uncle Josh was a big success, and I'm wondering if he couldn't be revived."

I also feel it fair to say that in any "Supreme List" I might compile nowadays I would include "Banjo King" Vess Ossman, even though I had to remove someone else — probably Bill Hooley.

CAL STEWART (April, 1951).—Donald Chalmers' last name is printed as Chambers. Page 22—"Equity" should be capitalized. Page 23—The quotation from the Columbia supplement is garbled. It should read: "Laugh and the world laughs with you" is the key to Cal Stewart's grip on the hearts of fun lovers, the world over. . . You can always bank on Uncle Josh to smother your cares and worries in a good old-fashioned chortle."

DEATH NOTICE (April, 1951). — Page 24. The correct title of one of the Marguerite Farrell records is "Come On and exclusive Edison contract actually ran for five years, it must have been signed considerably before this announcement appeared, for Stewart was represented in the Victor list for September, 1915, with two of his most popular records."

Here are a couple of reminiscences to supplement the Stewart series: Fred Rabenstein says that Stewart was lame and walked with a cane because of injuries suffered during his railroading experiences. Clarence Ferguson, of Merrill, Wisconsin, recalls that Cal liked to frequent James I. Lyons' phonograph store in Chicago, and would frequently "put on stunts," such as hiring small Negro boys to dive head-first into barrels of flour. Edward Riley, of Eureka, Illinois, quotes his friend, Otis Bradford, of Indianapolis, as telling how Stewart's troupe used to play the Indiana capital, on a two-a-day vaudeville circuit. Quoting Mr. Riley: "He told of how they always announced their coming to town with a small parade in the main part of Indianapolis. . . Stewart wore an old straw hat, a long white linen duster and carried a buggy whip and marched at the head of the procession. He had a big white horse pull a carriage or surrey with Aunt Nancy and other troupe members in it, and it was almost a State holiday for the Hoosiers. This was probably around the years of the First World War."

In the light of widespread interest in Cal Stewart and his career, I have decided that I did him an injustice when I compiled my list of the Supreme Fifteen pioneer recording artists. If I were making such a list today, I should move Stewart up from the last place to which I assigned him in June, 1945, to either third or fourth—that is, just above or below Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan. I would not be surprised to find that Stewart's records will prove to have the most permanent appeal of any of the old-timers. Philip L. Miller, of the Music Division of the New York Public Library, has made the following comment: "Incidentally, I have been enjoying watching people's reaction to Uncle Josh. I gave a program here for the New York chapter of the Special Libraries Association, telling them something Baby Me." Eddie Morton died in Wildwood, New Jersey, not Philadelphia.

FRANK COOMBS AND WILLIAM H. THOMPSON (May, 1951).—"Sergeant" is misspelled more than once as "sargeant." "Ragged Robbin," should be "Ragged Robin." The correct title of one of Thompson's records is "All That I Ask of You is Love."

NAT M. WELLS (June, 1951). — The New York Times headline gave the comedian's correct name, not as Willis. The last name of Koster and Bial's museum is misspelled as "Bail." Page 23—"Jokes" gets a ludicrous misspelling as "pokes." "Emanant" is a baffling misprint for "meant." The full name of the Victor supplement writer was James Edward Richardson. Henry M. Shaw, of North Carver, Massachusetts, has two seven-inch records by Wells not mentioned in my article. No. 7246 couples "B. P. O. E." and "Parody on 'Stars and Stripes Forever.'" On No. 7253 Wells tells "War Stories" while Harry Evans sings "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary" on the reverse.

MANUEL ROMAIN (July, 1951). — Page 21, "Edison Phonograph" should be "Edison Phonograph Company." Page 24, the song name is "Happy Li'l Sal," not "Happy, Happy Li'l Sal." A printer's error turns Dave Braham's name into Graham. Quentin Riggs, of Oklahoma City, has two seven-inch Emerson records by Romain that I didn't know about. "No One But Your Dear Old Dad" is on No. 725, and "My Own Iona" on 735. By a slip of my own, W. H. A. Cronkhite is called Frank Cronkhite.

ELIZABETH SPENCER (September, 1951).—The negative of the Edison group photograph was found by Fred Rabenstein in his home instead of the Edison laboratory, as I mistakenly said.

CHARLES HARRISON AND BEULAH GAYLORD YOUNG (October, 1951). — Frederick Wheeler died in 1951, not 1950, as said in the cut lines. Because of space limitations, this article was not published as I wrote it. After using about the first fourth, the remainder was omitted except for the concluding paragraphs, thus giving a confusing impression.

MORE ABOUT COOK AND THOMAS RECORDS, and Some Acknowledgments

My article in February HOBBIES, mentioning Edison talking records by the noted baritone, John Charles Thomas, and a "Discovery of the North Pole" Victor by Dr. Frederick Cook, brought a quick response.

William R. Moran, of La Canada, California, tells me that Cook's record, "How I Reached the Pole," is listed in the Victor catalog for January, 1910. However, in November, 1910, Cook's record is missing and Robert E. Peary's "The Discovery of the South Pole" takes its place. Unfortunately, my own collection of Victor catalogs has a gap between January, 1909, and November, 1910, so that I cannot recall ever having seen the Cook record listed.

Mr. Moran writes: "I find that the Victor numerical list for June, 1908, carries the 31000 series up to 31702, so I would guess, in the normal march of events, that Cook's record was issued late in 1908. It was therefore in the catalog a little over one year, at the least, or nearly two years, at the most. I have had a copy for years and have had one duplicate, long since traded. My present copy is a "G" stamper . . . which means a good many thousand copies were pressed. . . Oh yes — the Pasadena Public Library has (or had) a copy in their files, so that makes three that I have seen. Still a rarity, however."

Homer C. Witten, of Altadena,

California, writes that he also has a copy of the Cook record. Commenting on Mr. Moran's letter, I'd like to point out that Cook claimed he discovered the North Pole on April 21, 1908, but the claim was not made until several months afterward. I have a Victor supplement for July, 1909, and the serial number, 31755, of the Cook record had not been reached up to that time. In fact, the high number was 31728, so this makes it likely that the Cook record was not issued until around January, 1910, got into the January, and probably May, general record catalogs and was out in November, after a stay of not more than a year.

Elmer T. Jones, of Manhattan, Kansas, writes that he has an Edison "explanatory talk" which is obviously not by Harry E. Humphrey, but is in "a musical baritone" voice, which he thinks is that of John Charles Thomas. The "talk," with serial No. 4131, describes Anna Case's record of "Bonnie Sweet Bessie."

Now, some acknowledgements:

Thanks to Mr. E. G. Hamer, manager of the Wuerth Theatre, of Ann Arbor, Michigan, for a clipping from the Ann Arbor News, telling of Mr. Hamer's collection of more than 2,000 cylinder records and many old phonographs. A photograph of Mr. Hamer and part of his collection is included.

I have also received a full page clipping from the Milwaukee Journal, showing the huge collection of cylinders and phonographs owned by R. C. Ambelang, a post office employee living at 2436 North 83rd Street, Milwaukee. He has 45 phonographs and almost 4,000 records.

Matt McNally, of 171 East 74th Street, New York, has sent me a valued memento — a letter written and signed in 1912 by one of the greatest of pioneer recording artists, Len Spencer. Mr. McNally also included a booklet containing photographs of many dance orchestras of the early 1920's, including Yerkes' Flotilla Band, of which he was a member.

And from Mr. and Mrs. Roy Moser, of Vanlue, Ohio, comes a long article from the Findlay Republican-Courier, giving the life story of the late song writer, Tell Taylor, a native of Findlay. The article is too long to be reprinted, but it contains many interesting facts about Taylor, whose biggest hit, "Down By the Old Mill Stream," was written about a girl who afterwards became a Chicago gangster's "moll." Some of Taylor's other songs which have been extensively recorded are "When the Maple Leaves Were Falling," "I Love You Best of All" and "Rock Me to Sleep in an Old Rocking Chair."

—Jim Walsh

Music collectors! You will find a vast variety of collectibles available at the Antiques Exposition and Hobby Fair, Conrad Hilton Hotel, May 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

MONTHLY RECORDS SALES

OF
RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive free of charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

Single rarities and entire collections purchased for cash

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Room 1135, DuPont Bldg., Miami 32, Florida

Established 1938

tfo

Rolls now available for SEEBURG and other 65-note automatic pianos. Old and new standard and popular songs. Rolls also for MILLS VIOLIN VIRTUOSO and other odd types.

WRITE FOR LISTS, ETC.

J. LAWRENCE COOK
824 E. 165th St., New York, N. Y.
NY 260

Antique

MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE

Completely restored Swiss boxes, extra cylinder type, all disc types; bird boxes and bird cages and mechanical figures
EXPERT REPAIRING

A. V. BORNAND CO.
139 4th Avenue, Pelham 65, N. Y.
(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825) tfo

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout.

Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

"A Friend Indeed"

That's what your collector friends will call you when they receive the gift card from us informing them that you have subscribed for HOBBIES in their name.

Each issue they receive will remind them of your friendship, because HOBBIES is a practical gift that will give them more pleasure in collecting.

Fill out the blank below and mail it with your remittance of $3.50 to HOBBIES, 1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

Please send a gift subscription to:

Name .....

Address .....

My name and address is:

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

ALBERT EDMUND BROWN,

FREDERIC MARTIN

AND W. FRANCIS FIRTH

By JIM WALSH

DR. ALBERT EDMUND BROWN

During a one-year period beginning in 1909 three men with deep voices made a few Columbia records. Two were baritones; the other was a bass. None continued his Columbia association after his first engagement, and two apparently never recorded for any other company. Not one made records enough to be classed as a professional phonograph singer, but in spite of their relatively minor place in the history of recorded music, Albert Edmund Brown, Frederic Martin and W. Francis Firth all played a prominent part in stimulating my imagination when I was a small boy and intensifying the fascination that the phonograph has always held for me. This they did, although I did not become acquainted with their singing until a good many years after their records were first issued.

Because of my gratitude for the influence the baritones and the basso unsuspectingly exercised in developing my musical taste, this month's Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists is intended as a tribute of gratitude to these accomplished singers, none of whom I have met, although I once lived within a few miles of Dr. Martin, and only one of whom is still alive. My HOBBIES articles usually relate the careers of artists best known for singing or playing popular songs, but I also enjoy records of other types. I doubt that there is any form of aesthetic pleasure more rewarding than that of hearing beautiful voices properly exercised in music especially suited to their capabilities, and it was the records of Messrs. Brown, Martin and Firth, together with one or two Columbias by the Italian operatic baritone, Taurino Parvis, that first led me to realize the beauties of the less obvious compositions.

Suppose we begin with that genial gentleman who is still with us and teaching singing and speech correction in Denver, Colorado—Dr. Albert Edmund Brown. As a rule, the artists about whom I write are not listed in "Who's Who in America." That somewhat elite compendium ordinarily looks on popular artists, regardless of their merits or fame, with less favor than it accords to the president of a small town factory. But Dr. Brown's accomplishments in the realm of serious music, both as singer and educator, are so impressive that he has been a standby of "Who's Who" for a generation.

From Volume 17, for 1932-33, we learn that this distinguished baritone is a music educator by profession, and was born in Derby, England, on December 9, 1874. That means he is now 77 years of age, although I am confident he has the mentality and stamina of an exceptionally able man of 40. Albert Edmund's father was Samuel Brown and his mother's maiden name was Elizabeth Frost. He came to the United States as a boy of twelve, and was a student in the Institute of Music Pedagogy in Northampton, Massachusetts.

On June 15, 1896, the young man already known for his excellent voice married a talented pianist, Miss Martha Elizabeth Taylor, of Easthampton, Massachusetts. They had a daughter, Doris Elizabeth, now Mrs. Fred J. Bergin, of Denver. The first Mrs. Brown died early in 1950. In July, 1951, Dr. Brown re-married. The present Mrs. Brown formerly was Mrs. Mary Kendall and was known as one of New England's top sopranos.

The condensed listing of Dr. Brown's career in the old "Who's Who" shows him to have had a wide range of activities and accomplishments. He was director of music of the State Normal School at Lowell, Mass., from 1910 to 1919; a member of the faculty of the Chautauqua Institution in 1912-13, and of Boston University in 1916-17. Besides appearing in many recitals in the United States and England, he conducted music at several conventions of the National Education Association, as well as for state teachers' groups. In 1917 he was an organizer of the War Camp Service. Three years later he was in charge of the musical programs at the Republican national convention in Chicago. "Who's Who" lists him as a Republican and a Christian Scientist, also as a 32nd degree Mason, a Knights Templar, a Shriner, a member of the Elks, Rotary International and Sinfonian, and as a lecturer and writer on musical subjects. He was then living in Ithaca, N. Y., and was in charge of Ithaca College's Department of Music Education.

To these facts, the latest edition of "Who's Who" adds that Dr. Brown received his degree of Doctor of Music in 1933 from the New York College of Music "for distinguished professional services and outstanding achievements in Music Education." The following paragraphs are quoted from this latest biographical sketch:

Director Department of Music, Massachusetts State Teachers College. Organizer and director of music section of the Northeastern division of War Camp Community Service. Conducted courses in Voice Training for Teachers at Chautauqua Institution, Chautauqua, New York. Vocal studios in Boston and New York. Teacher of many professional singers. Member of the faculties — Voice and Speech — of Curry College and Boston University. Director Ithaca Conservatory of Music and Music Division of Ithaca College (Ithaca, N. Y.) Song recitals and other professional appearances in U. S. and abroad. Soloist with principal orchestras and choral groups including Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Handel and Haydn Society, Worcester Festival Association, etc. Lectures and recitals at leading institutions of higher education, Cornell University, Smith College, Wheaton College, etc.

Programs for the National Education Association and teachers' organizations in many states. Conductor of choral groups — Wagnerian Choral Club, The Choral Art Society, etc. President Emeritus of the Boston Chapter of the National Association of Teachers of Singing. For five years associate editor of the New York Musical Courier. Lecturer and writer on musical subjects, principally the science and pedagogy of voice, interpretation in song and speech correction. Member Savage Club (London and Ithaca), Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, and the Oracle.

I knew nothing of Dr. Brown's scholarly attainments when he first became an important figure in my private world of the imagination. Nor did I know about them for a long time afterward. When I first saw his name on the label of Columbia record No. A749, which coupled his rendition of Schumann's "The Two Grenadiers" with Frederic Martin's interpretation of "Vulcan's Song" from Gounod's "Philemon and Baucis," I imagined Brown to be a stocky young man of about 28, wearing a gray suit and a felt hat of the same color. That same mental depiction holds good today, although I have had an autographed photo of him hanging in my home for almost twenty years and know well enough that my imaginary character doesn't look at all like the artist who is still flourishing and active.

But, although I didn't have any information concerning Albert Edmund Brown, I thought as a youngster that his "Two Grenadiers" was the most stirring record I had ever heard, and I never doubted that his interpretation was unbeatable. When I was ten years of age my tonsils gave so much trouble they had to be removed, and I was out of school for several weeks after undergoing what is now elegantly known as a "tonsillectomy." Finding that the time passed slowly, I decided to set up the mythical Walsh Talking Machine Company, whose headquarters was in the non-existent city of Goosia. I decided that the president of the company was one Cylope P. Walsh, whose son I imagined myself to be. A five-cent pencil tablet was dedicated to the honor of becoming the Walsh Company's numerical record catalog, and the catalog, which of course outgrew the one tablet, was steadily added to for years. It wasn't given up altogether until I was in my late teens.

And Albert Edmund Brown was one of my chief recording artists—all on the strength of that record of "The Two Grenadiers." Just as Elsie Baker was designated Walsh's "official staff contralto," so Brown was the official baritone. But because it seemed to me that his voice had an unusually high range, I gave him the special honorary description of "tenor-baritone," meaning his tones were a combination of high and low. For somewhat the same reason, I couldn't be satisfied with describing my favorite humorous singer, Billy Murray (who spent his boyhood in Denver), as either a tenor or a comedian but always called him a "tenor comedian." One ruled line of the pencil tablet was devoted to giving the number, title, composer and artist of one-side of a double-faced record. The performer's voice quality or the name of his instrument was filled in above the line.

This brought about an amusing custom in my treatment of Dr. Brown.

His full name, Albert Edmund Brown, was too long to get on the line unless the song title and all the other information was short. Thus it happened that he was referred to in a variety of ways. Besides being Albert Edmund Brown, he was also Albert E. Brown, A. Edmund Brown, Al. E. Brown, A. E. Brown and, sometimes, just plain Al Brown, or, if space was drastically limited, he was merely "Brown." The nature of the song he was recording had something to do with whether he was talented with extreme formality or the reverse. With such a number as my beloved "Two Grenadiers" his full name had to be given, but if he were singing popular music the shortened form of Al. E. was sufficient.

Besides being a "tenor-baritone" soloist and singing duets with other Walsh artists, Albert Edmund Brown made himself useful in other ways. He was a member of the Central Male and Mixed Trios, which never sang together for any company but Walsh. The male trio consisted of Will Oakland, counter-tenor; Henry Burr, tenor; and Brown, baritone. The mixed trio was the same except that Helen Clark was substituted for Oakland. Brown was likewise a member of the Cumberland Quartet, whose other members I am not sure about, although I believe Arthur Clough was the lead tenor.

FREDERIC LOUIS MARTIN

WILLIAM FRANCIS FIRTH

I have just been looking through the yellowed pages of my old pencil tablets, and shall quote a few examples to show how important Albert Edmund Brown was to the Walsh artist and repertoire department. One side of record No. A151, "Meet Me Tonight in Dreamland," was by the Central Male Trio. On No. 156, Billy Murray and Al. E. Brown sang "Rainbow." No 157 contained the Central Trio in "Abide With Me", and Albert Edmund (it seems I consistently misspelled his middle name with an "o" instead of a "u") Brown rendering a hymn, "Child of a King." On 159, his name again was given at full length for his rendition of Tosti's "Beauty's Eyes," ludicrously coupled with "Harmony Joe," by the Peerless Quartet. Going on down the line but skipping the record numbers, I find Brown singing "Afar From Thee, My Love" (Linne); Handel's "Angels Ever Bright and Fair"; "Come, Ye Disconsolate" (a duet with Harry Anthony); "One Sweetly Solemn Thought"; "Paradise" (a trio, with Anthony and Albert Campbell); "Angelic Songs are Swelling"; "Ariste, My Soul"; "Rock of Ages"; "Ruler of the Ocean" from Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine" and "Cassio's Dream" from Verdi's "Otello." The latter two numbers were among my favorites by Taurino Parvis, and it's a wonder I didn't have him singing for Walsh. The reason I didn't probably was a chauvinistic prejudice against vocal records in languages other than English. Parvis sang Italian, so he was out. Brown took his place, using the King's English to do it.

Besides compiling the Walsh record catalog and conducting all the imaginary business affairs of that remarkable concern, I wrote "interviews" with the members of the company's recording staff. These were entitled "A Walk With Billy Murray," Henry Burr or whoever the favored artist happened to be, and they were, I suppose, the forerunners of the biographical sketches I write nowadays for HOBBIES. I remember that in one about Albert Edmund Brown I had him confessing to "Mr. Walsh" that he had gone and got himself married and flatteringly expressing the hope that this wouldn't impair his business relationship with the Walsh Talking Machine Company. To which the broad-minded Cylope P. magnanimously replied, much to Brown's relief, "No, we don't mind your getting married. Bring Mrs. Brown around to see us!" This was followed up always in my imagination, of course—by a scene in which the tenor-baritone did "bring Mrs. Brown around" and entertained her by playing many of his own recordings on a portable Walsh instrument that looked suspiciously like the $25 Victrola which was then the joy of my life.

Looking back, I wonder that Mr. Walsh so readily forgave Mr. Brown for the sin of marrying. As a juvenile, I had a most intense aversion to the institution of wedlock, and the idea of anybody's being married. I must still have it, for I have stayed single all these years!

In spite of constantly having Albert Edmund Brown in my mind, it was not until 1932 that I got around to writing to him. For one thing, I didn't have any idea where he lived. I believe it was my friend, the late Miss Marian Reed, of Washington, D. C., to whom I had confided my admiration, who saw a mention of him in Musical Courier and let me know that he was head of the department of music at Ithaca College.

However that may have been, I wrote a letter to Dr. Brown, telling him how much his record of "The Two Grenadiers" had meant to me and asking if he could send me a signed photograph. Within a few days I received a reply that was cordial, but in which my praise of that record elicited a wry acknowledgement.

I never destroy a letter, so I'm sure Dr. Brown's reply is somewhere in my home. I have found the envelope, dated August 23, 1932, in which it was mailed, but the letter itself is misplaced. However, I recall its contents well enough to quote them almost verbatim.

Dr. Brown said he was glad his singing had indirectly exercised such a pronounced influence on my life, but he had never considered himself a recording artist and had no high opinion of the three records he made for Columbia. He referred to the many trials that were necessary before passable reproductions were obtained of the only three selections he sang, and his disappointment when he heard the records played back. His friends all told him, he said, that the records didn't sound like his real voice.

As for "The Two Grenadiers," Dr. Brown said that Victor Emerson, then the Night," which was doubled with "Absent," sung by a once noted contralto, Mrs. A. Stewart Holt. I found a copy of "All Through the Night" a few years ago, but have still to run across "Israfel," although it stayed in the catalog through 1916, whereas the two ten-inch records were discontinued late in 1913 or early in 1914.

With his letter, Dr. Brown included a reprint of an article from the Boston Record of Friday, June 18, 1920, headed "BROWN, LEADER OF SINGING, WINS BATTLE AT CHICAGO NATIONAL CONVENTION." It was written by Rush Jones and told of the baritone's success in getting the weary delegates to the Republican convention that nominated Harding and Coolidge to do a fine job of "community singing" at a let-down period when everybody was tired out and tempers were frazzled. Jones' article is too long to be quoted entirely, but I'll use parts of it because of the light they throw upon Albert Edmund Brown's accomplishments and personality:

CHICAGO—One man from Massachusetts matched his strength against a roaring, hooting, laughing, jeering, screeching crowd of 15,000 people in the Coliseum on Thursday evening, and won. He was Brown of Massachusetts, Brown of the Republican League of Massachusetts, Brown the greatest leader of mass singing this generation of politicians has known.

Brown pulled off this battle of one man against 15,000 men and women when the crowd was worn out and melting in the fervent heat, while they awaited the report of the platform committee. . . . Brown, the big whirlwind of song, jumped to the front of the speakers' platform and shouted, "Will you join me in singing 'The Long, Long Trail'?"

NO!"

"But Brown called for the key from the big band at the far end of the hall. . . . The crowd started to scream, hoot, groan, shout and laugh. Brown began beating time like a madman and grinning good naturedly the while. . . . The pandemonium grew and still Brown waved his arms and kicked up his legs, beating out the 'Long, Long Trail.' The dust was flying before he hit the quarter stretch.

Suddenly the band swung into "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," and the protest of the crowd against being forced to sing whether it would or not was turned into a torrent of laughter that was nearly as loud and even more disconcerting than the avalanche of discordant noises which it had been making.

Quick to see his opportunity, Brown . . . led the rollicking "What the Hell Do We Care", end of the song. He saw his advantage and the grin grew broader. He had the crowd singing with him. Then he managed to signal the band and "Smiles" took the place of the hot-as-hades ditty. . . .

There was no way of getting ahead of that chap from Massachusetts with the tremendous voice and the assurance of a dreadnought, and when Brown finished he retired amid a perfect Niagara of cheers and a thunder of hand clapping. It was as dauntless a performance and as complete a victory as any man in that vast crowd had ever seen, and some of them had seen some mighty big things.

When I read this vivid account of Brown's leading those case-hardened politicians in such numbers as "Hail, Hail," "Smiles" and "How Dry I Am," which was also on the G. O. P.'s musical menu, I felt somewhat less guilty at occasionally having had him sing popular tunes for the Walsh catalog. There was also a tribute to his leadership of group singing from Dr. A. E. Winship, who wrote in the Journal of Education: "Albert Edmund Brown led the singing at all the general sessions and at many banquets. We have known no one to do as varied work as did he, and it was always 100 per cent attractive. Mr. Brown is in a class by himself in Convention work of this kind."

However, those were, of course, his lighter moments. More representative of the type of music which the virile baritone ordinarily sang is the following program given April 8, 1931, before the Ithaca Rotary Club, with Mrs. Brown at the piano:

"My Love is a Like a Red, Red Rose" (Hastings); "On the Banks of Allan Water" (traditional); "The Pretty Creature" (Storace); "Thursday" (Molloy); "Yeoman's Wedding Song" (Poinatowski); "Sheriff's Song" and "Armorer's Songs from 'Robin Hood'" (DeKoven); and two Rudyard Kipling poems set to music—"Rolling Down to Rio" (German) and "Boots" (Souza.)

Here is a typical review, from Musical America, of another recital given by Mr. Brown at about the same period:

Albert Edmund Brown, director of the division of music, Ithaca College, recently gave a song recital in the Little Theatre. His program included several of Kipling's Barrack Room Ballads, an old English air, "The Vicar of Bray," and several Handel excerpts. Mr. Brown's art shows to greatest advantage in the deeper registers, which bring out the resonant, rich timbre of his voice. He proved an able dramatic projector, especially in the Kipling settings and in the ballads which his program contained. An audience which filled the hall demanded encores after each group. —N. V.

I suppose I wrote and thanked Dr. Brown for his interesting letter and enclosures. At least, I certainly hope I did. But there was no further communication between us for 19 years. Then when it occurred to me that I should like to write an article combining his life story with that of Martin and Firth, I wrote to the president of Ithaca College, asking if Dr. Brown were still associated with the institution. The president, Leonard B. Job, replied on September 12, 1951:

Dear Mr. Walsh: We are happy indeed to provide you with such information as we have concerning the subject of your letter of September 1.

Dr. Brown left Ithaca College 13 or 14 years ago. He worked in Albany for a while, then got back to the Boston area. A year or so ago, when the first Mrs. Brown died, he went to Denver to live with his daughter. He has since remarried and I believe at the present time is in charge of the music at one of the Presbyterian churches in Denver. I regret that I cannot tell you which one.

Obviously, the next step was to ascertain Dr. Brown's home address. The only friend I could think of in Denver who might check the city directory for me was Ray Perkins, song writer, former recording star for Victor and Brunswick and now perhaps the most popular disc jockey in the West. Ray came through immediately with the information that Albert Edmund Brown was listed as living at 1410 Grant street, Denver.

the Columbia recording manager, made him sing it too fast, to get it all on one ten-inch record side, and spoiled the interpretation. However, he considered his one 12-inch disc, No. A5118, "Israfel," coupled with "Oh! That Will Be Glory (The Glory Song)," by Harvey Hindermyer, to be the worst of the three. The remaining Brown record, and the first issued, No. A694, was "All Through

MONTHLY RECORDS SALES

OF
RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive free of charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

Single rarities and entire collections purchased for cash

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Room 1-135, DuPont Bldg., Miami 32, Florida

Established 1938

tlc

The Old Music Store

MUSICAL ANTIQUES

Melodeons, Pipe and Reed Organs, Coin Operated Pianos, Calliopes, and other smaller items.

Wette-Mignon Automatic Player Concert Grand with 300 classical rolls.

— Expert Repairing —

WRITE

ESTHER SKERRITT SANDERS
Deansboro, New York

tlx

"A Friend Indeed"

That's what your collector friends will call you when they receive the gift card from us informing them that you have subscribed for HOBBIES in their name.

Each issue they receive will remind them of your friendship, because HOBBIES is a practical gift that will give them more pleasure in collecting.

Fill out the blank below and mail it with your remittance of $3.50 to HOBBIES, 1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

Please send a gift subscription to:

Name .....

Address .....

My name and address is:

His telephone number, Ray added, was 2685; "but," he remarked, "I guess you won't be using that."

As Ray had surmised, I didn't phone to Dr. Brown. But I did write him a letter, mentioning some of the things I had told him in 1932, and asking for an account of his recent activities. On October 1 he wrote the following fine letter, which seems to me to reflect admirably the warm, magnetic personality that tamed an unruly host of convention-tired Republicans:

My dear Friend, Thank you for your good letter which gave me a great "kick" and which I read with much interest. Many years have passed since the records of which you speak were made for Columbia. As I remember the three — which by the way took three days to make — they were "The Two Grenadiers," of Schumann, "Israfil," by Oliver King, and the well known folk song, "All Through the Night."

I remember Frederick Martin very well. Everything in recording then was so different from what is done today. The studio manager was a man named Emerson. We had to sing into a horn that was punched full of holes. If one seemed not to be good, another with more or less holes in it was selected. When it was not possible to get "Israfil" on a ten-inch disc, as was planned, Mr. Emerson suggested that we leave out the middle part, or that we hurry the song to get it on the discs. From my angle that was if course impossible. How things have changed!

As you know, the orchestra — a small one — was perched on step ladders and on boxes in order to make the best final effect. Under another cover I am sending you a Brochure which will give

Antique
MUSIC BOXES
FOR SALE
Completely restored Swiss boxes, extra cylinder type, all disc types; bird boxes and bird cages and mechanical figures.
EXPERT REPAIRING
A. V. BORNAND & CO. tlx
139 4th Avenue, Pelham 65, N. Y.
(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825)

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By MOSORIAK & HECKERT

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON
THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

$5.00 Postpaid — Insured

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

DANCING DOLL MUSIC BOX FOR SALE
Three Parisian dolls, original; fine 8 tune Sublime Harmonie unit, 6 bells, enamelled butterflies, drum; 25c coin operated.
R. BORNAND
139 4th Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y. jec

"Rolls now available for SEEBURG and other 65-note automatic pianos. Old and new standard and popular songs. Rolls also for MILLS VIOLIN VIRTUOSO and other odd types.
WRITE FOR LISTS, ETC.
J. LAWRENCE COOK
824 E. 165th St., New York, N. Y. jylsca

Just thousands of old time records in excellent condition at reasonable prices. When you cannot get it elsewhere ask me. jec

AL McREA, SR.
Box 182, Westville, New Jersey

FASSETT'S RECORDING SERVICE

RECORDS COPIED TO ORDER

ON HIGH QUALITY PROFESSIONAL EQUIPMENT

DUBBING A SPECIALTY: Records from your collection, or from my own — which includes innumerable rare items — faithfully transferred to smooth-surfaced acetate discs, 78-RPM or LP, or to tape. SPECIAL EQUIPMENT FOR DUBBING TWO AND FOUR MINUTE CYLINDERS, EDISON DIAMOND DISCS, PATHE DISCS, AND FOR REPRODUCING ODD-SPEED COLLECTORS' ITEMS (LIKE THE EARLIEST CARUSO'S) AT CORRECT PITCH.

WIDE RANGE FM OFF-THE-AIR RECORDING ON TAPE OR DISC — YOUR FAVORITE RADIO PROGRAMS PERMANENTLY PRESERVED.

TAPE RECORDINGS, professional or amateur, single or dual track, 7½ or 15 inches per second speeds, transferred to discs with Ampex tape recorder.

FINEST RCA MICROPHONE AND AMPLEX TAPE RECORDER FOR LIVE RECORDING ON LOCATION (CAPE COD AREA ONLY).

First Class Work at Relatively Low Prices
FASSETT'S RECORDING SERVICE

Box 362, West Falmouth, Massachusetts jec

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout.

Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

you more up-to-date information regarding my work. I have been in Denver for a little over a year. Have the direction of the Choir of the First United Presbyterian Church and am doing some teaching. However, being removed some two thousand miles from Boston, where I was so well known, presents problems of promotion. Things are coming along and I am quite happy here.

I listen to Kay Perkins' programs and like them. I have never met him and would like to do that sometime before very long. As to my own voice, I am just the same as ever — I sang the other day and I marvel at what I can do after all these years. You may be interested that several years ago I was one of the organizers (and the first President) of the Boston Chapter of the National Association of Teachers of Singing. Before leaving the "Hub" they made me President Emeritus, an honor that I prize highly.

In addition to my teaching I am called upon to give a lecture occasionally. I keep active and have a keen interest with Dr. Charles Norman Granville's Method — a series of recordings for the smaller communities. It is a fine piece of work with a volume of instructions together with the necessary accompanying records. It is published by the Music Publishers Holding Corporation of New York.

Please be assured of my cooperation. If you have any questions I will answer them — Pronto! Thank you again for writing to me. My best wishes to you — and — here's a hand-clasp across the miles.

Faithfully yours,

ALBERT EDMUND BROWN.

I found Dr. Brown's entire letter of great interest, but my attention was particularly caught by his mention of Charles N. Granville, a baritone who made one or two Edison cylinders in 1913. I had not been certain whether he was still alive.

Soon after the letter arrived, Dr. Brown sent me a postal with the information that his home address has changed, to 648 Race Street, Denver, and that his telephone number is Fremont 2959. His studio is in the First United Presbyterian Church building at East 14th avenue and Lincoln street.

Another piece of publicity material shows that the veteran baritone is a great believer in clear enunciation and in "Songs in English for English Speaking Audiences," so perhaps I did right when, at the age of ten, I had him sing those Meyerbeer and Verdi arias for the Walsh Talking Machine Company in English instead of Italian. I think some of the statements he makes are worth quoting:

Our speech, though richer than any other in its possibilities, has not been wisely used by those music publishers who seek to supply songs in foreign tongues with English versions. Instead of employing poets of musical tendency with a copious vocabulary and well-turned phrases at their command, the publishers seem to have committed German poems to men familiar enough with the original but not sufficiently conversant with English.

I speak of German more particularly because so much of the best vocal music is by Teutonic composers. . . . While many songs when translated into English lose much of their atmospheric and emotional content, it would be as absurd for a lecturer before an English-speaking audience to give a part of his discourse in French, and another part in German and another part in Italian, as for a singer to expect unqualified welcome for songs in foreign languages which he but imperfectly understands and which his audiences does not understand at all. To all American singers I would say: sing your songs in well-chosen English if singing to an English speaking audience, and sing them so that everyone understands your words; enunciate them so clearly that the audience can tell how every word is spelled. If you get away from the foreign language fad, you will find yourself nearer the heart of your audience.

Since Dr. Brown so obviously has the gift of winning the hearts of his audiences, I think his words are worth heeding. And now let us leave this fine artist, who has meant so much to me for virtually my entire life, happy at his work in Denver.

(This is the first of two articles devoted to the three pioneer recording artists. It will be concluded next month.)

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Will pay top cash for the following records: Any by Jimmie Rodgers, any by Richard Jose, any by Singing Sam. State price and describe. I will not bid.—C. A. Duncan, 347 E. Redondo Beach Blvd., Gardena, Calif. s68431

MARY GARDEN and Sigrid Onegin, Victor Electricals wanted.—Mrs. Maude Batson, 238 S. Mariposa Ave., Los Angeles, Calif. je3882

MISCELLANEOUS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder records, machines, and catalogues.—Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street Santa Monica, Calif. je6844

WANTED TO BUY, small horns and reproducers for Columbia cylinder phonographs.—A. Nugent, 12 N. Third, Richmond, Va. je3884

WANTED: Imperial Symphonion Music box that plays 20" discs with cuplike depressions at edges. Wanted 20½" Criterion and Olympia discs. — R. Shattuck, Eldred, Pa. je3846

MISCELLANEOUS FOR SALE

Latest player piano rolls, 75c. List.—Durrell Armstrong, 222 S. Vassar, Wichita, Kans. n128421

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, direct imports, $1.50.—Jules Wolff, 74 Worthstreet, New York. o 6844

FOR SALE: New Ampico & Duo-Art, Welte Mignon music rolls. Also various used music rolls. 3 Mills Virtuosos. 3 electric pianos.—Louis J. Kersten, 32 So. Street, Freehold, N. J. je3084

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

RECORDS FOR SALE

Choice Collection. Thousands of records. Mail auctions. Free lists.—A. H. Sles, 92-11 35th Avenue, Jackson Heights 72, N. Y. d120291

Rare Vocal Recordings, including imports. Free lists.—Music Den, 825 Irving Street, San Francisco, Calif. je3063

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists: Jones, Murray, Burr, Collins, Harlan, etc. Fine condition. Price 50c each. Free lists.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. je3426

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. au3084

WILL BUY phonograph records, collections or dealers' stock, any amount, made before 1940. Have many for sale. Send wants.—J. Schneider, 128 W. 66, N. Y. C., N. Y. je6468

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f124201

RARE OLD RECORDS: Write for sales lists. Operatic, vocal, instrumental, popular, jazz. Collector's items.—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. je6806

THOUSANDS of used records: Jazz, Operatic, Instrumental, and Personalities. We must surely have some that you are seeking! May we have your want list?—Perry's Book & Record Shoppe, 3914 Van Buren Place, Culver City, Calif. je3065

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o 120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o 122511

PHONOGRAPHS

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, cylinder records, cylinder record books, parts. Bought, sold, exchanged.—A. Nugent, Jr., 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. je3403

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Everything. Catalog 10c.—Fore's, 3161 11th, Denver 6, Colo. jly12867

MUSIC BOX DISCS

For Sale: Large number of 15¾" Regina Music Box discs, $2 each. Send for list. Minimum order, 3 records.—John W. Willever, 147 East Washington Ave., Washington, N. J. aux

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list offering above average prices. Wanted: 13½" New Century, 13½" Kalliope and 14" Perfection discs.—Insley C. Looker, So. Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. je3445

MUSIC BOX CARDS, Silent Night, Jingle Bells, Let Me Call You Sweetheart, Happy Birthday, Rock-a-bye Baby, Anniversary Waltz, $1 each.—Meyers, 1502 Dodge, Omaha, Nebr. jly3234

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES, also mechanical musical instruments of any description, sleigh bells, United States coins, large bills, discs for Imperial Symphonian & minute repeating watches.—Herbert H. Neveer, Pittsburgh 15, Penna. au3694

MUSIC LITERATURE

FOR SALE: Collectors' Guide to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (200 page book) $3.75, postpaid.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City 19, N. Y. n6064

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

ALBERT EDMUND BROWN,

FREDERIC MARTIN

AND W. FRANCIS FIRTH

(Continued from the June Issue)

II Frederic Martin

I have always had a remarkably vivid memory for happenings of my childhood, even to the dreams that intrigued my attention when I was a tot. One of the most vivid, which I have never forgotton, had a musical interest, and occurred when I was not more than seven. It seemed that my father had taken me to a concert, and that, as I watched, a man with a cynically twisted mouth that made him appear both sardonic and dissipated, climbed the steps leading to a platform, said "Now for the bass!" and began to sing "Vulcan's Song" from "Philemon and Baucis," with which I was familiar from Frederic Martin's Columbia record that we had at home.

After singing, the man stepped down and stood beside me. He asked me to tell him the names of some singers I liked. "Well," I replied, "of course Billy Murray is my favorite. But I like Ada Jones, too."

Noticing that he seemed disappointed, I added: "Frederic Martin is a good one."

His face brightened as he replied: "That's me!" (I had been sure it was!)

Then the basso went on: "Yes, I'd be pretty good—if I could just leave whiskey alone!"

I woke before anything more was said, but that dream has always remained bright in my memory. I am sure, however, that it was a gross slander upon Dr. Martin, who was not only a fine singer but a gentleman of high character. The reference to whiskey was a hang-over from a remark I had heard my father make some time before about a vaudeville act he had heard, who he thought "would be pretty good if they could just leave whiskey alone." Child-like, I had assumed that it applied to all musicians and had made Frederic Martin say it in my dream.

That Columbia record of "Vulcan's Song," on the back of Dr. Brown's "Two Grenadiers," was the only one Columbia ever issued by Frederic Martin, but it stirred my imagination almost as much as the Brown rendition. I particularly liked the suave melody to which Gounod set the words, not all of which I have been able to understand to this day. My father used to order merchandise from wholesale houses in Baltimore, and this made my tricky imagination turn "Vulcan's Song" into a letter dealing with one of his shipments. I took the first two lines of the refrain to be:

"I enclose the bill of lading,
For pillows, sheets and shading."

Much later, by careful listening, I detected them to be:

"I love the chat of neighbor
That cheers the hours of labor."

Another part that I believed was, "free am I as the breezes as they sing through the trees" really is "free am I as the breezes, and I toil when it pleases." Outside my dreams, I imagined Frederic Martin to be a rather bald man, around 40, who was sitting at a window, writing, until his wife, who was holding a singing party, entered and said: "Frederic, we want you to sing bass for us!" Whereupon Frederic got up willingly from his writing and went into the living room where the guests were gathered.

I believe that "Vulcan's Song," recorded in 1909, represents the first time the name of Frederic Martin appears in a record catalog but it was not his first appearance before the horn. In September, 1910, "H. G. C.," of Westerly, Rhode Island, had this question published in Edison's New Phonogram: "Has Fred L. Martin ever sung for Edison Records?" The reply was: "He has sung bass several times in our quartet Records; among them Standard No. 9607, 'Work, for the Night is Coming.'"

The latter record, listed as by the Edison Male Quartet, was issued in August, 1907. Ordinarily, the Edison Quartet was the same as the Haydn (John Bieling, Harry Macdonough, S. H. Dudley and W. F. Hooley) on Victor, but in this instance Martin may have substituted for Hooley, whose health was bad at times. On the other hand, the quartet may have entered into its agreement to sing exclusively for Victor, and Edison

Antique
MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE

Completely restored Swiss boxes, extra cylinder type, all disc types; bird boxes and bird cages and mechanical figures.

EXPERT REPAIRING

A. V. BORNAND CO.

139 4th Avenue, Pelham 65, N. Y.
(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825)

WORLD WIDE MUSIC & RECORD AGENCY

2034 No. Third St., Milwaukee 12, Wis.

Collectors' phonograph records: cylinders, discs, Lateral, Hill and Dale; all makes. Old catalogs.

For collectors, libraries, museums, radio and TV stations; ghost and gag writers.

Machines, parts and reproducers for cylinders.

The largest collection of Americana available. Jazz-Swing-Ragtime. Classical-Operatic. Vocal and instrumental.

All recordings of historical artists, operas, classicals, band, orchestra, variety—Billy Murray, Ada Jones, etc., etc.

"Rolls now available for SEIBURG and other 65-note automatic pianos. Old and new standard and popular songs. Rolls also for MILLS VIOLIN VIRTUOSO and other odd types.

WRITE FOR LISTS, ETC.

J. LAWRENCE COOK

824 E. 165th St., New York, N. Y.
Pr 25c

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout. Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

was compelled to reply on a "scratch" ensemble to take its place.

After his vigorously sung and, to me, admirable Columbia record was issued, Frederic Martin appears to have been a stranger to the recording studios until he made some solos for Edison in 1914. The July issue of the Edison Phonograph Monthly said:

Frederic Martin, a native of Rhode Island, has pursued his artistic attainments with the foremost of American and European instructors. He has appeared many times with the leading musical organizations of the larger cities throughout the United States and Canada, has also made several tours with the Boston Festival, Pittsburgh and Chicago Symphonies, and is recognized as one of America's leading oratorio and concert artists. His voice is a noble one, sonorous in quality, of ample power, and of uncommonly wide range. He is basso of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church Quartet, of New York City.

In that same issue, Edison announced Blue Amberol Record No. 2403, of Martin singing Schubert's immortal song, "The Wanderer." Seven months later, in February, 1915, his Blue Amberol Record No. 2520, "It is Enough" from "Elijah," was issued, and the following additional comment appeared, together with a good photo of the portly basso, who really was somewhat bald:

Frederic Martin... is the possessor of a wonderful bass voice. His training and vocal development have been with the foremost of European and American teachers. He is one of the most popular of concert and oratorio basses, and there are comparatively few musical or singing societies throughout the United States with which he has not appeared. He has also toured with the leading symphony orchestras of New York, Chicago and Boston. For the past nine years he has held the position of basso in the quartet of the famous and exclusive Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. His rendition of a selection from "Elijah" is magnificently impressive.

Martin's Edison solos were also being issued on the then new-fangled Diamond Discs, and the June, 1915, of the Edison Phonograph Monthly contained this rather amusing item under the heading of "Selling Tips for Disc Records":

As an instance of how one specific little thing may just catch the buyer, the following incident actually happened recently. The record was "The Wanderer," sung by Frederick Martin. This classical song is one of the finest in the whole realm of music. . . . The salesman playing it told the customer everything he knew about the song and about Martin. The record was played and the customer did not like, nor could he be persuaded that he ever would like it. Another salesman who happened to be standing within hearing, approached and took part in the conversation. "Do you realize, sir," he exclaimed, "that this record contains the lowest note ever recorded by the human voice—a feature only possible on the Edison Disc?" Neither of the others had noticed it particularly, but the customer thought it would be worth playing the record again to hear this remarkable note. The upshot was that he bought the record! He didn't like "The Wanderer" much better than when he first heard it (he will in a few weeks, though), but he thought his wife and friends would be interested in that low note!

Although I own about two thousand Diamond Discs, I unfortunately don't have any of Frederic Martin's brief list. Here are the titles:

No. 82053 The Wanderer (Schubert) and The Horn (Flégier); 80193—Elijah—It is Enough (Mendelssohn) and Elijah—If With All Your Hearts (tenor solo by Reed Miller); 82058, Vespri Siciliani—O Tu Palermo and Hérodiade—Vision Fugitive.

A few years followed, during which I know of no more Martin records from any source. Then, in 1918, the Starr Piano Company began issuing hill-and-dale Gennett records, and Frederic Martin was one of the company's celebrity artists. His renditions appeared on its Red Label "Art Tone" series, which had a remote resemblance to Victor Red Seals.

I formerly owned a complete file or the vertical cut Gennett lists, but they were lent to another collector who, unfortunately, reported that he had lost or mislaid them. The only other "exclusive Art Tone" celebrity artist I can now recall is the violinist, Helen Ware. I'm sorry that I can't give a complete list of Martin's Gennett records, but I can mention the two that are in my own collection: No. 10019, my old favorite, "Vulcan's Song," coupled with "Gipsy John" (Clay); and 10030, "When the Bell in the Lighthouse Rings" (Arthur J. Lamb and Alfred Solman), doubled with "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep" (J. P. Knight.) The Gennett recording of "Vulcan's Song" is clearer than the Columbia, but I'm not sure that the voice seems quite so resonant and deep.

After his Gennett engagement, Dr. Martin, as far as I know, made no more records. He came to Bristol, Virginia, as voice instructor at Virginia Interment College and remained twenty years or more. During most of his residence there, I was living in Marion, Va., only 45 miles away, and still later my home was in Johnson City, Tenn., just 25 miles from Bristol, but alas! I never did meet Frederic Martin. I remember that while I was in Marion, I wrote to him, as I did to Albert Edmund Brown, telling him how much that Columbia record had meant to me, and also relating what I considered the amusing dream in which he had taken part. He didn't reply. I hope he wasn't offended at my having imagined him to be a victim of the curse of drink!

Like Dr. Brown, Frederic Martin also married a musician, but Mrs. Martin was a singer instead of a pianist. Mr. and Mrs. Martin frequently gave recitals in Bristol, Roanoke, and other Virginia cities, and Dr. Martin sometimes served as music critic for the Bristol Herald-Courier. In one of my scrapbooks I have a clipping of his review of a 1935 recital by Nino Martini.

Dr. Martin died on September 12, 1945. The Associated Press sent out from New London, Connecticut, the following account of his death:

Frederick Louis Martin, 76, of Bristol, Tenn., once a widely-known vocalist who appeared with the Boston Symphony and New York Philharmonic Orchestras, died today at Lawrence Hospital. For a score of years he was voice instructor at Virginia Interment College, Bristol, Va. He had been stricken suddenly ill yesterday at his summer home at Noank and was admitted to the hospital last night. He appeared with most of the leading symphony orchestras in the United States and for 15 years was bass soloist at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City.

I believe that Mrs. Martin survived her distinguished husband and, so far as I know, she is still alive.

III W. Francis Firth

The story of the third minor recording artist who influenced my youthful tastes must be told at less length than those of Brown and Martin, because I know less concerning W. Francis Firth than I do of the other two. In

MONTHLY RECORDS SALES

OF

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive free of charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

Single rarities and entire collections purchased for cash

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Room 1135, DuPont Bldg., Miami 32, Florida

Established 1938

uf

The Old Music Store MUSICAL ANTIQUES

Melodeons, Pipe and Reed Organs, Coin Operated Pianos, Calliopes, and other smaller items.

Welte-Mignon Automatic Player Concert Grand with 300 classical rolls.

— Expert Repairing —

WRITE

ESTHER SKERRITT SANDERS
Deansboro, New York

uf

FASSETT'S RECORDING SERVICE

RECORDS COPIED
TO ORDER

ON HIGH QUALITY
PROFESSIONAL EQUIPMENT

DUBBING A SPECIALTY: Records from your collection, or from my own—which includes innumerable rare items—faithfully transferred to smooth-surfaced acetate discs, 78-RPM or LP, or to tape. SPECIAL EQUIPMENT FOR DUBBING TWO AND FOUR MINUTE CYLINDERS, EDISON DIAMOND DISCS, PATHE DISCS, AND FOR REPRODUCING ODD-SPEED COLLECTORS' ITEMS (LIKE THE EARLIEST CARUSO'S) AT CORRECT PITCH.

WIDE RANGE FM OFF-THE-AIR RECORDING ON TAPE OR DISC—YOUR FAVORITE RADIO PROGRAMS PERMANENTLY PRESERVED.

TAPE RECORDINGS, professional or amateur, single or dual track, 7½ or 15 inches per second speeds, transferred to discs with Ampex tape recorder.

FINEST RCA MICROPHONE AND AMPEX TAPE RECORDER FOR LIVE RECORDING ON LOCATION (CAPE COD AREA ONLY).

First Class Work at Relatively Low Prices

FASSETT'S RECORDING SERVICE

Box 362, West Falmouth, Massachusetts

uf

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Will pay top cash for the following records: Any by Jimmie Rodgers, any by Richard Jose, any by Singing Sam. State price and describe. I will not bid.—C. A. Duncan, 347 E. Redondo Beach Blvd., Gardena, Calif. s68431

WANTED: Cornet records.—Steve Gilman, 66 Sims, Newport, R. I. jly108

MISCELLANEOUS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts, old, post cards, and advertising cards.—Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. d6046

WANTED: Reproducer for Edison Amberola 30 phonograph.—George R. Hare, 3006 14th Avenue, Tampa 5, Fla. s3652

WANT ALL TYPES of old music boxes, coin operated and otherwise. Write, quote best price, and picture, if possible.—George Trambitas, 3126 Elliott Ave. Seattle 1, Washington. je128291

MISCELLANEOUS FOR SALE

Latest player piano rolls, 75c. List.—Durell Armstrong, 222 S. Vassar, Wichita, Kans. n128421

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, direct imports, $1.80.—Jules Wolff, 74 Worthstreet, New York. o 6844

SWISS & REGINA music boxes, bar-room pianos; barrel & hand organs; large Regina piano, with drums; bells & cymbal playing, 32" disc. Old coin operated Edison juke box, playing cylinder records; accordion playing paper roll; musical alarm and others.—Ray Albertson, Box 23, Atlantic, Ia. jly1863

RECORDS FOR SALE

Choice Collection. Thousands of records. Mail auctions. Free lists.—A. H. Sles, 92-11 35th Avenue, Jackson Heights 72, N. Y. d120291

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists: Jones, Murray, Burr, Collins, Harlan, etc. Fine condition. Price 50c each. Free lists.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. s3426

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. au3084

WILL BUY phonograph records, collections or dealers' stock, any amount, made before 1940. Have many for sale. Send wants.—J. Schneider, 128 W. 66, N. Y. C., N. Y. d6829

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f124201

CHOICE PONSSELLE, Caruso, Stracciari, Lazzaro, many others. List on request.—Jacksonville Children's Museum, 1061 Riverside Ave., Jacksonville, Fla. s3832

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants." For information write or visit.—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., N. Y. C. 28, N. Y. s3145

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o 120061 fact, aside from the fact that he made three Columbia records, I knew nothing about him, although I had used him as one of the Walsh Talking Machine Company's "Exclusive" artists, until I read the following in Variety for June 30, 1943:

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6 New Jersey. o 122511

W. Francis Firth, 75, painter-musician who formerly operated his own light opera company, died June 25 in Windsor, Ontario. A native of Auburn, N. Y., Firth went on the stage early and after appearances in the East, toured the country with the Milan Opera Co. and later with his own light opera company, which he both owned and managed. In addition to his work as a singing instructor, he was widely known as an artist, many of his paintings being hung in prominent American museums. He leaves his widow and a son.

Soon afterwards, I wrote to Mrs. Firth, asking for more information about her husband. On September 6, 1943, she wrote to me from Windsor:

My dear Mr. Walsh: Pardon my long delay in getting your letter answered... but I have not been very well, and still could be a lot better. Arthritis has gotten a hold of me and I have been almost a cripple, but I am thankful to say I am coming along nicely now. My deep thanks to God for His help!

Your kind letter was a great surprise to me, but I assure you a very pleasant one, to know that you, a perfect stranger, would write me such a lovely letter full of sympathy for me and my son in our deep sorrow. It was a terrible blow for me to have to take, but God knows best. I could have stood the strain better if I had been well, but it almost got me, waiting on him during his illness, although I had three trained nurses besides myself.

Yes, he was a baritone. I am so glad to know you think so much of his record. He made only two or three. I have a house full of his beautiful paintings. I wish you could see them. I appreciate very much what you say you intend to do as a tribute to Mr. Firth. I will send you soon a photo, if it will aid your purpose. Will be glad to hear from you again. Sincerely, Eva Firth.

Mrs. Firth's sentence, "I am glad to know you think so much of his record," referred to my telling her how much I had enjoyed her husband's rendition of "The Island of Dreams," a favorite Stephen Adams concert song, on Columbia record No. A769, combined with "I Know of Two Bright Eyes," by Henry Burr. It rated, in my boyish appraisal, right along with "The Two Grenadiers" and "Vulcan's Song," although I couldn't understand why the label called Firth a tenor. He was obviously a baritone. However, he is also described as a tenor in the November, 1913, catalog, which lists all three of his records. The others were No. 842, "There Let Me Rest" (Greene) doubled with "My Heart Has Learned to Love You," by Henry Burr (a record that I added to my collection only a year or two ago), and A1114, "The Little Irish Girl," coupled with "Off to Philadelphia," by Frank Croxton.

Like Brown and Martin, William Francis Firth was in his later years a vocal teacher, or, as he termed it, a "voice specialist." He had studios both in Windsor and in Detroit. It is not generally known, however, that in his earlier life he had sung in Italy as an operatic baritone under the assumed name of Francesco Baldanza. (Baldanza was actually his Italian teacher's name.) From a folder issued by Mr. Firth and sent to me by his wife I quote the following paragraphs, which were written to publicize his abilities as a lecturer on music:

Out of the World of Opera has come a brilliant Baritone, familiar in the theatres of Europe under the name Francesco Baldanza. After a remarkable debut with the San Carlos Opera Company the critics discovered that Baldanza was William Francis Firth, a Canadian Scot who had been for many years the favorite pupil of the great Signor Ernesto Baldanza. Said La Roma, leading Naples newspaper: "Francesco Baldanza, the new baritone at the San Carlos, was a lucky find for the management. In last

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 31)

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

PHONOGRAPHS

FOR SALE: Edison Phonograph. Tell us what you need.—Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. jly1401

MUSIC BOX DISCS

For Sale: Large number of 15 3/4" Regina Music Box discs, $2 each. Send for list. Minimum order, 3 records.—John W. Willever, 147 East Washington Ave., Washington, N. J. aux

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list offering above average prices. Wanted: 18 1/2" New Century, 13 1/4" Kalliope and 14" Perfection discs.—Insley C. Looker, So. Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. s3066

MUSIC BOX CARDS, Silent Night, Jingle Bells, Let Me Call You Sweetheart, Happy Birthday, Rock-a-bye Baby, Anniversary Waltz, $1 each.—Meyers, 1502 Dodge, Omaha, Nebr. jly3234

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES, also mechanical musical instruments of any description, sleigh bells, United States coins, large bills, discs for Imperial Symphonian & minute repeating watches.—Herbert H. Meyer, Pittsburgh 15, Penna. au3694

MUSIC LITERATURE

FOR SALE: Collectors' Guide to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (200 page book) $3.75, postpaid.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City 19, N. Y. n6064

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR sheet music. Everything. Catalog 10c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. jly12867

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC, hit songs, 1900-12, 3, $1; 1913-19, 4, $1; 1920's, 1930's, 5, $1; 1940's, 6, $1.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. jly12867

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. s3863

chimes on the hour and on each quarter of the hour, and plays the Westminster and St. John chimes. Brass and silver dial with moon and small second hand." Price $200.00.

Note: This clock, when new, a few years ago, probably sold at a price several times the original price of the other clocks illustrated and described in this article. You can draw your own conclusions on the relative value of modern versus antique items.

At the same Lancaster sale, a number of clocks of lesser importance were sold. Unfortunately, I do not have pictures of them. A great many of them showed unmistakable signs of restoration, particularly with respect to the tablets. The prices, therefore, do not have much meaning but I am listing them as a matter of interest:

1. Ithaca Calendar Clock, walnut with ebony trim.....$100.00
2. John Birge & Co. mantel clock ..... 57.50
3. Forrestville, 8-day shelf clock ..... 70.00
4. C. & L. C. Ives, 8-day shelf clock ..... 30.00
5. Birge & Peck, eagle, 8-day shelf clock..... 40.00
6. C. Jerome, 1-day, steeple clock ..... 15.00
7. Victorian alarm clock.... 7.00
8. French gilded clock under glass dome..... 47.50
9. Prescott walnut wall clock. 6.00
10. Bristol wall clock..... 4.50
11. Rapp shelf clock..... 17.50
12. Brass figure clock on base. 6.00
13. Victorian walnut mantel clock ..... 4.00

Note: Here is the inconsistency. Usually a C. & L. C. Ives clock with roller pinions is worth twice as much as a Forrestville Mfg. Co. shelf clock. In this instance, it brought less than half of the amount paid for the Forrestville clock.

MORE OF THE SAME NEXT MONTH

CLOCK DIALS STEEPLE CLOCKS

4 1/4" or 5" Dials. Can be cut to fit any Steeple Clock. Cards, 5 1/4 x 7" and 7 x 11" overall.

OTHER CLOCKS DIALS

Size Dials: 2 1/4"-3 1/4"-3 1/2"-4 1/4"-5"-6 1/2"-7 1/4" & 8", w/ 1" margin. Can be assorted lots.

One 50¢; 3 for $1. Doz. $3. Postfree.

Printed on Glazed Index Bristol

3 smallest sizes also, on glazed gummed paper. State Preference. ttc

W. L. KENDALL

629 W. Willis, Detroit, Michigan

MUSIC

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27)

evening's performance he displayed not only one of the finest baritone voices heard here in years but his interpretation of the part of Charles V. in Verdi's 'Ernani' was filled with dramatic power. That Baidanza is a Canadian will be a surprise to those who heard him."

Not only is Mr. Firth a fine singer but he is a splendid speaker, bringing fine diction and the authority of the speaking stage to his aid in telling the entrancing story of "Music Through the Ages." Taking his subject from days long before music was even printed, through the long journey until opera and the great modern musical works took their place in the world's culture, Mr. Firth illustrates each epoch or school with finely chosen examples of song, which include early church music, operatic arias, modern and ancient songs. . . Mr. Firth's program is ideally adapted for "Music Days," and Music Chairman will welcome this great artist whose program will make their day one long remembered in their Club. Mr. Firth will also give a limited number of recitals and concerts." The folder was signed by Firth's manager, William B. Naylor, who had offices in both Detroit and Chicago.

The number of Firth records had dwindled to one, "The Little Irish Girl," when the November, 1914, Columbia catalog appeared, but this time he was listed correctly as a baritone. The "Irish Girl" remained available through 1916, then disappeared. Meanwhile, Mr. Firth apparently was devoting more time to his painting than to his concert work and lectures, and continued preoccupied with painting until his death.

So ends my tribute to the two baritones and the basso who did so much to influence my love for good music when I was a very little boy. I wonder what they would have thought if they had known that they were appearing, as strictly exclusive

METAL CLOCK DIALS

(Black Roman numerals on baked white enamel)

DIAL SIZES:

4 1/4", 5", 6 1/4", 7", 8", with 2" sq. margin

STEEPLE CLOCKS:

4 1/4", 5", on 7x11" metal

Price $2 each

(In ordering, state whether steeple or square dial is desired.)

ORENDORFF'S ANTIQUES

317 N. Monroe St.,
Baltimore (23) Maryland

IMPORTED CUCKOO CLOCKS

A real Cuckoo clock! The bird pops out of the swinging door and "Cuckoos" the time every hour and half hour. SPECIAL NO. 103H, $13.75, wholesale only. Other models to choose from.

Replacement parts for all Cuckoo clocks: New bellows, bellows reathered, hands, chains, weights, pendulums, birds, dials, numerals, gongs, etc.

Each piece burned in the wood,
"Made in 1951".

Write for 32 page catalogue, 25c.

RALPH HERMAN CLOCK HOUSE

Brooklyn 18, New York

628 Coney Island Avenue,

artists, in the catalog of the Walsh Talking Machine Company while they were engrossed with their other pursuits. I imagine they would have been amused and, perhaps, even touched to think of the good which the records that they perhaps lightly regarded had done. It's a satisfaction to realize that Albert Edmund Brown at least does know of what he unwittingly accomplished.

TIMEPIECES

RESTORED ANTIQUE CLOCKS. Large stock, all running. Stamp for list. Dial refinishing. — Vandervort, 308 Bertley, Moberley, Mo. jly6045

COLLECTORS! DEALERS! Do your own clock repairing, refinishing. Complete instructions in "Clock Collector's Handbook," $1, postpaid.—Kenneth Karsten, Compo Parkway, Westport, Conn. ja12741

HAMILTON CHRONOMETER watch, 21 jewels, as new, padded mounting box and carrying case, $100.—Paul R. Peak, 952 So. Emerson, Denver 9, Colo. jly1481

MRS. MARTHA HILL HOMMEL

Gargoyle Antiques

Richlandtown, Pennsylvania

— BOOKS —

Plus Postage, Please — Thank You, Sincerely

153. THE LIFE OF QUEEN VICTORIA, by Chas. Morris, pub. 1901, illus., good cond., (the story of her reign), colorful binding, $1.50.
154. The Modern BRITISH PLUTARCH, by W. C. Taylor, pub. 1846, N. Y., good cond., $1.50.
155. ARITHMETIC by Warren Colburn, pub. 1847, Boston, Mass., good cond., $1.
156. ARISTOCRACY IN ENGLAND by Adam Badcau, pub. N. Y., 1886, good cond., $1.
157. PITMAN'S MANUAL OF PHONOGRAPHY, by Benn Pitman, pub. Cin., Ohio, 1855, good cond., illus. engraved on stone by Benn Pitman, page edges marbled, $1.25.
158. SANDER'S NEW SPELLER, by Chas. W. Sanders, pub. 1855, N. Y., illus., good cond., green illus. binding, $1.
159. MEMORIALS concerning DECEASED FRIENDS for Penna. from 1788-1819, pub. 1821, Phil., Pa., leather bound, good cond., $2.
160. NOAH WEBSTER'S Primary school pron. dictionary by Noah Webster, pub. 1848, good cond., $1.25.
161. A Brief Memoir of MARIA FOX, pub. Phil., Pa., 1859, $1.
162. Cuba's Great Struggle for Freedom by Gonzalo de Quesada & Henry Davenport Northrop, pub. Washington, D.C. 1898, illus., good cond., colorful binding, marbled edged pages, folding map, $1.75.
163. MENSURATION by John Bonnycastle, pub. Phil., Pa., 1858, leather bound, good cond., $1.
164. Journal of the Life Travels of Job Scott, pub. N. Y., 1797, leather bound, fairly good cond., $2.
165. MEMOIR of MARY CAPPER, abridged from volume edited by Katherine Backhouse, 1847, pub. Phil., Pa., good cond., $1.
166. SOPHISM of the PROTECTIONISTS by Frederic Bastiat, 2nd edition, paper cover bound, 1870, pub. N. Y., fairly good cond., $1.
167. A Daily Scriptural Watchword by Jane Johnson, pub. 1860, Phil., Pa., 50c.
168. ANNUAL REPORT of the Pa. Dept. of Agriculture for 1902, good cond., $1.
169. LIFE of Isaac Walton, Fanshawe, Wootton, Donne, Raffles, Exmouth, Collingwood, pub. London, 1843, good cond., $1.
170. The New Testament, pub. N. Y., 1853, cute 4 1/4" tall volume, good cond., $1.
171. HYMNS for Young Persons by Priscilla Gurney, cute small volume, fairly good cond., pub. Phil., Pa., 1840, 50c.
172. Adam's Latin Grammar, by Ben. A. Gould, 1858, pub. Northampton, loose in binding, 50c.
173. Mitchell's School Geography, by S. Augustus Mitchell, illus., 1853, pub. Phil., Pa., good cond., $2.
174. McNally's GEOGRAPHY, by Francis McNally, pub. 1866, N. Y., illus., has many colored maps, text & maps, good cond., binding slightly warped, $1.50.
175. INSTRUCTIONS for VOLUNTARY OBSERVERS of the SIGNAL SERVICE, U. S. Army, pub. 1882, Washington, D.C., good cond., $1.50.

jlyp

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

"Professor Edison" Invents the Phonograph

Whose Seventy-fifth Birthday Occurs this Month

By JIM WALSH

This year marks the 75th anniversary of the phonograph. On August 15, 1877, the original tinfoil talking machine gave its first performance.

Thomas Alva Edison was the pioneer recording artist. That distinction he achieved after having one of his laboratory mechanics, John Kruesi, construct a device whose likeness you can see on the cover of the May, 1952 HOBBIES. The job was not to cost more than $30, and the actual expenditure is said to have been $18. Young Edison, then only thirty years of age, recited "Mary Had a Little Lamb" into the "funnel" of the contraption. The sound came back in a squeaky falsetto from the sheet of tinfoil into which it had been indented, and tradition says that Kruesi, who hadn't believed the idea would work, exclaimed "Mein Gott in Himmel!" Never before, so far as we can ascertain, had the human voice been recorded and reproduced.

Claims have been made that a Frenchman, Charles Cros, whose name I have also seen printed as du Cros and Croys, struck on the idea of recording speech a few months before Edison, but his theorizing didn't go to the extent of reproducing sound. It was left to Edison to prove, what could be done and receive international acclaim for one of the greatest achievements of his extraordinary career.

However, it seems only fair to set down, for history's sake, the claim made by a now forgotten and never well known English mechanic, William Fitch. In 1906-07, readers of the Talking Machine News of London, carried on a controversy as to whether Edison, or someone else, invented the phonograph. Some participants, with anti-American feeling stronger than logic, contented the honor should go to Cros. One held out for Kruesi because the German mechanic constructed the original machine, even though he worked from a sketch drawn by Edison. Other parties to the argument chiefly those with some practical knowledge of talking machine craft and history, staunchly supported Edison. The Russians weren't claiming all the important inventions in those days, and didn't get into the battle of words.

Did Fitch Invent the Phonograph?

The most startling contribution came from Fitch, a member of the technical and experimental engineering firm of B. S. Fitch and Company, 358-60 Goswell Road, E. C. (Dickens lovers will recall that in 1827 the immortal Mr. Samuel Pickwick was living in Goswell street.) And here is what Fitch wrote:

It may not be known to the majority of your readers, although it is to a large number in the trade, that I was at work on the phonograph as early as 1876 and I constructed a practical machine which was publicly exhibited soon afterwards. . . . In the autumn of 1876, a client of mine asked me whether I could devise a machine to record sounds, but he was not a mechanic. He consulted me as to whether I could work out the idea. . . . After discussing the nature of sound-force, which we found to be vibratory and not mechanical, my client suggested the well-known window-rattling effect produced by sound, a phenomenon which I, long previously, had noticed from the efforts of the discharge of a gun. This suggestion appealed to my mechanical mind because of the possibility I at once saw it offered to place a needle, on the window pane, at right angles to its surface and thereby transmit vibrations into needle pricks on something soft; i. e., a drum covered with tinfoil.

I succeeded in constructing a machine on the principle and improved it, firstly by revolving the drum by hand on a helical axle, thus obtaining a series of foil punctures in a spiral line; and secondly, by driving the drum with a clockwork motor to impart continuous speed. To this day the phonograph is constructed on these lines. I therefore justly claim to be one of the first inventors of that machine.

Not having at that time a lathe large enough to turn the large brass mandrel and screw upon (about the concert record size) and to cut the screw, I placed the execution of this order with Mr. Norton, one of a well-known family of clockmakers living in Clerkenwell, and on December the 4th, 1876, about midnight (I have occasion to remember the exact date), I was re-cutting the screw in company with my client having found that the screw was defectively cut, I bought a screw-plate to do this, from Mr. Tyzack, of Old Street. The thread we cut was 26 to the inch. The needle in the center of the vibrating diaphragm was first made by me of hard steel. Finding that its point wore away very rapidly, I had a diamond stylus made which cut the vibrations on the record or tinfoil — the stylus did not indent the tinfoil. The diamond styluses were made for us by Mr. Holdsworth, of Spencer Street, Clerkenwell (now Messrs. Wood and sons.) We used this type of stylus for tinfoil.

When the machine was completed, it was exhibited at a Bazaar held at the Manor Rooms, Hackney; at a garden party in Penbury Road; also at the Lower Clapton Congregational Church school-rooms and at other places. On October the 10th, 1879, Mr. J. Lewis Young delivered a lecture at the Morley Hall, Hackney, and it was this machine (not an Edison machine, as has been stated) that was used in the demonstrations. It was manipulated by my aforesaid client. A glass funnel was used on that occasion with remarkable results, but the volume of reproduction given by the machine was due entirely to the fact that the record was cut and not indented.

A good while later, I designed and made the first clock or spring motor to be fitted to the talking machine and fitted it to the machine referred to. Before the year 1884 I made a brass mould

FASSETT'S RECORDING SERVICE

RECORDS COPIED
TO ORDER

ON HIGH QUALITY
PROFESSIONAL EQUIPMENT

DUBBING A SPECIALTY: Records from your collection, or from my own — which includes innumerable rare items — faithfully transferred to smooth-surfaced acetate discs, 78-RPM or LP, or to tape. SPECIAL EQUIPMENT FOR DUBBING TWO AND FOUR MINUTE CYLINDERS, EDISON DIAMOND DISCS, PATHE DISCS, AND FOR REPRODUCING OLD-SPEED COLLECTORS' ITEMS (LIKE THE EARLIEST CARUSO'S) AT CORRECT PITCH.

WIDE RANGE FM OFF-THE-AIR RECORDING ON TAPE OR DISC — YOUR FAVORITE RADIO PROGRAMS PERMANENTLY PRESERVED.

TAPE RECORDINGS, professional or amateur, single or dual track, 7½ or 15 inches per second speeds, transferred to discs with Ampex tape recorder.

FINEST RCA MICROPHONE AND AMPEX TAPE RECORDER FOR LIVE RECORDING ON LOCATION (CAPE COD AREA ONLY).

First Class Work at Relatively Low Prices

FASSETT'S RECORDING SERVICE

Box 362, West Falmouth, Massachusetts

MONTHLY RECORDS SALES

OF

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Fall Auctions. All bidders receive free of charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

Single rarities and entire collections purchased for cash

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Room 1135, DuPont Bldg., Miami 32, Florida

Established 1938

tlc

The Old Music Store

MUSICAL ANTIQUES

Melodeons, Pipe and Reed Organs, Coin Operated Pianos, Calliopes, and other smaller items.

Wette-Mignon Automatic Player Concert Grand with 300 classical rolls.

— Expert Repairing —

WRITE

ESTHER SKERRITT SANDERS

Deansboro, New York

tlx

Thomas A. Edison demonstrating the phonograph at the White House in April, 1878

for producing wax cylinders. I also converted an Edison spectacle arm phonograph by cutting off one of the diaphragm holders or spectacles and making it a single diaphragm holder. I also made this machine to run interchangeably by adding a screw to it and gear to run 100, 200, 300, 400, 500 to the inch . . . I further made in 1892 a small phonograph with the interchangeable gears. . . 100, 200, 300 and 400 threads to the inch, and this was submitted to the Edison Company at Northumberland Buildings, in reference to which I received a very congratulatory letter. I also made about that time a spring motor to run 28 records at one winding, which is still in my possession. It is about one-third the weight of the large Edison motors. The duplex diaphragm reproducers were also invented by me. . .

It is hard to know what to think of these sweeping claims. Fitch contended that he designed and made a phonograph almost a year before Edison produced his first model, but whether by accident or intention he made no specific statement that he succeeded in recording and reproducing speech before Edison's discovery was announced. He also, by his own assertion, antedated Edison and all other phonograph designers in the use of a diamond point. Fitch's letter, remember, was written in 1907, and Edison instruments were not equipped with diamonds until 1912. Moulded records were not issued commercially in the United States until 1901, but Fitch says he made a mould in 1886, the same year that commercial development of the phonograph got under way in this country. Thomas H. Macdonald, of the old Columbia company, is usually credited with making the first clockwork motor for talking machines, but Fitch says he was the originator. The Englishman also apparently thought of a gear-changing device which made it possible to vary the number of lines per inch on a cylinder, and Edison didn't bring out his four-minute cylinders until late in 1908, nearly two years after Fitch's letter was written.

Mr. Fitch appears to have been a man of good reputation and some standing in his field, but even eminent men sometimes have delusions insofar as laying claim to popular inventions is concerned. In the lack of sustaining the sound recording idea, and the craftsmen who are mentioned in the letter probably had died in the intervening thirty years — we are justified in holding that if Fitch really did construct a device on the order of a phonograph, it didn't record and reproduce sound prior to the one brought out by Edison. J. Lewis Young, mentioned by Fitch, was prominent in the English record business as the head of the company producing the Lambert indestructible cylinder. He frequently wrote for the Talking Machine News, but contributed nothing to corroborate Fitch's assertions.

Notice that Fitch says he first began constructing in 1876. The eleventh edition of the supposedly infallible Encyclopaedia Britannica erred by saying that the instrument "was invented by T. A. Edison in 1876" and Edison obtained his first patents in January, 1877. The Britannica was wrong by exactly a year. The same article asserts that Emile Berliner's first gramophone used "a cylinder coated with lampblack"! That certainly is not a statement of 100 per cent accuracy.

How Edison Hit On the Idea

In his later years Mr. Edison was frequently asked what he considered his greatest invention. He replied that the motion picture had more educational potentialities than the talking machine, but he also said: "I like the phonograph best. Doubtless that is because I love music. And then it has brought so much joy into millions of homes all over this country, and, indeed, all over the world. Music is so helpful to the human mind that it is naturally a source of satisfaction to me that I have helped in some way to make finest music available to millions who could not afford to pay the price and take the time necessary to hear the greatest artists sing and play." Edison's publicity quoted him as saying: "I want to see a phonograph in every American home."

Next arises the question, "How did Edison hit on the idea of inventing a sound reproducing instrument?" The story has been told often during the past 75 years, but many of the accounts are wrong. Since the phonograph is now at the scriptural age of three score years and ten, it may be well, to quote an authentic publication — a booklet, "How Edison Invented the Phonograph," issued by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., in the 1920's. The story is told simply but with enough detail for our purpose:

Scarcely a week passes that some country newspaper does not state that Thomas A. Edison's discovery of the phonograph was prompted by the accidental pricking of his finger by the needle of a telephone diaphragm with which he was experimenting. We shall have to put a quietus on this old newspaper story. The true story is best told in the inventor's own words. . .

"I was experimenting," Edison says, "on an automatic method of recording telegraph messages on a disk of paper laid on a revolving platen, exactly the same as the disc talking machine of today. The platen had a spiral groove on its surface, like the disc. Over this was placed a circular disc of paper; an electromagnet with the embossing point connected to an arm traveling over the disc, and any signals given through the magnet were embossed on the disc of paper. If this disc was removed from the machine and put on a similar machine provided with a contact point, the embossed record would cause the signal to be repeated into another wire. The ordinary speed of telegraphic signals is 25 to 40 words a minute, but with this machine several hundred words were possible.

"From my experiments on the telephone I knew of the power of a diaphragm to take up sound vibration, as I had made a little toy which, when you

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Will pay top cash for the following records: Any by Jimmie Rodgers, any by Richard Jose, any by Singing Sam. State price and describe. I will not bid.—C. A. Duncan, 347 E. Redondo Beach Blvd., Gardena, Calif. s68431

RECORDS FOR SALE

Choice Collection. Thousands of records. Mail auctions. Free lists.—A. H. Sles, 92-11 35th Avenue, Jackson Heights 72, N. Y. d120291

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists: Jones, Murray, Burr, Collins, Harlan, etc. Fine condition. Price 50c each. Free lists.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. s3426

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. au3084

WILL BUY phonograph records, collections or dealers' stock, any amount, made before 1940. Have many for sale. Send wants.—J. Schneider, 128 W. 66, N. Y. C. N. Y. d6829

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. t124201

CHOICE PONSSELLE, Caruso, Stracclari, Lazzaro, many others. List on request.—Jacksonville Children's Museum, 1061 Riverside Ave., Jacksonville, Fla. s3882

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants." For information write or visit.—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St., N. Y. C. 28, N. Y. s3145

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 5, New Jersey. o122511

940 PHONOGRAPH RECORDS, many in the large size, a great variety in albums, including classical selections, $135.—C. E. H. Whitlock, 15 Broadway, New Haven 11, Conn. au1612

CYLINDER RECORDS. One thousand for sale. Stamp for new list. Cylinder phonographs, records, bought and sold, repaired.—Nugent, 12 N. Third, Richmond, Va. o3692

ORGAN

Aeolian organ rolls 10" wide, perforated, 10. Also Ampico, Welte-Mignon, etc. Player rolls bought, sold, traded. Extra Standard Roll boxes, 4½c. See—Durrell Armstrong, 222 S. Vassar, Wichita, Kans. au1003

FOR SALE: Pipe Organ. Robert Morton, model 49. Restored to A.1 condition. Two manual. Compact with pipes in cabinets. Complete with blower. $1500.00 F.O.B. Dallas.—Lee Co., 934 N. Lancaster, Dallas, Texas. s3215

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

recited loudly in the funnel, would work a pawl connected to the diaphragm, and this engaging a ratchet-wheel served to give continuous rotation to a pulley. This pulley was connected by a cord to a little paper toy representing a man sawing wood. Hence, if one shouted: 'Mary had a little lamb,' etc., the paper man would start sawing wood. I reached the conclusion that if I could record the movements of the diaphragm properly I could cause such records to reproduce the original movement imparted to the diaphragm by the voice, and thus succeed in recording and reproducing the human voice.

"Instead of using a disc, I designed a little machine using a cylinder provided with grooves around the surface. Over this was to be placed tinfoil, which easily received and recorded the movements of the diaphragm. A sketch was made and the piece work price, $18, was marked on the sketch. I was in the habit of marking the price I would pay on each sketch. If the workman lost, I would pay his regular wages; if he made more than the wages, he kept it. The workman who got the sketch was John Kruesi. I didn't have much faith that it would work, expecting that I might possibly hear a word or so that would give hope of a future for the idea. Kruesi, when he had nearly finished it, asked what it was for. I told him I was going to record talking, and then have the machine talk back. He thought it absurd. However, it was finished, the foil was put on; I then shouted 'Mary had a little lamb.' . . . I adjusted the reproducer, and the machine reproduced it perfectly. I was never so taken aback in my life. Everybody was astonished. I was always afraid of things that worked the first time. Long experience proved that there were great drawbacks found generally before they could be made commercial; but here was something that there was no doubt of."

Those who are old enough to remember will recall the great furor created by the newspaper announcement, immediately following this invention of the phonograph in the autumn of 1877. That speech and song could be actually recorded, preserved and reproduced seemed impossible, and while the world rang with the news that it had been actually accomplished there was such incredulity as to its truth that Edison was deluged with requests for machines with which the facts might be demonstrated to the public. His laboratory was overrun day and night with visitors from all over the world who had come to see and hear an inanimate machine talk.

To satisfy this insistent demand and to enable him to carry on his other work, he had a number of these primitive tinfoil phonographs made, which were taken for exhibits to various parts of the country, drawing vast crowds wherever they were

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

WANTED TO BUY, books, catalogs on cylinder phonographs, records.—Nugent, 12 N. Third, Richmond, Va. o3692

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. s3863

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Write your wants.—Fore's, H-3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. jly126121

PHONOGRAPHS

DISC PHONOGRAPHS, WANTED. Table model disc phonographs, any make, with diaphragm on small end of external horn, preferably. State condition, price and details.—A. B. Mc Fall, 952 Pleasant St., Oak Park, Ill. au1861

MUSIC BOX DISCS

For Sale: Large number of 15¼" Regina Music Box discs, $2 each. Send for list. Minimum order, 3 records.—John W. Willever, 147 East Washington Ave., Washington, N. J. au1X

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list offering above average prices. Wanted: 18½" New Century, 13¼" Kalliope and 14" Perfection discs.—Insley C. Looker, So. Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. s3065

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

WANTED: MUSIC BOXES, also mechanical musical instruments of any description, sleigh bells, United States coins, large bills, discs for Imperial Symphonian & minute repeating watches.—Herbert H. Meyer, Pittsburgh 15, Penna. au3694

VIOLINS: Two "August Gemunder & Sons" 1902, perfect condition, $225 each.—E. A. Frier, 12 Lyon Avenue, Menands, N. Y. o3882

MUSIC LITERATURE

FOR SALE: Collectors' Guide to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (200 page book) $3.75, postpaid.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City 19, N. Y. n6064

AUCTION: Three complete music manuscripts written and autographed. 1. Victor Herbert, 1916, 6 pages. 2. John Philip Sousa, 1917, 2 pages. 3. Jerome Kern and P. G. Wodehouse, 1917, 3 pages. Bid before August 15th. Winners notified and 30 day guarantee.—Ronald Lowden, 141 West 82nd, N. Y. 24, N. Y. au1804

MISCELLANEOUS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts, old, post cards, and advertising cards.—Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. d6046

WANTED: Reproducer for Edison Amberola 30 phonograph.—George R. Hare, 3006 14th Avenue, Tampa 5, Fla. s3652

WANT ALL TYPES of old music boxes, coin operated and otherwise. Write, quote best price, and picture, if possible.—George Trambitas, 3126 Elliott Ave. Seattle 1, Washington. j6123291

WANTED: Sammy Kaye & Ink Spots transcriptions, V discs, Armed Forces Radio Service Recordings. I will pay top prices. "Money is no object."—Paul Adams, 30 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. s3006

MISCELLANEOUS FOR SALE

Latest player piano rolls, 75c. List.—Durrell Armstrong, 222 S. Vassar, Wichita, Kans. n128421

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, direct imports, $1.80—Jules Wolff, 74 Worthstreet, New York. o6844

SWISS & REGINA music boxes, bar-room pianos; barrel & hand organs; large Regina piano, with drums; bells & cymbal playing, 32" disc. Old coin operated Edison juke box; playing cylinder records; accordion playing paper roll; musical alarm and others.—Ray Albertson, Box 23, Atlantic, Ia. o6637 shown. The older generation of New Englanders will undoubtedly remember the exhibit of this early phonograph at the Old South Church in Boston. Crude as this early phonograph undoubtedly was — a crude machine of iron, brass and tinfoil, with its harsh, metallic reproduction — it would repeat what it had recorded, whether, speech, song, whistling, laughter, or what-not, to the mystification, wonder and delight of an earlier generation to whom this was the greatest marvel of the times.

One version has it that Charles Carman, foreman of Edison's machine shop, was among those present when the first phonograph received its initial try-out. Carman, so goes the story, had bet Edison a box of cigars that the machine wouldn't work, and pretended to be disgusted when he lost. Still another account maintains that the bet was made between Edison and Charles Batchelor, later superintendent of the Edison Phonograph Works. Allen O. Tate's book, "Edison's Open Door," quotes Edison as saying that Kruesi set a price of $30 — not $18, as given in the Edison booklet — "and I told him to go ahead."

Whatever the price, there is no doubt about the sensation the phonograph caused. We have the first person testimony of such contemporary observers as an electrical expert, Edward H. Johnson, an associate of Edison's who wrote some reminiscences in the February, 1890, issue of Electrical World:

In the course of one of my lectures . . . it occurred to me that it would be a good idea to tell my audience about Edison's telephone repeater, at Buffalo, which I did. My audience seemed to have a much clearer appreciation of the value of the invention than we had ourselves. They gave me such a cheer as I have seldom heard. I did not comprehend the importance of the device at the time; but the next morning the Buffalo paper announced in glaring headlines: "A GREAT DISCOVERY! A TALKING MACHINE BY PROFESSOR EDISON. MR. EDISON'S WONDERFUL INSTRUMENT WILL PRODUCE ARTICULATE SPEECH WITH ALL THE PERFECTIONS OF THE HUMAN VOICE."

I realized for the first time that Edison had, as a matter of fact, invented a "talking machine". . . Realizing that and having had sufficient experience by this time to profit by such things, I made a special point of this feature in my next entertainment, which was at Rochester, and had a crowded house. . . That satisfied me that I had better go home and assist in perfecting the instrument. . . So I cancelled thirteen engagements and went back home with those newspaper clippings. I went straight down to the laboratory, which was then at Newark, and I said, "Mr. Edison, look here. See the trouble you have got me into." He read these things over and said, "That is so. They are right. This is what it is — a talking machine."

So, according to Edward Johnson, a Buffalo newspaper headline writer was the originator of the term "talking machine." It may as well be mentioned that Mr. Edison never liked that name and, almost forty years later, insisted that his masterpiece of the acoustic recording and reproducing era, the New Edison Diamond Disc, was not a talking machine. (A writer for the New York

Artists Helen Davis and Victor Young, singing and playing for Thomas A. Edison.

Daily Mail gave the New Edison its widely advertised slogan, "The Phonograph With a Soul." Other newspaper writers said Edison records were "Re-Creations," and Edison copyrighted "Re-Creation" as the official designation of his discs.)

Early Excitement

Some interesting details of the phonograph's experience in those days when it could be accurately described as in its "infancy" are given in a booklet, "The Life of Thomas A. Edison in Word and Picture," issued in 1927 — the 80th year of the inventor's life and the 50th anniversary of his favorite brain child. It relates that "Edison took his new invention to the offices of the Scientific American in New York. When his phonograph had recited and reproduced 'Mary Had a Little Lamb' over and over, a big crowd had gathered in the room and the floor was in danger of collapse. The morning papers were full of the event. After several larger and better machines were made, Edison had an exhibit of the phonograph at Menlo Park, to which thousands of the curious flocked from all points of the compass. So great was the interest in this almost uncanny device that the Pennsylvania Railroad ran special trains to accommodate the crowds." (Concurrently, Edison began to be known as "The Wizard of Menlo Park.") The phonograph also greeted the Scientific American editors with these words:

"Good morning. How do you do? How do you like the phonograph?"

Several months later, after his first phonograph patents had been issued, Edison received a telegram urging him to come to Washington. On April 18, 1878, he gave an exhibition to many members of Congress and other notables. About 11 o'clock at night President Rutherford B. Hayes invited Edison, who was fated to become the most famous man in the world, to visit the White House, bringing his phonograph with him. Interest was so keen in the miraculous device that Edison didn't leave until half past three the following morning.

Here I think we may make a reasonable assumption. Rutherford B. Hayes was a grave, bearded gentleman of aloof Olympian dignity, but he must have been human enough to want to hear his own voice — or a travesty of his voice — reproduced from a machine. Surely Edison affixed a sheet of tinfoil and invited the President to have his say, thereby giving Mr. Hayes the distinction of being the first chief executive to make a record. On the other hand, Benjamin Harrison, who held office half a generation later, appears to have been the first whose name appeared as a recording artist in any phonograph company's catalog.

A photograph taken when Edison visited the White House shows that he gave his demonstration with eith-

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 2.)

In his spacious bell rooms A. C. Meyer examines one of his most prized bells. It is an elaborately etched rare Spanish bell bearing inscribed medallions of six church dignitaries.

under the title Chimes in the Wilson Standard Catalog for Public Libraries.

... In the southwest a Texas school teacher, Mrs. Bessie Fitzhugh, has been compiling a book of a very different nature, dealing with historic bells of that state. Publication of Mrs. Fitzhugh's book is eagerly awaited, for Texans are notably proud of their state history in all its phases.

... In the far West two of the most widely informed people on the subject of bells are Mr. and Mrs. DeWitt Hutchings of famed Mission Inn at Riverside, Calif. The delightful little catalog describing the vast Mission Inn collection of bells is a veritable "Bible" for all who really wish to be acquainted with their bells.

... Though the East is a fertile field for studying historic bells, collectors in the Middle West probably have to their credit more published books and pamphlets on the subject than any other regional group. A. C. Meyer of Missouri, the acknowledged dean of bell collectors, has several published pamphlets illustrating and identifying outstanding bells from his collection of approximately 1,500. These are of inestimable help in identifying one's own bells. Says an Ohio collector, "It is a rare dealer who knows anything about bells that come into his shop; so I find myself frequently referring to Mr. Meyer's catalogs and I have found a number of my bells that correspond to his pictures and descriptions." Mr. Meyer's other publications include his book Travel

Search for Bells. This is a fascinating, informal travelogue describing a pre-war bell-buying jaunt which he and the late Mrs. Meyer made across Europe.

BELLS FOR BABIES

In discussing unique uses of church bells in a recent issue of HOBBIES, attention was called to the Glendale, Ohio, church bell that chimes out nursery rhymes to announce a birth. Several readers have reported that the First Presbyterian Church in East Aurora, N. Y., follows this same custom. Upon hearing of a birth, the organist hurries to play the Doxology on the carillon. By the time she has finished, townspeople have stepped outside their houses and offices to hear more clearly the next tune, which informs them of the child's sex. If it's a boy they hear "Little Boy Blue"; if it's a girl, "Little Bo-Peep." After the nursery rhyme, a lullaby is played to the town's youngest citizen and then a hymn to the mother.

The tocsin of the soul—the dinner bell
The all-softening, overpowering knell,

*Please mention HOBBIES when
replying to advertisements*

PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 25)

er his original cylinder instrument or another made on the same principle. However, he had already been experimenting with discs and his patent application described methods of recording both ways. Emile Berliner is generally considered the inventor of the disc machine, but it is more accurate to say that he produced the first commercially practical disc outfit employing the lateral cut system of recording. Having determined that the vertical cut was superior to the lateral, Edison used it for both cylinder and disc. Record buyers of today owe Mr. Berliner no debt of gratitude for popularizing the inferior lateral cut, because he wanted to avoid the patent complications that would have resulted from using the hill-and-dale. Through a combination of circumstances, Berliner's system became established as the popular method, and the vertical cut today is obsolete except for the highest quality radio transcriptions. But there is virtually no dispute among specialists that the vertical is inherently superior to the other.

As evidence that Edison recorded experimentally on discs as well as cylinders, the following letter which he wrote from Menlo Park, New Jersey, on December 29, 1877, to Frank Foell, of 510 Second Street, Philadelphia, may be quoted:

"Dear Sir: Your letter and sketch received. Am much obliged for the suggestion and it would be valuable, but owing to the inconvenience of placing the paper on the cylinder I had to adopt a revolving plate with a volute spiral and have one now working satisfactorily. The reproduction of the voice is now absolutely perfect. Yours, Thomas A. Edison."

Only a little more than four months after the phonograph spoke for the first time, its inventor, it will be observed, was claiming its reproduction was "perfect." Perfection is a claim which has been made for sound reproducing devices every time a new model has been brought out in the last three-quarters of a century!

Despite this use of the disc, Edison soon returned to the cylinder, explaining that it was theoretically perfect for the purpose of sound reproduction, since all grooves on the "rollers" were of even length, whereas the grooves on a disc become smaller as they near the center, with a consequent loss of tone quality. RCA-Victor has labored this point in recent years by shouting that sound waves on its seven-inch "45's" stop short of "the distortion point." And, although ten-inch Edison Diamond Discs would play up to five minutes, the recording always stopped a long way from the label.

Continuing with the booklet on Edison's life: "Now the phonograph entered the general exhibition stage of its development. Offices were established at 203 Broadway, New York, whence demonstrators were sent out to all parts of the country. After going through a course of instruction the demonstrators were given machines and started on their way rejoicing. Even in those early days of the phonograph, still in its tinfoil form, famous prima donnas were not averse to trusting their precious voices to its crudities." (A drawing of a woman singer making a record is reproduced from an 1878 issue of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.)

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 35)

PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27)

Cornet "Tone Tests"

Here I stop quoting to wonder who was the first famous artist to make a tinfoil record. There seems no way of knowing, but the cornet virtuoso, Jules Levy, who died in 1878, was one of the earliest. Levy also probably was the first performer whose records were listed in a special celebrity class. When he made a series of cylinders for Columbia in Washington in 1893 or '94, the price was set at $2 each.

During a six-day period beginning June 3 and ending June 8, 1878, Levy played at Irving Hall in New York, giving "tone tests" somewhat similar to those which famous artists made forty years later to prove there was no difference between their singing or playing and the reproduction by the Diamond Disc. But there was plenty of difference between Levy's playing and the tinfoil phonograph's distortion of his art. Other well-known singers and musicians who took part in the demonstrations were Emily Winant, a soloist at St. Thomas' Church; S. P. Warren, George Warren and Eugene Oudin. Most of the audience grinned as the performers sang or played into the funnel, from which a tinny "play-back" would emerge a few minutes later.

Even earlier, on March 21, 1878, Professor J. W. B. Arnold had given a demonstration in Chickering Hall, about which the New York Tribune commented that "the tone is slightly metallic and has a strained effect, very much like the voice of a ventriloquist." The shortcomings of "Professor Edison's" ingenious toy were so apparent that in 1884 Stephen Fiske wrote, in his "Off Hand Portraits of Prominent New Yorkers," "the phonograph is practically a failure; the excitement about it soon died out." That was largely because Edison had given up trying to improve it while he worked on developing a practical system of electric lighting.

Levy may have been the first man to make a cornet record. On the other hand, Thomas W. Henry, who died suddenly in Boston on Saturday evening, March 13, 1897, may possibly have beaten Levy to the pioneer toots. A death notice said that Henry had "been a well known player to the phonograph beginning as early as 1878 when he played into one of its original tinfoil instruments, then being exhibited at the old South Church in Boston. The celebrated Baldwin Cadet Band records (who remembers them now? — J. W.) were all taken while the band was under his direction. Mr. Henry was greatly interested in the phonograph and took as much pride in having the Cadet Band records of a superior quality as the company that recorded them. In the most brilliant and dazzling selections, Mr. Henry's cornet was a prominent feature and could be heard clear and sharp above the rest of the band. He was born in Manchester, England (also the birthplace of Ada Jones — J. W.) and came to this country at the age of twelve and soon afterwards was known as 'The Boy Cornetist.' He was never married but was a member of the BPOE."

First Professional Recorder

A 1914 Edison Blue Amberol catalog says that the late Edward M. Favor was the first member of the theatrical profession to make a record. Perhaps it would be worth while to quote the brief biography of this favorite pioneer recording artist, who was the first to be made the subject of an article in this HOBBIES department:

This well known comic opera comedian was born in New York City. He first sprang into prominence as a principal under the management of the late J. M. Hill. The long run of E. E. Rice's "1492" at Wallack's Theatre, New York, made him famous as a Broadway comedian. He has starred in musical comedies with his wife, Edith Sinclair, and the team is a well-known "headliner" in vaudeville. He has been principal comedian with Klaw and Erlanger, the Shuberts and other prominent managers. Mr. Favor was the first professional to sing in a phonograph. His record was put on exhibition in the lobby of the Park Theater, Boston, during the long run there of "Ship Ahoy!" and attracted wide-spread attention.

I wonder just when this Favor record was made. It hasn't previously occurred to me to try to find out when "Ship Ahoy!" had its long Boston run, even though it might be possible to get that information. Favor's last records appeared in 1914, but he was still appearing as a character actor in Broadway productions until shortly before his death in 1936. He was 80 then. If he began making records in the phonograph's earliest days — say, in 1878 — he would have been only 22. He had long been an established favorite when Billy Murray first saw him recording in 1897 for Edison's San Francisco distributors, Bacigalupi Brothers.

An 1879 Phonograph Recital

Mentioning Favor's Boston appearance reminds me of a letter from a veteran music lover, Mrs. Marion McIntyre Suck, of Hyde Park, Massachusetts, which appeared in the September, 1927, issue of the long dead Phonograph Monthly Review. I quote it as an excellent account of the impression made by the primitive phonograph upon cultured music lovers:

I wish I could take you phonograph folks, especially the young ones, back years and years to the year 1879. I think it was. The scene was a bleak, hideously unattractive hall in Boston. It was crowded with the most unmusical Americans you ever saw in all your lifetime. That curious, noisy audience crowded forward to where a man was demonstrating, apparently for their amusement, a dingy looking brass toy with a funny looking brass horn;—out of that horn was coming a veritable nightmare of hideous sounds, and a man's voice, harsh, strident and raucous, came through the horn, grinding out in hoarse metallic notes a classic of the day, "The Man in the Moon is Looking, Love, is Looking, Love." The overjoyed crowd seemed to get quite a thrill out of the noise made by the man in the moon, although it really was rougher stuff even than Graham McNamee broadcasting a football game from California or a prize fight from New York. . . . One wag in the crowd suggested playing the little toy backward, to see if it would sound any worse! . . . It was nearly fifty years before I could bear to listen to another phonograph, so hideous was my memory of that first one.

But one incident I still remember. Beside that brazen horn of long ago I saw one man standing as if too fascinated to leave. The gentleman was Louis C. Elson, later of the New England Conservatory, the first Bostonian, I think, to write a history of American music. But I doubt, pioneer though he was, whether he had the slightest realizing sense of the part that new invention was to play in the music of the future.

Edison Recital of 1895

Can Edward Favor, I wonder, have been the "vocalist" whose singing was travestied in that tinfoil reproduction? Again mentioning Favor reminds me that L. Brevoort Odell, of Church Hill Road, Branchville, New Jersey, recently found a handwritten program of an "Edison Phonograph Entertainment," given at 8 o'clock, Saturday evening, January 26, 1895, in Park Ridge Congregational Church. Admission for grown-ups was 25 cents and for children, 15. The Saturday afternoon matinee, at 3 o'clock, was 15 cents to all. Mr. Odell has kindly presented me with this program. It occurs to me that it would be interesting to move forward 16 years from 1879 to 1895 and get a taste of the phonograph's "quality" after wax cylinders had taken the place of tinfoil. Presumably these records were made by Edison, although the inventor's company had not then begun issuing regular monthly lists. Some of the artist's names—Favor's, for instance — are familiar to present-day collectors, but others I have never heard of except in this listing:

1—Selection, "God Save the Queen," 23rd Regiment Band; 2—Song, "Let Me Like a Soldier Fall," E. M. Favor (a more serious type of number than he sang in later years); 3—Banjo, "Imperial March," Vess Ossman; 4—Orchestra, "Children's Games," Banta's; 5—Mandolin, "Concert Polka," Edwin Myers; 6—Quartet, "Dance on the Old Barn Floor," Unique; 7—Piccolo, "Scotch Airs," J. Forchner; 8—Selection, "Germany and America," 23rd Regiment Band; 9—Comic Song, "He Didn't Split the Wood," E. M. Favor; 10—Banjo Solo, "Old Madrid," Vess Ossman; 11—Clarinet, "Mignon," D. Pfaff; 12—Song, "Old Black Joe," Thos. Butt; 13—Peephone — "Popular Airs," Laura Bennett; 14—Song and Orchestra, "You Had Better Stay at Home, Lads" (no artist's name); 15—Cornet Solo, "Sweet Spirit, Hear My Prayer," Jules Levy; 16—Dialogue, "Casey as a Judge," Leoni and Everett; 17—

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 37)

For bracelets as well as for rings a favorite design with the Romans was of a coiled snake. These generally were of gold chased with the scales, eyes, and other finish. The majority of Roman gold bracelets were massive and the work on them correspondingly heavy. These heavy bracelets figure in the old story of Tarpeia. She bargained with the Sabines to open for them the city gates of Rome in exchange for the bracelets they wore on their left arms. When the Sabine king Tatius got through the gate as a result of this arrangement, he contemptuously threw upon the traitress not only his thick bracelet, but his shield too, which he had also worn on his left arm. When all the soldiers followed his example, Tarpeia was speedily crushed to death.

Brooches of a circular type with short pin probably originated in Rome and then traveled in all directions. It became, and perhaps still is, the commonest type, though the ring undergoes all kinds and manners of changes. One of the most appealing designs is that of small figures of animals and birds in full relief, generally made in bronze, and sometimes gilded, but, whatever the finish, cherished by all collectors.

—I. G.

JEWELRY FOR SALE

Charming Dresden Type bracelet composed of 7 handmade gold edged china slates. Exquisite workmanship of an old Staffordshire potter. Each piece marked "1943", the date of manufacture. Natural color designs. Roses, violets or Colonial courtship scenes. $8.50. Matching brooch, $1.50 postpaid. Approval basis.—Stimson's, 408 14th St., Santa Monica, Calif.

o 68691

CONWAY'S ANTIQUE JEWELRY, 510 Conti St., New Orleans, P. O., Box 2503. —Jade, Catseyes, Aquamarines, Rings, Crests, Seal-Fobs, Charms, Bracelets, Slides, Gem-stones. n122741

AUGUST BIRTHSTONE: Carnelian or Sardonyx rings and jewelry.—Frederick T. Widmer, Jeweler, 31 West St., Boston, Mass. (Est. 1844) Liberty 2-3917.

jly120291

COLLECTORS: Send us your wants. Prompt replies to all inquiries. We are dealers in jewelry, china, glass, silver, furniture, paintings, objects of art, etc.—Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Phila. 3, Penna. au33805

Make costume jewelry for fun or profit. Send 10c for catalogue and instructions, to: —Hobby Jewelers, 1349 2nd Street, Lorain, Ohio. au34005

OLD AND UNUSUALS in jewelry, costume and otherwise. Write wants.—Majestic, 530 1/2 South Main Street, Elkhart, Ind. au3272

LARGE STOCK of antique jewelry accumulated from our vast gold-buying. Approval shipments sent dealers upon request and reference.—B. Lowe's, Holland Bldg., St. Louis 1, Mo. au1612

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 37)

Quartet, "Hush a Bye, Baby," Brilliant; 18—Selection, "Joys of Matrimony," 23rd Regiment Band; 19—Song and Banjo, "Hear Dem Bells," Walter Ellis; 20—Quartet, "Hot Corn Medley," Unique; 21—Xylophone, "Monastery Bells," Miss Jessie Warner; 22—Whistling Solo, "Mocking Bird," Joe Johnson; 23—Song and Orchestra, "Waiting By the Sea," Joe Natus; 24—Pipeophone, "Washington Post March," Laura Bennett; 25—Balled, "Leonore," E. M. Favor; 26—Selection, "Belle of Chicago," 23rd Regiment Band; 27—Quartet, "Der Wasserfall," Brilliant; 28—Banjo, "White Star Line March," Vess Ossman; 29—Comic Song, "Christo Colombo," E. M. Favor; 30—"Making a Record" (apparently a recording demonstration); and 31—Cornet Solo, "Home, Sweet Home," Jules Levy.

Old-Timer Reminiscences

I imagine "Joe Johnson" was a mistake for the Negro whistler, George W. Johnson. And who knows anything about the "pipeophone," the instrument played by Miss Laura Bennett?

Space limitations prevent this article from containing a comprehensive account of the scientific development of the phonograph. For that reason, I am restricting myself largely to narrating the impression made by the unique invention during its earlier days. Valuable from this standpoint is a letter written by a St. Louis attorney, W. W. Henderson, and published in the Talking Machine Journal for December, 1918.

I was at my son's home the other evening listening to his wonderful Edison phonograph and my mind wandered back to my boyhood days. At that time I was employed as general workboy by the firm of L. G. Tillotson & Co., 5-7 Dey street, New York, then the largest railway and electrical supply house in America. In those days electrical supplies were very limited in number. This was in the early eighties, being either in 1880 or 1881.

One day, Thomas A. Edison himself came over to the store from the laboratory, which was then at Menlo Park, New Jersey, bringing with him his first model of a phonograph for demonstrating to his friend, L. G. Tillotson, who, like Mr. Edison, had been a former telegraph operator. I remember this machine well, as it was left at the store for some time, and Mr. Edison personally instructed me how to operate it for demonstrating purposes. Compared to the present marvelous Edison machine, it was indeed crude.

I will describe it to you. It consisted of an iron cylinder about eight inches long and three inches in diameter. This cylinder was very finely grooved, in screw fashion, the groove being very similar to the grooves on the old wax cylinder records. This cylinder was hung between two brackets with a handle at the end. Suspended over this cylinder was the combined mouthpiece and reproducer, being not unlike the transmitter of our present telephones. Around the cylinder would then be wrapped tinfoil, the needle on the mouthpiece touching the tinfoil very lightly. By turning a handle attached to the end of the cylinder, it was so synchronized with the mouthpiece that the one revolved while the other moved from left to right, and by talking into this mouthpiece the needle point made impressions on this tinfoil. To reproduce these impressions the mouthpiece arm was moved back to the point of beginning and all that had been spoken into the mouthpiece was reproduced. So wonderful had that first model then seemed, it hardly appeared possible that a man within his lifetime could so improve it to the extent of the New Edison.

The Phonograph in Europe

The tinfoil phonograph was demonstrated in Europe almost as soon as in this country. Sir William Preece gave the first exhibitions in England, in 1878 or 1879. The instrument had also reached Germany by that time, as witness this letter from Gustav Schraplan, of Prescott, Arizona, which appeared in the Edison Amberola Monthly for September 1919:

Your article in the Amberola Monthly on the invention of the phonograph made me look backward to the year 1878, when at the age of seven years, I was one of the first artists(?) to make a record on an Edison phonograph. At that time I was a scholar at the Gymnasium at Aix la Chapelle, Germany. Our teacher announced that a man from America would show for the small sum (but very big to us) of 10 pfennigs — about two cents — a wonderful machine, invented by Mr. Edison, that would talk and sing. There never was a more excited bunch of youngsters. All of us were at the classroom away ahead of time, each boy holding his precious entrance fee tightly in his hand. Nothing short of murder could have opened one little fist till the man with the magic machine arrived. . .

Our man then opened a small box and lifted out his phonograph. What! This little machine talks and sings! Impossible! We were disappointed; we had expected a big shiny machine with plenty of wheels. The man made a little speech. He then placed a piece of prepared paper about six inches square on the cylinder, adjusted the soundbox, turned the handle and made a speech about Mr. Edison's wonderful invention, shoved the soundbox back to starting point, turned the handle and we boys heard for the first time the reproduction of the human voice. The proudest and happiest moment of a long life was when my teacher told me to sing a little song, entitled "I Had a Little Comrade," into the machine. At the end of the song I crowed like a rooster. After my record was played I was presented with it. I saved that record for many years, vowing that when I was a rich man I would buy one of those machines and play my record to my children.

The following, from the Edison Phonograph Monthly for July, 1907, gives some information about early phonograph manufacture:

Among the visitors to the Edison Laboratory during May was Seligman Bergmann, who has had a business connection with Mr. Edison or his interests for many years. In 1878, with a factory at Avenue B. and 17th Street, New York City, Mr. Bergmann manufactured a quantity of the old style tinfoil phonographs, modeled after the original phonograph invented by Mr. Edison while at Menlo Park. The original phonograph made in the Edison Laboratory at that place now occupies a place in the Kensington Museum at London. The numerous "original" phonographs which come to life from time to time in this country are part of the lot made by Mr. Bergmann and patterned after the original. . . Some years ago he disposed of his business here and went to Germany, where he continued the manufacture of similar goods (electric light and telephone supplies.)

As is generally known, the original phonograph, which Mr. Edison presented to the South Kensington Museum, has since been returned to the

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 55)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECODING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 37)

Edison Laboratory, and is kept in a vault. A replica, however, is on public display.

What became of the other tinfoil phonographs patterned after the great original? Some have turned up through the years. For instance, the Edison Phonograph Monthly for May, 1916 reported:

There has just been brought to light at Fairfield, Iowa, a rare specimen of the earliest form of phonograph, the tinfoil, hand-cranked type. This device was purchased from Mr. Edison's company in 1878 by the late Senator J. F. Wilson and is now in possession of his son, J. F. Wilson, Jr. The bill of sale is also in the possession of Mr. Wilson and shows that the old phonograph is No. 11 and was at that time called "the Edison Speaking Phonograph."

And here is a newspaper clipping, apparently from the late 1920's:

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 28 (AP).—The original model of Thomas A. Edison's second phonograph is the prized possession of Winfield Chase Parkins, of Atlanta, who obtained it from his grandfather, Winfield Chase, who in turn was presented with it by the inventor himself. Mr. Chase, at one time an examiner in the patents office, was a close friend of Edison and frequently studied with the inventor, since both were interested in astronomy.

Mr. Edison's Prophecies

It has sometimes been said that Edison had no conception of the potentialities of the recording device he had invented; that he thought of it only as an entertaining toy. On occasion, the instrument did seem to appeal most to the boyish of the inventor's nature that gave him a fondness for playing pranks. A family legend, says that Edison once hid a phonograph in a guest's room. At eleven o'clock, the guest heard a ghostly voice saying, "One hour more!" Sleepless, the guest waited until midnight when the same voice said, "Prepare to die!" "As he fled," we are told, "there stood Edison shaking with laughter."

When his practical side was uppermost, Edison was most interested in the phonograph's capabilities, developed or latent, as a business device. Originally, he thought that its principal purpose would be for "Letter writing and all kinds of dictation without the aid of a stenographer." This sort of use met with determined opposition from many stenographers for years, but today the only recording and reproducing instrument sold by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., is the dictating machine, the Ediphone. For many years the company made only Ediphones using cylinders records, but its current product is in the disc form. As most record collectors know, Edison stopped making phonographs and records in the autumn of 1929.

But getting back to what Edison foresaw in the phonograph's future, he wrote an article in the June, 1878, issue of the North American Review which has been reprinted in part many times since. It is too long to be quoted here, but the inventor's ideas of the uses to which his best liked invention might be put may be summed up thus:

(1) Letter writing and dictation of all kinds without a stenographer; (2), "phonograph books" for the use of the blind; (3), teaching elocution; (4), reproducing music; (5), "the family record" — recordings of sayings, reminiscences, etc., by members of a family in their own voices, and even the last words of dying persons; (6), "speaking" music boxes and toys; (7), clocks that would speak to announce the time for such things as going home and going to meals; (8), preservation of languages; (9), additional teaching uses; and (10), connection with the telephone, "so as to make the invention an auxiliary in the transmission of permanent and invaluable records, instead of being the recipient of momentary and fleeting communications."

Most of these visions of "The Wizard of Menlo Park" have become realities. Today, the use which he placed fourth, "reproduction of music," is certainly the phonograph's most important function. But specialized forms of the apparatus are internationally used for dictation; "talking books" are a commonplace blessing for the blind; languages were taught by phonograph almost as soon as the wax cylinder came into use in the late Eighties; telephone messages are frequently recorded nowadays; and phonograph music boxes and "speaking toys" are not unknown. A few clocks of the type imagined by Edison have been made as novelties, but such officious timepiece uses as he dreamed of have never been popular, nor has the average American family taken kindly to the gruesome idea of recording the last words of dying persons. But, considered as a whole, Edison's powers of prophecy were remarkably good.

An Old Interview

Less widely known than the North American Review article is an interview with Mr. Edison which the enterprising New York World obtained no great while after the phonograph made its debut. Since few persons are likely to have access to the World's ancient bound files, most of the interview is reprinted here for its historical value. The alert reader will discover that the inventor's prophetic gifts were not so good when he went into details as when he let his imagination deal in generalities:

"... The reporter followed Mr. Edison into the wash-room, where about a dozen lathes and machines were in full operation. On one of the tables was the model. The improvement in the phonograph consists in a circular plate being substituted for the cylinder, and clockwork for the crank. (This mention of the "circular plate" seems to date this article as around December, 1877. Compare Edison's letter to Frank Foell. — J. W.)

"This clock-movement is a very important improvement," said Mr. Edison. "It ensures complete regularity and accuracy, and can be thrown out of and into gear simultaneously. We're going to start a publication office in New York when the phonograph is ready."

"What do you intend to publish?" asked the reporter.

"Music, novels, general literature, and many other kinds of matter that are read by persons, and reproduced by instruments, or their vocal organs, for the benefit of themselves and other persons. Take music, to begin with. We will phonograph orchestral concerts by brass and string bands, instrumental and vocal solos and part-songs. The sheets bearing the sound impressions of this music will be removed from the phonograph and multiplied to any extent by electrotyping, and persons can make selections of any composition they desire. Then this music may be reproduced by any phonograph, with all the original sweetness and expression; and not only that, but the pitch can be raised or lowered by increasing or diminishing the speed of the phonograph."

"What will such a sheet of music cost?"

"About 25 cents."

"But how can you take an orchestra, when it is necessary, in talking to the phonograph, to apply your mouth close to the diaphragm?"

"The phonograph will be attached to a hole in one end of a barrel, and from the other end will project a runner like those used in ventilating steamships. This will receive the music from the entire orchestra, but of course not reproduce it with so great a volume. Piano music will be phonographed by a hood being placed over the instrument, and the volume of the reproduction will be one-fourth that of the piano."

"What method will be pursued with literary matter?" asked the reporter.

"We calculate that an ordinary 50-cent novel can be got on this," said Mr. Edison, tapping the circular plate, which was about six inches in diameter. "Novels and valuable literature will be read to the phonograph by elocutionists and persons understanding the subjects presented, and the matter will be multiplied by electrotyping in the same manner as music. You see, therefore, that you can have a phonograph in your parlor with an album of selected phonographic matter lying beside it. You can take a sheet from the album, place it on the phonograph, start the clockwork, and have a symphony performed. Then by changing the sheet you can listen to a chapter or two from a favorite novel, and this may be followed by a song, a duet, or a quartet. At the close the young people may indulge in a waltz, in which all may join, for no one need be asked to play the dance music. You can easily see," continued the Professor, "what an advantage the phonograph will be to the blind; and, indeed, I have already received one hundred orders from such persons."

"In some respects the phonograph will be a blessing to persons who are constitutionally tired."

"Yes, and to industrious persons also," answered Mr. Edison. "You know a man can never judge of the value of his own words or exactly how to deliver them by hearing his own words or exactly how to deliver them by hearing his own voice. Now, if a lawyer speaks an address to the phonograph in the way he thinks it should be rendered and then has the instrument repeat it, he can estimate very fairly what the effect would be on a court and jury. Again, there are many men who can talk better than they can write. They can, therefore, talk to the phonograph without the hindrance necessarily caused by using a pen; they can stop when they please and wait for ideas, and then they can let someone else copy the production as the phonograph repeats it. You see this opens up a vast field, and one suggestion follows another. Now," continued Mr. Edison, with another of his happy laughs, "the lover, while waiting for his sweetheart to finish her toilet, can place on the phonograph a sheet of the pretty things she has said to him before, and so occupy himself for a time with her counterfeit presentation."

"What will be the cost of a phonograph?"

"About $100."

And now we have reached a logical stopping point, with Mr. Edison's

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 61)

GREEN RIVER ANTIQUES

Robert F. Urbano

85 Spring St., Williamstown, Mass.

- Peachblow Hobnail ruffled shades on matching oil lamps in matching lacy brackets with mercury reflectors, a real rarity, the pair $60.00
- Heavenly blue opalescent Coin Dot syrup pitcher, applied handle 16.50
- 7" Pair of bright yellow Sandwich Loop & Petal candlesticks, one under petal chip, the pair 28.00
- Hobnail cordials, one in amber, $7.00; and one in blue 9.50
- Pair swirled white over cranberry open dot salt & peppers, no tops 9.50
- 5 1/2" Diamond pattern amber slipper with frosted bow 5.00
- Yellow Block pattern hat, cute 4.00
- Pair Loop & Dart 4" sauce dishes, each 2.50
- 3" Clear D. & B. mug with ribbed applied handle 4.00
- 3 Shell & Jewel tumblers, each 2.50
- Tree of Life footed tumbler 3.50
- 6 1/2" Tall square shape clear D. & B. cologne bottle with stopper 4.50
- Garfield Drape footed creamer 5.80
- Sawtooth band top & bottom clear syrup 4.50
- 5 1/2" High & 5 1/2" diam. small Sawtooth compote 6.00
- 8 1/2" S border deep amethyst M. G. plate 7.50
- 8 1/2" Gothic edge M. G. plate, $5.00; 7 1/4", the same 3.50
- Egg shape bright floral shaded satin glass sugar shaker 6.00
- 6 Bavarian ramekins & plates in lovely delicate floral pattern, all perfect, the set 15.00
- 4 1/2" Square base handled night stick in meissen type Onion pattern 5.00
- 5 1/2" diam. handled & match holder night stick in bright blue, delft like dec. of birds & flowers 5.00
- 4" Violet dec. mustard in gold far, no ladle, cover 2.50
- Little green & white German basket in china with whole strawberry dec. on side 4.00
- 11 1/2" Octagonal pewter plate with folded rim 10.00
- 18x11" Scalloped & folded edge pewter platter 15.00
- 15 1/2"x10 1/2" Scalloped & folded edge pewter platter with well & feet 17.00
- Pewter gill measure with handle 5.00
- 8 1/2" Burnished brass mayo hump base, very ornate, a little beauty 7.00
- Pair of double iron brackets, $11.50; & single lacy brackets 3.50
- Morton & Bremner hanging scale with 3 chains & pan 4.00
- Iron lady in bathing suit foot scraper 4.50
- Godley's complete leather bound volumes for years 1852 & 53, each 4.50
- Peterson's 1856 leather bound, 2 pages torn but there 4.50
- Pair Kate Greenaway bibs: "Good Luck" and "Be Happy," one fair & the other poor condition, the pair 3.50
- 11 1/2" Diam. & 5" deep walnut burl bowl in beautiful refinished condition, a rarity & a beauty 25.00
- 14 1/2"x21 1/2" Deep beautiful heavy oblong bowl, perfect 17.50
- 2-Drawer plain walnut spool cabinet with brass pulls 10.00
- 12x14" Deep walnut frames with gold liner, good cond. 3.50
- Pair pillow back slat plank seat hitchcock chairs in the rough chair in good 15.50
- Baby's bar back high chair in good 9.50
- Stamp for Reply — Packing Included auc

MARIAN E. COULTER
FLYING MANE RANCH

Route No. 37, Toms River, N. J.

- 18" G.V.W. lamp, duck hunter and dog one side, quail on other side, not original shade, but hp. same design, brass base, $25.00
- Moss Rose 12-cup coffee pot, fine china, C. & D., a beauty 18.00
- Pr. Milford Ware Eng. vases, 11 1/2", double handles, white & pink roses, cream background, pr. 22.00
- Bohemian ruby vase, 14 1/2", frosted floral design and cut to clear diamond band, pedestal base 35.00
- Brass cuspidor with agate insert, 4 1/2"x7" 6.00
- Large lobster 2-section dish, luster and gold decoration 18.00

TRANSPORTATION EXTRA au

TRAILSEND ANTIQUES

Box 45, East Marion, Long Island, N. Y.

- PATTERN GLASS: Lion creamer, $10; yellow 3-knob Thousand Eye 6" open compote, $6; 8", same, $10; Fishscale water, $5; Owl, 7 1/2" high, water, $3; same, small creamer, 3 1/2", $3; 5 Swirl 6" plates, R.W.L. 163, $8, one mint, others very minor unseen wear marks.
- CURRIER PRINTS: Tree of Life, $5; Southern Belle, $3; pair Papa's & Mama's Darlings, $5.
- ALBUM, original 16 camera shots, Columbian, 1892, ships, in Hudson River, Pinta, Nina, Santa Maria, etc., $5. Pictures, 4x5.
- PINE W. W. GREENER knock down double barrel 8 gauge shot gun, presentation piece, 1889, etched, $50.

TRANSPORTATION EXTRA auc

FAVORITE PIONEER
RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 55)

prediction of a sound reproducing instrument, selling for just one dollar, that would be capable of reeling off the complete words of a novel, or all the music of a symphony from a six-inch disc. In details he was wrong; in generalities, right, since the long playing record is a reality today. Looking back three-quarters of a century, as we arrive at the phonograph's 75th anniversary, we cannot — at least, I cannot — refrain from paying a warm tribute to the clear intellect and the foresight that were so characteristic of Milan, Ohio's, most distinguished son. Not for his invention of the phonograph alone but for many other achievements, Thomas Alva Edison, most of us agree, ranks with the greatest men of all time.

Next Month—EDDIE MORTON

DORIS McLAUGHLIN

Box 305, Brockton, Mass.

1. Purple Grape & Cable Northwood punch bowl and 5 cups, lovely, perfect $30.00
2. Apple green plain cruet, matching stopper 6.50
3. Pink satin glass rose bowl 12.00
4. Meissen Onion pattern hanging salt box, pine hinged lid 13.50
5. Lacy iron double lamp bracket 5.00

Write Wants — Stamps, Please auc

HODGES HOBBY HOUSE

15504 S. Atlantic Ave.,
Compton, Calif.

1. Cranberry threaded glass open salt dish $ 8.50
2. Blue ONION PATTERN kitchen: jars, barrel shape, covers, excellent condition; tea, coffee. Each 8.75
3. Kewpie sitting in a hooded basket, all bisque, 4 1/2" high. Adorable 12.50
4. FAIRY LAMP, dark amber shade decorated with white enamel flowers, original matching base, clear candle cup, 4 1/2" high 29.50
5. Beautiful white Nilsen FAIRY LAMP, large ruffled saucer base, clear Clarke's insert and candle cup, same as Pl. 3. No. 7 "Clarke's Fairy Lamps" by D. Tibbitts. Perfect Write
6. MARRIAGE LAMP, white opaque glass base, blue font, clam's broth match holder 85.00

TRANSPORTATION EXTRA auc

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★
COLLECTORS - DEALERS

If you collect any of the following please write for carefully prepared descriptive mimeo lists. Each list 25c, all for $1. Refunded on 1st purchase made.

Photos most items available 15c each.

- DOLLS. (Photos $1.50, refunded 1st purchase).
- BLUE, PINK, ETC., HISTORICAL STAFFORDSHIRE.
- EARLY SORT PASTE ENGLISH AND CONTINENTAL CHINA, PORCELAINS, ETC.
- GLASS, FINE PATTERN GLASS. (Please tell what pattern you are collecting).
- GLASS, LACY SANDWICH GLASS, about 150 items, clear and colored.
- GLASS, VICTORIAN, "ART GLASS," AMBERINA, SATIN, HOBNAIL, PEACHBLOW, ETC.
- MILK GLASS, abt. 50 items, guaranteed authentic.
- CURRIER & IVES, about 50, large and small.

Everything Sold with Money-back Guarantee

B. H. LEFFINGWELL

135 Normandy Ave., Rochester 11, N. Y.

THE ANTIQUE SHOP

22 Branch St., R. D. No. 1, Utica, N. Y.

- CHOCOLATE SET, Noritake, Serves 4; white, blue & gold trim $10.50
- DRESSER SET, milk glass; 3 piece, gold leaf trim, raised & stippled, tray 12x9" very old 8.25
- AMETHYST miniature hand lamp, 7" tall, small crack in chimney at top, applied handle 24.00
- MAJOLICA basket, beautiful designs, red, etc. Send 25c for picture 27.50
- Trumpet, brass marked J. W. Pepper, Phila. nice shape 6.50
- TEAPOT, Royal Doulton, 5 1/2" tall, golden yellow to a red, brown, English city scenery 4.50
- FIREPLACE URNS, pr., 16" tall, footed, beautiful pr. brassed with red center. Picture 25c 34.00

Write your wants, maybe we can help you as we have hundreds of other items. Stamp on inquiries, Please. Transportation Extra auc

MRS. ROY DOUGLASS — Pine Brook, N. J.

- 4-Pc. set, ETCHED DAKOTA: cov. butter, sugar, creamer & spoon, all proof $30.00
- Old decorated TOLE oval box, hinged lid 10.00
- Child's early STAFFORDSHIRE MUG, "Leap Frog" & "Playful Tray," slight age check in bottom 8.50
- Emerald green SCENT BOTTLE (purple) 4.00
- Rare AMBERINA I.T.P. SYRUP JUG 28.00

TRANSPORTATION EXTRA auc

Remember Grandma's Lamps?

Beautify your old lamps and preserve their authentic charm with handpainted partly-frosted chimneys. African Violets pictured burst into bloom at the turn of a switch. No. 2 chimney (3" base) fits the standard electric converter. (We can also supply you with the converter - $2.00 each.) Ask for illustrated folder. Dealers send for wholesale prices on letterhead or business card.

CHIMNEY - $3.00 Each, Postpaid
(Add 20c West of Rockies)

Available at better antique and gift shops or write to . . .

The Village Shop.
MARIE DORBANDT
R. D. 5
YORK,
PENNA.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

EDDIE MORTON

By JIM WALSH

Among the things I keep promising myself I'm going to do when I have time is writing an article for one of the "quality" magazine on "The Decline of the Comic Song." This acidulous essay will contend that most of the co-called "popular" records sold today are bought by teen-agers and that the phonograph companies, by their own admission, cater more to the tastes of 16-year-old girls than to any other age group. These youngsters, I shall say with some acerbity, obviously have no sense of humor or they wouldn't spend their money on recordings of such deplorable trash as the wailings of certain so-called "singers," whose maudlin moans assail my affronted ears from juke boxes.

I shall also make the point that whereas there are clever fun-makers, and many not so clever, specializing in spoken comedy on radio and television, there are virtually no singing comedians, barring an occasional old-timer like Eddie Cantor. Some, like Arthur Godfrey, try to sing but don't succeed. Because, no thanks to teen-age domination, there is no longer much market for humor in popular music, song writers have virtually stopped turning out comic songs, and when they do write something that's supposed to be funny, it's usually so silly—in keeping with the juvenile taste for inane idiocy—that it merely disgusts reasonably mature and intelligent persons, such as the reading group to whom I shall be addressing my splenetic remarks. To what a come-down have we descended I shall say, in my lofty sour-puss manner, from the great early radio days of the immortal Frank Crumit and Billy Jones and Ernest Hare!

Even more, what a worse decline from the golden days of the phonograph comedians of the acoustic era, when records were bought for the entertainment of the whole family—not just that of the teen-agers alone! What singers have we today who can be compared with those greatly gifted ones whose records I can play by the hour with pleasure—such masters as Billy Murray, Al Bernard, Collins and Harlan, Bob Roberts and Eddie Morton! Recordings by these virtuosos of vocal tomfoolery provide an invaluable service in helping to unkink the knots in my frequently harried nervous system. I can enjoy more "intellectual" forms of music, such as chamber ensembles and the symphony (opera has never had much appeal for me) only when I am rested and relaxed, but mentally alert. The blessed comedians and ballad singers come to my rescue when I'm too fagged out to concentrate on the more elevated things. Of course there are sometimes weeks at a stretch when I am too busy, or too tired, to listen to any records, but that's another matter.

II

I mentioned Eddie Morton just now. Eddie Morton! There, my fellow record collectors, is a name for you!—the name of one of the most unjustly neglected but greatest comedians who ever took a firm stance in front of the recording horn and thrust his head forward or drew it back, depending on whether he was about to sing softly or take a high note that might "blast" without proper precautions. We may now dismiss, for the present, further consideration of my unborn jeremiad on "The Decline of the Comic Song," for we have carried at the honored name of the hero of this month's Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists.

My being able to write a reasonably accurate and comprehensive article about Eddie Morton is the culmination of ambition and research that have been spread over some twenty years. This department is now well into its eleventh year, but long before I knew there was a magazine called HOBBIES I was an earnest admirer of Eddie Morton and was trying without success, to find out something about his personal history and to learn whether he was still alive.

In 1932 I had a letter published in The Billboard, asking for information about Morton and a few other favorite recordings artists of the acoustic days, but got none concerning the one-time "Singing Policeman." Had I only known it, Ed. Morton was then alive but had retired from the stage and was a prosperous restaurant owner in Wildwood, New Jersey. But nobody told me. Neither did I see any account of his death when, as I have learned only within the past year or so, he died in Wildwood of a heart attack in 1938.

Fourteen years ago, in October, 1938, Billy Murray, accompanied by one of his dearest friends, Jimmy Martindale (one of my dearest, too!), came to see me in Johnson City, Tennessee, where I then lived. I remember asking the dean of recording comedians if he knew what had become of Eddie Morton. "The Boss" said he wasn't sure, but believed he had heard Eddie was living in retirement on a New England farm. We agreed that Morton was a fine comedian, and Jimmy has recently confirmed this opinion in a letter, saying:

Ed. Morton was a great performer. I am always vastly amused when I play "There's Lots of Stations on My Railroad Track," to hear him pronounce "boiler" as "berler." His all-out favorite of mine is "I'd Rather be a Minstrel Man Than a Multi-Millionaire." Incidentally, a record of that type I would play with a Kakti needle, due to its heavy vibrations.

(That pronunciation of "oy" sounds as "er" in the Brooklyn style, was a favorite stunt of Eddie's. In one of his best records, "The Last Shot Got Him," he sings of a cowboy's rival having "sperled his plans for matrimony.")

Alas, in October, 1938, the genial, jovial Mr. Morton had been dead for several months, but neither Billy, Jimmy nor I knew it.

III

Let me pause here to make it clear that not all teen-agers go entirely, or at all, for the vapid, humorless popular tunes of the present day. Some of the most enthusiastic letters I receive from readers of this department are from boys around 14 and 15. (No girls of that age write to me. Apparently they care only for sickly sentiment.) I have long contended that if the youngsters now growing up had an opportunity to listen to the better artists and cleverer music of an earlier era they would prefer it to the rubbish foisted on them today. They like what they hear because they have never heard anything else. My own Walsh's Wax Works program has always received a warm reception from the younger set.

I frequently have to do a large amount of research, involving letter writing, sending for photostats of newspaper obituary notices, buying copies of birth and death certificates, etc., before I am able to piece together enough information to write one of these biographical sketches. That is especially true where the subject is dead or has long dropped out of public view. Because of the difficulty of obtaining adequate information, I have not yet been able, in spite of many requests, to write about favorite old-time recording artists as Albert Benzler and Charles D'Almaine.

Year after year, I met with the same lack of success in my search for "leads" about Eddie Morton. No matter where I turned I seemed to find myself wandering up a blind alley or bumping my head against a stone wall. About eight years I wrote to Joe Laurie, Jr., the famous vaudeville and radio comedian and co-author with Abel Green of the book, "Show Biz," and asked what he could tell me about Morton. Joe replied he hadn't known Eddie but some of his fellow members of the Lambs Club recalled Morton as "The Singing Policeman." Yet no one he talked with knew whether Morton was still living or dead. That seems odd, for Eddie had been a prominent Lamb.

A Victor Talking Machine ad of 1908. Eddie Morton is No. 25 among the popular recording artists shown here.

Eddie Morton making a Columbia record. Among the famous musicians in the orchestra are Leo Zimmerman, Trombone; Vincent Buono, Cornet, and Marshall P. Lufsky, Flute. Note violins equipped with Stroh Amplifiers to direct sound into recording horn.

I made intermittent, but persistent, inquiries of this nature, getting nowhere, until late in 1950. Then I made up my mind that my longstanding admiration of Eddie Morton wasn't going to continue unrewarded. Some way or other I would find out more about that great comedian with the mellow, minstrel-style voice and an engaging personality that twinkled irresistibly through his records. Regardless of the effort and trouble involved, I was determined to know whether he was still alive, to trace the details of his career and to write a HOBBIES article about him.

Not only that, but for the benefit of other collectors, I would compile a list of the Morton records and publish it as a supplement to my sketch. It is impossible to enumerate all the recordings of some popular artists, for they made thousands. Charles Harrison and Walter Scanlan, about whom I have recently written, are good examples of "mass production" record makers. On the other hand, with a singer like Eddie Morton, who was popular on the stage for many years but whose phonograph career was comparatively brief, space sometimes can be fouled for such a list.

IV

Let me detail some of the steps I took before I finally was able to solve what I had begun to think of as "the Eddie Morton Mystery." Being a regular contributor to Variety, I wrote a letter which appeared in the December 6, 1950, issue under a typical heading: "Anthologist Seeks Some Yesteryear Greats Among Pioneer Record Artists." The first two paragraphs read:

As some readers know I have been writing "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists" in HOBBIES magazine for several years. Gathering biographical information about some of the old-timers who are no longer active is frequently a tough job. I'm wondering if anybody can give me some info on those whom I shall list below:

Eddie Morton, who was a native of Philadelphia and was known in vaude as "The Singing Policeman." I consider Morton one of the best singing comedians in the history of the phonograph but have been unable to learn whether he is still alive. I'd appreciate any information concerning him, and if Eddie reads this I'd like to invite him to attend the next party for pioneer recording artists to be held on Long Island next September."

I also asked for information about Harry Tall, Arthur Clough, Elida Morris and a comedian who made two Edison cylinders in 1905 under the name of "Tascott."

This appeal brought two replies. A man in Danmore, New York, wrote that he would send me a letter within a week, giving complete information about all the artists I had mentioned. I hopefully answered him the day his letter came but to this moment have received no further word. More to the point, I received the first of what has proved to be a steady stream of communications from the veteran song writer, Ray Walker, whom I have already mentioned more than once in these pages. Ray didn't know what had become of Eddie Morton but was eager to help me find out. Rather ironically, he suggested that "a Brooklyn man by the name of J. V. Martindale, who a lot of old records, might be able to help you."

Ray did have a vivid recollection of playing the piano as accompanist for the comedian. He wrote:

I played for Eddie many years ago at private clubs. He sang "The Preacher and the Bear" better than anyone else. The first time I played for him he handed me the manuscript. It was written in E natural (four sharps). That is one key I can't play in very well. I played it one half-tone lower (in E flat—three flats). After the show he told me I had played it better than anyone else. He didn't know I had transposed it. The other players probably played it in E natural, which is a tough key for the majority—O. K. for concert players but tough for vaudevillians. I can read music in four sharps but can't play it in that key.

Well, that at least gave me an interesting item about Eddie Morton that I hadn't previously known. I had never heard that he had specialized in singing "The Preacher and the Bear," although of course I knew he featured the type of "blackface" humor that used to be known as "coon shouts." The song about the Negro preacher treed by a grizzly, written by Joe Arzonio (a pseudonym for the Philadelphia music publisher, Arthur Longbrake) would have been ideal for Morton's style.

However, from the time Arthur Collins made his first records of "The Preacher and the Bear" in 1905, it was considered "Collins' song" for recording purposes, and no other comedian recorded it in this country until Collins retired in 1925. (It was sung for several English recording companies by "the Australian Entertainer," Albert Whelan.) And, good

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Will pay top cash for the following records: Any by Jimmie Rodgers, any by Richard Jose, any by Singing Sam. State price and describe. I will not bid.—C. A. Duncan, 347 E. Redondo Beach Blvd., Gardena, Calif. s68431

RECORDS FOR SALE

Choice Collection. Thousands of records. Mail auctions. Free lists.—A. H. Sles, 92-11 35th Avenue, Jackson Heights 72, N. Y. d120291

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists: Jones, Murray, Burr, Collins, Harlan, etc. Fine condition. Price 50c each. Free lists.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. s3426

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. n3084

WILL BUY phonograph records, collections or dealers' stock, any amount, made before 1940. Have many for sale. Send wants.—J. Schneider, 128 W. 66, N. Y. C., N. Y. d6829

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f124201

CHOICE PONSELLE, Caruso, Stracciari, Lazaro, many others. List on request.—Jacksonville Children's Museum, 1061 Riverside Ave., Jacksonville, Fla. s3882

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, varied stock. Please state "wants". For information write or visit Record Collectors Service, 602 East 88th St., N. Y. C. 28, N. Y. s3145

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122511

CYLINDER RECORDS. One thousand for sale. Stamp for new list. Cylinder phonographs, records, bought and sold, repaired.—Nugent, 12 N. Third, Richmond, Va. o3692

THE RECORD SPEAKS. The parrot will say "just as good", but does he know what he is talking about? Can present-day re-issues, re-recordings, pressed at will in any form, take the place or give the excitement of getting rare originals, of the great singers of the past? Of course not. There is no substitute for an original. Besides the great thrill, pride and enjoyment that originals give, the money spent is a sound investment that grows with time. Your collection is worth just what you put into it. Is there anything to boast about a collection filled with common re-issues? We can supply originals dating from 1896 on, for the beginner, and for the most advanced collector. We welcome your friendship. Write us.—Record Treasures, 740 E. 183rd St., New York 57, N. Y. n33212

ORGAN

FOR SALE: Pipe Organ. Robert Morton, model 49. Restored to A.1 condition. Two manual. Compact with pipes in cabinets. Complete with blower. $1500.00 F.O.B. Dallas.—Lee Co., 934 N. Lancaster, Dallas, Texas. s3215

as Morton's version must have been, I can't imagine how it could have improved on Collins'. "The Preacher" was considered "Sir Arthur's" masterpiece. He not only recorded it for almost every American phonograph company of his time, but also sang it thousands of times in his engagements with the Record Makers, the Eight Famous Victor Artists and in other stage appearances.

Friends of Ray Walker's tell me he is a big-hearted and unfailingly helpful gentlemen. I believe it, because he at once set to work writing to friends in Philadelphia, trying to track down Eddie Morton's latter-day activities (assuming Morton was still alive and living in his birthplace) and also helping me with much other research dealing with former recording artists. What little information Ray was able to get from his Philadelphia friends turned out anything but accurate. Nevertheless, he won my gratitude by "being in there, pitching." Meanwhile, with no better luck, I was exploring other "angles" of my own.

For a while my luck was no better than Ray's. I still didn't know whether Eddie Morton was living or dead, but since I had heard years ago that he was at one time a Philadelphia policeman it occurred to me that the Quaker City's police department should have some record of him. So I wrote to the Superintendent of Police. In reply, I received a one line note from Sergeant M. J. Fleisher, of the Police Superintendent's office, saying: "No record of this man having been a member of the Bureau of Police." Evidently, in the light of later developments, the records are defective or the Sergeant didn't carry his research back as far as the year 1898.

I also wrote to the Evening Bulletin and the Inquirer, asking if their files contained any data on Morton. Walter Lister, the Bulletin's managing editor, replied:

Dear Mr. Walsh: Search of our library files fails to reveal anything on Eddie Morton. Sorry.

On February 4, 1951, a postal card I received gave me my first definite "lead." It also gave the sad information that the comedian was no longer alive. It was signed by the Inquirer's librarian, J. E. Molloy, and said:

Mr. Fitzpatrick turned over to me your query about Eddie Morton and we find that Morton died April 11, 1938. For some reason the Inquirer did not carry a story at the time, or at least I have not been able to find one, but an obituary did appear in the Record on April 12.

I assumed from this letter that Morton had died in Philadelphia, and sent an item to HOBBIES which gave a wrong impression. As I was to learn a little later, and as I have already said, his death occurred at Wildwood, New Jersey, where he had lived for many years.

In the meantime, I had also written to the Philadelphia Department of Public Health, asking if there was anything on file in its archives concerning Eddie Morton. On February

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

WANTED TO BUY, books, catalogs on cylinder phonographs, records.—Nugent, 12 N. Third, Richmond, Va. o3692

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. s3863

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Write your wants.—Fore's, H-3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. jly126121

PHONOGRAPHS

DISC PHONOGRAPHS, WANTED. Table model disc phonographs, any make, with diaphragm on small end of external horn, preferably. State condition, price and details.—A. B. Mc Fall, 952 Pleasant St., Oak Park, Ill. o3861

PHONOGRAPHS: 3 Victor disc with outside horns; 1 early model with wooden arm, rare, 1 larger with wooden horn; exceptionally nice, 1 with aluminum horn, $25 each. Edison cylinder with morning glory horn, $25. Edison cylinder with built in horn, 30 model, $15. 1 large size, $20. Table model, disc with built in horn, $10. 50 Edison disc records, $10. Write us your wants if not listed. 25 records furnished with each phonograph.—Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. s1426

EDISON HOME PHONOGRAPHS with 25 cylinders each. 1 in good condition with morning glory horn, $25, the other in perfect condition with beautiful brass topped horn, $35.—Howe, 158 East Dixon, Dayton, Ohio. s1462

MUSIC BOX DISCS

FOR SALE: 20, 27" diam. Regina discs for $50.—Bornand, 139 4th Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y. s1631

MUSIC BOX DISCS bought, sold, traded. Send for my want list offering above average prices. Wanted: 18 1/2" New Century, 13 1/2" Kalliope and 14" Perfection discs.—Insley C. Looker, So. Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. s3065

WANTED: DISCS FOR "FORTUNA" music box, 16 1/2" diam. with 3/4" diam. center hole.—R. Bornand, 139 4th Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y. s1671

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

VIOLINS: Two "August Gemunder & Sons" 1902, perfect condition, $225 each.—E. A. Frier, 12 Lyon Avenue, Menands, N. Y. o3882

MUSIC LITERATURE

FOR SALE: Collectors' Guide to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (200 page book) $3.75, postpaid.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City 19, N. Y. n6064

6 the director—Dr. Rufus S. Reeves—wrote me a letter giving little information but of such an individual literary flavor that I feel HOBBIES readers will enjoy it. I know that I was grateful for Dr. Reeves' courteous and friendly attitude:

Dear Mr. Walsh: Due to the indefinite nature of the information requested in your letter of application, the Division of Vital Statistics of the Department of Public Health will be unable to institute a search for the birth and death records of Edward Morton, known as "The Singing Policeman."

An extensive search covering a number

MUSIC BOXES WANTED

WANT ALL KINDS of music boxes, regardless of condition. Also any steel disc records or Swiss, cylinders, original pictures & catalogues. Describe briefly. Veteran starting hobby.—G. P. Battley, 2749 Macomb St., N. W., Washington 8, D. C. 16306

LARGE MUSIC BOX given by Robert Louis Stevenson to Princess Kaiulani, Hawaiian Princess, with inscription on lid. $750. or best offer. Contact—Miss K. Bartels, 313 Kauikeolani Bldg., Honolulu, T. H. 51842

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

RARE OLD SWISS MUSIC BOX with organ; 25" inlaid rosewood case, 8 tunes on 15" cylinder; 17 note organ at extreme end. Made by Heller, about 1871. Completely restored, $275.—R. Bornand, 139 4th ave., Pelham 65, N. Y. 51213

REGINA MUSIC BOX. Carved mahogany console with harp and grafonola attachments. Perfect condition with 12 15½" discs. $125.—Howe, Jr., 158 E. Dixon Ave., Dayton 9, Ohio. 51612

MISCELLANEOUS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts, old, post cards, and advertising cards.—Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. d6046

WANTED: Reprodur for Edison Amberola 30 phonograph.—George R. Hare, 3006 14th Avenue, Tampa 5, Fla. s3652

WANT ALL TYPES of old music boxes, coin operated and otherwise. Write, quote best price, and picture, if possible.—George Trambitas, 3126 Elliott Ave., Seattle 1, Washington. 1e128291

WANTED: Sammy Kaye & Ink Spots transcriptions, V. discs, Armed Forces Radio Service Recordings. I will pay top prices. "Money is no object." — Paul Adams, 30 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. s3006

MISCELLANEOUS FOR SALE

Latest player piano rolls, 75c. List.—Durell Armstrong, 222 S. Vassar, Wichita, Kans. n128421

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, direct imports, $1.80—Jules Wolff, 74 Worthstreet, New York. o 6844

SWISS & REGINA music boxes, bar-room pianos; barrel & hand organs; large Regina piano, with drums; bells & cymbal playing, 32" disc. Old coin operated Edison juke box, playing cylinder records; accordion playing paper roll; musical alarm and others.—Ray Albertson, Box 23, Atlantic, Ia. o 8637

KNABE SQUARE rosewood piano, case and action in excellent condition. Beautiful tone, $350.—Howe, Jr., 158 E. Dixon Ave., Dayton 9, Ohio. 51291

HUNDREDS OF IMPORTED cut-out vocals, rare Golden Age operatics; G&T, Fonotopia, etc., hard to get Music Hall and Personality records, unusual band and orchestral items, imported LPs, all may be found on our free mailing lists. Write today.—Ross, Court & Co., (Canada), 121 Simcoe Street, Toronto, Ont. n3367 of years might disclose one or several birth records under the name of "Edward Morton," and you would have no assurance that any one would be the record of the party you are interested in. I am confident you would not commit yourself unless you are sure of the facts.

The same uncertain and indefinite information applies to the search for the death record—only you have no knowledge that the "Singing Policeman" has ever died, and it might prove to be a boomerang to state in your article that he died on a particular date when in reality he is living and hale and hearty.

In the event that any identifying or specific information becomes available to you in regard to these records, please do not hesitate to contact me with every assurance that your request will be given every consideration and attention.

By the time Dr. Reeves' letter reached me I knew of course that the object of my search was dead. But I had also written to the Pennsylvania Department of Health at Harrisburg. On February 6, the same day Dr. Reeves' genial letter was written, the Delayed Record Division of the Bureau of Vital Statistics replied:

Please be advised that the Bureau of Vital Statistics was not established until January 1, 1906, therefore we would have no record for the above subject.

We suggest that you contact the City or County of Philadelphia to determine whether it might be matter of record.

I wrote another letter to Dr. Reeves, telling him I had learned that Eddie Morton died on April 11, 1938, and asking if that knowledge would make it possible to trace any entry concerning him. I thought it should at least result in the discovery of his death certificate. But no! I was still doomed, it seemed, to be thwarted. My letter was answered by one of Dr. Reeves' assistants, J. A. Farrell, who said:

No record of "Eddie" Morton's death in the year 1938. . . . Try some other date and we will gladly help you to secure any information you may desire. Do not hesitate, and if we can help you we will.

VI

Well, it seemed I was fated to disappointment, but at least I had been given a most favorable opinion of the courtesy and helpfulness of the Division of Vital Statistics of the Philadelphia Department of Public Health. In the meantime, it had occurred to me to write to my friend, F. H. Price, the librarian of the Free Library of Philadelphia, asking if there were bound volumes of the now defunct Record on file, and if so whether I could obtain a photostatic copy of the Eddie Morton death notice. Mr. Price promptly and obligingly returned that he had found the article under the heading, "EDWARD MORTON, 'SINGING COP,' DIES," and a copy would be made for me on receipt of 55 cents. I lost no time in remitting, and the photostat came a few days later. It reproduced the top half of page 28 of the Philadelphia Record for Tuesday, April 12, 1938, and for the first time I learned that my beloved comedian's death had occurred in New Jersey, instead of Philadelphia. The article was brief but interesting:

EDWARD MORTON, 'SINGING COP,' DIES. . . . Ex-Vaudeville Headliner, 68, operated restaurant in Wildwood.

Edward Morton, Philadelphia's erstwhile "singing cop" who became a headliner in vaudeville, died after a heart attack yesterday in Wildwood, where he conducted a boardwalk restaurant in recent years. He was 68.

Morton first gained renown as a singer while pounding a beat in the "bloody 5th ward." Soon becoming known as the "singing cop," he won a promotion by his music several years after he joined the force in 1898.

Roof Garden Headliner

One night, after singing for several hours in the 5th Ward Political Club, he went on duty at midnight. Waiting for the street sergeant at Front and Dock streets, he fell asleep.

The sergeant found him slumbering and preferred charges. A ward leader, however, got the charges dropped and had Morton made a desk sergeant, with the admonition: "Sing oftener and longer."

He did and left the force in 1908 to enter burlesque. Two years later he was a headline act at the Madison Square Roof Garden. He became a member of the famous Friars and Lambs Club in New York.

Golf Club Official

After years on the old Keith Circuit, he settled in Wildwood, where he became an original trustee of the Wildwood Golf Club. He was chairman of the club's house committee for 10 years.

He is survived by his widow, Mary, four sons, Paul, Ade, Joseph and Edward, Jr.

Now it seemed I was getting somewhere, but I still did not have the date of Morton's birth, names of his parents and other such details that I like to get into my HOBBIES articles. And I could say of my own knowledge that the date, 1908, given as the year in which Morton left the Philadelphia police department was wrong. He was already a roof garden and vaudeville star when he began to make Victor records in 1907.

Now that I knew he had died in Wildwood, New Jersey. I wrote to the New Jersey State Department of Vital Statistics, asking for a copy of Morton's death certificate. I was told to remit one dollar, but the money was returned with a curt statement that since I was not member of his family I had no right to the information and it would not be furnished. As I have mentioned before in HOBBIES, I have never met with a like attitude from any other City or State department.

VII

While I was still sizzling over this brush-off, I happened to get into a conversation with Arthur McCoy, a helper in the kitchen of my favorite (CONTINUED ON PAGE 36)

WORLD WIDE RECORD & MUSIC AGENCY

2034 North Third Street,

Milwaukee (12) Wisconsin

Collectors' phonograph records: cylinders, discs, Lateral, Hill and Dale; all makes. Old catalogs For collectors libraries, museums, radio and TV stations; ghost and gag Machines, parts and reproducers for cylinders.

The largest collection of Americana available. Jazz-Swing-Ragtime. Classical Operatic. Vocal and instrumental.

FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Swiss chronograph calendar repeater. Gold. Rings hour, quarter, minute. Moon phase and star positions. Day and month in Finnish.—William C. Dias, 42 Amory St., Cambridge, Mass. a1232

ALL PARTS TO ASSEMBLE Black Forest clock with front piece, size 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ x6", at \$3. For leaflet, contact:—Jules Wolff, 74 Worth Street, New York. n3004

FAVORITE PIONEER
RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 25)

Roanoke, Virginia, restaurant, The Cavalier. "Cousin Arthur" mentioned that he worked in Roanoke during the winter, but usually moved on to Wildwood, New Jersey, in the summer, and was employed in one of the board-walk restaurants there.

Wildwood, New Jersey—the place where Eddie Morton died! "Do you," I asked, "happen to know if there is anybody by the name of Morton operating a restaurant there? I'm trying to find surviving relatives," I explained, "of a famous singer, Eddie Morton, who was in the restaurant business at Wildwood before his death."

"Cousin Arthur" smiled. "Sure, there's a Morton's Restaurant there, he said 'I've passed it lots of times.'"

Elated, I decided to write to the postmaster at Wildwood, enclosing a letter to be handed to any of the members of Eddie Morton's family. Once more I received courteous and sympathetic cooperation. The postmaster, J. Carroll Bransfield, wrote:

Dear Mr. Walsh: Replying to your letter . . . Paul Morton, son of the late Edward Morton, now resides at 231 E. Wildwood Ave., Wildwood, N. J., and operates the restaurant that you have reference to in your inquiry.

I have forwarded your letter to Mr. Paul Morton and I am sure he will be happy to learn of your interest in his famous father's career.

Incidentally, Paul is a very close friend of mine and an excellent singer in his own right. I mention this as an item of interest, since I know that Paul's modesty will no doubt prevent him from disclosing this fact to you.

Postmaster Bransfield's letter made me happy, for it convinced me that my long years of efforts to find out the facts about Eddie Morton were about to be rewarded with success. A few days later I felt even better when the following communication arrived from Paul Morton himself:

I have received from Mr. Carroll Bransfield, our postmaster, a letter sent to him by you, seeking information about my father, Ed. Morton, the singer.

I shall be very happy to give you any information concerning Dad. I think, naturally, that he was one of the best in his line. So, if you will prepare a sketch of the kind of information you desire, I am sure I will be able to fill it in.

It is most heartwarming to hear after all these years that Dad is remembered by people, like you, in his own profession. I shall be most anxious to hear from you. Sincerely, PAUL MORTON.

Several days elapsed before I had time to write Mr. Morton the sort of letter I had in mind, but I finally did, asking every pertinent question—and perhaps some that might appear impertinent!—that I could think of. Then I settled anxiously back to get results. And, thanks to the cooperation and enthusiasm of my friend, Paul Morton, I got them!

VIII

During the decade in which I have found much happiness in writing these articles, I have frequently had occasion to be surprised as well as pleased because of the helpful cooperation I have received, not only from living artists whose life stories I wished to tell but from surviving relatives of men and women no longer of this world. Only a few months ago William J. Mann lent me the only photograph he had of his sister, Estella Mann, so that I might have it copied. And Paul Morton not only gave me four photographs of his father, including one which provides

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 37)

LEFT: Junghans mahogany mantel clock. Rich cast brass decorations. Brass dial with cherub head. Beautiful finish and brass animal feet. Classical brass figures on corners. Two tone chime every 15 minutes, strikes on hour. 8-day. 24" to top of urn finial, 13" width overall. Price $200.

RIGHT: Beautiful old, hand carved walnut French mantel clock with original French works. Porcelain dial with ornamental cast brass frame. 8-day. 19" high, 20" wide overall. Price $78.

Small cottage alarm clock, about 1850. 1-day works. Plain case with rosewood veneer on base and door. Orig. decorated dial. Original decoration in lower section of door. 11 $\frac{3}{4}$ x7 $\frac{3}{4}$ ".....\$20.00

E. N. Welch single steeple in rosewood veneer. Unusually good, original condition. 8-day, striking movement with odd pendulum. Circa 1860-1890. 20 $\frac{1}{4}$ " high, 11" wide at base.....31.00

Atkins Clock Co. 1859-1879. Small walnut shelf clock with alarm attachment. Original paper and finish. Picture on door "Washington Landing" not original. 8-day strike.....15.00

E. Ingraham & Co. 1857-1880. Doric mantel clock. Original paper. 8-day strike. 16" high, 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ " wide.....30.00

French brass and glass mantel clock. Solid brass case with four solid pillars, with heavy bevelled glass in all four sides. Glass in front door is curved. French works, time only. Porcelain dial. Free mercury pendulum. 12" high, 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ " wide.....75.00

N. Pomeroy, Bristol, Conn. venetian design walnut mantel clock. Circa 1850. 8-day strike. All original. 16" high, 11" wide.....40.00

Unusual, old solid marble mantel clock. Greek temple design. Has very good French works and in perfect condition. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ " high, 17 $\frac{1}{2}$ " wide. 8-day strike.....25.00

Small Gilbert, 1-day cottage clock in Rosewood veneer. Has alarm attachment. Original painting on door. 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ " high, 11" wide.....16.00

Nice, old china clock with open work brass dial. White with rose, blue and green floral decoration. 8-day strike. 10 $\frac{3}{4}$ " high, 8" wide.....40.00

Odd design of small walnut shelf clock by Sessions of Forestville. Orig. decorated dial. Refinished. 8-day striking works. 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ " high, 10 $\frac{3}{4}$ " wide.....20.00

Ingraham, 1870's. Doric shelf clock with alarm attachment. Orig. paper and has been refinished. 16" high, 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ " wide.....30.00

Most unusual statue type Victorian clock. Has large size statue of cavalier holding brass sword at one end and clock is mounted in very decorative cast section at other end. Both mounted on ebonized base with cast feet. Excellent detail. Brass decorations. Porcelain dial with exposed escapement and unusually beautiful hands. 8-day strike. 22" high overall, 19 $\frac{1}{4}$ " wide overall.

Ithaca calendar clock in refinished rosewood venetian case. Slight restoration but basically original. 2-dial type. Upper dial is time; lower dial shows day, month and date perpetually. mantel or shelf type. 22 $\frac{3}{4}$ " high, 11 $\frac{1}{4}$ " wide at base.....65.00

Tiffany & Co., green onyx with two bronze figures mantel clock. This is a very beautiful clock in perfect condition. 24" long, 14 $\frac{1}{4}$ " high.....150.00

ALL ABOVE CLOCKS IN RUNNING CONDITION.
SEND FOR COMPLETE FREE LIST OF CLOCKS. PHOTOS 20c EACH.
SUBJECT TO PRIOR SALE. NO C.O.D.'S. SHIPMENTS BY EXPRESS COLLECT.

sp

HEIRLOOM ANTIQUES 201 E. Lancaster
Shillington, Pa.

By Appointment — Telephone Reading 4-1510

his low rambling home situated on a high knoll surrounded by miles of scenic countryside is an outstanding highlight of a Galena visit.

In all, eight of historic Galena's outstanding homes, all privately owned, will be open for this tour and the guest, whether tourist, artist, architect or historian, will find much of interest in Galena, unofficially declared as the outstanding historic shrine of the Old Northwest Territory. For further information address the Tour Historic Galena Homes, Galena, Illinois.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 35)

a revealing glimpse of a recording session at the Columbia studios, he also lent me the only copy he had of the Wildwood Leader for Thursday, April 14, 1938, telling of his father's death in more detail than the Philadelphia Record had done.

Although the two articles contain, to some extent, the same information, the one in the Wildwood paper is more interesting than the other. That must serve as my justification for reprinting it in its entirety. It began with the headline: "ED. MORTON, LOVABLE CHARACTER, DIES SUDDELY AT WILDWOOD." Beneath a cut of Morton, smiling and wearing a checked cap, were the cut lines: "Edward Morton, who died suddenly on Monday, is pictured above in one of his characteristic poses that made him famous while in vaudeville." And here is the body of the Leader's story:

Suffering a heart attack as he was about to get dressed early Monday morning, Edward Morton, familiar and loved character at Wildwood, died in his room. He was 68. His familiar smile and witticisms will be sadly missed as result of his untimely death.

A former Philadelphia policeman and better known while on the force as the "Singing Cop," Ed became a hit in vaudeville. For many years he conducted a restaurant on the North Wildwood boardwalk. He was an original trustee of the Wildwood Golf Club and was chairman of the house committee for many years.

A former cop in the "Bloody Fifth" in Philadelphia, Morton had had a colorful career which included beat pounding, house work as a police sergeant and experience in the Electrical Bureau of the Quaker City before he blossomed forth as a headline vaudeville attraction.

Morton claimed one record of which he was proud. He told his friends on numerous occasions he was the only man who ever got promoted on the Philadelphia force for sleeping on his beat.

"I had been singing for several hours in the Fifth Ward political club and was tired when I went on duty at midnight," he explained. "I was waiting for the street sergeant at Front and Dock streets when I fell asleep while leaning against a building. The sergeant found me and hauled me up on charges, but the ward leader, in deference to my entertaining at the club, had the punishment lifted and had me made a desk sergeant."

As the "singing cop" his services were much in demand as an entertainer at political club dinners and entertainments, and Morton finally branched out as a full time performer, forsaking the police business to go into burlesque.

After three years in this work he had progressed so far that in 1908 he was the headline act at the Madison Square Roof Garden. This was about the time he first visited Wildwood as a special act for Sunday night shows at Baker's, an added attraction to the regular stock company.

Telling of his experiences he said: "The sand got into my shoes at once, and beginning in 1911 I so arranged my bookings that I had twelve weeks off each summer and brought my family to Wildwood. This continued for ten years and then I opened the restaurant at Twenty-sixth street and the Boardwalk.

"For several years I still continued in vaudeville, principally on the Keith circuit, but finally gave up the stage to devote myself exclusively to my business interests here. The business grew and several years ago when North Wildwood constructed the new Boardwalk, I rebuilt."

Morton was a member of the Friars and Lambs Clubs. Survivors are his widow, Mary, and four sons, Ade, Paul, Joseph and Edward, Jr.

A viewing will be held tomorrow evening in Philadelphia at 260 S. 4th Street with interment to take place Saturday afternoon in the Holy Cross cemetery.

At the Wildwood firemen and police banquet last night, silent tribute was paid to Mr. Morton. He was active in the Pine avenue department.

IX

Interesting as I found the Leader's article, the letter that Paul Morton wrote to me on February 17 was even more so, for it contained many intimate details of the great comedian's personality and achievements as recalled by his admiring and devoted son. I am sure Eddie Morton's admirers will share my pleasure:

Dear Mr. Walsh: On my arrival home from a trip to Philadelphia I received your letter and card and was amazed at the information you succeeded in acquiring about Dad, particularly the fact that you have most of his records. We at one time had a complete collection, but a few years ago a junior member of the family while alone in the living room secured a poker from the fireplace and, before he was discovered, had broken all of our records including, of course, Dad's. We were all heartsick about this and tried to obtain duplicates but that was impossible.

I have managed since then to obtain five records from friends. Whenever I go into a house that has a collection of old records I beg them to look for any of Dad's recordings. So far I have five—(1) "The Right Church But the Wrong Pew" (fairly good); (2)—"I Won't Be Back Till August" (very scratchy); (3) "The Last Shot Got Him" (cracked); (4) "Let George Do It" (fair); and (5) "Oceans Roll" (fairly good.) Naturally I intend to go on trying to obtain more and would appreciate any information as to where I might be able to get them.

Now as to information about my father. He was born in Philadelphia May 15, 1870, the son of Charles H. and Mary Morton. He was five feet eleven inches in height, had dark brown hair, blue eyes, and in his younger years weighed about 160 pounds. In later years his weight increased to about 175 to 180 pounds. He was very well preserved and at the time of his death in 1938 appeared to be no more than 56 or 57 years of age. Always a well dressed man, he could wear either formal or sports clothes with equal ease. His personality was infectiously agreeable and he was liked by everyone he met. His sunny disposition endeared him to all of his friends and his smile and spontaneous wit could be called his outstanding characteristics, or trademarks. It is said that he was a master at telling entertaining stories and he had a story for any occasion or any group. He could entertain youngsters or old people with equal ease, groups of men or women or the clergy, and not embarrass or offend anyone. It has been stated that he had, and held, more friends than anyone else in show business.

Although not a prude he never sang an objectionable song on the stage. He would never use a song that he could not sing in his wife's or family's presence.

A few months before his twenty-first birthday he married Mary Mickie (she was seventeen) a member of a prominent south Jersey family. They had nine children—six boys and three girls. There are four surviving—Ade, Edward, Jr., Paul (me) and Joseph, mother having died on July 23, 1946.

Dad came from a family of the theater. His father, Charles H. Morton, was not only an actor but a playwright as well. He was born in Edinburgh, Scotland. During the War between the States he was in the neighborhood of Richmond, Virginia, and the South. I have a program of one of his plays, "A Kiss in the Dark," which played in Richmond on Friday evening, January 10, 1862, at "the Franklin Varieties (late Franklin Hall). After the war he came north to Philadelphia and managed the old Arch Street Theater for Mrs. John Drew.

I don't know much about Dad's early life except that he had the usual varieties of jobs before going on the Philadelphia police force. He first started to sing at parties, then he was liked so much that he was asked to sing at a club party. An agent heard him and persuaded him to try out for the vaudeville stage. He was an immediate success. This, as near as I can figure, was about 1904 or 1905. For years he did a single act in a full dress suit with no supporting cast and no back drop. He usually had to sing several encores after his original act and many times had to make apologies so that the show could go on.

His beat as an officer was in the colored section of Philadelphia, and I have heard of one instance—at least from an uncle who heard it—of two colored men arguing in the balcony of a theater as to whether or not he was colored. Finally, the one convinced the other that he was, so good was his colored dialect. He could sing character, dialect or sentimental ballads with ease and had an amazing capacity for memorizing songs. I have seen him get five new songs on Thursday; some with two or three different sets of verses and choruses and put them in his show the following Monday. He always sang new songs. As soon as a song began to be popular, he substituted another.

As for his recordings, I know that Mr. Johnson of Victor and he were very friendly. How this came about I do not know. I was born in 1906, so you can easily understand why I do not know too much about his recording days. I do know that his enunciation was exceptionally good. This might have had some bearing as to why he was selected to record for Victor and Columbia. He closed his vaudeville career in June, 1926, at the Earle Theater in Philadelphia voluntarily. His conviction was that a man should quit while still on top rather than go on until voice and personality were gone.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 47)

WORLD FAMOUS SLEEPY HOLLOW LAND

— SUNNYSIDE HOME OF WASHINGTON IRVING —

Philipse Castle with Old Mill, Dutch garden, Wipwatermolen, Historic shrines, famous antiques and paintings. EDUCATIONAL and FUN.

N. Y. Central direct to Sunnyside.

For P. C. R. N. Y. Central to Tarrytown, N. Y., and short bus ride. Autos — U. S. 9.

THE HIGH POINT OF YOUR NEW YORK VISIT in color printing and produced several popular prints.

This popularity of the stipple engraving brought about Ryland's success and impelled him to spend large sums of money and embark upon business speculations which ended in bankruptcy. Through a collaboration with Angelica Kauffman he was able to pay off his debts, and their association even influenced the course of English engraving as he adapted her graceful designs for the popular demand which was greater than he could hope to supply. After achieving huge profits from this tremendous market for the prints, he allowed himself to again plunge heavily into debt even to the point of forging a sum of money, said to be in the amount of several thousand pounds. Upon discovery of this fraud he fled from the law even though the country was placarded with bills with his description. When he was informed on by a cobbler the officers of the law arrived just in time to find that he was attempting suicide by cutting his throat with a razor. However, he did not die from that act but was hung for his indiscretions.

Bartolozzi befriended Ryland's family and later advanced to the position which Ryland had held — that of dominating the market still demanding the stipple prints. He was an artist of masterly skill and his name will always be among those who are in the first rank of their art.

Get Ready!!

Many beautiful exhibits at the big Fall

ANTIQUES EXPOSITION & HOBBY FAIR CONRAD HILTON HOTEL

Plan to attend

PRINTS WANTED

Good Prices Paid for Currier and Ives prints.—Earl Romey, Bluffton, Indiana. je122511

CURRIER & IVES, all subjects.—Jacques Schurre, 313 Maple Ave., Falls Church, Va. d6614

CURRIER PRINTS: Wanted. All important subjects. Price or will offer.—J. E. Nevil, 2700 Dixie Highway, Covington, Ky. s3882

WANTED: Currier & Ives winter scenes. Highest prices paid for the large folios.—T. M. Reece, Boonville, N. C. ap12618

Thrilling Work COLORING PHOTOS at Home

Fascinating hobby and vocation learned at home by average man or woman who is artistically inclined. Work full or spare time. Modern method brings out natural, life-like colors. Many have earned while learning. FREE BOOKLET tells how to get started doing this delightful home work for photographers, stores, individuals, and friends. Send today for your copy. No obligation.

EASY TO LEARN

NATIONAL PHOTO COLORING SCHOOL
835 W. Diversey Pkwy., Chicago 14, Ill.
Dept. 4336

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 37)

Now as to myself, I am the sixth child and, coincidentally, the only one with a love for the theater. I love music or drama, any type. For example, I am at present the president of the local Community Concert Association, president of the men's group of the Schumann club (a local musical organization), director of the church choir and its only tenor. On March 5 I will appear as the Duke in Gilbert and Sullivan's "Gondoliers." I have had my own dance orchestra (local, of course) from 1922 to 1931, have sung popular songs on the radio and have the annual headache of directing the local firemen's minstrel show. I worked with Dad in his restaurant from 1926 till his death, then carried on for myself. . . .

If there is anything in addition I can tell you, do not hesitate to ask me. I shall be only too glad to answer questions. . . . I shall be anxiously waiting to see the HOBBIES article. The best of luck to you. Sincerely, PAUL MORTON.

I replied, thanking Mr. Morton for his splendid letter and asking a few more questions that occurred to me. He replied on March 9. I quote some excerpts:

. . . I am very grateful to you for all the information you've given me about Dad and shall treasure any documents I can get regarding his professional career. I'm sorry that Dad did not keep a scrapbook. I would be very proud to display it today to my friends. . . . You asked my father's full name. It is Edward Farren Morton, and the names of the other children are: Charles, who died in 1936, leaving a wife and one daughter, Helen; Mary, who died in 1929, at the age of 21; Viola, who died in infancy, and Agnes, who also died in infancy. There was also a boy, born dead. Charles was the musician of the family, a very good pianist. . . .

Thanks for giving me the name of the man (Al McRea, Sr.) in Westville, who might have Dad's records. I have not written to him yet because I would rather visit him personally. Westville is only about sixty miles from Wildwood and as soon as I have the time I am going up. . . . I do hope I can get some of Dad's records.

I was very happy to hear that you thought so much of Dad, even as a boy, and I'm sure he would feel very flattered to know that he was one of your favorites. You see, I was too young to appreciate just how popular he must have been. . . . Then, he was on the road so much that I hardly knew him until he retired from the stage. Of course we were pals after he went into business but we didn't talk too much about his stage experience. Most of my information came from Mother, so I feel that I am letting you down when you ask me things I should know but don't. However, I'll do my best to give what help I can.

So ends my most recent communication from Paul Morton. As this is written in May I have not yet had the pleasure of meeting the genial gentleman whom I have already grown to consider a dear friend, but by the time this article appears he and I may have shaken hands. Paul is planning to come to Virginia in September to see me and to meet "The Baby," the famous "Weeping Willow Waitress" of the already mentioned

Cavalier Restaurant. "The Baby," whose name is Ann Eunice, has a specialty of relating, with tears in her big brown eyes, the outrageous (?) "cruelties" of her boss, familiarly known as "Nicky." She is looking forward to meeting "Cousin Paul," as she already calls him, and the desire for a meeting seems to be mutual, since Paul writes:

I'll bet that "Baby" is a riot. I've had a couple of girls work for me who had the same spontaneous humor that she has. They make business a lot more pleasant to conduct. I shall look forward to meeting both you and, at dinner, she—that is, come September.

Gloating over these paragraphs, "The Baby" has been threatening to leave Nicky flat and go to Wildwood with Cousin Paul, to be the star of the floor show—assuming there is one! —of Morton's Restaurant, where sea food is a specialty.

Next month we'll consider Eddie Morton's recording career in detail, together with an approximately complete list of his recordings.

PRINTS FOR SALE

OLD VIEWS OF CITIES. Early prints, hand-colored, of your native town are interesting Americana. These are neatly mounted and protected by cellophane. Prices, from $3 to $15. Handpainted Coats of Arms authentically prepared to order: family name only requirement. Framed in gold, 12½x11". English with solid-color mat, $25; Scottish, with handpainted Tartan mat, $27.50.—Old Prints, 525 E. Argonne Dr., Kirkwood, St. Louis 22, Mo. au122534

COLOR PRINTS. Flowers, fruits, birds, views, costumes. Fine old lace paper Valentines. Wholesale & retail. Wanted: Valentines before 1870 only. Pinprick pictures. Kate Greenaway cards, all.—K. Gregory 222 East 71st St., New York 21, N. Y. f128632

CURRIER & IVES PRINTS. Send 25c in stamps for list, large and small folios.—Frank W. Mathews, Scottsville, N. Y. ja120821

FOR YOUR Family History. Costume prints. Baronial Manors; Scottish Highlands. All with coats-of-arms. Early American portraits and places. Maps.—Mabel Louise Keech—"At the Sign of the Crest": 2622 Thayer St., Evanston, Illinois. Phone: University 4-5789. txf

ORIGINAL BAXTER PRINTS. Stamped mounts or signed plate; also Le Blond's ovals.—A. Edwards, 927 25th St., Santa Monica, Calif. ja6046

ORIGINAL CURRIER & IVES: "Assassination of Lincoln"; "Fall of Richmond"; and Lincoln portrait, "The Nation's Martyr". $5 each.—Julia Newman, Rte. No. 1, Box 363, Battle Creek, Mich. s3234

CURRIER & IVES PRINTS.—James P. Lynch, 3051 S. Columbus St., Arlington, Va. o3802

OLD COLOR PRINTS: Royal portraits. Sporting. Costumes. Napoleonic, military, caricatures. Posters. Maps. Poultry, dogs. Victorian watercolors, flowers, fruits. Tinsel pictures. Legal provincial.—Paul L'Arron, Box 1031, Santa Monica, Calif. n3054

CURRIER & IVES. Send large stamped envelope for list.—Jacques Schurre, 313 Maple Avenue, Falls Church, Va. d6445

CLASSIFIED—AD—RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. (Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

Eddie Morton at the peak of his long vaudeville career

Cover design of comic song, "I Got You Steve," written and recorded by Ed. Morton in 1912. His photograph is in lower left corner.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

EDDIE MORTON

By JIM WALSH

Last month's installment was devoted to an account of Edward Farnen Morton's life, largely as outlined by his son Paul. This month I shall trace his recording career and next month add a comprehensive, though possibly not absolutely complete, list of Morton recordings.

Eddie Morton's first appearance in a record supplement occurred just 45 years ago. Here I believe it would be well to reprint a paragraph in my article, "Notes From Early Victor Catalogs," which appeared in the January, 1950, HOBBIES:

In October, 1907, the first Victor record was listed by one of the finest, but... most neglected of early phonograph comedians — Eddie Morton. I quote: "Eddie Morton is one of the best coon song singers in America, and during the past summer was a feature of the Madison Square Roof production, 'Maid and the Millionaire,' where he was obliged to respond to numerous encores. The Victor has secured the exclusive services of this popular singer and now offers two of his greatest successes." The records were 5220, "Mariutch (Do the Hootch-a-ma-Cootch)," on the label of which the comedian's name appeared as Edward Morton, and 31661, "That's Gratitude."

Now a word on the way Morton's records were labeled. Just why Victor chose to call Morton by his formal Christian name of Edward on his first record is not certain. The diminutive "Eddie" certainly suits his personality much better. The labeling may have been a mistake. Such things happened. The first Edison cylinders by John S. Macdonald were to have been issued as by "Harry Macdonald," and were announced that way, but the supplement writer or printer made it Macdonough (which happened to be the name of a famous stage comedian) and so the singer stuck to Harry Macdonough as his recording disguise. At the time he hadn't even heard of the other Macdonough, to whom he later apologized for the name filching. But the error, if there was one, in the use of Morton's formal first name was quickly corrected. Thereafter on Victor records he was always known as Eddie Morton.

Soon afterwards, however, he began singing for Columbia and Edison, and they both called him by an even shorter nickname, Ed. He also appears to have been better known in vaudeville as Ed. than Eddie. I remember looking some years ago through a bound volume of the Knoxville Journal and running across a cartoon of "Ed. Morton, who is appearing at the local Keith Theater this week." But since his Victor records were his best sellers and he is better known to record buyers as "Eddie," that is the way I have chosen to write his name.

II

Morton's first Victors, as has been seen, were the ten-inch "Mariutch" and the twelve-inch "That's Gratitude." A few months later he was represented by one of his most amusing, "Just a Friend of the Family." Then came in succession during the next year "The Peach That Tastes the Sweetest Hangs the Highest on the Tree," made in both eight-inch and ten-inch; "The Right Church But the Wrong Pew," "The Party that Wrote 'Home, Sweet Home' Never Was a Married Man," "Don't Take Me Home" and "Somebody Lied."

The comedian's exclusive Victor contract must have been for only a year, because his first Edison cylinder appeared in October, 1908. This was "Don't Take Me Home," a number of which Morton made more records than of any other song he ever sang.

Here is The New Phonogram's description:

DON'T TAKE ME HOME—a new Edison artist in one of the comic song hits of the season. Ed. Morton is a warm favorite at the New York roof gardens and no vocalist is more in demand in vaudeville. This record recites the fortunes (or misfortunes) of a poor married man who had been out "on the town." Everybody he meets insists on taking him home." He has visions of what is waiting for him there and tearfully protests. Music, Harry Von Tilzer; words, Vincent Bryan.

It has already been mentioned that Morton sang this Von Tilzer hit for Victor. He likewise made it for Zonophone and Columbia.

The late months of 1908 and early part of 1909 were times of change in the record business. Edison, hard pressed by competition from the disc manufacturers and the makers of indestructible cylinders, came out with his four-minute Amberol, which doubled the playing time of his ordinary cylinder but was still easy to break. Victor and Columbia went in for double-faced popular records.

Edison's first list of fifty Amberol cylinders was issued in November, 1908. One of the fifty, No. 29, "A Singer Sang a Song," was sung by Morton. This was a clever comic song, by Seymour Furth, whose several refrains gave the vocalist an opportunity to sing part of such current hits as "Love Me and the World is Mine," "Harrigan" and "Won't You Be My Honey?" The Edison description said:

Sam Bernard's big encore-winner in his new play, "Nearly a Hero." We are introduced to all of the usual run of singers one hears at a "party," from the inevitable young lady who has a cold when asked to sing to Pat Casey, who could sing only "Harrigan." Morton works in some of the drollest imitations of the various singers and gets many laughs for every line.

This was the last record Morton made for Edison. It would be interesting to know why he chose to end his association with that company so abruptly.

III

In December, 1908, when Eddie was changing from an exclusive to a freelance status, Victor published an unusual advertisement in The Ladies Home Journal. It consisted of a representation of two talking machines, the instruments' bodies and horns filled with photographs of Victor artists. One machine was devoted to Red Seal celebrities, the other to popular stars. Morton was included as No. 25 in the latter group.

The comedian was represented on two of the first twelve double-faced records issued by Victor. One, which apparently didn't sell well in spite of having the seemingly unbeatable combination of Morton on one side and Billy Murray on the other, was No. 16011, "Music Makes Me Sentimental." Murray's side was "The Old Time Rag." Unfortunately for my peace of mind, I have never been able to find this disc. Then came "A Singer Sang a Song," which stayed in the catalog for several years. It was paired with "A Busy Week at Pun'kin Center," by the ever popular Cal Stewart. Soon afterwards came double-faced re-issues of "The Peach That Tastes the Sweetest" and "Just a Friend of the Family." July, 1909, brought a new number, "I'm a Member of the Midnight Crew," coupled with "Did He Run?" by the Peerless Quartet. The supplement said:

Two comic numbers of more than usual merit. It takes a good quartet to render a topical song like "Did He Run?" and give it intelligibly. and the Peerless has accomplished this task. The number by Morton is something of a novelty in "convivial" songs, as it recommends taking along your wife and family when you go out for a good time!

The next month, Morton reappeared with "In Ireland," a record I have never heard, and in February, 1910, he was present with "Please Don't Tell My Wife," whose theme was similar to "Don't Take Me Home." Then followed reissues of "Mariuch" and "The Right Church But the Wrong Pew," before Eddie reappeared in November, with "Let George Do It," an amusing number based on a comic strip which George McManus was drawing in those pre-Jiggs days. A month later Morton came through with one of the funniest records he ever made, "If He Comes In I'm Goin' Out." In February, he obliged with Jimmy Martindale's favorite, "I'd Rather Be a Minstrel Man Than a Multi-Millionaire," described as, "a new darky song by that eminent 'coon shouter,' Mr. Morton." Also in February appeared "I Won't Be Back Till August," of which the catalog editor said:

Vincent Bryan's amusing tale of the innocent youth who went to the seaside and refused to return is sung as only the genial Eddie can sing it. Music of the song was by Albert Gumble.

Although my file of Victor supplements for 1911 is complete, I haven't been able to find a monthly listing of one of Morton's biggest hits, "Wild Cherries Rag" (No. 16792), which he also sang for Columbia. It was paired with a U. S. Marine Band version of Scott Joplin's classic "Maple Leaf Rag," considered by Rudi Blesh and Harriet Janis, authors of "They All Played Ragtime," to be the greatest ragtime composition. Even a recording of "Wild Cherries" has so far eluded me, but I was glad to receive a letter in February, 1951, from Alden P. Armagnac, of New York City, in which he said:

For a long time I've been hoping to locate a swell record that I've remembered vividly from kid days, of "Wild Cherries Rag." It turned up the other day in the collection of my good friend and fellow-collector, Mr. Howard B. Rea, of Montclair, New Jersey, who had forgotten he had it until I reminded him of the title. Only had to hear the first couple of bars of the introduction to sing out, "That's IT!" — the selfsame record I'd remembered from 30 years back or more. Since Rea has a home-recording machine for making duplicates I left happily with a copy under my arm.

The record was by the same Eddie Morton whom you called in Variety "one of the best singing comedians in the history of the phonograph." Our opinions agree.

Maybe one of these days my luck will be as good as Mr. Armagnac's and I'll come across "Wild Cherries," which was a big seller and shouldn't, it would seem, be hard to find.

IV

In September, 1911, Victor issued what is unquestionably the biggest selling record Eddie Morton ever made. This was Lewis and Denny's now classic "Oceana Roll," and it was one of "Six Special September Hits," offered on three double-faced discs to take care of an abnormally large outcropping of popular song successes. The supplement said that "Oceana Roll" describes a lively piece which one of our sailor boys on a battleship was wont to play on all occasions, whether a storm or a battle was in progress."

And why shouldn't it have sold? Not only was it a great number in its own right, but it was coupled with an even greater one — one of the greatest popular hits ever written, Irving Berlin's undying "Alexander's Ragtime Band," sung by Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan. Candor compels the admission that it was the Collins-Harlan side that was primarily responsible for the coupling's phenomenal sale, although "Oceana Roll" would have gone big no matter what its mating. "Don't Take Me Home" was the song of which Eddie made the most records, at least four, but all combined couldn't have sold more than a small fraction of the "Oceana Roll" output.

In January, 1912, Victor issued its first complete alphabetical catalog. The first few pages were devoted to an explanation of how the alphabetical system worked. "Alexander" and "Oceana" probably were the biggest selling popular record of the time, because the coupling was chosen for purposes of illustration. You were first shown how "Alexander" was listed in its proper place under the A's with "Oceana" following, indented and in italics, to indicate that it was on the other side. Then "Oceana Roll" appeared under the O's, with "Alexander" indented and ital-

THE OLD MUSIC STORE

Musical Antiquities in Working Condition

Esther Skerritt Sanders
DEANSBORO, N. Y.

litx

RECORDS WANTED

OLD RECORDS by the "Carter Family", wanted.—Harvey Fink, Watertown, Wisconsin. o108

RECORDS FOR SALE

Choice Collection. Thousands of records. Mail auctions. Free lists.—A. H. Sles, 92-11 35th Avenue, Jackson Heights 72, N. Y. d120291

I AM WEEDING OUT my collection and will issue free monthly lists of deleted vocal and operatic records for sale at decent and reasonable prices.—Milt Weiss, 715 Dickinson St., Memphis, Tenn. d3699

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. n3084

WILL BUY phonograph records, collections or dealers' stock, any amount, made before 1940. Have many for sale. Send wants.—J. Schneider, 128 W. 66, N. Y. C., N. Y. d6829

FOR SALE: Regina, Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f124201

AUCTION: NEW McCormacks, Carusos, Schumann-Heinks, at your price. Also LP's.—R. Rooney, 415 W. Princess, York, Pa. o1021

ORIGINAL RECORDS, 1900-1925. Famous Artists or the past. Interesting premium offers. Free lists.—Universal, Box 32, Allston, Mass. d3103

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122511

CYLINDER RECORDS. One thousand for sale. Stamp for new list. Cylinder phonographs, records, bought and sold, repaired.—Nugent, 12 N. Third, Richmond, Va. o3692

THE RECORD SPEAKS. The parrot will say "Just as good", but does he know what he is talking about? Can present-day re-issues, re-recordings, pressed at will in any form, take the place or give the excitement of getting rare originals, of the great singers of the past? Of course not. There is no substitute for an original. Besides the great thrill, pride and enjoyment that originals give, the money spent is a sound investment that grows with time. Your collection is worth just what you put into it. Is there anything to boast about a collection filled with common re-issues? We can supply originals dating from 1896 on, for the beginner, and for the most advanced collector. We welcome your friendship. Write us.—Record Treasures, 740 E. 183rd St., New York 57, N. Y. n38212

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

icized. This continued to be the model example until the record was out of the catalog in 1920.

In spite of its potential immortality, the Victor catalog editor dismissed Alexander's Ragtime Band" rather cursorily, merely saying it was about "a colored organization which will make any audience sit up and take notice."

Eddie Morton contributed one of the remaining four hits in the special September supplement. His version of "You Can Lead a Mule to Water But You Can't Make Him Drink" was doubled with Bob Roberts' rendition of an Irving Berlin and Ted Snyder composition, "Woodman, Spare That Tree." Both songs were being sung by Bert Williams in the Follies of 1911. The third record, No. 16919, was coupled with "You'll Do the Same Thing Over Again," by Billy Murray, with an Ada Jones-Murray duet of "My Hula Hula Love," written by Edward Madden and Percy Wenrich, who died within six days of each other in March of this year. This was probably the first American popular song with an Hawaiian motif.

Somewhere in the late months of 1911, Victor put out another Morton record, "They're All Good American Names," which emphasized an excellent point, that no matter how unusual a person's name may be and regardless of his racial strain he's probably as good an American as anyone else. I don't have the record but should like to find it, particularly since Walsh is one of the names it uses for the sake of argument. It was coupled with our old friend, "If He Comes In I'm Goin' Out."

V

Morton's records were issued rather irregularly, no doubt because his long vaudeville tours kept him away from the studios for a good many months at a time. But he was back in June, 1912, with one of his cleverest and most amusing numbers, "The Last Shot Got Him," otherwise described on the label as "The Great Bloo-ie Song." The catalog editor admiringly referred to "that famous classic, 'The Last Shot' (familarly called the 'Bloo-ie Song') with which Morton has been making such a hit in vaudeville."

The next month the erstwhile "Singing Policeman" makes his debut in a new role. Not even his son Paul said anything in his recollections of his father about the elder Morton's being a song writer. But he wrote both words and music as of "I Got You, Steve," a catchy ditty that made clever use of a popular slang phrase of the day to describe how a determined little lady captured a handsome young gent named Steve. This is another Morton record I haven't found, but a Vinton, Virginia, friend of mine discovered the sheet music in the Roanoke Goodwill store and presented it to me. The lyric is dated, but the melody is so tricky and appealing that, after playing it for me, Mavis Overstreet, the musical director of Radio Station WSLs, where I

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

WANTED TO BUY, books, catalogs on cylinder phonographs, records.—Nugent, 12 N. Third, Richmond, Va. o3692

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. d3863

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Write your wants.—Fore's, H-3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. jly128121

PHONOGRAPHS

DISC PHONOGRAPHS, WANTED. Table model disc phonographs, any make, with diaphragm on small end of external horn, preferably. State condition, price and details.—A. B. Mc Fall, 952 Pleasant St., Oak Park, Ill. o3861

MUSIC BOX DISCS

FOR SALE: 500 Regina, 15½" discs. 100 Regina, 27" discs. Also other sizes and makes. Send for lists. Send for my tune disc Want List, offering premium prices for certain tunes. Wanted: Mira music boxes playing 6¼" and 9¼" discs.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. d3487

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

VIOLINS: Two "August Gemunder & Sons" 1902, perfect condition, $225 each.—E. A. Frier, 12 Lyon Avenue, Menands, N. Y. o3882

MUSIC LITERATURE

FOR SALE: Collectors' Guide to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (200 page book) $3.75, postpaid.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City 19, N. Y. n6064

MUSIC BOXES WANTED

WANT ALL KINDS of music boxes, regardless of condition. Also any steel disc records or Swiss, cylinders, original pictures & catalogues. Describe briefly. Veteran starting hobby.—G. P. Battley, 2749 Macomb St., N. W., Washington 8, D. C. 16506

MISCELLANEOUS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts, old, post cards, and advertising cards.—Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. d6046

WANTED: Reprodncer for Edison Amberola 30 phonograph.—George R. Hare, 3006 14th Avenue, Tampa 5, Fla. n3652

WANT ALL TYPES of old music boxes, coin operated and otherwise. Write, quote best price, and picture, if possible.—George Trambitas, 3126 Elliott Ave. Seattle 1, Washington. jcl28291

WANTED: Sammy Kaye & Ink Spots transcriptions, V discs, Armed Forces Radio Service Recordings. I will pay top prices. "Money is no object."—Paul Adams, 30 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. n3005 am news editor, said she believes it would have hit possibilities if revived today.

In August, 1912, another Morton record appeared, of a song which has become something of a comedy classic, "Beans! Beans! Beans!" September brought "There's Lots of Stations On My Railroad Track," sung in the inimitable Eddie's best style, and in October he was represented with one of the prolific Harry Von Tilzer's hits, "Somebody Else is Gettin' It." To quote the supplement: "Eddie Morton sings here a touching ditty about the fellow who takes great delight in the thought that someone else is the present victim of the lady who 'threw him down.'"

There were no more Victor records by Eddie until January, 1913, when he sang still another Von Tilzer number, "Waiting for Me," from "Ten Little Brides." Morton must have been on a cross-country tour during much of 1913, because his name was missing from the supplements until November when he was present with the unfailingly hilarious "Ever Since You Told Me That You Loved Me (I'm a Nut! I'm a Nut! I'm a Nut!)"

Then in December, 1913, appeared the last Eddie Morton record that Victor was to issue. It combined another of his own compositions, "Noodle Soup Rag," with a cheerful ditty called "Isch ka Bibble," and to be a Yiddish term meaning "I should worry!" This, in my opinion, is one of the very best Morton records. Having arrived at the end of the list, I can't keep from regretting that Eddie's recording career didn't last as long as Billy Murray's or Henry Burr's.

VI

The comedian's Columbia list also deserves attention, although on the whole I don't consider it as good as the Victor. For one thing, the voice doesn't seem to be recorded with as much verve and brilliance. For another, the selection of songs is not so happy as those chosen by Victor, except of course in the several instances where the companies issued the same numbers.

Morton's first Columbia record, issued in 1909, was that wonderful "Wild Cherries Rag," combined with "I'm Going to Do What I Please," sung by Stella Tobin, who in private life was Mrs. Paul Southe. (Her husband also made Columbia records and sang in vaudeville.) In succession during the next few months followed "Don't Take Me Home," "Then We'll All Go Home," and "You Ain't Talking to Me."

There was an interlude of several months before Columbia issued an excellent number, "Oh You Dream." A little later Morton was represented by one of his most successful Columbias, the coupling of "That's the Fellow I Want to Get" and "Don't Make Me Laugh, Bill." Then came "If I Could See as Far Ahead as I Can See Behind."

After another interval of a few months the comedian contributed "That Peculiar Rag" to the November, 1911, list. This is a Morton masterpiece that I still have not the pleasure of hearing, but Bryant Burke, of Hempstead, Long Island, who recently found an excellent copy, says it's an admirable comic number. "The Trolley Car Swing" was added to the Columbia catalog in the early months of 1912, and then there was silence (probably caused by that same cross-country jaunting that kept Morton out of the Victor Lists) until "They've Got Me Doin' It Now," a medley of Irving Berlin hits, brightened the October, 1913, supplement. "What Do You Mean You Lost Your Dog?" came out in December and was followed in February by "I'm Crying Just for You," which I consider Morton's poorest record. The song itself is not attractive — at least not to me — and in my opinion has no particular merit, even though it has been revived with some success on an Al Jolson record. Morton sang it better than Jolson, but the number was a draggy sob-song, not suited to his buoyant style. If Eddie Morton must sing love songs, my preference is for something bright and boisterous like "Ever Since You Told Me That You Loved Me." But of course even in tear-jerkers he was a million miles ahead of the Johnnie Rays and other sob specialists of 1952.

There was also nothing outstanding about Morton's March, 1914, number, "While They Were Dancing Around," although the supplement termed it "one of the best of Al Von Tilzer's current productions." On the other hand, a comic specialty written by Grant Clarke and Irving Berlin, "He's a Devil in His Own Home Town," and issued in June, is excellent. Quoting the supplement: "He's a Devil in His Own Home Town" (is) a new Irving Berlin song which Ed. Morton is now using in vaudeville with extraordinary success."

Eddie Morton's last Columbia record appeared in September, 1914, just a few weeks after World War One began. It was the big hit, "You're Here and I'm Here," written by Jerome Kern and introduced in "The Laughing Husband." I haven't heard it but doubt that it was well adapted to the comedian's style.

Only a few lines will be needed to summarize Morton's other recording activities. He made four cylinders for the U. S. Everlasting Record Company, which was in business from 1910 to 1913. Perhaps he made others but these are all I have been able to find listed, and I haven't heard any of them. I don't think he made indestructible (later called Federal) cylinders, but shan't make a positive statement to that effect.

In 1916, after Columbia's recording expert, Victor Emerson, left to establish his own firm, Morton began recording for his old friend. I don't know how many Emerson discs he made. A few years ago I found a six-inch, single-faced Emerson of "Just a Little Bit of Monkey Left in You and Me," by Morton, but it was cracked so badly I couldn't play it. Nevertheless, I have kept it, for sentiment's sake. He also made at least one seven-inch record, "Come Out of the Kitchen, Mary Ann," coupled with an Ada Jones selection.

My file of Columbia supplements for the years 1909 through 1913, is far from complete, and I am unable to quote from them so extensively as I did from the Victors. But here are a couple of interesting references. "You Ain't Talking to Me" appeared in the list for February, 1910, with this comment:

Mr. Morton entertains us this month with an amusing bit of ragtime, in which some up-to-date slang is very effectively applied to certain situations in which the singer finds himself. When people put up to him propositions that offend his good sense, he assumes that they must be talking to somebody else and tells them so in no uncertain terms. Three verses are recorded in Mr. Morton's best vein.

The October, 1913, supplement remarked concerning "They've Got Me Doing It Now:"

"Ed. Morton, always a favorite with Columbia patrons, sings... Irving Berlin's new vocal medley, into which is ingeniously woven almost every one of Berlin's recent successes, making a most novel and entertaining subject for recording."

To be Continued

MISCELLANEOUS FOR SALE

Latest player piano rolls, 75c. List. —Durell Armstrong, 222 S. Vassar, Wichita, Kans. n128421

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, direct imports, $1.80—Jules Wolff, 74 Worthstreet, New York. o 6844

SWISS & REGINA music boxes, bar-room pianos; barrel & hand organs; large Regina piano, with drums; bells & cymbal playing, 32" disc. Old coin operated Edison juke box, playing cylinder records; accordion playing paper roll; musical alarm and others.—Ray Albertson, Box 23, Atlantic, Ia. o 3637

HUNDREDS OF IMPORTED cut-out vocals, rare Golden Age operatics; C&T. Fonotopia, etc., hard to get Music Hall and Personality records, unusual band and orchestral items, imported LPs, all may be found on our free mailing lists. Write today.—Ross, Court & Co., (Canada), 121 Simcoe Street, Toronto, Ont. n3867

WILL SELL PART of my collection: Hurdy Gurdy street organ, $300. 26" automatic Regina, 24" records, $275. Mills Violana, 10 rolls, $150. Swiss Box, 10 tunes, bells, drums & castanets, beautiful box, $165. 20 3/4" Automatic Regina, 24 records, $225. Set of Swiss Bells, (music), $100. Musical silver watch, $175. Don't ask me for name of tunes and do not care to hear from curiosity seekers. — B. C. Williams, 8000 Conn Ave., Chevy Chase, Md. o 1065

The Old Music Store

MUSICAL ANTIQUES

Melodeons, Pipe and Reed Organs, Coin Operated Pianos, Calliopes, and other smaller items.

Wette-Mignon Automatic Player Concert Grand with 300 classical rolls.

— Expert Repairing —

WRITE

ESTHER SKERRITT SANDERS
Deansboro, New York

ux

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

EDDIE MORTON

By JIM WALSH

(Continued from the October Issue)

VII

The foregoing tells the story of Eddie Morton's recording career — with one notable exception. Perhaps you recall that Paul Morton said he was sure his father would have appreciated the great interest I had in his records, "even as a boy."

I had told Paul that when I was a small boy I imagined I was the owner and operator of the Walsh Talking Machine Company, and that I started, in a pencil tablet, a catalog that grew to contain several thousand double-faced records. That mythical phonograph company was the greatest pleasure of my life. I wrote descriptions of Walsh Records for my "supplements" and even biographical sketches and imaginary interviews with the famous artists who, little as they suspected it, were busily recording for me.

Eddie Morton was one of my prime favorites. I had him record not only current popular songs but also other numbers which I had written myself—or imagined I had. And finally, to show my admiration for him, I put him and Bob Roberts in charge of the Walsh Company's comic recording department. Yes, Eddie Morton not only sang for Victor, Zonophone, Columbia, Edison, U. S. Everlasting and Emerson, he probably made more Walsh records than all the other kinds put together. Naturally, I feel a rueful regret today that his Walsh waxings were all imaginary!

But I can't leave the subject of Eddie Morton without saying that it gives me great pleasure just to read down the list of his records and find myself chuckling at some of the memories they evoke. Many of the titles are mirth-compelling in themselves. Others bring recollections of happy occasions, such as the time Bryant Burke, gleeful at discovering that I didn't own the twelve-inch version of "That's Gratitude!" aroused my envious emotions by spinning his own fine copy.

I urge any collector with a liking for clever, full-flavored humor to acquire all the Morton records he finds in good condition. Whenever I play those in my own collection it seems I can see Eddie, striding back and forth across the stage in minstrel attire, complete with high silk hat, face blacked with burnt cork and throwing back his head to take one of those ringing high notes that usually ended his records. I don't believe he did much, if any, minstrel work and doubt that he used blackface makeup in vaudeville, but when that glowing baritone voice delights my ears that is how I delight to picture him, as one of the great minstrels of yesterday, living up to the sentiments of "I'd Rather Be a Minstrel Man Than a Multi-Millionaire."

Glancing down the list of Morton records brings many pleasant recollections. "Mariuch" is noteworthy for being sung in good Italian dialect. "Just a Friend of the Family" is another of the songs featuring the situation in which a "gentleman friend" is caught making love to a lady who explains, with fine disregard for the truth, that he's a relative or, in this instance, merely an old friend of the family. There's a similar theme in "The Right Church But the Wrong Pew."

"The Peach That Tastes the Sweetest" is one of the most mirth-provoking of the records. I well remember how my brother and I laughed the first time we heard Eddie's account of how he used to call on "Miss Tillie," stretch his "lazy five foot ten" on her sofa "and give my Tillie's lovin' lips a smack." His stingy ways, however, finally caused the lady to announce that if he wished to keep calling at her home he'd have to spend some money. As she put it: "Somethin' for nothin' is not to be commended! My free list is entirely suspended—'cause the peach that tastes the sweetest (Lawd!) hangs the highest on the tree!"

Funnier, if anything, is "If He Comes In I'm Goin' Out," which relates how one Rufus Brown went to "ol' Aunt Nance" to have his fortune read. Nance said that to do a good job she would have to summon Rufe's uncle from the dead, whereupon the panic-stricken Mr. Brown assured her that "if he comes in I'm goin' out," and added: "If that door is locked, that little hole in the lock will be plenty big enough for me!" A girl friend who told him there was a burglar in the house received a similar assurance: "That little rat hole there right beneath your chair will be plenty big enough!"

"I Won't Be Back Till August" tells of the delight a hitherto bashful young gentleman experienced at the seashore when he saw the girls wearing the "daring" bathing costumes of 1910. "You Can Lead a Mule to Water" is a sermon in song on the impossibility of making a woman do anything against her will, and "The Last Shot Got Him" tells how a "cowgirl named Mona" became jealous (in Arizona) of her cowboy lover, Tony. She fired several shots before the last one got him "right between his breakfast and his dinner time." When Tony recovered he shot his rival, Dan, "right between his pantry and his dining room."

"Waiting for Me" is the sad story of a man who suffered from such wordly calamities as a jealous wife and New Jersey mosquitos. I always get a laugh out of "Ever Since You Told Me That You Loved Me" when Eddie narrates how he goes around "bumping into people on the street like a fool—like an awful fool!" and winds up: "Now my little derby hat will never, never fit—ever since you told me that you luh-huvved me!" It makes me wonder why public taste has changed so completely that no one writes such bubbly comic songs today. "The Party That Wrote 'Home, Sweet Home'" has a spoken discourse on walking the floor with the baby, and other woes of married life.

In the Columbia list, "Oh You Dream" is noteworthy for the names of the beauties of forty years ago whom Eddie compares unfavorably to his dream girl. Lillian Russell, Anna Held, Maxine Elliott and Eva Tanguay are among them. "That's the Fellow I Want to Get," apparently adapted and cleaned-up from an old off-color joke, tells of how "Little Willie," scolded for watching the ice man "kiss his ma," went to a druggist and asked for whooping cough germs. He explained he would give the germs to Mary, Mary would pass them on to John, who would infect the cook. "The cook will give it to Father; Pa'll give it to Ma, you bet; and Ma'll give it to the ice man—that's the fellow I want to get!"

"What Do You Mean, You Lost Yer Dog?" is the sad tale of an animal fancier looking for his "roving Rover," while "He's a Devil in His Own Home" is a satiric "rube" song about a rustic gentleman who "would never do in New York City" but is strictly hot stuff in his home town. He was the village checker champion, but the song adds: "And he cheated—can you beat it? He's a devil in his own home town!"

I have saved for the last my comment on "The Noodle Soup Rag" because it recalls the most amusing of all my Eddie Morton associations.

When I first began giving my Walsh's Wax Works program, featuring my collection of old records, from WDBJ in Roanoke, I wanted to put on a special Father's Day program.

Nearly all popular songs written about Father have been satiric ("Everybody Works But Father" is probably the classic example), so my program naturally was built around numbers of that type. Among those I particularly wished to play was Morton's "Noodle Soup Rag." The program director held up approval, saying he'd have to try to "clear it" through Broadcast Music, Incorporated, in New York, since we didn't know who published the music.

The woman who "cleared" for B. M. I. replied, to my chagrin, that she couldn't authorize us to play the record since the copyright of the song was owned by the composer and she didn't know how to get in touch with him. (Morton, who wrote as well as sang the song, of course had already been dead for several years in 1943.) Then she added this postscript:

"P. S. Will you please tell me what in h—! noodle soup has to do with Father's Day?"

A letter went back explaining that the lyrics described the joy the whole family experienced in watching Father as he dredged up his soup, and inquiring, "Father, aint youse got no bringin's up? The funniest part is the unexpected introduction of a quotation in the refrain from James Bland's favorite "In the Evening By the Moonlight." In the Morton version this becomes: "How the old folks would enjoy it; they could sit all night and listen and the fun would never lag—how we all would listen when Father ate his soup (swish!! swish!!) — that's the noodle soup rag!"

I close my Eddie Morton reminiscences with this quotation from a great comic song by a greater comedian. I am sorry that circumstances never permitted of my meeting Edward Farren Morton or even writing to him and telling him how much pleasure his recorded art had given me. But I am happy that I have come to know his son Paul through correspondence and hope that by the time this article appears I shall have met him in the flesh. And I hope too that Mr. Morton's many admirers among record collectors have enjoyed this review of the comedian's life and recording achievements.

Next Month—CHARLES A. PRINCE

RECORDS BY EDDIE MORTON

(Note by Jim Walsh.—Titles with an asterisk prefixed to the numbers denote records not in my collection, but which I should like to get.)

- Victor Single-Face Ten-Inch (1907-1909)
 5220 Mariuch Dance da Hootch-a-Ma-Kootch
 5281 Just a Friend of the Family
 5403 Peach That Tastes the Sweetest Hangs the Highest on the Tree (also in eight-inch)
 5501 Right Church But the Wrong Pew
 5513 Party That Wrote "Home, Sweet Home" Never Was a Married Man
 5545 Don't Take Me Home
 5546 Somebody Lied
 Victor Single-Face Twelve-Inch (1907)
 *31661 That's Gratitude
 Victor Double-Face Ten-Inch (issued 1909-1913, although some of the numbers were recorded earlier in single-face)
 *16011 Music Makes Me Sentimental with Old-Time Rag (Billy Murray)

- 16012 Singer Sang a Song with Busy Week at Punkin Center (Cal Stewart)
 16150 Peach That Tastes the Sweetest with Under Any Old Flag at All (Billy Murray)
 16284 Just a Friend of the Family with You've Got to Love Me a Lot (Ada Jones and Len Spencer)
 16324 I'm a Member of the Midnight Crew with Did He Run? (Peerless Quartet)
 *16333 In Ireland with Make a Noise Like a Hoop and Roll Away (Ada Jones)
 16445 Please Don't Tell My Wife with Nobody Knows Where John Brown Went (Arthur Collins)
 16530 Mariuch with Over on the Jersey Side (Billy Murray)
 16555 Right Church But the Wrong Pew with You'll Have to Sing an Irish Song (Ada Jones)
 *16646 Let George Do It with Conversations (Edward M. Favor)
 16650 If He Comes In I'm Goin Out with Coon's Love Song (Pryors Band)
 16697 I'd Rather be a Minstrel Man Than a Multimillionaire with Cheer Up, My Honey (Ada Jones and Billy Murray)
 16706 I Won't Be Back Till August with Avenger March (Pryor's Band)
 16758 Party That Wrote "Home, Sweet Home" with Googy-Oo (Ada Jones and Billy Murray)
 16784 Somebody Lied with He Falls for the Ladies Every Time (Josie Sadler)
 *16792 Wild Cherries Rag with Maple Leaf Rag (U. S. Marine Band)
 16908 Oceana Roll with Alexander's Ragtime Band (Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan)
 16911 You Can Lead a Mule to Water But You Can't Make Him Drink with Woodman, Spare That Tree (Bob Roberts)
 *16938 They're All Good American Names with If He Comes In I'm Goin' Out
 17071 Last Shot Got Him with Lingerin' Love (Ada Jones and Billy Murray)

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX COMPANY

P. O. Box 342

Hanover, Massachusetts

We have about 70 15½" Olympia discs in excellent condition for sale, $2.00 each or open to offer on lot.

We have 100 27" Regina discs from $3.00 to $5.00 each depending on condition. 75 symphonion discs 13¾" diameter.

Approximately 50 Symphonion discs 13¾" diameter, 9 Symphonion discs 10½" diameter, 22 Symphonion discs 14¾" diameter.

We have several Regina motors for 15½" machines and several double comb plates including short bed plate for late style Reginas for sale.

We have photostat copies of oiling and instruction sheets for 15½" Reginas price 25c each.

Photostat copies of parts sheets for 15½" Reginas 25c each.

Photostat copies of oiling and instruction sheets for automatic Reginas 50c each.

Photostat copies of pictures of all models of Reginas manufactured in the year 1902, $1.00 ea.

SWISS MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

524. Old key wind forte piano music box, rosewood cabinet 20½" long, 7" wide, 5" high. Plays the following 6 airs Les Filles de Martre, Lucrezia Borgia Polka Mazourka des Filles de Martre, Norm, Les Mille et une nuits, La Sonambule, $125.
 570. 8 Tune Quinture Swiss music box, burl walnut cabinet 34" long, 15" wide, 12" high, 17" nickel plated cylinder and music works, 4 music combs. Has original tune card, plays operatic tunes, waltzes, marches etc. All A-1 condition, price $175.
 585. 10 Tune Swiss music box, mahogany grain cabinet 20" long, 9½" wide, 6" high. Winds with crank on right end of box start and stop lever, change and repeat lever Jacot's safety check, Original tune card missing. Price $65.
 596. 6 Tune forte piano Swiss music box, rosewood cabinet 22½" long, 8½" wide, 5½" high, 13" cylinder with 2 music combs plays the following 6 airs, Fra Diavolo, La Traviata La Belle Helene, Light Blook, Il Trovatore, The Blue Danube. Price $125.
 600. Extra cylinder music box with 4 cylinders 9" long, each playing 6 tunes, fine tone Excelsior machine in carved oak cabinet with drawer to hold extra cylinders 20" long, 14" wide, 13" high. Price $175.
 623. 20 Tune Swiss music box, rosewood cabinet 19" long, 9" wide, complete tune list of American folk song and operatic tunes $55.
 628. 10 Tune Swiss music box rosewood cabinet 21½" long, 10" wide, beautifully inlaid with crossed musical instruments, all in good condition. Original tune card missing but plays the usual American and operatic tunes, $75.
 629. 8 Tune Sublime Harmonie music box inlaid burl walnut cabinet 26" long, 9½" wide, 7½" high, has original tune card, original combs, all A-1, $90.
 630. Very handsome small 6 tune Swiss music box in excellent condition. Cabinet 11¾" long, 6" wide, 4½" high. Original tune card. Music comb and cylinder pins, all in A-1 condition. Plays the following 6 tunes — Star Spangled Banner, Forest Bird, Robin Adair, Ta ra ra Boom dea, Mocking Bird, Some Day, $45.

586. 8 Tune Swiss music box playing all hymns in a beautiful burl walnut cabinet 26½" long, 11" wide, 7" high. Cover, front and ends of box are burl walnut inlaid with holly and ebony wood. Box has fine handles on the ends, a double spring for long running time, 2 music combs and a 14" cylinder, all in perfect condition. Plays the following 8 airs — Is My Name Written There, While the Days are Going by, Jesus Lover of My Soul, Scatter Seeds of Kindness, Let Us Gather, Oh Think of the Home Over There, Hallehuyal What a Saviour, My Redeemer, I Will Sing of My Redeemer, Whiter than Snow. Price $135.
 590. 12 Tune Swiss music box with 8 bells, rosewood cabinet 26" long, 15" wide 12" high, 12" cylinder and comb A-1 condition, harp attachment, tune number indicator. Plays the following 12 airs. Washington Post March, Planina, Wang, Roses du Ind, Les Cloches de Cornville, Sweet Ternium, Old Folks at Home, Daisy Bell, Marching Through Georgia, Cavalieria Rusticana, Des Vogelhandler, Coackling Club, $125.

66. REGINA AND OTHER DISC TYPE MUSIC BOXES.
 511. Symphonion music automaton made in Germany, table model, coin slot machine. Plays 12" discs, fine walnut cabinet, 26" high, 20" wide 13" deep with 3 tune discs, $85.
 556. 27" Oak table model Orchestral Regina with accordion folding type cover. Dimensions 34x20x12½". 18 tunes, price $175.
 560. 15½" Regina automatic mahogany case 68x26x22" with 36 tune discs, all A-1 condition, price $225.
 578. 14" Stella "Grand" music box, mahogany cabinet 25" long, 19" wide, 11" high, 14 tune discs, price $75.

603. 15½" Regina approximately 20" square, 12" high, oak cabinet, 24 tune discs. Price $55.
 604. 15½" Regina mahogany cabinet single comb music box, 24 tune discs. Price $85.
 605. 15½" Regina fancy carved oak cabinet double comb approximately 20" square, 14" high, 24 tune discs. Price $75.

611. Bell type Regina music box, very unusual type of a Regina music box in addition to the two music combs there are 12 bells that play an accompaniment. The cabinet is the same size as a 15½" disc type Regina approximately 20" square and 12" high, golden oak cabinet. This machine takes a special 15½" diameter record. We have about 20 discs with the machine. List of tunes will be furnished on request. Price $175.

614. 15½" Mahogany double comb Regina approximately 20" square, 14" high carved molding on case, 24 tune discs. Price $95.
 615. Mahogany single comb 15½" Regina 24 tune discs, $75.

617. 15½" Regina mahogany cabinet, double comb, cabinet approximately 20" square, 12" high, 24 tune discs, $100.

620. 15" Imperial Symphonion, mahogany cabinet, single comb, 14 discs, $85.
 617. 15½" Regina mahogany cabinet, double comb, tune discs $75.

We are manufacturing new 15½" Regina music box discs. Have a selection of over 200 to choose from. We also manufacture a few tunes for the 11" and 12" Reginas.

NEW ITEMS MANUFACTURED IN THE YEAR 1952

We are also manufacturing musical dancing dolls, musical cigarette boxes with turning ballerina doll, musical shadow boxes and musical steins etc. Will be pleased to forward brochure on these items to anyone interested.

RECORDS WANTED

OLD RECORDS by the "Carter Family," wanted.—Harvey Pink, Watertown, Wisconsin. d3061

WANTED: Will swap old vocals for cornet records.—Steve Gilman, 66 Sims, Newport, R. I. n1611

RECORDS FOR SALE

Choice Collection. Thousands of records. Mail auctions. Free lists.—A. H. Sles, 92-11 35th Avenue, Jackson Heights 72, N. Y. d120291

I AM WEEDING OUT my collection and will issue free monthly lists of deleted vocal and operatic records for sale at decent and reasonable prices.—Milt Weiss, 715 Dickinson St., Memphis, Tenn. d3899

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. n3084

WILL BUY phonograph records, collections or dealers' stock, any amount, made before 1940. Have many for sale. Send wants.—J. Schneider, 128 W. 66, N. Y. C., N. Y. d6829

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f124201

100% EUROPEAN LISTS of selected vocal operatic records. Many rarities. Free lists on request. Wants applied.—Collectors' Haven, 148 Hancock Street, Brooklyn 16, N. Y. ja3483

ORIGINAL RECORDS, 1900-1925. Famous Artists of the past. Interesting premium offers. Free lists.—Universal, Box 32, Allston, Mass. d3403

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-46. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122511

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large varied stock. Please state "wants." For information write or visit.—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St. N. Y. C. 29, N. Y. ap68301

THE RECORD SPEAKS. The parrot will say "just as good", but does he know what he is talking about? Can present-day re-issues, re-records, pressed at will in any form, take the place or give the excitement of getting rare originals, of the great singers of the past? Of course not. There is no substitute for an original. Besides the great thrill, pride and enjoyment that originals give, the money spent is a sound investment that grows with time. Your collection is worth just what you put into it. Is there anything to boast about a collection filled with common re-issues? We can supply originals dating from 1896 on, for the beginner, and for the most advanced collector. We welcome your friendship. Write us.—Record Treasures, 740 E. 183rd St., New York 57, N. Y. n38212

Attention Record Collectors: Inaugurating auction sales. Rare and cut-out vocal records. Free lists.—C. Brown, 1375 East 18th St., Brooklyn 30, N. Y. ja3825

*17094 I Got You, Steve! (written by Morton) with That Precious Little Thing Called Love (Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan)

*17108 Beans! Beans!! Beans!!! with My Own Adopted Child (Bob Roberts)

17128 There's Lots of Stations On My Railroad Track with That Coon-town Quartet (American Quartet)

17151 Somebody Else is Gettin' It with Swanee River Bend (Arthur Collins and Vess L. Ossman)

17214 Waiting for Me with Fables (Bob Roberts)

17425 Ever Since You Told Me That You Loved Me (I'm a Nut! I'm a Nut!! I'm a Nut!!!) with On the Old Front Porch (Ada Jones and Billy Murray)

17451 Noodle Soup Rag (Composed by Morton) with Isch Ga Bibble (I Should Worry)

Victor Double-Face Twelve-Inch
*35051 That's Gratitude! with Jimmy and Maggie in Nickel-Land (Ada Jones—Len Spencer)

35079 That's the Doctor, Bill with At the Comic Opera (Nat M. Wills)

Zon-o-phone Single Face (1908)
1176 Don't Take Me Home

Zono-phone Double-Face (1909)

*5151 Singer Sang a Song (probably issued also in single-face with Laughing Song (George W. Johnson)

Columbia Double-Face (1909-1915)

*A737 Wild Cherries Rag with I'm Going to Do What I Please (Stella Tobin)

A742 Don't Take Me Home with Beautiful Eyes (Ada Jones)

A758 Then We'll All Go Home with Blitz and Blatz in an Aeroplane (Fred Duprez and Bob Roberts)

*A777 You Ain't Talking to Me with Lyna! Oh! Oh! Miss Lyna! (Collins-Harlan)

A928 Oh, You Dream with He's a College Boy (Frederick V. Bowers)

A955 That's the Fellow I Want to Get with Don't Make Me Laugh, Bill

*A97 If I Could See as Far Ahead as I Can See Behind with Since I Fell in Love with Mary (Walter Van Brunt)

*A1058 That Peculiar Rag with Knock Wood (Ada Jones and Walter Van Brunt)

A1147 Trolley Car Swing with Rum Tum Tiddle (Arthur Collins)

*A1381 They've Got Me Doin' It Now with Ragtime Regiment Band (Collins and Harlan)

A1419 What Do You Mean, You Lost Yer Dog? with On the Old Fall River Line (Collins-Harlan)

A1456 I'm Crying Just for You with Daddy. Did a Wonderful Thing Billy Watkins)

A1484 While They Were Dancing Around with I'm On My Way to Mandalay (Albert Campbell and Henry Burr)

A1525 He's a Devil in His Own Home Town with Celebrating Day in Tennessee (Collins-Harlan)

*A1557 You're Here and I'm Here with Walla-Walla Man (Peerless Quartette)

Emerson Single-Face Six-Inch (1916)

*6164 Just a Little Bit of Monkey Left in You and Me

Emerson Double-Face Seven-Inch (1917)

*7128 Come Out of the Kitchen, Mary Ann with M-I-S-S-I-S-S-I-P-P-I (Ada Jones)

Edison Two-Minute Cylinder Oct., 1908)

*9949 Don't Take Me Home

Edison Four-Minute Cylinder (Nov., 1908)

*29 A Singer Sang a Song

U. S. Everlasting Four-Minute Cylinders (1910-1913)

1113 If I Could See As Far Ahead as I Can See Behind

1114 Play That Barber Shop Chord

U. S. Everlasting Two-Minute Cylinders

439 Nothing to Do Until Tomorrow
328 What's the Matter With Father?

RECORDS FOR SALE

Choice records for collectors; fine condition; moderate prices. Vocal, operatics, old ballads, popular. All originals. Send for free lists. State special interests.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. ja3027

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. d3863

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Write your wants.—Fore's, H-3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. jly126121

PHONOGRAPHS

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, parts, records, catalogs, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. ap6844

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, parts, small horns, reproducers, records, catalogs.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. ap6084

DISC PHONOGRAPHS WANTED: Owens (open works - key wind), Gramophone & Typewriter Co., of London, Berliner Gramophone Co., or the National Gramophone Co., Toy, hand powered) Eldridge R. Johnson Talking Machine Co., Toy, (hand powered), and toy, model "D", Type "A", "B", and "C", Monarch, and Monarch Jr. (model "E"). Monarch Special. Improved Monarch, ("M"). Royal, ("R"). Victor: type numbers I, II, III, and IV. State condition details and price.—Aaron B. Mc Fall, 952 Pleasant Street, Oak Park, Ill. n1616

MUSIC BOX DISCS

FOR SALE: 500 Regina, 15 1/2" discs. 100 Regina, 27" discs. Also other sizes and makes. Send for lists. Send for my tune disc Want List, offering premium prices for certain tunes. Wanted: Mira music boxes playing 5 1/2" and 3 1/4" discs.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. d3487

FOR SALE: Regina disc, 15 1/2". $1 ea.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. f4823

MUSIC LITERATURE

FOR SALE: Collectors' Guide to American Recordings, 1895-1925 (200 page book) $3.75, postpaid.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Ave., New York City 19, N. Y. n6064

ORGANS

Symphony Player Organ with 300 rolls, nearly new blower attachment comes with it; finished in light mahogany, in good playing condition; price $200.; shipping extra.—F. B. Hubley & Co., 364 Broadway, Cambridge, Mass. n1693

MUSIC BOXES WANTED

WANT ALL KINDS of music boxes, regardless of condition. Also any steel disc records or Swiss, cylinders, original pictures & catalogues. Describe briefly. Veteran starting hobby.—G. P. Bartley, 2749 Macomb St., N. W., Washington 8, D. C. 16806

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

FOR SALE: "STELLA" Swiss music box, 1896 make, with record cabinet. Overall height, 41", 24x21". Oak finish, perfect condition. Records.—William W. Edwards, 1206 Guyer Street, High Point, North Carolina. n1942

MISCELLANEOUS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts, old, post cards, and advertising cards.—Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. d6046

WANTED: Reproducer for Edison Amberol 30 phonograph.—George K. Hare, 3006 14th Avenue, Tampa 5, Fla. n3652

WANT ALL TYPES of old music boxes, coin operated and otherwise. Write, quote best price, and picture, if possible.—George Trambitas, 3126 Elliott Ave. Seattle 1, Washington. je128291

WANTED: Sammy Kaye & Ink Spots transcriptions, V discs, Armed Forces Radio Service Recordings. I will pay top prices. "Money is no object."—Paul Adams, 30 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. n3005

WANTED: Wurlitzer automatic player piano rolls. Rolls for Aeolian player organ, Celestina and Mandolina organs. State condition and price. I will not bid.—C. A. Duncan, 347 E. Redondo Beach Blvd., Gardena, Calif. ja3445

MISCELLANEOUS FOR SALE

Latest player piano rolls, 75c. List.—Durell Armstrong, 222 S. Vassar, Wichita, Kans. n128421

HUNDREDS OF IMPORTED cut-out vocals, rare Golden Age operatics; C&T. Fonotipia, etc., hard to get Music Hall and Personality records, unusual band and orchestral items, imported LPs, all may be found on our free mailing lists. Write today.—Ross, Court & Co., (Canada), 121 Simcoe Street, Toronto, Ont. n3867

THE OLD MUSIC STORE
Musical Antiquities in Working Condition
Esther Skerritt Sanders
DEANSBORO, N. Y.

a brief discussion of The Value of Old Records

By JIM WALSH

I have always been glad to hear from the readers of my HOBBIES articles and to answer letters as I am able to find time. Lately, however, I have found letter writing an increasingly heavy burden—one which I cannot well attend to and at the same time keep up my writing for HOBBIES and other publications, in addition to doing my work as news editor of Radio Station WLS in Roanoke, Virginia. To make it worse, an attack of flu, followed during the winter by a series of severe colds, impaired my vitality and has made it necessary to curtail any activities that could possibly be avoided.

There is one thing HOBBIES readers can do to reduce my correspondence load, and that is not send me lists of records and phonographs which they have for sale, with inquiries as to whether I want to buy them myself or can recommend other buyers, and questions as to what they are worth. I am not a record dealer, do not go in for large-scale buying and have all the sound reproducing instruments to which I can give shelter. All I can do when I receive these inquiries is refer my correspondents to the advertisements of HOBBIES dealers. If you want to buy or sell records, it would be far simpler to write directly to the dealers whose advertising appears here each month rather than submit lists to me.

Probably half my "fan mail" consists of such inquiries as those I have named. And more than half of those who want to sell records seek to dispose of Edison Diamond Discs. Because these were heavier than the ordinary kind and look distinctively different, the ordinary person who knows little about records thinks they must be rare and valuable.

The rather ironic truth is that because Edison records were so much better than anything else produced in their day (from 1912 to 1929) they have only nominal value now. They were so thick they were almost unbreakable and when played with their own diamond point reproducer they didn't wear out. Under ideal conditions, Edison records could be played thousands of times with no perceptible wear. They were sold in large quantities, and most of the factory output is still around in good condition. Since they are in no sense rarities, they are worth comparatively little from the financial standpoint, although well worth collecting for their musical merits. There are dealers who do good businesses selling them by mail, and when I was in Chicago several months ago I saw stacks of them in second-hand stores for five and ten cents each. Much the same comment as to "rarity" applies to Edison Blue Amberol cylinders.

I have never sought to give the impression that the old "popular" records about which I chiefly write are worth large sums. They sold in vast quantities and were too popular to fall into the "premium" class. Some collectors have paid absurdly high prices for a few rare operatic recordings or for "jazz classics"—mostly played by Negro dance bands—which were small sellers to begin with, became hard to find and thereby acquired a fictitious value in the minds of those who like opera or jazz. I am no authority on these types of record and cannot "price" them. Those who wish to know the current quotations on jazz discs may obtain a booklet, "The Hollywood Premium Guide," from Will Roy Hearn, 1047 West 97th Street, Los Angeles 44, California. It sells, I believe, for $2.50 and lists several thousand jazz numbers. Re-issues of this type of recording by the major companies is sharply reducing the value of such original pressings as still turn up.

As for the typical old "popular" records by such performers as Billy Murray, Ada Jones, Henry Burr, Vess Ossman, Collins and Harlan and the dozens of others about whom I have written, they can still be found on occasion in second-hand stores for about ten cents each. Several dealers who advertise in HOBBIES get an average of 50 cents each for these records in good condition. I suspect that within another generation or two many will have an appreciably higher

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 31)

Antique
MUSIC BOXES
For Sale
Largest Assortment in existence
All are old instruments in perfect condition
All sizes & types from $50 to $5000
ALSO EXPERT REPAIRING
BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.
139 4th Avenue, Pelham 65, N. Y.
(Originally established in Switzerland in 1925)

NEW BOOK
"MUSICAL BOXES, A History & Appreciation"
By John E. T. Clark, London
This enlarged second edition contains valuable heretofore unpublished information on markings, identifications, and historical data. It should be read by every music box collector. Price $6.00.
American Distrib.: BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.
139 4th Ave., Pelham 65, N. Y.

of the scarab engraved with some device became the most popular of the signets. In order to procure any inscription in relief on wax or clay, the inscription must be hollowed out instead of raised above the surface. This was called intaglio-cut.

Rings were believed to possess power, and hence the scarab set in a ring did double duty. On the flat base was engraved the owner's name, the name of the reigning King, and certain other deities. It could be arranged so that it revolved on a pivot, which by a twist of the thumb and finger, could be turned over and serve the purpose of a signet. These were swivel rings.

Later the signet stone instead of being mounted on a swivel, was set solidly in a bed hollowed out of the metal. On its flat top the engraver cut on scenes from daily life, musical instruments, flowers, leaves, animals, in addition to the deities.

Another form of the signet, was the cylinder used by the Babylonians, from one to three inches long. It was elaborately engraved and intaglio with the name and title of the owner, perhaps a portrait, and no two cylinders were exactly alike. It was worn both as an amulet and a seal, but not in a swivel ring. It was suspended by a cord on the neck or wrist. When the mark of identification was needed, it was rolled over a flat surface of soft clay and the impression thus made. Merchants traveling in other lands made good use of this for marking their wares with their personal seals.

A signet ring said to have been given to her future husband Darnley by Mary, Queen of Scots, was engraved Henril Darnley, 1655.

The custom of engagement rings dates back to ancient times. In Rome, the ring represented a pledge made by the father or guardian of the young woman to the man destined to be her husband. He, in turn, pledged his troth by giving a ring to the girl.

Among some early Christian writings, is a passage stating that the betrothal ring is given by the espouser to the espoused, either for a sign of mutual fidelity or still more, to join their hearts. It was placed on the fourth finger because of a certain vein, which was believed to flow to the heart.

Many medieval paintings portraying wedding ceremonies show the ring being placed on the right hand. The change to the third finger of the left hand appears in the Book of Common Prayer of Edward VI (1549).

The Jewish marriage ring was used only during the actual ceremony, being too massive to wear. These were often designed as synagogues, or temples, and were wrought in perfect detail even to the weather vanes, which revolved. They had the Hebrew inscription meaning good luck engraved on them and were elaborately decorated.

The Gimmel Ring, was the emblem of love and friendship, and consisted of two rings locked together, which could be separated, and a ring worn by each of the lovers.

Another type was the Fede ring, or two clasped hands, which could be combined with the gimmel, the double ring denoting double devotion.

During the middle ages a type of love ring known as the Posy Ring became popular, reaching the climax in the 16th and 17th centuries. The sentiment on these was usually a rhyme and the jewelers kept a ready-made stock of appropriate verses on hand for his customers. In 1674 a book appeared entitled Love's Garland or Posies for Rings.

The flare of giving rings to wedding guests reached its climax in Elizabeth's reign, when Sir Edward Killey is said to have presented 4,000 pounds worth of gold rings at the marriage of a servant.

The gadget or fancy ring included the pugilist's ring, which could be used as a weapon, the compass ring, the puzzle ring and the tobacco stopper. When tobacco was first introduced into Europe in the latter part of the 16th century, it was expensive and smoked in a small pipe, the smoke being expelled through the nose. The dandies packed their tobacco in with golden rings.

In many rings of the Renaissance, the bezel was made like a small vase, with a hinged lid or sliding panel beneath, which provided a small space for perfume or perhaps, poison.

A BRIEF DISCUSSION OF THE VALUE OF OLD RECORDS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 31)

value, since the masters have been destroyed, but at the present time a stack of old popular records is by no means a gold mine. Personally, I'd hate to see the day come when collecting such records would be a rich man's privilege. The fact that they are comparatively cheap is one reason why there are so many thousands of collectors.

Once more, then: The average old record, whatever its sentimental or entertainment value, isn't worth a lot of money. Neither is an old phonograph. Edison Diamond Discs are not outstandingly valuable. And, since I am so busy with so many other things, please don't write to me asking if I want to buy records, have any to sell, or can tell you what the ones in your collection are worth.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

CHARLES ADAMS PRINCE

By JIM WALSH

Recently, I have been glancing at correspondence accumulated through the years, dealing with varied aspects of recorded music. In a letter from Douglas P. Ball, of Miami, Florida, dated July 30, 1938, I find these remarks concerning Victor band records of approximately 50 years ago:

"The reproduction . . . is terrible—there is no music . . . nothing but noise. A comparison . . . with the earliest Columbia band records indicates that Columbia was far in the lead in this type of recording."

Many collectors probably would agree with Mr. Ball. Others, perhaps, would not. Of course, most specialists in early discs and cylinders are primarily interested in vocal recording artists and are less attracted to the pioneer band and orchestral selections. Yet Douglas Ball's 14-year-old letter reminded me that I have long intended to write a biographical sketch of Charles A. Prince, the accomplished and likable musical director who was largely responsible for Columbia's best achievements in the instrumental recording field. So, while the subject is still fresh in mind, this should be a good time to pay tribute to a gifted man who seems largely forgotten now but was certainly one of the dominant phonograph personalities of an earlier day.

Even when he died some fifteen years ago, Charles Prince's passing received comparatively little attention. Typical was this death notice in the "New York Times", dated October 10, 1937, and sent from San Francisco:

Charles Adams Prince, musical director, died early today after an illness of three months at the suburban home of his sister, Mrs. Hazel Prince Tuggle. He was 68 years old.

Retired for the last three years, Mr. Prince had lived in Marin county, where he taught music. In New York he had been a director of the Columbia and Victor recording studios and for five years with the Ziegfeld Follies. Under his baton at different times were Tito Schipa, Mme. Sembrich, Mary Garden, Kathleen Parlow and Caruso.

Mr. Prince was a member of the Lambs of New York, and each year conducted at the club's annual gambol. His sister and a daughter, Mrs. Catherine Prince, of New York, survive.

An even shorter notice in the "Musical Courier" for November 15, 1937, said that Prince had also directed Gilbert and Sullivan productions and other operettas in New York.

The "Times'" list of operatic stars who had been "under his baton" presents a puzzle or two. The conductor's association with Schipa may have been during the comparatively brief period in the 1920's when he was associated with the Victor Talking Machine Company. Marcella Sembrich had retired before Prince "joined up" with Victor in 1924, so he must have conducted the orchestra for the Columbia records the soprano made in 1903. Mary Garden and Kathleen Parlow, sang for Columbia years later when Prince was in mid-career. But it's hard to see how he could have conducted Caruso records. The Italian tenor never recorded for any company in the United States except Victor, and Prince was still with Columbia when Caruso died in August, 1921. Perhaps Prince conducted for a public performance at which Caruso sang. Possibly the tenor appeared as a general guest at one of the Lambs' gambols!

Prince's prestige in the record world was at its height between 1910 and 1920. In those years, the Columbia record catalog contained a photograph of Prince as a smooth-shaven man of about forty (he had worn a mustache in earlier years, as is shown in a 1904 picture of the Columbia Band) and the photo was accompanied by the following information:

Charles A. Prince, musical director for the Columbia Graphophone Company and conductor of Prince's Band and Prince's Orchestra, is one of the most accomplished and experienced orchestral directors for musical record work in the world. Columbia band and orchestral records are so obviously superior to all others on the Market that the fact scarcely needs to be commented upon here. Mr.

Prince is, in addition, a composer of exceptional gifts, a number of his brilliant marches and cleverly conceived descriptive numbers appearing in our catalog.

Then followed a list of compositions by Prince, which included "Around the Christmas Tree," "Bell Buoy March," "Cuckoo and Canary," "Medley Two-Step," "Panama Exposition March" and "Suffragette Militante March." Although never a "March King"—after all, there was only one John Philip Sousa!—Charlie Prince made a respectable showing, composing lively martial music. And he may have consoled himself for his comparative obscurity as a march writer with the knowledge that any number of listeners considered the Columbia records by Prince's Band better than the Victors by Sousa. Incidentally, Sousa appears to have been the first to use "canned music" as a token of contempt for recorded sound. During the earlier years of his band's recording activities, he didn't take the trouble to conduct it himself, but simply allowed a sub-conductor such as Arthur Pryor, to direct some of its members and use the Sousa name when they played into the horn.

More enlightening than the sketch just quoted was the following article in Columbia's record supplement for September, 1919:

"Class in American History!"

"Name the Presidents of the United States."

"George Washington, John Adams. . ."

A 1904 photograph of the Columbia band, Charles A. Prince, its conductor, is the fifth man in the front row.

RECORDS WANTED

OLD RECORDS by the "Carter Family", wanted.—Harvey Fink, Watertown, Wisconsin. d3061

Wanted: Victor Record #6232. Nocturne In B Flat (Paderewski). Columbia Record #17285. Nightingale And The Rose (Rimsky-Korsakov).—William Thailing, 5111 Guy Avenue, Cleveland 27, Ohio. d1213

RECORDS FOR SALE

Choice Collection. Thousands of records. Mail auctions. Free lists.—A. H. Sles, 92-11 35th Avenue, Jackson Heights 72, N. Y. d120291

I AM WEEDING OUT my collection and will issue free monthly lists of deleted vocal and operatic records for sale at decent and reasonable prices.—Milt Weiss, 715 Dickinson St., Memphis, Tenn. d3699

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. f3084

WILL BUY phonograph records, collections or dealers' stock, any amount, made before 1940. Have many for sale. Send wants.—J. Schneider, 128 W. 66, N. Y. C., N. Y. d6829

FOR SALE: Regina, Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f124201

100% EUROPEAN LISTS of selected vocal operatic records. Many rarities. Free lists on request. Wants applied.—Collectors' Haven, 148 Hancock Street, Brooklyn 16, N. Y. ja3483

ORIGINAL RECORDS, 1900-1925. Famous Artists or the past. Interesting premium offers. Free lists.—Universal, Box 32, Allston, Mass. d3403

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-46. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o 120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o 122611

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large varied stock. Please state "wants". For information write or visit —Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St. N. Y. C. 29, N. Y. ap68301

Attention Record Collectors: Inaugurating auction sales. Rare and cut-out vocal records. Free lists.—C. Brown, 1375 East 18th St., Brooklyn 30, N. Y. ja3825

For Sale: Judy Garland, Marlene Dietrich Broadcasts—Microgroove or 78RPM.—A. R. G. Box 341, Cooper Station, N. Y. C., N. Y. f3483

HAVE YOU CARUSO RECORD worth $25? Price Guide to Collector's Records (1953 edition) lists artists, numbers, values: 7500 items. $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Avenue, New York 19, N. Y. my6829

THOUSANDS of used records, all varieties: send wants.—Perry's, 3914 Van Buren, Culver City, Calif. f3652

And there you have the first great progenitor of Charles Adams Prince, the first and only great American conductor who has made a life study of conducting and recording, and who is responsible for so many of the instrumental and vocal masterpieces made in the laboratories of the Columbia Graphophone Company.

Charles Adams Prince (named from his famous Presidential relative), Conductor of Prince's Orchestra, Prince's Band, the Columbia Orchestra and Band, and responsible for the perfection of many other Columbia organizations, is one of the most popular, as well as original, stand-bys of the Columbia organization. His father a New England Yankee, his mother a native of New York, Prince was born in San Francisco. Therefore, geographically speaking, he is the All-American conductor.

Prince claims his first interest in music came from the days when his mother, who was very fond of the theater, took him to local shows. The shows were good, but young Charlie found himself much more interested in watching the conductor of the orchestra and the playing of the musicians. It was in the darkened theater that Prince first decided that conducting would be more appealing than following his father's business, which is, by the way, a successful fruit canning institution in the great West.

Within a very few years Prince "looked to the road" and confesses that he traveled with circuses, minstrel shows and legitimate comedies several years before he arrived in New York and came in touch with the Columbia Company.

At that time, about 1895, all vocal records were made with piano accompaniment. As Prince was then (as he is today) a born accompanist, he secured a position with the Columbia, and played all the accompaniments for the most famous singers of the day. When orchestral accompaniments became the order of the day, Prince was elected to organize an orchestra and band, which, from those early days to the present time, has made Columbia and all other recording history.

"A Prince of good fellows" is no play on words when referring to the famous conductor. He is as popular inside as outside the Columbia circle. The Lambs Club never gives a gambol without Prince's Orchestra in front of the stage. Prince has also been a member of the Friars Club and is active in the New York Athletic Club.

Music is his Muse and automobiling his amusement!

Practically the only conductor who has spent his entire career in the recording field, Prince has unquestionably been one of the moving spirits which have made Columbia records what they are today. The Stellar Quartet, for instance, is another of Prince's musical children. His remarkable pianism enables Prince to go over selections and instruct the perfect interpretation before artists stand before the horn. This he does over and over with tireless interest—his one aim being a perfect record.

We asked Mr. Prince the other day what his ideas for the future of Columbia records were. He replied: "Look back over the past twenty years and compare the perfection of product today with what it was in those days. Now, look ahead twenty years and imagine what Columbia records will be then. I know no more than you, but what I can do to make them be what they will be I will!"

Conductors may come and conductors may go, but, may we hope, for the pride of Columbia, Prince may go on forever.

To Be Continued

Choice records for collectors; fine condition; moderate prices. Vocal, operatics, old ballads, popular. All originals. Send for free lists. State special interests.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. ja3027

VIOLINS

FOR SALE: 4 old violins, made in 16th and 17th century.—A. H. Frye, Rte. 1, Nickerson, Kans. d1401

MUSIC BOX DISCS

FOR SALE: 500 Regina, 15 1/2" discs. 100 Regina, 27" discs. Also other sizes and makes. Send for lists. Send for my tune disc Want List, offering premium prices for certain tunes. Wanted: Mira music boxes playing 6 1/2" and 7 1/4" discs.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. d3487

FOR SALE: Regina disc, 15 1/2", $1 ea.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. f4823

MUSIC BOXES WANTED

WANT ALL KINDS of music boxes, regardless of condition. Also any steel disc records or Swiss, cylinders, original pictures & catalogues. Describe briefly. Veteran starting hobby.—G. P. Battley, 2749 Macomb St., N. W., Washington 8, D. C. 16806

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Catalog 15c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. o 124201

MISCELLANEOUS MUSIC

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, direct imports, $1.80.—Jules Wolff, 74 Worthstreet, New York. ap6844

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts, old, post cards, and advertising cards.—Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. d6044

WANT ALL TYPES of old music boxes, coin operated and otherwise. Write, quote best price, and picture, if possible.—George Trambitas, 3126 Elliott Ave. Seattle 1, Washington. je128291

WANTED: Wurlitzer automatic player piano rolls. Rolls for Aeolian player organ, Celestina and Mandolina organs. State condition and price. I will not bid.—C. A. Duncan, 347 E. Redondo Beach Blvd., Gardena, Calif. ja3446

WANTED: Edison, Columbia, cylinder phonographs, cylinder records, books, catalogs on same. Small horns. Reproducers.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. f3023

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. d3863

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Write your wants.—Fore's, H-3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. jly126121

PHONOGRAPHS

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, parts, records, catalogs, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. ap6844

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, parts, small horns, reproducers, records, catalogs.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. ap6084

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

CHARLES ADAMS PRINCE

By JIM WALSH

PART II

(Continued from the December issue)

Some of Charlie Prince's personal traits are barely touched on in this quotation. Although he could be an enthusiastic and tireless worker, he was not hipped on the subject. Motor-ing is described as his amusement, but the eternally youthful-spirited Billy Murray recalls that Prince like-wise shared Billy's passion for base-ball. Both were devoted to the New York Yankees, or Highlanders, as they were known in the early years of this century, and when an unusually important game was scheduled and Billy had a recording date at Colum-bia, he and Prince would enter into an amiable conspiracy.

Billy would 'phone to the recording director, Victor Emerson, or some other studio official, and say: "I'm awfully sorry but I've taken a ter-rible cold and I just can't sing today. I think maybe I can get there to-morrow or the next day." The official would reply: "Too bad! Well, make it as soon as you can!" Billy had the knack of deepening his voice and making it sound as if he were in the first stage of pneumonia. But his tones would be perfectly clear when he called up Charlie Prince a few moments later and said: "All set, Charlie! Let's go!" Thereupon, Prince would suddenly discover that he didn't feel well enough to work that day and he and Billy would get together and shout frenzied encouragement to the Highlanders.

In this respect, Billy says, Prince was the exact opposite of the late Eddie King, who was in charge of Vic-tor's popular recording activities for many years. King, a saturnine person with what the non-smoking Billy calls "a chronic cigarette cough," was a zealot for hard work. On one occasion, the Victor Military Band, directed by King, was engaged to play at the opening of a World's Series. The Eight Famous Victor Artists went along, too. After the band and the Eight had performed, the troupe settled down to enjoy the game, but King began leading his musicians from the park.

"What's the matter, Eddie?" Billy exclaimed. "Aren't you going to see the game?"

King turned around, gave Billy a disgusted look, and snapped: "I'm not a fanatic, like you fellows! I've got work to do." Then he and his down-cast bandmen left the park.

The lovable Mr. Murray, by all odds one of the most confirmed base-ball enthusiasts of his time, will never be able to find King's attitude any-thing but incomprehensible. Billy used to slip away from recording en-gagements to join the Yankees on their spring training trips. Once or twice he played right field for them in exhibition games. He also played regularly on a theatrical baseball club — the Long Island Good Hearted Thespians Society — known for short as the Lights. For many years he prided himself on knowing every player on all sixteen teams in the two big leagues, and he was always a welcome visitor to any club's bench. When Billy goes to heaven he'll be bitterly disappointed if he doesn't find some red-hot baseball scheduled say, a Celestial Series between the Pearly Gates Pirates and the Walls of Jasper Giants!

No, Billy Murray couldn't under-stand Eddie King's indifference to baseball — and neither could Charlie Prince! Incidentally, Billy also recalls that Prince and Cesare Sodero, Edi-son's musical director for many years, were alike in one respect. Both had an uncanny sense of pitch. Frequent-ly, walking down the street, either would listen to a church bell, an au-tomobile horn or some other noise, and tell his companions just what key the sound was in. They frequently put on this performance for Billy and, as far as he could tell, never made a mis-take.

III

Just when Prince became a member of the Columbia organization isn't clear. The article I have quoted says that the conductor-pianist-composer "came into touch with the Columbia company . . . about 1895." However, Columbia's first headquarters was in Washington, and it did not move its offices to New York until 1897. If Prince's acquaintance with the com-pany began after its leaving Wash-ington for New York, it can hardly have occurred so early as 1895. Fred Hager was in charge of Columbia's band and orchestral recordings for a time in the late 1890's, and Tom Clark had held the position prior to that. Mr. Hager once told me that Prince was chosen to head the band and orchestra after he (Hager) left Columbia to go with another company. No Columbia Band or Orchestra is listed in the Columbia catalogs from 1896 to 1899, but the house orchestra appears in the latter year. The bands included Gilmore's (conducted by Vic-tor Herbert) and Sousa's Grand Con-cert group. Even in 1901 all the band records bear the Sousa and Gilmore names, but there is a long list of Columbia Orchestra records, directed by a highly praised but unidentified conductor — presumably Prince. Says the 51-year-old catalog.

"Every musician in this great orchestra has been selected with special reference to the creation of an organization representing the

Antique

MUSIC BOXES

For Sale

Largest Assortment in existence
All are old instruments in perfect condition
All sizes & types from $50 to $5000
ALSO EXPERT REPAIRING
BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.
139 4th Avenue, Pelham 65, N. Y.
(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825)

THE OLD MUSIC STORE
Musical Antiquities in Working Condition
Esther Skerritt Sanders
DEANSBORO, N. Y.

MUSIC BOXES

From December 20th to January 30th my shop will be closed. However, my mail will be forwarded and I will answer any important letters pertaining to music boxes, etc. After Feb. 1st, I will again be of service to you.

GEORGE A. BIDDEN
Barrington, Rhode Island

highest achievement in our art. Its leader has shown remarkably good taste in choosing the "brightest music of modern times." (Fred Hager by that time had become associated with the Globe Record Company, later absorbed by Columbia, which turned out the Climax discs.)

Records by the Columbia Band and Orchestra soon became one of the standard features of the company's catalog. They were of almost every type — overtures, snippets from opera and symphony, arrangements of well known concert songs and popular tunes, descriptive specialties, "trombone smears," ragtime — the gamut of instrumental music. Prince's personal popularity and his growing reputation as a skilful and painstaking conductor enabled him to engage and retain some of the best musicians of the time — such experts as Vincent Buono, cornet; Leo Zimmerman, trombone; George Schweinfest and Marshall P. Lufsky, flute and piccolo; Arthur Bergh and George Stehl (he later spelled it Stell), violinists; Thomas Mills, xylophone and bells; Howard Kopp, xylophone, bells and drums; Thomas Hughes and William Tuson, clarinet, and Charles Schuetze, harp.

Prince himself sometimes played the piano in duets or trios with other Columbia artists, and he provided the organ accompaniment for Mill's chimes rendition of "Adeste Fidelis." But, oddly enough, he seems never to have made a solo record under his own name. However, he did play several celesta solos, using the disguise — not a hard one to penetrate! — of "Charles Adams." And he was the composer of "Edna Mazurka," issued in December, 1906, as an orchestra bells solo by Mills.

Nor should it be forgotten that the director sometimes acted as a foil to popular comedians. When the late Frank Tinney made "Frank Tinney's First Record" (No. A1854) he was assisted by Prince in the familiar role of the orchestra leader who is the butt of the footlight favorite's wit. Prince also acted the "professor" in some of Steve Porter's Irish specialties, such as "Flanagan at the Vocal Teacher's," and in an occasional Len Spencer comic offering. Most of the times that his rather thin, high-pitched tones were heard replying to the comedian, he got no label credit and the record owner had no idea who was speaking.

IV

For a few years, beginning around 1904, Prince teamed up with the amazingly ingenious Leonard Spencer in writing clever, if somewhat obvious, specialties that were recorded by the Columbia Band. The descriptions of some of these masterworks sound downright fascinating. For instance, No. 1550, "Cumming's Indian Congress at Coney Island:"

Five hundred Indians, representing forty-two tribes, living in tepees and wigwags; admission, twenty-five cents. Grand entree of the Indians and Mexicans, preceded by the Carlisle Indian Band. Princess Wininah, the champion rifle shot of the world. Indian sham battle and realistic scene, introducing the war song, the attack of the Mexicans, who are routed amidst the yells and whoops of the Indians, who celebrate by their battle cry of Victory. A record of thrilling interest — Spencer and Prince.

Or how about No. 1563, "Departure of a Hamburg-American Liner?"

Those who have witnessed the departure from our shores of one of the great ocean greyhounds will be impressed with the striking realism of this record. The big whistle sounds the time of departure; the windlasses hoist the last of the late arriving baggage. "All ashore going ashore." The band plays popular airs from the Fatherland; friends on the pier shout farewells and adieus; and the giant liner backs into midstream, while the excitement increases. The music of the band is drowned in the cheering.

Or, for still another example, No. 1548, "In Cheyenne Joe's Cowboy Tavern."

A realistic descriptive record depicting a scene in the famous Rocky Mountain tavern, which was one of the features of the Pan-American Exposition, and has since been removed to the Coney Island Bowery. The outside barker invites the passing ones to stop and enjoy the hospitality of the tavern. The cowboy orchestra plays a characteristic overture. Bill Brindle, a cowboy waiter, sings a rollicking drinking song, in which the habitués of the tavern join heartily, expressing their approval by volleys of pistol shots and cowboy yells, given in a typical western style. It is a decidedly novel and entertaining record.

It must have been! But of course pot-boilers of this sort gave no indication of Prince's real musical attainments.

Another "descriptive specialty," which would have more than a touch of historical interest nowadays, was "The Capture of the Forts at Port Arthur," issued in November, 1904, on ten-inch disc No. 1865 and XP cylinder No. 32579. This was a representation of one of the battles of the Russo-Japanese war in which Japan, greatly to the pleasure of most Americans, gave czarist Russia a bad beating:

A scene from one of the Russian forts, with cannonading, shots and shrieks of shells. The Russian Band is heard playing the National Anthem, and as the cannonading becomes fiercer and fiercer, the Russian troops are found retreating, the music of the band dying away in the distance. "Mid the shriek of shells the Japanese approach, headed by their band playing their national air, and the band gradually approaches to take possession of the forts, amid loud cries of "Banzai," their triumphant war-cry, which means "May the Mikado Live One Thousand Years." The suggestion and the plan of this record were furnished by a member of the Japanese legation, of New York, and the record was made under his direction.

In the many years since that record was made, the United States has fought and won a war with Japan, and peace has been officially proclaimed, several years after the end of hostilities, as this article is being prepared. During the period in which the Japanese victory was popular in this country, Prince's Band recorded the "Japanese National March," with a vocal refrain in Japanese. It was number 3147 and was listed in May, 1905. I obtained a copy a good many years ago, and my brother Chad and I became obsessed with curiosity to find out who the singer was. The late Frank Dorian, who had been with Columbia almost from its beginning, made a valiant effort to help us, but all he could do was come up with the report: "It was just a Jap, whose name wasn't considered of sufficient interest to be preserved in our files." Perhaps the singer was the member of the Japanese legation who suggested the "Capture of Port Arthur" record. This disc was responsible for my brother's beginning to teach himself Japanese from a textbook.

Another descriptive specialty, which must have had a painful historical interest to many Americans, especially those living in California, was "The Destruction of San Francisco," played by Prince's Military Band and issued late in 1906 on both cylinders and discs. The composition, it goes without saying, commemorated and to some extent duplicated the sounds of the awesome San Francisco earthquake of the preceding April:

A record of permanent historical interest is "The Destruction of San Francisco," arranged by Chris. Praetorius, and impressively executed by Prince's Military Band. The auditor becomes a spellbound ear-witness of the appalling upheaval at the Golden Gate. High edifices tumble with deafening violence; gas and water mains burst; an awful cry of "Fire!" sweeps the panic stricken city amid frantic appeals for water; martial law declared; commanding officers menacing; mandate to shoot, "Kill everyone caught ransacking the ruins;" mournful music of the military requiem for the bereaved city. A memorable record.

Charlie and his boys probably were hard put to it to get all those events into a record made by crowding a comparatively few performers around a horn! And here's a suspicion that hadn't previously occurred to me. That "Chris. Praetorius" as the name of the arranger sounds suspiciously like a pseudonym for Charles Prince. The initials are the same; Chris. suggests Charles, and by comparing the Latin word "Praetor" and its derivatives with Prince, the suspicion becomes almost a certainty. It might have been appropriate for the occasion to refer to Prince's Military Band as the Praetorian Guard!

One more picturesque example of the Spencer-Prince partnership will be mentioned before I pass to other phases of the Distinguished conductor's career. Among my favorite records is "Seeing New York; or Taking a Trip on the Rubberneck Coach," recorded by Len Spencer, with the backing of Prince's Orchestra, on April 27, 1906. Less than three minutes long, it gives the hearer a personally conducted tour to the more important features of the New York City of almost half a century ago. We visit Cooper Union, Tammany Hall (and hear the embattled Democrats roaring "Tammany"), the Bowery, and Chinatown; grin at the men gathered to catch a glimpse of the ladies' ankles when the wind blows around the Flatiron Building, and even catch a barbed reference to the great life insurance scandal of 1905. Of course, the new-fangled motorized "rubberneck coach" breaks down at the end, and the passengers are advised, in the words of a 1906 popular song, to "Take a Car." Equally of course, somebody yells "Get a horse!"

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Transcription's, Armed Forces Radio Service Recordings & etc. By Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo & Ink Spots. Money no object.—Paul Adams, 30 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. d120061

WANTED: New York Philharmonic Symphony recordings of the broadcasts made in the year 1933-1934, 1935-1936 wanted. Send list quoting condition, recording speed, and requested price to:—Eugenia Gale, 655 West 254 Street, New York 71, N. Y. Ja1692

RECORDS FOR SALE

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. f3084

FREE LISTS of Record Collector's items issued monthly.—Raymond Schin-hofen, 3503 Colby St., Pittsburgh 14, Pa. ja1821

FOR SALE: Regina, Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f124201

100% EUROPEAN LISTS of selected vocal operatic records. Many rarities. Free lists on request. Wants applied.—Collectors' Haven, 148 Hancock Street, Brooklyn 16, N. Y. ja3483

ORIGINAL RECORDS, 1900-1925. Famous Artists of the past. Interesting premium offers. Free lists.—Universal, Box 32, Allston, Mass. mh3403

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hersen-man, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122511

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large varied stock. Please state "wants". For information write or visit—Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St. N. Y. C. 29, N. Y. ap68801

Attention Record Collectors: Inaugurating auction sales. Rare and cut-out vocal records. Free lists.—C. Brown, 1375 East 18th St., Brooklyn 30, N. Y. ja3825

For Sale: Judy Garland, Marlene Dietrich Broadcasts—Microgroove or 78RPM.—A.R.G. Box 341, Cooper Station, N.Y.C., N. Y. f3483

HAVE YOU CARUSO RECORD worth $25? Price Guide to Collector's Records (1953 edition) lists artists, numbers, values: 7500 items, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Avenue, New York 19, N. Y. my6829

THOUSANDS of used records, all varieties; send wants.—Perry's, 3914 Van Buren, Culver City, Calif. f3652

Choice records for collectors; fine condition; moderate prices. Vocal, operatics, old ballads, popular. All originals. Send for free lists. State special interests.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. ja3027

ORGANS FOR SALE

MELODEONS; small organs. Beautiful restored instruments. Expert repairing. Reasonable prices.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. je6676

V

For several years the band and orchestra records conducted by Prince appeared under the Columbia house name, with no indication of the identity of the man in charge. The first disc I can find on which the organization is called Prince's Military Band rather than the Columbia Band is No. 3053, containing one of Sousa's marches, "The Diplomat." This record was issued early in 1905, just after Columbia had taken the rather confusing step of changing the numbering of its single-faced discs. These had been numbered from 1 to 1910 (the latter was "Teasing Medley," by Columbia Band), and this arrangement continued through January, 1905. Then, in February, the numbers skipped to 3019. (Those from 3000 to 3018 had already been used for a Jewish series.) Why it was decided to bypass all numbers in the 2000 series I don't know. Possibly they had been used already for some type of foreign language listing.

After February, 1905, the Columbia Band faded out in favor of Prince's Military Band, to take advantage of the prestige afforded by the reputation of its conductor. Prince's Orchestra didn't make its appearance until October, 1905, with No. 3249, a lively version of the ragtime classic, "St. Louis Tickle." I find it amusing that when American Columbia records were repressed in England under the Columbia-Rena label, the name of Prince was changed to King—obviously to make it appear that discs by "King's" Military Band or Orchestra were played by King Edward's own organizations. In this respect, Charles Prince could have truthfully asserted—but he probably knew nothing of the practice—that he was one Prince who had become a king. (As a small boy preoccupied with thoughts of records and recording artists, Paul Lincke's "Egyptian Serenade," "Amina," played by Prince's Band, was one of my favorites, and my imagination equalled the Columbia-Rena feat, or perhaps even improved on it. I was a devotee of the "In the Land of Wonderful Dreams" comic strip, and imagined Prince's Band to be the private property of the Princess who was one of the constant companions of Little Nemo in Windsor McCay's beautiful drawings. Thus Prince's Band became Princess' Band!)

For some obscure reason, Columbia-Rena records by the Peerless Quartet

PHONOGRAPHS

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, parts, records, catalogs, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. ap6844

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts. Old post cards, and early model typewriters.—Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. je6276

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, parts, small horns, reproducers, records, catalogs.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. ap6084

EDISON cylinder phonograph, Morning Glory horn, $25. Edison cylinder, 4 mi., Morning Glory horn, $30. Edison cylinder, built-in horn, one only, $15. Victor disc, built-in horn, one only, $10. 50 Edison, thick disc records, $10. 100 $20.—Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. ja1443

MUSIC BOX DISCS

FOR SALE: 500 Regina, 15 1/2" discs. 100 Regina, 27" discs. Also other sizes and makes. Send for lists. Send for my tune disc Want List, offering premium prices for certain tunes. Wanted: Mira music boxes playing 6 3/4" and 7 1/4" discs.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. mh3487

FOR SALE: Regina disc, 15 1/2", $1 ea.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. f4823

MUSIC BOXES WANTED

WANT ALL KINDS of music boxes, regardless of condition. Also any steel disc records or Swiss, cylinders, original pictures & catalogues. Describe briefly. Veteran starting hobby.—G. P. Battley, 2749 Macomb St., N. W., Washington 8, D. C. f6006

WANT ALL KINDS of damaged music boxes. Parts etc. Swiss or Disc types. Large cylinders and large steel disc. Describe briefly.—Veteran's Hobby, G. P. Battley, 2749 Macomb St., N. W., Washington 8, D. C. mh3215

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Catalog 15c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. o124201

MISCELLANEOUS MUSIC

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, direct imports, $1.80.—Jules Wolff, 74 Worthstreet, New York. ap6844

WANT ALL TYPES of old music boxes, coin operated and otherwise. Write, quote best price, and picture, if possible.—George Trambitas, 3126 Elliott Ave. Seattle 1, Washington. je128291

WANTED: Wurlitzer automatic player piano rolls. Rolls for Aeolian player organ, Celestina and Mandolina organs. State condition and price. I will not bid.—C. A. Duncan, 347 E. Redondo Beach Blvd., Gardena, Calif. ja3445

WANTED: Edison, Columbia, cylinder phonographs, cylinder records, books, catalogs on same. Small horns. Reproducers.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. f3023

HUNDREDS of IMPORTED cut-out vocals, rare Golden Age operatics; G&T, Fonotipia, etc., hard to get Music Hall and Personality records, unusual band and orchestral items, imported LPs, all may be found on our free mailing lists. Write today.—Ross, Court & Co., (Canada), 121 Simcoe Street, Toronto, Ont.

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Write your wants.—Fore's, H-3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. jly126121

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS.—Latest hits and old favorites, all 75c. Send for free list. Extra roll boxes, 4 1/2c. Also player were labeled as by "Prince's Male Quartet." In this country, too, Prince's productions appeared under many disguises. I hope to determine some day just how many different labels Columbia records were sold under from 40 to 50 years ago, but I doubt that anybody has made an accurate calculation up to now. Besides bearing their own familiar "Note the Notes" trademark, they appeared — among others, as Aretino, Busy Bee, Climax, Consolidated, Cort, D. and P., Diamond, Harvard, Harmony, Kalamazoo, Lakeside, Manhattan, Oxford, Remick Perfection, Royal, Thomas, Sir Henri, Square Deal, Star, Standard and United, and no doubt there were others I can't think of off-hand. On most of these the performing organization was listed merely as Band or Orchestra, or was called Cort Band, Harmony Orchestra or something similar. On Standard and United records the Standard Band and Orchestra names were used for all such organizations, and male quartets became the Standard Quartet. Consolidated records were a later development which represented a merger of the firms producing Standard, United, Harmony, Busy Bee and Aretino records and phonographs. All had over-sized spindle holes, except the Busy Bee, which was equipped with a triangular turntable lug. On these later issues, which appear to have been discontinued in 1918, when there was a shortage of record materials, the organizations became Consolidated Band, Orchestra and Quartet. But, regardless of label, most of the band and orchestral numbers contained Prince's disguised work. For instance, I have a D. and P. record, "Medley of Charles K. Harris Hits," supposedly played by the D. and P. Orchestra. But the name of the arranger is given as Charles A. Prince!

VI

Until now, these rather rambling remarks have treated largely of Prince's experiments with the less elevated forms of music. But, as has been indicated, he and his organizations did a great deal of recording of the higher type — not complete symphonies, of course, for such things were hardly dreamed of in the acoustic era, but "snippets" from some of the more familiar works of the masters, as well as sometimes severely abridged versions of the warhorse overtures and operatic excerpts.

In the United States, the possibility of recording a complete symphony orchestra began to be considered seriously around 1915. Already, as early as 1913, Arthur Nikisch had led the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra in the first recorded version of Beethoven's Fifth, issued by the English Gramophone Company's German affiliate. At least another decade elapsed before anything so ambitious was undertaken in this country, but in 1915 Columbia began making single records by the Chicago Symphony and the New York Philharmonic — not, however, using the ensemble's full strength.

Victor did not engage any nationally known orchestras until late in 1917 when the Boston organization directed by Dr. Karl Muck made three records that were announced in the December supplement. A month later, the Philadelphia Symphony, under the baton of Leopold Stokowski, as the "New York Times" would have said, made its Victor debut. The company proudly announced it had developed an entirely new method of recording that made it possible to present "perfect miniature performances" by an orchestra of 100 players, whereas forty previously had been the maximum number of musicians who could be used.

In those days, phonograph companies so frequently paralleled each other in these "sensational discoveries" that I wonder if some bright fellow didn't strike on a new process or idea and sell the rights simultaneously to more than one firm, just as Victor and Edison, for all their bitter competition, sometimes signed artists to joint contracts. At any rate, in February, 1918, Columbia came through with its own spectacular method of recording a huge orchestra. Although dated February, the supplement in which the announcement was made was printed in November, 1917, before Victor's startling discovery had been made public.

A double-faced twelve-inch Columbia record, No. A6006, was devoted on both sides to Wagner's "Rienzi's Overture," played by the Columbia Symphony Orchestra of 90 instruments, directed by Charles A. Prince. Under the heading of "Stupendous Symphonic Recording," the supplement said:

The following record is remarkable as bringing together the largest number of instruments ever recorded at one time by any company. For over two years Columbia has been producing the music of the great symphonic orchestras — each attempt has shown greater knowledge and skill in recording. In this supreme test special recording laboratory facilities were made, the largest orchestra ever assembled for such a purpose was brought together, and the result is an impressive and flawlessly perfect orchestral interpretation of intense interest to all students and lovers of music.

The number of players in Columbia's "stupendous symphonic recording" actually was exceeded by the even 100 who took part in Victor's Philadelphia Orchestra discs, but his being chosen to conduct the Rienzi Overture probably was the high mark of Prince's phonograph career. He remained with Columbia several years more, but apparently never again recorded with so large an ensemble.

VII

You will remember that when he was interviewed in 1919, Prince not only took it for granted that great improvements would be made in Columbia recordings during the ensuing twenty years, but that he would still be on hand, doing his part to make them better. Unfortunately, that optimistic conception was not fulfilled. Shortly after the first World War ended, a high-pressure promoter (I quote a former Columbia official) "sold" the company the idea that its business could be enormously expanded and records sold with as little effort as it takes to pass loaves of bread across the counter. Then came the economic dislocation of 1920-21, followed by the upsurge of radio in 1922. Columbia was hard hit and, despite its discovery of how to make a record with a virtually noiseless surface, "went through the wringer" and into bankruptcy in 1923.

The business was continued, but many of its less profitable features were dropped. Probably it was also decided as an economy measure to dispose of the services of some of its higher-salaried employees. However that may have been, Charles Prince appears to have severed his quarter of a century Columbia association at about this trying time. The last record by Prince's Band, No. A3591, "Blue Lodge March" and "Englewood Commandery March" was issued in August, 1922. A few months later came the last Prince's Dance Orchestra offering — No. A3724, waltz versions of "Three O'Clock in the Morning" and "A Kiss in the Dark." The last Prince's Orchestra record I have traced is No. A3767, "Pirouette."

When we next hear of Charles Prince it is in a comparatively obscure capacity. I have a Puritan record (described on the label as "America's Best Record," which it certainly wasn't,) on one side of which Bob Thomas (a disguise for Ernest Hare) sings "Mickey Donohue." On the other, Vernon Dahlhart is heard in "You're In Kentucky Sure As You're Born." The accompaniment of both is said to be by Prince's Orchestra. So, apparently Conductor Prince, after leaving Columbia, found a temporary, and probably unsatisfactory, haven with the little known Puritan company — just as Walter B. Rogers, when he ceased to be the conductor of the Victor Band and Orchestra in 1916, went first to Henry Burr's short-lived Paroquette Record Company and then to Paramount (both makers of vertical-cut discs) before he signed up with the better known Brunswick organization for a decade of rewarding work.

Prince's stay with Puritan was short. An August, 1924, issue of "The Billboard" contained the following brief item:

PRINCE WITH VICTOR. . . Charles Prince of the famous Prince Orchestra, has been signed by the Victor Phonograph Company as associated musical director. He will be at the Camden, N. J., plant. Formerly he was connected with the Columbia Graphophone Company.

How long Prince stayed with Victor I don't know. He was "signed up" in a year when it looked as if radio would liquidate the phonograph business, although record sales got a shot in the arm in 1925 as electrical recording was introduced. I doubt that Prince remained long after the new-fangled method came in. All his training had been with horn recording. Josef Pasternak still headed Victor's classical recording activities, while younger men like Nat Shilkret and Rosario Bourdon were in charge of popular orchestral work.

Almost abruptly, we seem to have reached the end of this account of the

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 31)

Perhaps it might be well to explain what is meant by a coin being mechanically deposited while taking part in the action of the bank. In the case of Pug Frog the coin is thrown from the back of the bicycle into the basket when the bicycle revolves. Another example is Darktown

Battery Bank where the pitcher throws the coin to the catcher. In both these banks the coin is part of the action and at the same time automatically deposited by the mechanism.

F. L. BALL

COLLECT - BUY - SELL - EXCHANGE

High Grade Banks and Toys for Collectors

Mechanical Penny Banks - Still Banks

Cap Pistols - Bell Toys - Engines & Trains

Fire Apparatus - Circus Items - Cannons

Old Tin and Iron Toys of Every Description

Largest stock of old Banks
and Toys in United States.

Correspondence Invited

45 Fresh Pond Lane,
Cambridge 38, Massachusetts

I will pay top prices for
MECHANICAL BANKS
Damaged Banks if rare will be accepted.
HARRY G. MILLER, Collector
1418 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo.

WANTED

OLD PENNY MECHANICAL BANKS
Furnish detail of description, condition and also your price.

Will Trade Duplicates
Booklet available containing all Bank Gradations,
$1.00
Appraisals 2% of value. Minimum Fee, $1.00.

HENRY MILLER
18 Elliot Street, Mount Vernon, N. Y.

MECHANICAL BANKS

Repaired, buy, sell, trade; parts furnished, coin traps for all banks. Will buy broken banks and parts.

V. D. HOWE

395 W. Utica St., Buffalo 22, N. Y.

MECHANICAL BANKS & TOY PISTOLS

Especially Want:

MECHANICAL BANKS:

- TURTLE (Sticks head out)
- BOW-ERY BANK
- PRESTO (Mouse on roof)
- CAMERA BANK (Picture pops up)
- JONAH & WEALE (Jonah emerges from whale)
- AMERICAN BANK (Sewing machine)
- DING DONG BELL (Tin mechanical)
- BOWLING ALLEY BANK
- RED RIDING HOOD
- FOOTBALL (Colored man kicks ball)
- CLOWN ON BAR (Tin figure)

PISTOLS:

- CAT
- DUCK
- CHICKEN (Just out)
- MOON FACE
- TURTLE

Also want cast iron horsedrawn carriages and animated bell ringing pull toys.

F. H. GRIFFITH

271 Lebanon Avenue, Pittsburgh 28, Pa.
MT. LEBANON

CIRCUSIANA

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27)

struck. All gasoline lights were then lowered and extinguished. Eli Bowen, the legless wonder, was the first one off the lot.

The large torches in the menagerie, however, were damaged to such an extent that the oil leaked out of them

MECHANICAL ANTIQUES WANTED

BANKS: RARE mechanical banks wanted. Price or will offer.—J. E. Nevil, 700 Dixie Highway, Covington, Ky. mh3272

STEAM ENGINES from dismantled peanut stands, wanted.—Vic Wintermantel, Bellevue, Penna. mh6253

FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Large collection of rare antique toys, mechanical and iron. Buy, sell and trade.—Lennie Marvin, 3133 Lincoln St., Franklin Park, Ill. ja3253

Wanted...

ANTIQUE Toy Banks

TOY JOBBERS CATALOGS

Describe fully and state price

Thornton C. Thayer 74 WALL STREET
NEW YORK 5, N. Y.

BIG PRICES PAID FOR CERTAIN MECHANICAL BANKS

List of Prices I pay, only 25 cents

EARL ROMEY

Box 291 Bluffton, Ind.

MECHANICAL PENNY BANKS

WANTED:

Broken mechanical banks and bank parts.
STILL BANK - CAP PISTOLS - CANNONS
CIRCUS ITEMS

WILLIAM TREU

407 Broome St., New York 13, N. Y. my250

OLD MECHANICAL BANKS

By INA HAYWARD BELLOWES

Price $2.50

THE ONLY BOOK OF ITS KIND, designed for the antiques dealer and the collector. Descriptions and evaluations make this a valuable edition.

Order your copy from

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING CORP.

1006 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Illinois

and they blew up. Only the heavy, driving rains saved it from being entirely destroyed by fire.

The big top fared the worst. It was completely demolished and much damage was done to the massive riggings which were up and ready for the night show. The first cyclonic wind lifted it up like one of the gas-filled balloons sold on the midway, and then brought it crashing down over the seats and huge aerial apparatus, tearing the canvas into ribbons. Lights flew through the air exploding and setting fire to the huge sea of torn canvas.

Had the storm struck an hour later there undoubtedly would have been many casualties. As it was, the estimated damage to show property was about $8,000.

As a result of the storm, no main performance was given the following day at Muscatine, Iowa. Only the side show was up and open for business. At Ottumwa, Iowa, a show was given using side walls only. And on September 5, at Oskaloosa, Iowa, the new big top arrived and was up in time for both performances.

October 1, at Springfield, Missouri, marked the end of the tenting season for the show. From Springfield, the circus moved to Chicago, and all equipment not needed for this engagement was shipped on to winter quarters at Bridgeport, Connecticut.

The engagement at the Coliseum, Chicago, began with a matinee on Thursday, October 6, and ended with a night performance on Wednesday, October 19. The season was officially at an end.

Financially, the 1904 Season was a success. Statistically, the Barnum and Bailey Circus proved itself the "big one" again in covering 9,111 miles. Only 3 towns out of 128 missed the Greatest Show on Earth.

CHARLES ADAMS PRINCE

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 26)

career of Charles A. Prince. After he left Victor, as the "New York Times" obituary notice said, he returned to his native State of California, where he had been born in 1869, and where, before his long and fatal illness, he "taught music." I hope that his final years were happy. Although many of the thousands of records in which he had some part displayed only a popular entertainment appeal, great numbers of others were educational or appealed to the higher reaches of the emotions and the intellect. Charles Adams Prince was a remarkable man — probably it would not be far wrong to call him a genius — and it is a pity that the phonograph world could not have had the benefit of many more years of his distinguished abilities.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

GEORGE N. and AUDLEY F. DUDLEY
(of the OSSMAN-DUDLEY TRIO)

By JIM WALSH

This should be an easy article to write.

About all I shall have to do is compose a few introductory paragraphs, then copy portions of several letters I have received from a charming lady, Florence Taylor Dudley (Mrs. George N. Dudley), and accompany the quotations with occasional explanatory comment of my own.

But, simple as the job seems, the result should have one important effect. The "mystery" which for years has surrounded the Ossman-Dudley Trio in the minds of thousands of record collectors will be a mystery no longer.

In 1948 I wrote a series of HOBBIES articles about the late Vess L. Ossman, widely known in the 1890's and the early 1900's as "The Banjo King." One of the subjects I mentioned was my inability up to that time to find out who had played with Ossman in the Ossman-Dudley Trio. Perhaps it would be well to quote briefly what I said in the November, 1948, issue:

"In 1906 Vess came through with another innovation—the Ossman-Dudley Trio, consisting of himself as banjoist, and two other talented players, one a master of the mandolin and the other of the harp-guitar. The guitar player may have been Roy Butin or it could have been Parke Hunter, who could play just about anything. The mandolinist must have been named Dudley, but I've never been able to find out WHAT Dudley. At one time I suspected the late S. H. Dudley, the Hayden Quartet baritone, but he assured me it wasn't he. That there was a 'Mr. Dudley' is shown by the Edison cylinder list for December, 1910, in which 'The Entrance of Topsy' scene from 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' is by Len Spencer and Company. The cast of characters includes 'Messrs. Ossman and Dudley' as banjo players. I asked Mrs. Muligan, Mr. Ossman's daughter, if she knew anything about Dudley, and she replied: 'I recall hearing Pop speak of 'Dudley,' but remember nothing about him.'

"The Ossman-Dudley Trio made several catchy records, the most popular of which was their Victor of 'St. Louis Tickle'—certainly one of the most captivating bits of ragtime ever put on wax. Other good sellers were 'Chicken Chowder,' 'Dixie Girl' and 'Koontime Kaffee Klatsch.' The Victor record catalog for September, 1908, commented on the trio's records:

"A novel feature of our instrumental list, which has been a most successful one. Trios by banjo, mandolin and harp-guitar—very loud, yet without a suspicion of harshness. Mr. Ossman, whose ability as a banjoist is well known, has associated himself with two famous players of string instruments, and the combination has made some extremely pleasing records. The harp-guitar gives a support to the other instruments which is decidedly effective."

It seems odd that S. H. Dudley (Sam H. Rous) couldn't remember the names of the Ossman-Dudley Trio members, since he was assistant manager of the Victor artist and repertoire department for years, besides being catalog editor. He no doubt wrote the description I have just quoted. On second thought, perhaps it isn't so baffling that he didn't remember, for some thirty years elapsed between the making of the trio's records and my putting the question to him. A man who has dealt with hundreds of artists and thousands of records is entitled to a little forgetfulness after a generation has gone.

As time went on, I despaired of

WORLD WIDE RECORD & MUSIC AGENCY

2034 North Third Street,
Milwaukee (12) Wisconsin

Collectors' phonograph records: cylinders, discs, Lateral, Hill and Dale; all makes. Old catalogs
For collectors libraries, museums, radio and TV stations; ghost and gag Machines, parts and reproducers for cylinders.

The largest collection of Americana available. Jazz-Swing-Ragtime. Classical Operatic. Vocal and Instrumental.

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on the following labels:

- * COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- * VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH, DE LUXE & GRAND PRIZE labels.
- * INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- * FOREIGN LABELS, such as ODEON, FONOTIPLA, G. & T., etc.
- * "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.
- * Old record catalogs.

Persons offering material not specified above or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY
50 Prospect Avenue
Valhalla, New York

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

OF
RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive free of charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

Single rarities and entire collections purchased for cash

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Room 1135, DuPont Bldg., Miami 32, Florida

Established 1938

"Rolls now available for SEEBURG and other 65-note automatic pianos. Old and new standard and popular songs.

WRITE FOR LISTS, ETC.

J. LAWRENCE COOK

824 E. 165th St., New York, N. Y.

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By MOSORIAK & HECKERT

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

$5.00 Postpaid — Insured

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

For the Record Collector

I have a customer in Michigan that wrote me as follows "It sure was great to get those records of Nat Wills, Billy Murray, Henry Burr, Frank Stanley, The banjo solos of Vess Osman, Fred Van Epps, Saxophone by the Brown Brothers. I did not know that it was possible to get these old timers in such excellent condition."

It is a fact that every letter I get says the same thing. How can records so old be in such good condition. The answer is that there are thousands of people that cherish these all through their life and only get rid of them because of some unfortunate occasion. That is why they are kept so good.

AL. McREA, Sr.

Box 182,

Westville, N. J.

ever finding who played with Ossman in the once popular trio. Then, in the HOBBIES article I have quoted, I did something that proves the danger of trusting to circumstantial evidence. Because Parke Hunter frequently worked with Ossman and played different instruments, I thought he might be the guitarist. But I was even more inclined to suspect Roy Butin, because Butin, forty-odd years ago, was probably the best known guitar player in America. As the partner of the mandolin virtuoso, Valentine Abt, he made some of the earliest double-faced Victor records. He also played with another great mandolinist, Samuel Siegel. In vaudeville he and the violinist, Michael Banner, were famous as The Olivette Troubadours, a name they also used in making Edison cylinders. What more natural, then, than to suspect that Butin was a member of the Ossman-Dudley Trio?

But he wasn't. And neither, in spite of the circumstantial evidence, was Parke Hunter. Vess Ossman's partners in the trio were two brothers. Audley Dudley played the triple-string mandolin, and George N., the harp-guitar. And there, with the addition of the immortal Sylvester Louis Ossman, you have the Ossman-Dudley Trio! Now that I look back on the mystery which is a mystery no longer, I wonder why it never occurred to me that there might be two players named Dudley in the trio.

The way I stumbled on the solution, or, rather, had it forced on me, is an unusual story in itself. Most readers of this department know that the late John H. Bieling gave parties in September, 1946 and 1947, at his home in Hempstead, Long Island, for a number of his fellow pioneer recording artists and their admirers. Mr. Bieling died in 1948, but the series of parties continued, sponsored by record collectors.

More than two years after John Bieling's death, Mrs. George N. Dudley wrote to him, on November 13, 1950, from her home, 23 Central Avenue, Amityville, Long Island:

"About three years ago I saw a picture in Newsday of old-time phonograph artists at a gathering in your home. Would it be possible for me to obtain a record of the Ossman-Dudley Trio? They made records for Victor and Columbia at the time Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Will Oakland, Caruso, Melba and other top-notchers were recording.

"My husband is the last of the trio, being seventy-three years of age, so I surely would appreciate it if I could possibly get one of these records. Thanking you for whatever information you may give me, sincerely, Mrs. George N. Dudley."

The Bieling family turned this letter over to their neighbor and friend, E. B. Burke, president of Pioneer Recording Artists and Admirers, and Bryant was thoughtful enough to send me a copy. It gave me a moment of real excitement, for, thanks to a kindly twist of fate, it was apparent that I now had the means of solving that mystery of the Ossman-Dudley Trio. I wrote immediately to Mrs. Dudley, telling her I had long enjoyed the trio's recordings and asking for information concerning its members. This she gave in generous measure.

And now we have almost reached the point where I may begin quoting from Mrs. Dudley's letters, sometimes rearranging the paragraphs, which she set down just as they occurred to her, so that they will give a more coherent narrative. But first I should like to mention that the Ossman-Dudley Trio appears to have been the successor to the Ossman Banjo Trio, which made several records in 1904 and 1905. The earlier group consisted of Ossman and two other banjoists, Parke Hunter and William Farmer. Their records included a hauntingly pretty Edison cylinder, No. 8841, "I've Got a Feelin' for You," issued in November, 1904, and two Columbia cylinders, Number 32666, "Egypt," came out in the April, 1905, Columbia list, and 32699, "Hurrah, Boys!" a two-step, in May. Vess Ossman also recorded a number of duets with Hunter and Farmer as his partners,

Now, Mrs. Dudley's letters, with occasional comment, where it appears to be needed, by myself:

"In regard to the Ossman and Dudley Trio, my husband, George (the older of the Dudley Brothers) played a 36-string harp guitar; his brother, Audley, a triple-string mandolin, and of course, Ossman, the five-string, long-neck banjo, which he played with his fingers.

JIM WALSH WANTS TO BUY

Old phonograph record catalogs and supplements (mostly prior to 1925); back copies of phonograph publications—Talking Machine World, Talking Machine News, the Gramophone, the Phonogram, Diamond Points, Edison Phonograph and Amberola Monthly, Voice of the Victor, etc.—photographs, advertisements, and all sort of reference material dealing with the history and development of sound recording that will provide background information for Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Please do not send me lists of records for sale. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. Address:

JIM WALSH
Box 131 Vinton, Va.

Antique
MUSIC BOXES
For Sale
Largest Assortment in existence
All are old instruments in perfect condition
All sizes & types from $50 to $5000
ALSO EXPERT REPAIRING
BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.
139 4th Avenue, Pelham 65, N. Y.
(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825)

THE OLD MUSIC STORE
Musical Antiquities in Working Condition
Esther Skerritt Sanders
DEANSBORO, N. Y.

ANNOUNCING
FASSETT RECORDING STUDIO
HIGH QUALITY TAPE AND DISC RECORDINGS MADE IN AN UNIQUE ATMOSPHERE OF PRIVACY AND COMFORT

- Steinway Grand Piano — Altec and RCA Microphones —
- Ampex Tape Recorders — LP and 78-RPM Lacquer Discs Cut with Famous "Hot Stylus" Technique to Ensure complete Freedom from Surface Noise —
- ON LOCATION RECORDINGS of Concerts, Theatrical Performances, Weddings, Banquets, etc., by the AUDIO ASSOCIATES of Cambridge —
- AIR CHECKS: Your Favorite Radio Programs Recorded Off the Air —
- AMATEUR AND PROFESSIONAL Tapes Faithfully Transferred to Discs —
- DUBBING A SPECIALTY: Recordings of all types, from your collection or ours, copied to LP or 78-RPM discs.
- COLLECTORS CORNER: A choice selection of rare vocal recordings for sale, including unusual material by Melba, Ponselle and Flagstad.

STEPHEN FASSETT — 3 Byron Street, Boston 8
(on Beacon Hill off River Street)
CApitol 7-7125 — BY APPOINTMENT ONLY

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Transcription's, Armed Forces Radio Service Recordings & etc. By Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo & Ink Spots. Money no object.—Paul Adams, 30 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. d120061

RECORDS FOR SALE

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. f3084

RARE RECORDINGS (1900-1950), reasonable prices. Write for Bargain List.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Avenue, New York City. ap3403

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. f124201

WANTED: Cylinder records, operatic disk records. Best prices for new or mint records.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. jly6806

ORIGINAL RECORDS, 1900-1925. Famous Artists or the past. Interesting premium offers. Free lists.—Universal, Box 32, Allston, Mass. mh3403

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o12511

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large varied stock. Please state "wants". For information write or visit —Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St. N. Y. C. 29, N. Y. ap68801

"If its been recorded—we have it." Lewin Record Paradise, 5600 Hollywood Blvd., Los Angeles 28, Calif. ap3804

For Sale: Judy Garland, Marlene Dietrich Broadcasts—Microgroove or 78RPM. — A.R.G. Box 341, Cooper Station, N. Y. C., N. Y. f3483

HAVE YOU CARUSO RECORD worth $25? Free Guide to Collector's Records (1953 edition) lists artists, numbers, values; 7500 items. $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Avenue, New York 19, N. Y. my6829

THOUSANDS of used records, all varieties; send wants. —Perry's, 3914 Van Buren, Culver City, Calif. f3652

Operatic Collector's Attention: Drastic clearance; thousands of fine vocal records, classical and operatic. Priced 50 cents to $1.50 each. All originals. Free lists.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. ap3447

ORGANS FOR SALE

MELODEONS; small organs. Beautiful restored instruments. Expert repairing. Reasonable prices.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. je6675

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Write your wants.—Fore's, H-3151 High, Denver 6, Colorado. jly126121

PHONOGRAPHS

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, parts, records, catalogs, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. ap6844

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts. Old post cards, and early model typewriters.—Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. je6276

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, parts, small horns, reproducers, records, catalogs.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. ap6084

MUSIC BOX DISCS

FOR SALE: 500 Regina, 15½" discs. 100 Regina, 37" discs. Also other sizes and makes. Send for lists. Send for my tune disc Want List, offering premium prices for certain tunes. Wanted: Mira music boxes playing 6½" and 9½" discs.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. mh3437

FOR SALE: Regina disc, 15½", $1 ea.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. f4823

MUSIC BOXES WANTED

WANT ALL KINDS of music boxes, regardless of condition. Also any steel disc records or Swiss, cylinders, original pictures & catalogues. Describe briefly. Veteran starting hobby.—G. P. Battley, 2749 Macomb St., N. W., Washington 8, D. C. 16806

WANT ALL KINDS of damaged music boxes. Parts etc. Swiss or Disc types. Large cylinders and large steel disc. Describe briefly.—Veteran's Hobby, G. P. Battley, 2749 Macomb St., N. W., Washington 8, D. C. mh3215

MISCELLANEOUS MUSIC

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, direct imports, $1.80.—Jules Wolff, 74 Worth Street, New York. ap6844

WANT ALL TYPES of old music boxes, coin operated and otherwise. Write, quote best price, and picture, if possible.—George Trambitas, 3126 Elliott Ave. Seattle 1, Washington. je128291

EVERYTHING for the collector: records, sheet music, piano rolls. Specialists in supplying rare items at "reasonable prices." Jazz, Blues, Race, Swing, New Orleans, Personalities, Popular, Operatics Vaudevillians. Send wants to: —Bob Colton, 680 Willoughby Ave., Brooklyn 6, New York. ap3426

WANTED: Edison, Columbia cylinder phonographs, records, catalogues, small horns. Catalogues.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. jly6215

FOR SALE: Steinway Grand Piano, good condition, $150. Mason and Hamlin Organ, good condition, $25. Write: —Myron Warren, Box 964, Perry, N. Y. ap3863

WANTED: Edison, Columbia, cylinder phonographs, cylinder records, books, catalogs on same. Small horns. Reproducers.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. f3023

HUNDREDS of IMPORTED cut-out vocals, rare Golden Age operatics; G&T, Fonotipia, etc., hard to get Music Hall and Personality records, unusual band and orchestral items, imported LPs, all may be found on our free mailing lists. Write today.—Ross, Court & Co., (Canada), 121 Simcoe Street, Toronto, Ont. mh3867

"George N. was born in Baltimore, Maryland, and Audley F. was born on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. Their grandmother had her plantation on the Eastern Shore. Their grandfather was a member of the House of Representatives. Colonel Tilghman, of the Eastern Shore, wrote two volumes of 'The History of Talbot County,' which mentions the Dudleys. He knew my husband's father, who was a trainer of racing and pacing horses and drove a high-wheeled sulky. He built a half-mile race track on the old estate. George's father had a stock farm and owned an offspring of the famous race horse, 'Hannibal.'

"The boys were left orphans when very young. When they grew older, being musically inclined, they formed a mandolin orchestra, which also included guitars. They went to Baltimore and played in the Palm Garden of Kernan's Theater for quite a few years. All the celebrities used to stop there, among them Nat Wills, Weber and Fields, Walter C. Kelly, McIntyre and Heath and numerous others. When they finished there, they came to New York and did Sunday night concerts in all the theaters. Finally, Vess heard about the Dudley Brothers, hence the Ossman-Dudley Trio. They were with Vess for quite some time, not only doing records, but they played in the homes of some of the wealthiest people.

"Here's a little story I think you might get a kick out of. They had a date at one of these homes, so naturally they walked up the front steps, and who should come out to greet them but the 'brass-buttons.' When he saw the instruments he directed them to the 'help' entrance. Ossman spoke up and said, 'We go in the front door, otherwise no music to-night!' I get a kick out of that because I knew Ossman very well, having worked for him at the Martinique Hotel, 32nd Street and Broadway."

To interrupt Mrs. Dudley for a moment, anyone who knows Vess Ossman, even if, like myself, only from

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Catalog 15c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. o124201

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS.—Latest hits and old favorites, all 75c. Send for free list. Extra roll boxes, 4½c. Also player material, parts, service.—Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Company, 222 South Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. d122112

Besides playing in the Ossman-Dudley Trio, George and Audley Dudley also had a quartet, shown above, which entertained at social events. Left to right—Henry Lundgren, 'cello; Audley Dudley, banjo; Charles Cochran, organ; and George Dudley, harp-guitar.

the reminiscences of his friends, will enjoy that anecdote. He was a man of fierce pride and easily aroused temper, and old-time phonograph company workers who can remember the feeling he used to display when a banjo string broke in the middle of a recording session will wonder that he showed so much restraint when the doorman tried to be snooty. It's a safe bet that the trio went in through the front door. After all, Vess had played for President Theodore Roosevelt and King Edward of England, and he wasn't a bit impressed by somebody who just happened to be wealthy!

Back to Mrs. Dudley:

"The Ossman-Dudley Trio used to play a lot for Cornelius Vanderbilt, Sr. They played in his home, also on his twin yachts, as well as at the 47th Regiment Armory, where he was Commodore. Ossman always carried an extra banjo with him for Mr. Vanderbilt, because he liked to sit down and play with the boys. He is only one of the elite that they played for, so you can gather from that the class of work they had.

"The trio also played Sunday night concerts in the theaters. Vess was late getting in one Sunday, so he hurriedly dressed to 'tux,' but forgot to change his shoes, so he went on stage with tan shoes. Well, that was 'our Vess!' The audience got a laugh out of that. Then, another time, the stagehand put out three gilded chairs, and poor Vess would have to get the rickety one, so down he went. That got a howl also, but probably the audience thought it a part of the act. They also played on the 'apron' of the old Hippodrome Theater, where Radio City Music Hall now is.

"I also got a kick out of Dud when he tells about working in not such a choice neighborhood. There were quite a number of youngsters up in the balcony, who came 'armed.' The boys always played good numbers, such as 'Poet and Peasant' and 'William Tell' overtures, but the youngsters didn't like that, so they started throwing their missiles. One lemon struck Vess' banjo, which resounded all over the place. Pop sure does laugh when he tells of that experience!

"In regard to Vess' making records with Bill Farmer," Mrs. Dudley continues, "I have never heard any of those records, but I heard Farmer when he was playing at Faust's in Columbus Circle. In those days they called such places cabarets; today they call them night clubs. My husband remembers Parke Hunter. Vess' children were too young for him to remember, outside of Vess, Jr. Was very much surprised to learn of his death. I had often wondered what happened to him and whether he had followed in his father's footsteps."

Mrs. Dudley said that a financial disagreement, such as has been common to the theater since its earliest days and probably always will be, caused the Dudley Brothers to end their business association with "The Banjo King," but that the personal friendship remained unimpaired. She relates:

"When George and Audley gave up records they opened an agency of their own and had a very fine class of work. They developed banjos. My husband plays a long-neck 'plectrum' banjo. Finally, his brother died about the first of September, 1916, and we were married September 5 in Washington, D. C., by the same minister who preached the funeral service for Audley. He is buried in Bladensburg, Maryland. Had my husband thought, he would have had Audley taken to the Eastern Shore, as his father had a big 'plot' there.

"The Dudley Brothers had all George Hamilton Dean's work. He was opposite St. Patrick's Cathedral, where Radio City is today. Dean was one of the biggest caterers in New York. Then they had Louis Sherry's, at 44th Street and Fifth Avenue, and played at some of the most wonderful affairs.

"After my husband lost his brother he lost heart in music—that is, for a while. At that time WEA came into existence. They called up my husband and asked him if he would go

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 37)

Clocks made by Aaron Willard are distinguished by symmetrical design, good workmanship, excellent decoration and precision movements. His clocks are usually fitted with beautifully designed and delicate hands. The specimen illustrated is an excellent example.

Some case on case clocks by Willard, and others, have a kidney shaped dial which, in my opinion, does not improve the symmetry of the whole. It is believed that the round dial is earlier than the kidney dial. It is certainly more to my taste.

Willard clocks are rare today and, of course, in tremendous demand. Those bearing the name of Simon Willard are first choice while Aaron Willard's masterpieces rank second in demand and, of course, value. Some Willard pieces have commanded prices that are little short of fabulous.

The case on case clock is a typical product of Massachusetts clockmakers and was seldom seen even in neighboring Connecticut. This illustration is so good that elaborate description is neither necessary nor desirable.

Illustration No. 23. This is a very fine and most unusual musical English bracket clock. Most of this type clocks are rather plain at the top and fitted with a carrying handle. This is the first and only one I have seen with cupola added. It is of course entirely authentic.

This clock, by Des Granges of London, is early nineteenth century and, except in appearance, is typical of the musical bracket clocks of that period. It is fitted with a whole series of bells for both chimes and musical selections. With the standard setting, it will chime on each quarter hour and play a musical selection on the hour. As will be noted, there are settings at the top of the dial for music, bells, muted bells and various musical selections, allowing for a variety of chimes and musical numbers to suit the mood and desires of the owner.

These musical English bracket clocks are among the finest mechanisms made anywhere in the world and they were sold at fancy prices for that period. A great many of them were made for the American market. One of the largest importers in this country was Tiffany & Co. of New York. The selling prices, when new, ranged from six hundred to one thousand dollars, depending on the maker, the ornamentation, the musical arrangement, etc.

These clocks are comparatively rare today and much desired by collectors. Nevertheless, if one is lucky, it is still possible to pick one up at a price somewhat less than the original selling price. But one must be VERY LUCKY indeed.

Space for another chapter has run out and we still have a long way to go in completing the story of the Willis Michael collection. I still have twenty photographs to be covered, among which are clocks of world-wide renown and interest. If our readers will bear with me, these will all be covered in ensuing installments.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 29)

"I also get a kick out of 'Dud' when on the air the opening night, but George told them he was not interested, since he had lost his brother. They said that on account of his being one of the pioneer record makers they would very much like to have him, Well, that was that, but shortly afterwards he 'perked up' and thought he would carry on the Dudley name again. He got Sherry's back and appeared there with his 'Versatile Sextet,' singing and instrumental. The musicians doubled up on two or three instruments.

"Thereafter we were on WOR, known as the 'Novelty Quartet,' of which I was one of the members. At that time there were no commercials, I'm sorry to say. We would have had to stay on for quite some time before being 'sold.'

"I remember that one time Vess could not leave New York to go on a show playing in Richmond, Virginia, so he sent Audley as banjoist in his place. Vess had charge of music and the show at the Martinique at that time, so Vess, Jr., went down and managed the show—my first appearance in show business. This was a long time after the Ossman-Dudley records."

Mrs. Dudley gives the following information concerning the senior Ossman, which may supplement my former HOBBIES series on "The Banjo King":

"Vess came from Hudson, in up-state New York. When he was a young fellow he used to play on the trains coming down to New York and back, wearing a 'linen duster.' While riding back and forth to New York, he heard of a contest being held at Carnegie Hall, so he threw his hat in the ring and came out with high honors. I think it was then that they named him 'the Banjo King' because shortly after that he went to Europe and played for King Edward. In my opinion there was only one 'Banjo King' and I mean just that . . . Vess used to play harmonics that no one ever does today. It was beautiful . . . But I have always enjoyed listening to Fred Van Eps' records, also those of Harry Reser. Reser is a later comer but very good."

Mrs. Dudley says that her husband was seventy-five years of age on April 24, 1952, and that his brother Audley would be seventy-three if he were alive. "I don't count," she adds, "because I'm only a kid of sixty!"

I was sorry to learn that neither Mr. nor Mrs. Dudley is in the best of health. She has arthritis and high blood pressure with, she says, bronchial asthma, to top it off. Mr. Dudley suffers from sinus troubles, and, because of low resistance, is constantly plagued with colds. However, he has been for many years a valued worker in a profession about as far removed from music as it well could be.

Says Mrs. Dudley:

"My husband still commutes every day to New York and does not get home until late at night. He is in the advertising business—has been for years. Even when he made records he was in this business, and is one of the best men in his field today. He still has that wonderful spry gait, bless his heart! You would never guess his age. He was forty when I married him and is still going strong, outside of his sinus. He has always been termed 'the old iron horse,' taking care of business during the day and his music at night.

"Incidentally, George has had wonderful musicians working for him. Felix Arndt, composer of 'Nola,' was one of his piano players. He made piano rolls for Aeolian. (Arndt, who died in the 1918 flu epidemic, was also the first pianist of the Van Eps Trio, being succeeded in 1916 by Frank Banta, and he likewise made solo Victor records.—J. W.)

"'Dud,' as he is known, is very nervous and temperamental. After all, there's a reason for that, because, as I said, he gets up every morning at 5, leaves at 6:30, and I never know what time he will get home. He has a very responsible job—anything that goes wrong with metal advertising plates, he has to see that it's made O. K. before going to press. If there is a defect in a half-tone, they have him take care of it. When he is finished you can't tell where the defect or scratch was."

Mrs. Dudley mentioned in one of her letters that she was sending me a photograph showing the Dudley Brothers and two other musicians with whom they played for afternoon teas. I have submitted the photo for reproduction with this article. In the order of their appearance in the picture, the musicians are Henry Lundgren, 'cello; Audley Dudley, banjo; Charles Cochran, organ; and George Dudley, harp guitar. Mrs. Dudley also sent a photo of herself, taken in 1913. "In those days," she says, "I weighed 123 pounds. That's why they called me 'The Little Girl With the Big Voice.' Now," she adds jokingly, "I'm 'the Big Parade.'"

Mrs. Dudley also gives some interesting details of her own professional career. She writes:

"I am sending you an old program from the Martinique Hotel. They had me in Variety as being a riot every night. 'The Chocolate Soldier' was playing on Broadway at the time, and I was under contract to use 'My Hero' and 'Sands of the Desert' for a whole season. We had the reputation of having the best show along Broadway, bar none, under the supervision of Vess Ossman. That was in the time of Churchill's, Shanley's, Lauber's Bustanoby's, the Hofbrau, Marlborough, Blenheim, Faust's, Tokio, Pekin Reisenweber's, Rector's, Wallach's, Maxim's and others. When Vess got out the place was not the same, as the hotel had also changed ownership. I had everything that came through there—sang in the tearoom, also with Holmes' Concert Orchestra in the Louis Room, and then the Dutch Room at night, as well as at banquets and dinners. Ossman thought a lot of me. He had all the confidence in the world in my making good. I only wish we'd had radio and television in those days. Years ago we didn't have to sing into a mike to be heard. You had to be there with the goods—or else!"

Returning to her husband's career, Mrs. Dudley continued:

"After Audley died, 'Dud' met Vess on Broadway, and Vess said he felt very bad about Audley's death. He intimated that he would like to 'double up' with 'Dud,' but my husband would not go on the road, because he had too much of his own work to take care of. Eren Mondorf, who was manager of Keith's Circuit, previously had wanted the Dudley Brothers to go on the road but they refused. . . My cousin, Thurland Chattaway," she adds, "was the composer of 'Mandy Lee' and 'Red Wing,' which were very popular years ago and still are today. Of course he had many others, but those seemed to be outstanding."

And now I have come to the end of my quotations from Mrs. Dudley's letters. But a few words about the Ossman-Dudley Trio records seem in order before closing the article.

The first two Victors by the ensemble were issued in April, 1906. They were No. 4624, "St. Louis Tickle," and 4625, Victor Herbert's "Al Fresco." The "Tickle," composed by Barney and Seymore, was the most popular of all Ossman-Dudley records. When Victor introduced its double-faced discs in 1909, it was coupled on No. 16092 with Ossman's solo, "A Gay Gossoon." This stayed in the catalog until the advent of electrical recording, but, probably because of defects in the master, was remade in 1923 by a group headed by Fred Van Eps and calling itself the Plantation Trio. Van Eps also remade the "Gossoon" side.

"Al Fresco" was less popular and stayed in the catalog only a couple of years. It was not issued in double-faced form. In May, 1906, the trio was represented by "Koontown Kaffee Klatsch" (No. 4659), which also had a relatively brief life. Then in June came No. 4679, J. Bodewalt Lampe's tuneful march and two-step "Dixie Girl." The supplement writer commented:

"A march by the composer of 'Dreamy Eyes' and 'Creole Belles' is sure to be a good one, and 'Dixie Girl' is quite worthy of Mr. Lampe's reputation. Played by this new instrumental combination with snap and precision."

"Dixie Girl," like "St. Louis Tickle," proved to be a big seller. It was combined on double-faced record No. 16667 with one of Ossman's best solos, "A Bunch of Rags," and stayed in the catalog for about twenty years. It also was remade (in 1921) by the Plantation Trio, but the later record omitted the mandolin, and the instrumentation consisted of two banjos and a guitar. Van Eps likewise did a re-make of "Bunch of Rags."

The Ossman-Dudley Trio's first

Columbia records appeared in September, 1906. Both were two-minute cylinders. On 32984, the trio played the "Koontown Kaffee Klatsch" march and two-step, composed by J. P. Greenberg, which it had previously recorded for Victor. Selections from "The Mayor of Tokio," a musical comedy by Will F. Peters, appeared on 32985.

In October, 1906, the trio made its first appearance on Columbia discs, with No. 3476, "Koontown Kaffee (or Koffee, as Columbia spelled it) Klatsch." The record was more successful, for some reason, than on the Victor, and when this oddly haunting number was combined on Columbia double-faced record No. A218 with Ossman's "Buffalo Rag" it remained a standard seller for many years.

One month later, in November, No. 3491, the disc version of the "Mayor of Tokio" selections came out. It was not so popular as "Koontown," although it was combined on A219 with a cornet and trombone duet of "Alice, Where Art Thou?" by unidentified players. (The latter was afterwards re-coupled on A881 with a flute solo, "I'll Follow Thee.")

Apparently, no more Ossman-Dudley records were issued until April, 1907, when No. 3591 came out, containing Irene Gible's very catchy two-step, "Chicken Chowder." It may have been issued later on a cylinder, but I haven't been able to trace it.

Also in April appeared what almost certainly is the rarest Ossman-Dudley record—BC cylinder No. 85109 of a two-step by Charles Seymour, "The Panama Rag." This cylinder played for three minutes as compared to two minutes for the average "roller" and could be used only on a special Columbia instrument with a six-inch mandrel. Not a great many of the longer-playing cylinder machines were sold, and records to fit them are hard to find.

As far as I can learn, that completes the list of Ossman-Dudley records, except that "Chicken Chowder" was doubled on No. A220 with Ossman's "Policy King" solo. In double-faced form, it sold well for fifteen years or more. Oddly enough, Vess doesn't seem to have made any Edison cylinders with the Dudley Brothers. The three may have played together for Leeds, Imperial, Zonophone or some of the other "off-brands" that were current in 1906. However, I have not seen any such records listed.

But, brief as the Ossman-Dudley list may seem, all their records make good listening, and Mr. and Mrs. Dudley would very much like to obtain copies of them all. If any HOBBIES readers have copies they can spare and will mail them to Mrs. George N. Dudley, 23 Central Avenue, Amityville, Long Island, New York, they will be received with genuine appreciation.

Since the foregoing was written, I have received a few more reminiscences from Mrs. Dudley, which I shall add here as a "supplement."

"My husband's middle name, she writes, "is Nabb and his brother's was Fleming. Their father was William George Dudley. I cannot recall their grandfather's name, but imagine it also was William George."

"Dud's height is about five feet four; weight about 153; eyes, light blue; hair, gray, used to be dark."

"When my daughter comes to visit us, I will have her take a 'flash' of us, which I think you would like to have. We had only one child, Florence Mae (very good looking!) but we have four of the darlinest granddaughters—Florence Estelle Amberman, born May 5, 1938; Shirley Ann, born June 7, 1943; Jean Irene, born October 6, 1947; and Renée, born July 13, 1951. . . My daughter said, 'Mother, I'm making up for what you didn't have,' so I told her not to do me any more favors—four are enough! But the grandchildren are what 'Dud' and I live for. Their daddy is an engineer on the Long Island Railroad, but he and his little family are going down to Florida, so he will be an engineer down there. Long Island is very damp, not good for sinus troubles, which my son-in-law has, and the children have had terrible colds one after another, so I hope it improves their health, going down there."

"Audley Dudley has a daughter, Virginia, but she has no children. She lives in Kenwood, Maryland, but was only a child when Audley died. . . She has expressed a desire for some of her father's records, and I hope I can find them for her."

"Have you," Mrs. Dudley continues, "ever heard of Ruby Brooks and Harry Denton? They were banjoists and theatrical agents, who used to entertain in private homes. It was through their office that Vess Ossman went on the other side and entertained King Edward. They were considered top-notchers also. They always wore high silk hats, so you can gather from that what old-timers they were. I wonder if they made records? (Note by Jim Walsh—Ruby Brooks began making Edison cylinders in the 1890's and kept it up until his death in, or around, 1906. I don't recall his playing with Denton, but he did duets with a play named Ginter.)"

Mrs. Dudley also asks: "Do you remember Pavlowa, the Polish dancer? She had an idea that she would like to have a mandolin on the stage for one of her dances. She went to Brooks and Denton, and asked them if they knew where she could get just that kind of musician. She had all manuscript, which had to be memorized. Harry Denton said, 'There is only one man in New York City who can fill the bill and that is Audley Dudley.' He filled it O. K., and Pavlowa was very much pleased because he didn't have much time to memorize the music, but he had a wonderful brain and memory." (Note by J. W. —This is just one of a number of Pavlowa's unusual actions. The Columbia record supplement for December, 1911, says that when she saw

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 41)

Erwin H. Gold of Hollywood, California and is in excellent condition. It operates as follows: A coin is placed in the extended left hand, he lowers his arm and the coin is deposited in the bank. At the same time he nods his head forward in a polite gesture of thanks. Of course his arm returns to the original position automatically, ready for another coin.

The bank is made of cast iron with the exception of the left arm which is made in two sections of a metal stamping. It is in excellent condition with no repairs. The paint is in exceptionally good condition for a bank with such an early date of manufacture. The grillwork is black with gold trimmings and the name "Bank" is also gold. The frock coat is black with grey trousers and the face and hands are naturally painted. Unlike most of the banks with either the conventional round coin trap or lock with key, this bank has a section of the grill by the feet of the figure which swings out to remove the coins. The bank itself is dated 1876 and this appears in front of the figure on the counter.

So far there are two of these banks known to exist in private collections. There have been rumors of another one and possibly two more, but so far nothing has come to light to substantiate these rumors.

F. L. BALL

COLLECT - BUY - SELL - EXCHANGE

High Grade Banks and Toys for Collectors

Mechanical Penny Banks - Still Banks

Cap Pistols - Bell Toys - Engines & Trains

Fire Apparatus - Circus Items - Cannons

Old Tin and Iron Toys of Every Description

Largest stock of old Banks and Toys in United States.

Correspondence Invited

45 Fresh Pond Lane,
Cambridge 38, Massachusetts

I will pay top prices for
MECHANICAL BANKS
Damaged Banks if rare will be accepted.
HARRY G. MILLER, Collector
1418 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo.

WANTED

OLD PENNY MECHANICAL BANKS
Furnish detail of description, condition and also your price.

Will Trade Duplicates
Booklet available containing all Bank Gradations, $1.00
Appraisals 2% of value. Minimum Fee, $1.00.

HENRY MILLER
18 Elliot Street, Mount Vernon, N. Y.

Wanted...

ANTIQUE Toy Banks

TOY JOBBERS CATALOGS

Describe fully and state price

Thornton C. Thayer 74 WALL STREET
NEW YORK 5, N. Y.

Bonus for Mechanical Banks

Will pay top prices for banks in good condition
WRITE OR WIRE AT ONCE TO:

ERWIN H. GOLD
317 N. Rodeo Dr.
Beverly Hills, Calif.

MECHANICAL BANKS & TOY PISTOLS

Especially Want:

MECHANICAL BANKS:

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>● TURTLE (Sticks head out)</li> <li>● BOW-ERY BANK</li> <li>● PRESTO (Mouse on roof)</li> <li>● CAMERA BANK (Picture pops up)</li> <li>● JONAH &amp; WHALE (Jonah emerges from whale)</li> <li>● AMERICAN BANK (Sewing machine)</li> </ul> | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>● DING DONG BELL (Tin mechanical)</li> <li>● BOWLING ALLEY BANK</li> <li>● BED RIDING HOOD</li> <li>● FOOTBALL (Colored man kicks ball)</li> <li>● CLOWN ON BAR (Tin figure)</li> </ul> |
|---|---|
- PISTOLS:
- |  |   |
|--|---|
| <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>● CAT</li> <li>● DUCK</li> <li>● CHICKEN (Just out)</li> </ul> | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>● MOON FACE</li> <li>● TURTLE</li> </ul> |
|--|---|

Also want cast iron horsedrawn carriages and animated bell ringing pull toys.

F. H. GRIFFITH

271 Lebanon Avenue, Pittsburgh 28, Pa.
MT. LEBANON

MECHANICAL BANKS

Repaired, buy, sell, trade; parts furnished, coin traps for all banks. Will buy broken banks and parts.

V. D. HOWE

395 W. Utica St., Buffalo 22, N. Y.

BIG PRICES PAID FOR CERTAIN MECHANICAL BANKS

List of Prices I pay, only 25 cents

EARL ROMEY

Box 291 Bluffton, Ind.

MECHANICAL PENNY BANKS

WANTED:

Broken mechanical banks and bank parts.
STILL BANK - CAP PISTOLS - CANNONS
CIRCUS ITEMS

WILLIAM TREU

407 Broome St., New York 13, N. Y.

OLD MECHANICAL BANKS

By INA HAYWARD BELLOWS
Price $2.50

THE ONLY BOOK OF ITS KIND, designed for the antiques dealer and the collector. Descriptions and evaluations make this a valuable edition.

Order your copy from

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING CORP.
1006 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Illinois

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 38)

an eccentric dance, "The Texas Tommy," on the West Coast, she was "so charmed she stated her intention of introducing it in a ballet throughout Europe." I'll bet she didn't!

I am sorry to say Mrs. Dudley reports her health and that of her husband are worse than when her original notes were written. "Since the summer of 1951," she says, "I have lost 59½ pounds...I turned against food and even the cooking nauseated me terribly. Naturally, it has left me very weak. It is something new for up to last winter...I have a heart ailment also so have to take things easy and rest as much as possible. Have been advised to go to a drier climate, and 'Dud' also needs to go, so guess we'll have to pull up stakes and follow our son-in-law and his family to Florida a little later."

I'm sure we all hope that going South will mean an immediate change for the better in Mr. and Mrs. Dudley's health, and that they will discover the secret of Ponce de Leon's Fountain of Youth when they move to Florida. Both, through their talents, have provided much pleasure to those fortunate enough to see and hear them, and it seems only right that their remaining years should be both healthy and happy.

MECHANICAL ANTIQUES WANTED

BANKS: RARE mechanical banks wanted. Price or will offer.—J. E. Nevill, 700 Dixie Highway, Covington, Ky. mh3272

STEAM ENGINES from dismantled peanut stands, wanted.—Vic Wintermantel, Bellevue, Penna. mh6263

FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Large collection of rare antique toys, mechanical and iron. Buy, sell and trade.—Lennie Marvin, 3133 Lincoln St., Franklin Park, Ill. ap3253

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

WIZARDS OF ACCORDION AND CONCERTINA

(Peter and Daniel Wyper and Alexander Prince)

By JIM WALSH

Invention of the first primitive accordion is attributed to Christian F. L. Buschmann (1805-64), a German, who brought out an instrument in 1822 which he called a "Handaeoline." This was exactly fifty-five years before Thomas A. Edison contrived his even cruder tinfoil phonograph. Cyrillus Damian, of Vienna, Austria, one of several subsequent developers of the instrument, is credited with giving it the name of "accordion" in 1829.

In spite of its limitations the accordion soon became popular. Within twenty years after its invention it was being played, probably not with mastery, by perhaps the world's most famous man of his day. During his first visit to the United States in 1842, the thirty-year-old English author, Charles Dickens, had moments of homesickness in which he executed "Home, Sweet Home" with much feeling on an accordion. He also played for fellow passengers aboard ship. There seems no likelihood that he practiced systematically or performed regularly after he returned home.

Rather oddly as it now seems, the accordion did not become a favorite recording instrument when the phonograph was developed for home use. In fact, I have not been able to find any evidence of its being recorded during the 1890's, but the phonograph history of that period is so hazy I shan't take the responsibility of saying no experimental records were made in this country or Europe. However, the first accordion rendition I have so far discovered issued by any American company is No. 212, "American Clog," played by John J. Kimmel for Zonophone in 1905.

There will be more in a succeeding article about Mr. Kimmel. But he, although a favorite pioneer recording artist, is not the first accordionist whose records were offered for sale. That distinction goes to another skilled exponent of the technique of playing jigs and reels — a son of Auld Scotia — Peter Wyper of Hamilton, Lanarkshire, Scotland, who was in his professional prime from 35 to 50 years ago.

1. Peter Wyper

Hamilton is a town about eleven miles southeast of Glasgow, and Peter Wyper, little known as he is to the generality of American record collectors, may be its most distinguished son. As long ago as 1903 he was painstakingly making his own "Empress" cylinder recordings of accordion and bagpipe solos, turning them out one at a time and apparently knowing nothing about processes of duplication.

The Talking Machine News of London first appeared in May, 1903. In its fourth (August) issue, Editor Leonard Lillingston wrote, under the heading of "Accordion Records":

From the North of Scotland Mr. Peter Wyper sends me a record of accordion playing, which not only proves him to be an expert record maker, but shows him to be quite a master of this instrument. I am not a lover of the accordion as handled by the Italian boys, the charm of whose playing is supplemented by a forlorn monkey, but Mr. Wyper proves beyond doubt that entertaining music can be produced from it.

"I can well believe him when he says, 'I have sold a considerable number of these records locally, but as I have to play and make each record separately, I should take it as a favour if you could enlighten me as to how to take one record from another. It is so monotonous playing the same tune time after time.'"

MANIFOLDING RECORDS. — This is the next stage after mastering "How to Make Records," and it requires special apparatus, which, by-the-way, I do not remember ever seeing advertised. There is nothing very formidable in it, however, and I have no doubt a chapter will be found in the series. . . It is too big a subject for the space allowed me, and I can only suggest that Mr. Wyper look at future numbers for an article on the subject.

The presumably genial Scotsman soon identified himself as a staunch supporter of the "T. M. N." In May, 1904, the editor wrote: "As will be seen elsewhere, Mr. Peter Wyper, of Cadzow, Hamilton, a good friend of ours ever since this journal was born, and himself a record maker of no mean ability, offers three prizes, of two pounds, one pound and ten shillings respectively, for the best records, to be made by amateurs only. We hope that our readers will avail themselves of Mr. Wyper's generosity, and prove themselves record makers at the same time." Wyper had an ad. occupying three-quarters of page seven, announcing his prize contest and saying:

The conditions are simple. The records must be made by Amateurs only. They must be CAREFULLY packed—note this well—to Mr. PETER WYPER, Cadzow Street, Hamilton, N. B., before the 25th of the present month of May. No records can in any case be returned. The records can be of whatever you like:

singing, talking, instrumental or band records. Competitors may send as many or as few records as they choose.

The ad. was repeated the next month, with the explanation: "We have decided to extend the time of entry in order to give readers all over the world a chance to compete. Records must be sent in not later than the 25th of June."

In view of Peter Wyper's spelling "carefully" in "carefully packed" with capital letters, the following editorial notice in that same June issue is at least mildly amusing:

Mr. Peter Wyper, Hamilton, N. B., sends two records for review, but, unfortunately, did not take our advice to pack them inside with wadding. In sending records through the post . . . they should have waste paper or wadding put inside the cylinder as well as being well packed outwardly, otherwise they are almost bound to be broken in transit. The unbroken record sent was a bagpipe solo and although we are not keen on the bagpipes at the best of times, we can recommend this record as a faithful reproduction of the instrument. The broken record we repaired, and find it was another of Mr. Wyper's specialties, an accordion solo, most carefully played. Mr. Wyper is a past master, as our readers are aware, on these two instruments.

On page 64 there is an ad. of "Wyper's Renowned Empress Records for Phonographs. Largest and best selections of Accordion & Bagpipe Records in the market, one shilling, threepence each. Trade supplied." Then follows a list of fifteen bagpipe selections. Wyper also made "Renowned International Melodeons, with hand-made steel reeds, best value in the world." Prices, at the rate of exchange prevailing then, would have been from about $4 to $8 in American money.

Presumably, one of the succeeding issues contained the names of Mr. Wyper's prize winners, but I have not sought them. However, on page 518 of the August, 1905, T. M. N. is an indication that Peter had learned something about duplicating methods, for his ad. reads:

PETER WYPER. The Champion Accordion Player's Phonograph Records. All Masters. Loud, clear and distinct Scotch music. Solos, Strathspeys, Reels, Hornpipes, Jigs, Marches, &c. Retail price 1/3 each. Special prices to the trade per doz. Lists sent on application.

On second thought, that reference to "all masters" may denote that the accordionist-piper was still monotonously turning them out one at a time.

make enough under such conditions to "supply the trade."

II. Wyper Signs with Columbia

It's likely that Empress records continued to issue for another couple of years from Cadzow street, Hamilton, North Britain, but the market for wax cylinders had begun to decline. However, the home-made "rollers" had at least one good effect. They brought Wyper to the attention of Columbia's English branch and late in 1907 he began to make accordion solos for that well established firm. Not only that, but his brother Daniel was engaged as Peter's duet partner and played some solos of his own. Thus the Wyper Brothers foreshadowed the more famous Italian team — the Deiro Brothers, Guido and Pietro — who were to come along a few years later.

The Columbia records by the Wyper "boys" (they were men of mature middle age) were similar to those that John Kimmel was already making familiar to a much larger audience in the United States. They consisted mainly of jigs, reels, hornpipes and a march and polka or two.

Beginning in 1909, the Wyper Brothers' productions began to appear in the American Columbia lists. Probably their availability was the chief reason Kimmel was not engaged to play for Columbia, as he did for virtually every other American record company. The first of the imported records was A652, "Royal Belfast Hornpipe," by Daniel, coupled with "Starlit March," a duet by the brothers. Daniel's only other solo in the American list was A728, "High Level Hornpipe." Peter played "Strathspey" on the other side. Another duet, "Red Rose March," was on A656, Peter obliging with "The De'il Among the Tailors," to complete the coupling.

Peter Wyper solos not previously mentioned, circulating in the United States, were: A762, "Busby Polka" and "Irish Jig — Father O'Flynn"; A716 — "Highland Schottische" and "Lord Lynedoch, Strathspey and Hornpipe"; A674 — "Hornpipes — Selections" and "Jigs Selections"; and A702 — "Reel and Jig — Stirling Castle" and "Strathspey." These releases, it will be seen, were concentrated into a period of a few months. It may be there were no more because Columbia engaged the great Guido Deiro as piano-accordion soloist in 1911, and his records were considered sufficient to take care of the needed repertoire.

Incidentally, the well played Wyper records were almost, but not quite, the first accordion numbers to be issued by Columbia in this country. The August, 1907, cylinder supplement contains No. 65061, "Russian

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 35)

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Transcription's, Armed Forces Radio Service Recordings & etc. by Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo & Ink Spots. Money no object.—Paul Adams, 30 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. d120061

WANTED: Gene Austin records in good condition.—Durrell Armstrong, 222 S. Vasser, Wichita 8, Kans. mh1021

RECORDS FOR SALE

Attention Record Collectors: Inaugurating auction sales. Rare and cut-out vocal records. Free lists. — C. Brown, 1375 East 18th St., Brooklyn 30, N. Y. my3825

RARE RECORDINGS (1900-1950), reasonable prices. Write for Bargain List. — Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Avenue, New York City. ap3403

WANTED: Cylinder records, operatic disk records. Best prices for new or mint records.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. jly6806

ORIGINAL RECORDS, 1900-1925. Famous Artists of the past. Interesting premium offers. Free lists.—Universal, Box 32, Allston, Mass. mh3403

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, Jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought. — E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122511

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening," large varied stock. Please state "wants". For information write or visit — Record Collectors Service, 502 East 88th St. N. Y. C. 29, N. Y. ap68801

"If its been recorded—we have it." Lewin Record Paradise, 5600 Hollywood Blvd., Los Angeles 28, Calif. ap3804

100% EUROPEAN LISTS of selected vocal operatic records. Many G&T, Fonotipias, Pathe, etc. Free lists on request. Wants supplied.—Collectors Haven, 148 Hancock Street, Brooklyn 16, N. Y. my3234

HAVE YOU CARUSO RECORD worth $25? Price Guide to Collector's Records (1953 edition) lists artists, numbers, values; 7500 items. $2.50 postpaid. — American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Avenue, New York 19, N. Y. my6829

Operatic Collector's Attention: Drastic clearance; thousands of fine vocal records, classical and operatic. Priced 50 cents to $1.50 each. All originals. Free lists.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. ap3447

MUSIC BOX DISCS

FOR SALE: 500 Regina, 15 1/2" discs. 100 Regina, 27" discs. Also other sizes and makes. Send for lists. Send for my tune disc Wani List, offering premium prices for certain tunes. Wanted: Mira music boxes playing 6 3/4" and 5 1/4" discs. —Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. mh3487

MUSIC BOXES WANTED

WANT ALL KINDS of damaged music boxes. Parts etc. Swiss or Disc types. Large cylinders and large steel disc. Describe briefly.—Veteran's Hobby, G. P. Battley, 2749 Macomb St., N. W., Washington 8, D. C. mh3215

WANTED MUSIC BOXES. Upright Symphonion music box that plays a set of 3-14" diameter discs at one time; 6 combs. Will accept in any condition. State how many sets of discs, price and condition. — D. P. Battley, Box 2868, Washington 13, D. C. mh1443

ORGANS FOR SALE

MELODEONS; small organs. Beautiful restored instruments. Expert repairing. Reasonable prices.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. je6675

PHONOGRAPHS

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, parts, records, catalogs, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. ap6844

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts. Old post cards, and early model typewriters.—Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. je6276

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, parts, small horns, reproducers, records, catalogs.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. ap6084

EDISON PHONOGRAPH, Model "D", Manufactured 1908. Like new. 2 and 4 minute reproducers. Beautifully hand painted "Morning-glory" horn. 35 records. — Ranch House Antiques, Inglesfield, Indiana. mh1002

EDISON CYLINDER phonographs, morning glory horns. 12 records, $20. Express collect. — Coppernoll's, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. mh1821

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Write your wants.—Fore's, H-3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. jly126121

SQUARE DANCE

AMERICANA: Collection 20 Texas Square Dance Calls, 50c. Privately printed.—Muchmore, Box 36, Universal City, Calif. my3652

MISCELLANEOUS MUSIC

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, direct imports, $1.80.—Jules Wolff, 74 North Street, New York. ap6844

WANT ALL TYPES of old music boxes, coin operated and otherwise. Write, quote best price, and picture, if possible. —George Trambitas, 3126 Elliott Ave. Seattle 1, Washington. je128291

EVERYTHING for the collector: records, sheet music, piano rolls. Specialists in supplying rare items at "reasonable prices." Jazz, Blues, Race, Swing, New Orleans, Personalities, Popular, Operatics Vaudevillians. Send wants to: —Bob Colton, 680 Willoughby Ave., Brooklyn 6, New York. ap3426

WANTED: Edison, Columbia cylinder phonographs, records, catalogues, small horns. Catalogues.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. jly6216

FOR SALE: Steinway Grand Piano, good condition, $150. Mason and Hamlin Organ, good condition, $25. Write: —Myron Warren, Box 964, Perry, N. Y. ap3863

HUNDREDS of IMPORTED cut-out vocals, rare Golden Age operatics; G&T, Fonotipia, etc., hard to get Music Hall and Personality records, unusual band and orchestral items, imported LPs, all may be found on our free mailing lists. Write today.—Ross, Court & Co., (Canada), 121 Simcoe Street, Toronto, Ont. mh3867

WANTED: Old phonographs, Polyphones, coin operated machines, catalogs, reproducers; Victor, Edison, Columbia. Describe, quote. Will trade.—Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio ap3633

WANT IN ANY CONDITION: Mechanically operated pianos; organs; music boxes; instructions. Please describe fully and state price.—R. W. Cochran, 1235 Overlook Ave., West Englewood, N. J. my3004

For Sale: Collection of old violins. One small English piano. One pair of pewter pitchers.—Freda S. Roggash, Dix, Nebraska. mh1042

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 33)

Kamarinskaja," composed and played by A. Greenberg, with organ accompaniment. There may have been other accordion offerings in foreign language supplements, especially those listed for customers in Scandinavian countries, where the accordion is extremely popular.

The 1917 Columbia record catalog still contained most of the Wyper records in its accordion section, which was prefaced: "With the five greatest accordion players in the world — Guido and Pietro Deiro, Daniel and Peter Wyper and John J. Kimmel — demonstrating their dexterity, the Columbia list of solos and duets on this interesting instrument may be considered representative." But, for some reason, the records in which Dan Wyper took part didn't sell as well in this country as Peter's solos, and by 1919 only four Wyper records were left — numbers A674, A702, A716 and A762 — all by Peter Wyper alone.

The 1917 catalog shows photographs of the brothers, both of whom I would judge to have been in their fifties, or even in the early sixties, when the pictures were made. Peter, smiling, has thin hair and a white mustache. Daniel, perhaps a couple of years younger, is almost bald but his mustache is darker than his brother's. He looks intensely serious.

Peter Wyper's four solos continued in the American Columbia catalog through 1926 — after the introduction of electric recording. In 1927 they had dropped to two — A716 and A762. In 1929, only one was left — "Busby Polka" and "Irish Jig — Father O'Flynn," which had been re-numbered 33020F and issued in the special Irish series. By 1933, Columbia ownership had changed hands, the catalog had been whittled down to a skeleton of its former self and the last Wyper record was gone.

In the British Isles, many more Wyper records were listed than were made available here. They were at first a part of the standard Columbia catalog, but when the British companies began to suffer from cut-throat German competition, Columbia brought out a new label, "Regal," at a lower price. A Regal circular dated August 18, 1921, contains a front page drawing of Peter Wyper, whom it describes as "Scotland's Greatest Accordion Player." It contains ten double-faced records on which the brothers play duets (the record that was called "Starlit March" by American Columbia was "Starlit Dell March" abroad); 48 double-faced offerings by Peter alone; and four by Alexander Prince

Daniel, who seems consistently to have played second fiddle (or should we say second accordion?) to his brother. Peter occasionally essayed an old-time song, such as "Silver Threads Among the Gold," and he did several two-steps, including "The Flappers," "Uncle Joshua," "Buster Brown" and "The Dancing Dustman." All these are credited to "Felix Burns," which makes me wonder why Wyper so signally favored that otherwise unknown composer. Can Felix Burns have been an assumed name for Peter Wyper, with "Burns" being borrowed from the name of the Scotch poet, Robert Burns? Peter also played "The Queen Mary Waltz," written by Burns, and "Fountain of Melody Waltz." Another oddity is that Felix Burns is the only song writer mentioned in the circular. I'll bet a bawbee he was Wyper himself!

The accordions played by the Wyper Brothers were the small, simple British type with the button on the right hand side. They derived from the "English" concertina, invented in 1827 and patented in 1829 by Charles Wheatstone (1802-75.) In 1844 he also produced the "Duet" concertina. Wheatstone was a distinguished man of science and is remembered for his development of the electric telegraph.

And that completes the story of the Wyper Brothers, as far as I know it. Presumably both are dead. Neither is of special interest to American collectors, but Peter deserves to be remembered as the first musician to market his own brand of accordion records.

III. Alexander Prince

The earliest American record I have found played on the concertina is Zonophone 563, "Entré Acte—Rose Mousse," made in 1907 by a gentleman with a jaw-breaking name, Isak Piroshinoff. A Minneapolis, Minn., accordion and concertina enthusiast, C. Hilding Bergquist, who has helped me with this article, says the player's name has also been spelled Piroch-nikov and a photo of him appeared in the October, 1909, issue of "The Musician." But the foremost exponent of the concertina was a Scotchman better known in the United States than the Wyper Brothers — the late Alexander Prince. For many years Prince gave recitals throughout the world and was a hit everywhere.

Mr. Bergquist says Prince's real name was Sutherland, though he never used it professionally. He was a prolific recorder, who began by making cylinders and discs for most British companies, but in 1912 became exclusive to Columbia.

I lack detailed information con-

CIRCUSIANA WANTED

Circus parade items wanted. About 1" per foot, but any size considered. —Wm. J. Boyd, 1908 East 86th St., Cleveland 6, Ohio. my3255 cerning Prince, but can quote parts of an interview, "The Prince of Concertina Players — A Chat With Alexander the Great," which appeared in the "Talking Machine News" of May 1, 1906:

Of course, everyone knows that Mr. Prince is acknowledged king of the concertina world, and those who would like to follow the fashion and belittle the same instrument as a musical instrument have but to hear him play, say, the "Tannhauser Overture" or the "Poet and Peasant," to have the foundations of that disbelief seriously undermined, whilst the experience of hearing any other excerpt from his large selection is guaranteed to completely shatter the remnant remaining.

A genius like Mr. Prince starts level with a poet—that he has to be born, not made. Developments come later. . . . Those readers of the T. M. N. who have had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Prince's artistic efforts, either on the cylinders of the Russell Hunting Company or the discs of another well known house . . . will be glad to hear that Mr. Prince survived the ordeal well and with due care will soon be able to get about.

"Tell me," I said . . . "how you began in this course? What was it that induced you to select the concertina in preference to more popular instruments, and what have you to say for yourself?" With somewhat of a sigh, he said, "I am, or was, alas, an infant prodigy. . . . I was eight years old, and I broke my leg. I had to lie in bed, and that was the start. . . . I used to be fond of pottering about with the instruments in my father's music shop, and when I was fostered up in bed they gave me a concertina, on which instrument I assiduously practiced."

Then followed the natural sequence. At the age of ten he performed at the Glasgow Exhibition, and this was the forerunner of a series of engagements that culminated in appearances at the London Pavilion, Crystal Palace and other abodes of high-glass talent. In the latter part of 1904 Mr. Prince had an extensive tour in the land of promise, South Africa, where his experiences were many and varied. . . . Traveling all night in a mule wagon through the celebrated Zwaartberg Pass (he) gave the dwellers at Oudtshoorn (a place untouched by electric car or motor bus) a great musical treat. On the way to the latter place . . . Mr. Prince and the party of which he was a member gave a show at another unfamiliarly named place, Prince Albert, and the journey between the last two places named was done in the mule wagon. . . . All night in a mule caravan is only part of the penalty of a successful concert artist, but there are plenty of persons who would be glad of a chance of such an outing.

Mr. Prince pointed out to me that the concertina was built fundamentally on the same principle as the organ. Enlarge the concertina, said he, and you have the organ. When I asked if he could explain why the concertina had not been so seriously treated as it deserved to be, Mr. Prince stated he thought one of the reasons was that no musician had ever taken it up, and another that practically no music was written for it. . . . He uses for his purpose the average instrument, but of a very superior make; one has 51 keys and the other 71, and it is the latter that he uses when organ effects are required principally on account of its greater range of bass. It is the variety known to concertinists as the duet concertina. On this the two higher octaves have their keys on the right of the instrument, whilst the rest are on the left.

A peculiar feature of the Anglo-German concertina is that the keys of all the notes which appear on the staves are on the one side, whilst the notes in the spaces are on the other. Mr. Prince has a remarkable knowledge of the theory of music, exemplified by the way he makes an adaptation of classical music to the needs of his instrument. He never bothers to write out the music, but goes ahead from the ordinary score, indelibly planting the adaptation in his mind at the same time.

Six weeks, said Mr. Prince, was the length of his turn at the Tivoli, Cape Town. That's a remarkable testimonial to his popularity and speaks well of his hold on an audience. Of course, there have been longer turns often in a city like this London, but for a small place such as Cape Town, with a nearly settled population, six weeks is the nail mark or an excellent turn. A funny thing is that in the colony under discussion . . . the black man is a devotee more or less of the cheap, common concertina, and he generally rests content with his talents if he can produce the first three notes of "Three Blind Mice." For a concertina player to conquer that prejudice is a sure and certain sign of the artist, and that, as you can see, Mr. Prince did. . . . In London . . . he has appeared under the aegis of such musical authorities as the Legal Musical Society, the Choughs' Club, the Old Acquaintance Club and in company with such turns as the Meister Glee Singers.

Hilding Bergquist has some comments on the foregoing article. He says:

There are two types of superior concertinas on which classical music can be played, the "English" and the "Duet." Prince played the "Duet" system, which is more of a solo instrument like an accordion, in that it is complete in itself and really needs no accompaniment, although he did have a pianist on many records. The "English" system, also perfect for classical music, nevertheless requires either orchestral or piano accompaniment and has had numerous virtuosi in England (long before Prince) who played concertos with symphony orchestras. It has also had many concertos, sonatas, etc., expressly composed for it. The greatest period of popularity for the "English" concertina was 1845-1880. So, when Prince says that "no musician had ever taken up the concertina and no music was written for it," please make clear to HOBBIES readers that Prince here refers to the "Duet" system which he himself played. The "Anglo-German" concertina combines elements of the English and the simpler German systems.

The Edison Blue Amberol catalog for April, 1914, gives a brief but more explicit account of Prince, which reveals that he was born in Glasgow, only a few miles from Hamilton, home town of Peter and Daniel Wyper:

ALEXANDER PRINCE, concertina. Born in Glasgow, Scotland, of a musical family. At the age of twelve he was regarded as a youthful prodigy, having made several highly successful public appearances as a concertina player. His first important engagement was at the London Pavilion and the Crystal Palace, where he shortly became a favorite. He then made a tour of South Africa, where he became so popular that in Cape Town he was given a six weeks' engagement in one theater. His repertoire includes every class of composition from "Tannhauser" and "Lohengrin" down to "Hiawatha."

That Edison catalog contained six Prince records in its British series: No. 23081, "The Butterfly"; 23064, "Catch Me If You Can—Dance"; 23128, "Forgotten Melodies"; 23029, "Medley of Irish Airs"; 23111, "Merry Widow Waltz," and 23055, "Nazareth." A later addition was 23176, "Bonnie Scotland." He had also made Edison two-minute standard and four-minute Amberol cylinders.

An interesting note appeared in the American Columbia supplement for July, 1914. Record No. A1529 combined "Catch Me If You Can" (Noel) played by Prince, with accordion solo, "Pride of the Roses" (Lavalle) by Pietro Deiro, and the supplement said:

Alexander Prince is perhaps the greatest artist in the playing of the (Duet) concertina that the world has ever had.

It is our privilege to list this month one of his best and most recent recordings. Differing from the accordion in both volume and quality of tone, the concertina is none the less an instrument of captivating musical quality and in the hands of a master its possibilities for entertainment and pleasure are endless. This record will make a sensational impression. It combines with a new accordion solo by Pietro Deiro, played in the customary masterly style associated in the public mind with this artist.

In October, Columbia announced another Prince record, A1572, "Lead, Kindly Light," coupled with "Maidstone," by the St. Hilda Colliery Band. Prince's side was described as a "concertina solo of the beloved old hymn . . . a marvel of tone and execution, its quality easily rivalling that of a pipe organ."

It would be an almost endless job to pore through stacks of British catalogs of the period from around 1905 to 1920, jotting down details of records by Alexander Prince. And if any HOBBIES readers want to go crazy, I can assure them the quickest way of achieving the desired end is to try to make sense of the record listings by the dozens of German companies who fought to corner the British market just before World War I by offering records as cheaply as possible — at a shilling or less. Sometimes the same inferior productions were issued under several different labels. Usually they were made from worn matrices; not infrequently from discarded ones of the legitimate firms or from others acquired in bankrupt sales. Names of artists often were changed, but not always. The Germans were such a nuisance they compelled all the leading British companies to bring out cheap records as a support for their "name brands." Even the high and mighty Gramophone Company, which had been getting five shillings for single-faced discs of ordinary popular music, was obliged to make a double-sided record, the Cinch, to sell at a shilling in competition with the Germans. Gramophone also of course retained Zonophone as a medium-priced disc. (Many naive British buyers thought that their playing on just one side made Gramophone records sound better than other kinds.)

Prince was represented in many catalogs, although it's doubtful that he played directly for some of the cheaper brands. As has already been said, he became exclusive to Columbia in 1912. But he had five double-faced records in the Edison Bell Velvet Face list for 1913, with titles ranging from "Hop Scotch" and "Darkies' Holiday" to "Il Bacio" and "The Lost Chord." The catalog said: "When Prince plays there is a Military Band in tone and volume. Any title Mr. Prince performs one can depend upon, as he selects with utmost care compositions which are most suitable for his instrument."

Prince was also represented with much the same titles in Edison Bell's list of the cheaper Winner records. One of the German firms — Decapo — offered concertina solos by "Mr. Steve Bartle," which was probably a pseudonym for Prince, since the titles were of the sort he most frequently played. Decapo's accordion records were by A. J. Scott, who played exactly the sort of numbers preferred by Peter Wyper. Scott's name also showed up in other catalogs. He probably was not Wyper in disguise, but he could have been. Some of Prince's Gramophone Company recordings were marketed in the United States in Victor's imported series.

Running down the list of accordion and concertina players for other British or pseudo-British companies of forty years ago: Coliseum offered "accordeon" solos by "G. Arditi," but the titles suggest they were really by Pietro Frosini, who remains to be considered in this series. Another unidentified player is Archie P. Andrews. Accordion players for the openly German Beka Company were "Mr. Frosini" and Scott. There was also "the Premier English Concertina Band" and one concertina solo by "W Seymour." Steve Bartle likewise appeared in the Favorite catalog, as did C. F. Losscher, who was probably a German. The one concertina record issued by Famous was by "Miss Minnie Paget" and tastefully coupled "Alexander's Ragtime Band" with the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana."

One "Pamby Dick" had numerous accordion solos in the Guardsman list. After the war began, Guardsman changed its name to Invicta and made a strenuous pitch at all-out patriotism by maintaining its products were "manufactured throughout in England of British Material by British Labour employed by British Capital." Record buyers were urged not to accept anything containing the words, "Made in Germany."

"Pamby Dick," whoever he was, also bobbed up in the Homophone record list, (some of his British-made records were issued over here by Gennett) while A. J. Scott held the fort for Jumbo. Pathé had a list of concertina records under Prince's name. The accordion honors were entrusted to Scott and "Signor A. De Benedetto." Prince was also represented in Pathé's cheaper "Diamond disc" series (which sounds like a deliberate copy of the Edison Diamond Disc). Mr. "Steve Bartle" turns up again in the low-priced popular record, while there are accordion solos by "Leo Mallet." Polyphon had accordion numbers by "Signor Casidio Recchia." Pelican offered concertina solos by Perci (or Percy) Henri while Scala issued two accordion and con-

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 42)

POLYDOR CATALOG

I am very glad that Stephen Fasset has decided to complete the pages from the 1924-25 Polydor catalog, which he began in HOBBIES sometime ago. This and another installment in the near future will probably complete the series.

—Aida Favia-Artsay

PAGES FROM A 1924-25 POLYDOR CATALOG

- LOLA ARTOT DE PADILLA & KARL JORN
19051 Die Koenigskinder—Bin ein lustiger Jaegersman B65005
Die Koenigskinder—Willst du mein Maieubuhle du Blumenreiche B65006
- MICHAEL BOHNEN & ROBERT HUTT
80078 Margarethe—O, gib junges Blut (Gounod) 3-44139
Margarethe—Wohlan unterschreibe 3-44163
- MICHAEL BOHNEN & ERNST KRAUSS
85304 Die Meistersinger—Gruss Gott, mein junker O44293
Die Meistersinger—Mein Freund in holder jugendzeit O44294
- MICHAEL BOHNEN & LOTTE LEHMANN
85305 Die Meistersinger—Gut'n Abend, Meister! O44299
Die Meistersinger—Doch starb eure Frau O44306
- MICHAEL BOHNEN & TINO PATTIERA
78546 Boheme—Ach, Geliebte, nie kehrst du mir wieder B25019
Othello—Saht ihr nicht manchmal in Desdemonens Haenden B25020
78548 Die Macht des Geschickes—In dieser feireichen Stunde (Verdi) B25021
- MICHAEL BOHNEN & VERA SCHWARZ
85306 Aida—Zu dir fuhrst mich ein ernster Grund O44309
Aida—Wohlauf denn! Erhebet euch! O44310
- CLAIRE DUX & HERMANN JADLOWKER
72928 Lucia—An des Todes heiliger Staette O44307
Lucia—Schwor! als Gattin mir ewige Treue O44308
72929 Aida—Todesduett., in two parts O44320/21
- CLAIRE DUX & ALBERT KUTZNER
65556 Das Hollandweibchen—Lied der Bela und Duett O44316
Das Hollandweibchen—Geliebter in der Ferne (DUX solo) O43325
65557 Das Hollandweibchen—Wenn der Dudelsack erklingt O44317
Das Hollandweibchen—(solo by CLAIRE DUX)
- CLAIRE DUX & JOSEPH SCHWARZ
72930 Rigoletto—Schon seit drei Monden O44297
Rigoletto—Ach, Gott, nur fur mich O44298
78548 Rigoletto—Gilda Duett O44314
BOHNEN & PATTIERA: Forza—In dieser feierlichen Stunde B25021
70691 Troubadour—Befreit, o welche Seligkeit (Verdi) 3-44157
Boheme—Walzer der Musette (DUX, solo) 53642
- ELISABETH VAN ENDERT & HERMANN JADLOWKER
72756 Margarethe—Es ist schon spat (Gounod) B25004
Margarethe—O Mondenschein B25005
72564 Hoffmanns Erzählungen—Horst du es tomen O44283
- ELISABETH VAN ENDERT & FRIEDRICH PLASCHKE
65271 Die Meistersinger—Gut'n Abend Meister O44286
Die Meistersinger—Ja, ja! Das hast du dir schoen erdacht O44287
- ELISABETH VAN ENDERT & JOSEPH SCHWARZ
72564 Troubadour—Die Stimme! Himmel, du bist es! (Verdi) O44292
72565 Traviata—Gott schenkte eine Tochter mir O44290
Traviata—Wenn einst die Zeit O44291
- EMMY HECKMANN-BETTENDORF & THEODOR SCHEIDL
62367 Troubadour—Sieh' meiner hellen Traenen Flut B5000
Troubadour—Befreit, o welche Seligkeit B5001
- FRIEDA HEMPEL & VELICIA KASZOWSKA
78543 Lohengrin—Du Aermste B25016
Die Meistersinger—Quintett, sung by LILLY HALFGREN-DINKELA, MARIA OLSZEWSKA, FRITZ SOOT, W. HENKE, JOSEF VON MANOWARDA B25014
- ROBERT HUTT & HEINRICH SCHLUSNUS
72735 Otello—Saht ihr nicht in Desdemonens Haenden O44333
Die Macht des Geschickes—In dieser feierlichen Stunde B25006
72741 Boheme—Ach Geliebte B25000
Die Perlenfischer—Der Tempel Brahma' strahlt B25003
72661 Wilhelm Tell—Ha, wohin? B25002
Wilhelm Tell—Gebet (solo by JOSEPH SCHWARZ) O42608
- HERMANN JADLOWKER & JOSEPH SCHWARZ
72931 Die Perlenfischer—Der Temple O44315
Die Macht des Geschickes—In dieser feierlichen Stunde 2-064058
70699 Guarda che bianca luna (Campana) 54485
Don Juan's Serenade (solo by JADLOWKER) B2017
- BARBARA KEMP & PAUL KNUFFER
65269 Die Hugenotten—Welch' ein Schreck O44279
Die Hugenotten—Ach dies Herz O44276
- PAUL KNUFFER & WALDEMAR HENKE
65266 Stradella—Banditen—Duett (Plotow) O44274
Fra Diavolo—Danditen—Duett (Auber) O44275
- ERNST KRAUS & WALDEMAR HENKE
61844 Siegfried—Wir sind zur Stelle 3-44121
Siegfried—Doch heisse mich das 3-44122
- ERNST KRAUS & KAETE HERWIG
61849 Siegfried—Siegfried und der Waldvogel, 2 parts 3-44133/4
- ERNST KRAUS & JULIUS LIEBAN
65462 Siegfried—Act II duet, 2 parts O44288/9
- MELANIE KURT & FRIEDRICH SCHORR
65621 Der fliegende Hollander—Versank ich jetzt B25007
Der fliegende Hollander—Wie aus der Ferne (SCHORR, solo) B22035
65622 Der fliegende Hollander—Wirst du des Vaters Wahl B25008
Der fliegende Hollander—Ach konntest das Geschick B25009
- SELMA KURZ & HEINRICH SCHLUSNUS
72854 Troubadour—Sieh' meiner hellen Traenen B25029
Rigoletto—Sprich nie mit einem Armen B26030
85301 Die Zaubersfloete—Bei Maennern B25031
Don Juan—Schmaeche, tobe lieber Junge (Mozart), (HEMPEL solo) J24006
- LOTTE LEHMANN & HEINRICH SCHLUSNUS
72932 Mignon—Schwalben—Duett O44326
Die Zaubersfloete—Bei Maennern O44330
72933 Don Juan—Reich mir die Hand O44327
Figaros Hochzeit—So lang' hab ich O44328

(TO BE CONTINUED)

finer mechanical movement can be found anywhere.

One great difficulty with these clocks is that they should be covered with a glass dome. The original dome is usually broken or missing altogether and domes of this shape are very difficult to find. Round glass domes are being made today and are easily had but I do not know of anyone making the oval shape. This is just another problem that one finds when he collects old clocks.

Illustration No. 29. Could anything be more appealing than this French musical clock of black figured marble with white alabaster columns and magnificent brass ornamentation? It is beautifully designed, perfectly proportioned and not at all overdone, although one might be inclined to think so at first glance. The bright brass work blends into complete harmony with the black and white base material so the effect of the whole is both interesting and pleasing.

This clock chimes on the quarter hours and on the hour. It is French of course with a traditionally fine French movement.

I have always been partial to French clocks. It is true that the decorative effects are inclined to the rococo. At the same time, the detail is always meticulous and the work is executed with a fine artistry. Who can say that it is overdone when each detail is perfection and the blending of the whole is harmonious. Further, no matter to what lengths the decorative effects may be carried, mechanical excellence is never forgotten. I rate these creations at the top, whether or not anyone agrees with me.

Illustration No. 30. A very remarkable example of a Viennese calendar clock in the Biedermeier style of design. In spite of the all-out effort to disguise the fact, this is still a practical timepiece and an efficient calendar mechanism.

The base of this clock is of black marble while the six round columns are of white marble. The ornamentation is of brass, very fine in detail and somewhat over-elaborate in execution. At the back of the gallery, there is a flat mirror with two angled mirrors at the sides to accentuate the temple effect. The large two-headed brass eagle at the top is not too well done and is almost grotesque in effect.

The action of this clock is very fascinating. The cupid on the right grinds an arrow on a real grindstone as the quarter hour is chimed. The cupid on the left forges an arrow on the anvil as the hour is struck; the blows of his hammer in unison with the hour strike. The face at the top center of the dial has movable eyes and the eyes move in unison with the pendulum swing.

The pendulum, like the rest of the clock, is very ornate, made of brass, and is the figure of Bacchus astride a wine barrel.

When I study this design, I am at a loss to pick up the central theme. The temple effect with two angels floating above it seems well enough but Bacchus on his wine barrel swinging in the gallery seems to be a little bit inconsistent. I cannot connect the two-headed eagle with any other part of the decorative scheme. Perhaps there is no relationship in the design and the whole is merely the application of ornamentation to achieve an overall decorative effect. Since I cannot fathom it, I am compelled to accept.

The three rings in the lower half of the clock are the calendar dials; one for the day, one for the date and one for the month. The calendar is in Italian while the time numerals are Arabic.

I am both fascinated and puzzled by the decorative effects of this clock. However, it would perhaps be best to forget that feature and concentrate on the clock itself. The mechanical action is truly magnificent.

WANTED

WANTED: Antique clocks and watches. Send description, photo and best dealer's price.—Heirloom Antiques, 201 E. Lancaster Ave., Shillington, Penna. tfx

FOR SALE

COLLECTORS! DEALERS! Do your own clock repairing, refinishing. Complete instructions in "Clock Collector's Handbook," $1, postpaid.—Kenneth Karsten, Compo Parkway, Westport, Conn. ja122741

WE HAVE A FINE SELECTION of Steeple clocks on hand; also cuckoos, calendars, beehives and many others. Send stamp for list. Dial refinishing. Replacement tablets made.—Vandervort, 308 Bertley, Moberly, Mo. ap3694

FIT-UP CLOCK movements: German, 30-hour, 2½" bezel. Roman dial, fits antique brass and china clocks with 2¼" opening; case thickness of 1¼ to 2", $3.15 each postpaid. Dealers only. Also German Westminster Rod Chime Hall clock movements.—Louis Pierlot, 1010 South Fir, Inglewood 1, Calif. my3027

ITHACA CALENDAR CLOCK, walnut mantel type, $15. Boardman and Wells, mantel, works not original, runs, $20. Others, write. Express collect.—Coppernoll's, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. mh1002

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES & antique clocks.—C. A. Ramsey, 5505 So. State, Westerville, Ohio. ap2211

Illustration No. 31. It is perhaps well to end this chapter with another superb example of the combination of art and mechanics by a French maker. Here the famous figures of "The Three Graces" are employed to support a timepiece and the effect of the whole is most pleasing indeed.

The clock itself reverses the usual action in that here the time track revolves while the indicator, or hand, remains stationary. Most of us have seen this same principle used in small, modern clocks for table and desk use. This one is old, however, and undoubtedly served as a model for the newer versions. Needless to say, the modern versions are plain and cheap. They bear little resemblance to this graceful model and, of course, have none of its attractiveness.

There is much more interesting material in the Willis Michael folder to appear in subsequent installments. When it is finally completed, I shall feel that my own education has been greatly enhanced.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 37)

certina couplings by "S. Fregoli" and "Alex, Argyle" — almost certainly disguises for Frosini and Prince. On 103, "Fregoli" played "Wedding of the Winds," while "Argyle" came through with "The Gladiator's Farewell." On 104, "Argyle" played "Irish Melodies," while "Fregoli" obliged with "Amoureuse Waltz." Henri, like Prince, played the "Duet" system and is said to have been the first concertina artist to make disc records.

This study of the catalogs of long defunct foreign record companies could be continued indefinitely, with confusion becoming worse confounded. But probably the sketchy survey just made has been sufficient. In August, 1921, Regal issued a four-page folder listing Prince's records, just as it had done for those of Peter Wyper. This included 25 double-faced discs, with such widely varied selections as "Silver Heels," "National Emblem March," "Bluebells of Scotland," "The Rosary," "Ora Pro Nobis," "The Missouri Waltz," "Till We Meet Again" and "The Lost Chord." Some Prince numbers of a more serious nature than the majority of his Regal offerings were retained in the parent Columbia catalog. He continued to make records until his death, which I believe occurred in 1926. He was dead before 1930, for the English Columbia catalog of that year contained the following by "the late Alexander Prince": No. 466, "Donauweller Waltz" and "Blue Danube Waltz"; 1449; "Under the Double Eagle March" and "With Sword and Lance March"; and 2426, "Il Bacio" and "Estudiantina Waltz." The first, a twelve-inch, was acoustically recorded, but 1449 and 2426 were ten-inch and made by the electric method.

—Jim Walsh

CLOCK DIALS

STEEPLE CLOCKS

4¼" or 5" Dials. Can be cut to fit any Steeple Clock. Cards, 5½x" and 7x11" overall.

OTHER CLOCKS DIALS

Size Dials: 2¼"-2½"-3¼"-3½"-4¼"-5"-6½"-7¼" & 8", with 1" margin. Can be assorted lots.

One 50c; 3 for $1. Doz. $3. Postfree.

Printed on Glazed Index Bristol

3 smallest sizes also, on glazed gummed paper. State Preference.

W. L. KENDALL

629 W. Willis, Detroit, Michigan

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

More About the Early Days of the Phonograph

Although HOBBIES was generous about allotting space in the August issue to my article on the phonograph's 75th anniversary, there were some facts concerning the instrument's early days that I was not able to mention. And since that article was written other historical matter has come to my attention which I think deserves to be touched on.

But before passing to this new material I should like to correct the typographical errors which somewhat impaired the sense of a few passages in the August issue. The sentence near the end of the last paragraph of column two should read: "In view of the lack of proof sustaining the sound recording idea, and the likelihood that the craftsmen who are mentioned in the letter probably had died in the intervening thirty years, we are justified in holding that if Fitch really did construct a device on the order of the phonograph, it didn't record and reproduce sound prior to the one brought out by Edison."

EIGHT VICTOR ARTISTS

In the heyday of the acoustic recording era, when performers sang or played into a horn instead of a mike, artists known chiefly for their records were big attractions in concert. The Eight Popular Victor Artists stopped many a show from 1912 to 1927, everywhere from Broadway to country towns. They are shown here at Appleton, Wis., in the autumn of 1923. The background poster shows the late Henry Burr, whose sentimental tenor solos made him the "matinee idol" of the troupe, which he also managed. Burr made more records than any other artist, before or since. Beside him on poster is Billy Murray, tenor-comedian, and all-time most popular recording artist. Lined up in front of poster are Monroe Silver, who did "Cohen" monologs; Rudy Wiedoeft, usually considered world's greatest saxophone player; John H. Meyer, baritone of Peerless Quartet; Frank Croxton, quartet, basso; Frank Banta, pianist; Burr; Albert Campbell, first tenor of Peerless and Murray, shaking hands with Bill Nolan, Jr., whose father, William H. Nolan, was Victor dealer in Appleton. The concert drew a paid attendance of 1,600 in a town of 2,000 population. What a difference it would have made in the lives of these famous performers if Edison hadn't invented the phonograph!

By JIM WALSH

nel." There is also a garbled passage in the paragraph beginning, "Yes, and to industrious persons also." The mixed-up sentence should read: "You know a man can never judge of the value of his own words or exactly how to deliver them by hearing his own voice."

Other Phonograph "Inventors"

That takes care of the August errors. Now, since one of the foregoing corrected passages refers to the claim of an Englishman, William Fitch, that he invented the phonograph, it seems only fair to give dubious "immortality" to an American claimant, T. W. Searing. In the December, 1898, issue of The Phonoscope, under the heading of "Claims to be the First Inventor of the Talking-Machine," Mr. Searing made some awkwardly worded and far from specific assertions:

In the Graphophone Company's suits against various parties, I have noticed for the first time, especially the present suit against the Gramophone Company, that they are endeavoring to hold up Bell & Tainter as the original inventors of the engraving of sound, which fact is not true from beginning to end.

Bell & Tainter, or the Graphophone Company, are certainly not the first inventors of recording or duplicating records by the engraving method and up to the present date no company or person has yet been found, throughout the entire world, that has shown priority over the undersigned, of which the Patent Office can show by his prior applications filed years ago.

The present Phonograph, Graphophone, or any other talking machine company that make records by cutting out the material corresponding to speech or the vibrations from sound was invented by myself years before Bell, Tainter, Edison, or the Graphophone Company ever dreamed of it, and that it was first invented in Harlem, New York City, and that the papers were in the Patent Office years before Bell or Tainter went to Washington to conduct their experiments in a certain laboratory which resulted in the formation of the present Graphophone Company.

When the correct history of the talking-machine is published, which it certainly has not been as yet, it will show the original inventor of the principle that has made that interesting machine a success is T. W. Searing, who, in 1875, invented the engraving method and machine for recording speech and sound. Edison designed a somewhat modification of same invention in 1887 and known as the tinfoil perforated method.

Bell and Tainter conducted experiments at Washington in 1883 and was in close communication with the Patent Office, and they found that the engraving principle as invented by Searing years before, was the best, and in 1885 applied for a patent which was granted. This patent the Graphophone Company are now using to institute infringement proceedings against various parties.

About 1887, after eleven months of experimenting, Edison adopted the Searing engraving method also, and placed on the market the present electric Phonograph, and but a few years ago was struggling like the Graphophone Company is at the present time to prove priority of invention, but cannot while my evidence of work done in that line is known.

Edison, Bell, Tainter, and the Graphophone Company are entitled to the claim of being one of the first, but certainly are not the first by a number of years, and at a future date the public will be more fully informed of my work and connection with the recording and reproduction of sound.

In conclusion, wishing that they will prosper as in the past and have every success in the future while using the invention belonging by right of priority to Yours truly,

T. W. SEARING.

This ungrammatical and incoherent letter failed to win for the now forgotten Mr. Searing the distinction of being recognized as the phonograph's inventor. (Notice his uncertainty as to whether the name of one of the Graphophone's originators was Tainter or Taintor.) It sounds like a typical production of one of the kind of crackpots who nearly always rise up and lay claim to having first thought of any popular invention.

Another Englishman — A. A. H. Tokeley — in 1913 had his solicitor, A. J. Ford, write a letter to the Edison Bell Company, maintaining that he invented "the gramophone or phonograph, about the years, 1902 to 1905." In other words, Mr. Tokeley, an employee of the Drawing Office of the Great Northern Railway Locomotive Works at Doncaster, had the delusion that he invented the phonograph twenty-five years or more after it was first brought out by Edison. One wonders at the gullibility of his solicitor, Mr. Ford, who wrote:

"My client has never received any remuneration . . . and although not being the actual patentee, I think that the time has now arrived to make known the fact. I am therefore desirous in the interest of my client of putting before you a proposal for your consideration that a payment should be made him as a solatium for the time and trouble spent by him in thinking out and giving the invention and improvements and method of production upon it for the general use."

Solicitor Ford also appears to have had trouble expressing himself clearly! At any rate, he was tackling the wrong customer when he presented his silly claim to J. E. Hough, the hard-boiled "Lancashire Laddie" who headed Edison Bell. Hough turned the letter over to the Talking Machine News, which reproduced Mr. Ford's handwritten screed with the jeering comment:

There seems to be a doubt in the minds of some people as to who really invented the "talker." The copy of the document which we print . . . should prove a valuable contribution to the subject. . . . We commend manufacturers, factors and dealers, and others to peruse the script, because if what is really said is true, we think the claimant is entitled to due consideration.

We should be glad to receive contributions from any good-minded traders when we would forward them on to the proper quarters.

The view appears to be that the originator of the invention is suffering gross neglect in the acknowledgement of his merits. Can any of our readers enlighten us on this subject? Mr. Hough has taken the method he thinks most likely to achieve Mr. Ford's object by giving the matter wide publicity.

It's a safe bet Mr. Tokeley never received any "solatium"!

John Kruesi's Later Years

It is well known that John Kruesi, under Edison's instructions, built the first phonograph. Yet how many lovers of recorded music know anything of Kruesi's later life? He has always seemed something of a mystery man, but the mystery is dispelled by an article, "He Made the First Phonograph," in The Phonoscope (edited by Russell Hunting, one of the first famous recording comedians) for February, 1899:

The man who made the first Phonograph was buried at Schenectady on Feb. 25. He was one of the little band of men who worked with Thomas A. Edison at Menlo Park and through whose skill and faithful assistance were developed the many inventions which gave to Edison the name of "the Wizard." It was in those days that Edison used to become absorbed in the development of an idea, work at it without rest or sleep for two or three days and nights and keep all those about him busy at the same time. He would call in an organ grinder from the streets to keep his men awake or resort to some other such device, and when the strain was finally over, charter a boat and take all hands down the bay on a fishing excursion. Among the most tireless of the men about "The Wizard" about that time was John Kruesi, the man who made the first Phonograph.

Mr. Kruesi remained with Edison and became one of his partners in the development of the electric light, and in 1886, when the Edison machine works were removed to Schenectady, he went there as assistant general manager under Mr. Samuel Insull. (Should be Insull—J. W.) In 1892, when the General Electric Company was formed and the whole plant of the great combination was consolidated, Mr. Kruesi became general manager of the works. It was under his supervision that the Schenectady works, the largest and most complete of their kind in the world, were designed and built. At the time of his death Mr. Kruesi was the chief mechanical engineer of the General Electric Company. Of the original Edison band of workers only three were absent from the funeral. These were T. C. Martin, editor of the Electrical Engineer; Luther Stieringer, and E. H. Johnson, all of whom were unavoidably detained elsewhere.

Mr. Kruesi was a native of Switzerland and was born in 1843. He came to this country in 1870 and went to work for the Singer Sewing Machine Company at Elizabethport. In June, 1872, while Edison was making Gold and Stock Exchange telegraph instruments in a Newark shop, Kruesi joined him and was one of the first of his workmen to be transferred from commercial to experimental work when Edison got money enough to open a shop for the development of his ideas in 1875. That shop was in Greene Street, Newark.

Death of Professor Wangemann

Another of Edison's early associates was "Professor" A. Theodore E. Wangemann, who supervised the inventor's recording activities in the '80's and '90's and also demonstrated the phonograph in Europe. While abroad, Wangemann recorded piano solos by Johannes Brahms (a few of the cylinders have come to light in recent years), and in this country caused Hans Von Bulow to faint, when the great pianist made a recording which Wangemann pointed out, contained a wrong note. What became of the professor is told in the Edison Phonograph Monthly for July, 1906:

A. Theodore E. Wangemann, who for many years had been connected with Mr. Edison in experimental work on the Edison Phonograph and Edison Records, was killed while attempting to board a moving train at Bath Beach, Long Island, on June 2d. Mr. Wangemann was born at Berlin, Germany, February 13th, 1855. He had lived in this country many years. He entered Mr. Edison's employ in the early days of the Phonograph and had been identified with nearly every phase of its later evolution. He was connected with the Edison laboratory at the time of his death. He was a skilled pianist, a fine musician and possessed an excellent musical education. He was a member of the committee of Edison officials who meet twice each month to pass upon Records before they are formally listed and his musical ability made him a useful member. He is survived by a wife. He was a member of the Pleiades Club, of New York City, which had charge of his funeral in Brooklyn on June 5th. In accordance with his own wishes his body was cremated at Fresh Pond, Long Island, on June 6th.

Wangemann was mentioned in some unintentionally amusing Edison inter-office correspondence of May, 1889. The superintendent of the Edison Phonograph Works, Charles Batchelor, wrote the following "memo to Mr. Edison":

We have had enormous orders for musical cylinders, some of them dating as far as two months back. Can you not make some arrangements so that we can have our orders filled . . . as in many cases it prevents shipments of goods until we get them. We have now with you orders for one-half dozen for Nebraska, one dozen for Washington, two dozen for Nashville, Tenn., all dated back to March 28th. Five dozen for North American of April 1st, one dozen for Japan, May 8th, one-half dozen for Ohio, May 13, and a few yesterday for Dakota. If you can give Wangemann orders to furnish what we want it will help us considerably in getting off our shipments more promptly.

To this, Mr. Edison replied a few days later:

"We are making about 50 per day and I am rigging up to furnish 300 daily. Please send orders (written) to Laboratory. We will book them, fill the orders by sending them to Phonograph Company and make charges so that we will not be out of pocket."

It is hard to restrain a laugh at the thought of the handful of orders listed by Batchelor being considered "enormous."

First North American Record List

The "North American" referred to in the foregoing letter was the North American Phonograph Company, headed by a New York banker, Jesse H. Lippincott, which in the late 1880's and early '90's controlled the right to the sale of Edison phonographs and records. (It preferred to call records "musical phonograms.") The parent North American company assigned to other companies the right to do business on a state-wide or district basis. For instance, the Columbia company's name came from its having a lease to sell in the District of Columbia. There were about thirty of these territorial companies.

Lippincott within a year or so had a paralytic stroke, and died. Samuel Insull succeeded him as North American's president and himself was succeeded by Thomas R. Lombard, but, for reasons too long to detail, the company eventually went into bankruptcy — bringing about litigation that lasted some fourteen years.

While North American flourished—or, rather, existed—Edison turned out "phonograms" for use by demonstrators, but Allen O. Tate's book, "Edison's Open Door," says his attitude was "half-hearted" and not at all enthusiastic, for he was more interested in the phonograph's commercial and educational possibilities than its entertainment phase. But lists of cylinders were issued, and the Thomas A. Edison Laboratory has been kind enough to provide me with a copy of what is probably the oldest record catalog in existence — one put out in 1890 by North American.

This "first edition," as it is called, is described as a "catalog of musical phonograms for the Phonograph, is sued by the North American Phonograph Co., owners of the patents of Thomas A. Edison, for recording, perpetuating and reproducing articulate speech and other sounds, and exclusive agent for the sole licensee of the American Graphophone Co. Principal offices: 160 to 164 Broadway, New York."

A rather pompous foreword says: "The following list of Musical Phonograms we propose to keep in stock. This list will be added to from time to time as we ascertain from the demand those most likely to become popular. We have also in stock a large number of Phonograms not on this list, and parties can be furnished with almost any of the 'records' that have been sent out heretofore." (Printing "records" in quotes appears to indicate it was considered a slang word or one of not particularly good repute.)

The four-page folder is devoted al-

THE OLD MUSIC STORE

Musical Antiquities in Working Condition

Esther Skerritt Sanders
DEANSBORO, N. Y.

WORLD WIDE RECORD & MUSIC AGENCY

2034 North Third Street,
Milwaukee (12) Wisconsin

Collectors' phonograph records: cylinders, discs, Lateral, Hill and Dale; all makes. Old catalogs
For collectors libraries, museums, radio and TV stations; ghost and gag Machines, parts and reproducers for cylinders.
The largest collection of Americana available. Jazz-Swing-Ragtime. Classical Operatic. Vocal and instrumental.

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

OF

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive free of charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

Single rarities and entire collections purchased for cash

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Room 1135, DuPont Bldg., Miami 32, Florida

Established 1938

"Rolls now available for SEEBURG and other 65-note automatic pianos. Old and new standard and popular songs.

WRITE FOR LISTS, ETC.

J. LAWRENCE COOK

824 E. 165th St., New York, N. Y.

JIM WALSH WANTS TO BUY

Old phonograph record catalogs and supplements (mostly prior to 1925); back copies of phonograph publications—Talking Machine World, Talking Machine News, the Gramophone, the Phonogram, Diamond Points, Edison Phonograph and Amberola Monthly, Voice of the Victor, etc.—photographs, advertisements, and all sort of reference material dealing with the history and development of sound recording that will provide background information for Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Please do not send me lists of records for sale. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. Address:

JIM WALSH

Box 131

Vinton, Va.

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION

RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on the following labels:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH, DE LUXE & GRAND PRIZE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS, such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G. & T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.
- ★ Old record catalogs.

Persons offering material not specified above or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue
Valhalla, New York

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout.

Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

most entirely to instrumental records. There are fifteen by "Brass Band"; 15, "Parlor Orchestra"; 16, cornet; 15, clarinet; 10, flute; 10, piccolo; 10, violin; six, piano "duets"; and two "vocal quartets." Many of these were discontinued in August, 1890. It is interesting to speculate on the

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 45)

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Transcription's, Armed Forces Radio Service Recordings & etc. By Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo & Ink Spots. Money no object.—Paul Adams, 30 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. d120061

RECORDS FOR SALE

Attention Record Collectors: Inaugurating auction sales. Rare and out-of-vocal records. Free lists.—C. Brown, 1375 East 18th St., Brooklyn 30, N. Y. my3825

RARE RECORDINGS (1900-1950), reasonable prices. Write for Bargain List.—Classical Record Shop, 825 Seventh Avenue, New York City. ap3403

WANTED: Cylinder records, operatic disk records. Best prices for new or mint records.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. jly6806

ORIGINAL RECORDS, 1900-1925. Famous Artists of the past. Interesting premium offers. Free lists.—Universal, Box 32, Allston, Mass. je3403

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122611

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: From collectors' items to just good "listening." Large varied stock. Please state "wants." For information write or visit.—Record Collectors Service, 530 East 88th St. N. Y. C. 29, N. Y. ap68801

Behold, the Sphinx Speaks: If new Pyramids and Sphinxes were built today, how would they compare with the old ones in Egypt? As monuments they would be alike. Beyond that, there would be no comparison. The priceless memoirs, historical treasures, tradition, and the allurements of human interest that are imprisoned in those old Egyptian walls, could never be found or transplanted in any number of newly-built ones. And so it is, with rare old original records of the great singers of the Golden Age, from 1896 on. Time has grooved in the "sound walls" of those original records the same priceless memoirs, historical treasures, etc., that cannot be found in any present day re-issues, re-recordings, LP's, etc. It is the dream of every collector to possess such gems some day. We can make a lot of these dreams come true today, just as we have made already, for many collectors, from the beginner to the most advanced. We have these records for you. We invite your correspondence, and your friendship.—Record Treasures, 740 E. 183rd St., New York 57, N. Y. je32991

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. je3084

THOUSANDS of used records, all varieties; send wants.—Perry's, 3914 Van Buren, Culver City, Calif. je3422

Auction Sales: Rare and cut-out vocal (G. & T., Zonophone, Polydor) and instrumental records. Free lists.—Arthur May, 85 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn 26, N. Y. mh128022

"If its been recorded—we have it." Lewin Record Paradise, 5600 Hollywood Blvd., Los Angeles 28, Calif. ap3804

100% EUROPEAN LISTS of selected vocal operatic records. Many G&T, Fonotipias, Pathe, etc. Free lists on request. Wants supplied.—Collectors Haven, 1131 Bergen Street, Brooklyn 16, N. Y. my3234

HAVE YOU CARUSO RECORD worth $25? Price Guide to Collector's Records (1953 edition) lists artists, numbers, values; 7500 items. $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Avenue, New York 19, N. Y. my6829

Operatic Collector's Attention: Drastic clearance; thousands of fine vocal records, classical and operatic. Priced 50 cents to $1.50 each. All originals. Free lists.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. ap3447

RECORD COLLECTORS. Interest in composers are solicited.—Catherine V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. my3042

HUNDREDS OF IMPORTED cutout vocals, rare Golden Age operatics; G&T, Fonotipia, etc., hard to get Music Hall, Musical Comedy and Personality records. Unusual band and orchestral items, imported LPs, all may be found on our free mailing lists. Write today.—Ross, Court & Co. (Canada), 121 Simcoe St., Toronto, Ont. je3008

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs.—Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. mh124201

MUSIC BOX DISCS

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina, Criterion, Mira, Monarch, New Century, Orphenion, Polyphon, Stella, Symphonion, Thorens. Lists. Send for Want List, offering premium prices for certain discs.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. je3675

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

Mahogany Criterion Music Box. 6 steel disc records.—Philbin's, 3574 E. Burnside, Portland 15, Ore. ap1081

REGINA MUSIC BOX, oak box cover missing; 2 comb works perfect; 15 16" records. $35. A real bargain.—Earle T. Anderson, 2532 Grand Ave. So., Minneapolis 5, Minn. ap1422

ORGANS FOR SALE

MELODEONS; small organs. Beautiful restored instruments. Expert repairing. Reasonable prices.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. je6675

PHONOGRAPHS

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, parts, records, catalogs, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. ap6844

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts. Old post cards, and early model typewriters.—Elmer Moore, 1035 17th Street, Santa Monica, Calif. je6276

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, parts, small horns, reproducers, records, catalogs.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. ap6084

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS

INTERESTED IN DUO-ART piano rolls. List titles and price.—Richard Van Hoosear, 151 Bay Shore Blvd., San Francisco 24, Calif. ap3023

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS.—Latest hits and old favorites, all 75c. Send for free list. Extra roll boxes, 4 1/2c. Also player material, parts, service.—Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Company, 222 South Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. d12112

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Catalog 15c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. o124201

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. je3863

SQUARE DANCE

AMERICANA: Collection 20 Texas Square Dance Calls, 50c. Privately printed.—Muchmore, Box 36, Universal City, Calif. my3652

MISCELLANEOUS MUSIC

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, direct imports, $1.80.—Jules Wolff, 74 Worthstreet, New York. ap6844

WANT ALL TYPES of old music boxes, coin operated and otherwise. Write, quote best price, and picture, if possible.—George Trambitas, 3126 Elliott Ave. Seattle 1, Washington. je128291

EVERYTHING for the collector: records, sheet music, piano rolls. Specialists in supplying rare items at "reasonable prices." Jazz, Blues, Race, Swing, New Orleans, Personalities, Popular, Operatics Vaudevillians. Send wants to:—Bob Colton, 680 Willoughby Ave., Brooklyn 6, New York. ap3426

WANTED: Edison, Columbia cylinder phonographs, records, catalogues, small horns. Catalogues.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. jly6215

FOR SALE: Steinway Grand Piano, good condition, $150. Mason and Hamlin Organ, good condition, $25. Write:—Myron Warren, Box 964, Perry, N. Y. ap3863

TOY DISC PHONOGRAPHS WANTED. Hand powered or spring motor as Owens: (open works) Berliner; National Gram-O-phone; Zon-O-phone; Eldridge R. Johnson Talking Machine Company, models "A," "B," "C," "D." Also Monarch Series. State condition and price.—Aaron B. Mc Fall, 952 Pleasant St., Oak Park, Illinois. mh121052

WANTED: Old phonographs, Polyphones, coin operated machines, catalogs, reproducers; Victor, Edison, Columbia. Describe, quote. Will trade.—Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. ap3633

WANT IN ANY CONDITION: Mechanically operated pianos; organs; music boxes; instructions. Please describe fully and state price.—R. W. Cochran, 1235 Overlook Ave., West Englewood, N. J. my3004

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts. Music boxes, hand roller organs, as Celestina and Gem, Roller and rolls. Private collector.—Newmann Miller, 436 West Colorado Blvd., Glendale 4, Calif. je3844

Antique

MUSIC BOXES

For Sale

Largest Assortment in existence
All are old instruments in perfect condition
All sizes & types from $50 to $5000
ALSO EXPERT REPAIRING
BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.
139 4th Avenue, Palham 65, N. Y.
(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825)

sieur E. Blery, for about six months. The true artist of the etching seems to require little training in his field for the gift appears to be the product of his rich nature and is intensely personal. Many instances prove this and two of the outstanding examples are Rembrandt, who etched some fine works in his early youth, and Whistler who produced some of his best while in his twenties. Of great importance to Meryon's future was his purchase of some views of Paris which had been done about 1650 by Renier Zeeman. These inspired him to begin the series of etchings portraying the city which he loved so deeply and, after about twenty experiments in the technique of etching, Meryon began his life-work with "The Petit Pont" which has grandeur and shows great understanding of his craft. It is one of the most outstanding of his etchings besides being one of the most remarkable original etchings of the nineteenth century. In 1854 he produced four masterpieces, any one of which would have made his name famous, and these were "The Rue des Mauvais Garçons," "The Pont-au-Change," "The Morgue," and "The Apse of Notre Dame."

Victor Hugo spoke highly of Meryon's "beautiful imagination," and said "The breath of Immensity blows through Meryon's work and makes his etchings into more than pictures—into visions." Charles Baudelaire was another admirer and wanted to accompany Meryon's etchings with appropriate verse, but was frustrated by Meryon's insistence on precise information regarding the buildings and places portrayed.

Meryon retouched some of his worn plates, and in 1861, between the columns of "The Gallery of Notre Dame" he added a few ravens; for "The Clock Tower" he applied rays of light; he reduced the houses of the Rue Dauphine in "The Pont Neuf" to their true proportions. In "The Morgue" he modified the figures; in "The Pont-au-Change" he drew, in three different states, the balloon Speranza, then balloons of various sizes and then what looked like ravens or a flight of eagles. He also renewed the background of "The Chimera" and "The Apse of Notre Dame." In the first state of his striking view of "The Rue des Toiles," produced in 1853, he showed a dog snuffing at the ground, but in a later stage the animal gave place to two soldiers talking with a woman.

His reasoning was affected in 1858 and '59, and again in 1866. On February 14, 1868, he died after a prolonged fast, and was buried in the Charenton churchyard, where a brass plate marks his grave.

have individual numbers except under the division headings. For instance, "Warrior's Farewell" was flute solo No. 1, but No. 1 under the violin heading was "Selection from 'Clover'." The whole set-up was distinctly amateurish, with apparently no organized effort—as witness Mr. Batchelor's plaint—being made to supply the demand for "phonograms." That word, incidentally, persisted in the title of the "house organ," The Phonogram, (later The New Phonogram), which Edison began publishing in 1899, discontinued in 1902, revived in 1904 and discontinued again in 1914.

First Encyclopedia Mention of Phonograph

This article, a collection of odds-and-ends about the phonograph's early days, also lacks systematic organization. We have been considering the early 1890's. Now let's go even farther into the past and consider what may be the first mention of Edison's invention in an encyclopedia or other work of general reference.

"Johnson's New Universal Cyclopaedia" was first issued in 1879, but the edition I have contains a supplement at the end of the last volume covering new discoveries and this appears to have been printed in 1885. Despite the phonograph's then being only a few years old, the article, written by F. A. P. Barnard, makes one mistake by saying it was invented by Edison in the spring of 1878. This should have been "the summer of 1877." It reads:

PHONOGRAPH, an ingenious instrument invented in the spring of 1878 by Mr. Thomas A. Edison of Menlo Park, N. J., for impressing upon a metallic surface an exact copy of the vibratory movements of a stretched membrane acted on by sonorous undulations in the air; so that, by using this impression to react upon the membrane as a riddle-bow acts upon the string, the vibrations, and consequently the sounds, are reproduced in their original order. The instrument considerably resembles in construction the phonograph of Scott and Koenig. . . The principal differences are—first, that so-called "pen" in that instrument is placed so as to vibrate laterally, whereas in the phonograph its motion is perpendicular to the surface of the cylinder; and, secondly, that the cylinder of the phonograph, instead of being covered with smoked paper, is wrapped with a smooth sheet of tinfoil hardened by a slight admixture of antimony.

When the instrument is used to record articulate sounds, the large funnel is removed, and the mouth of the speaker placed very near to the membrane. . . The operator then turns the crank uniformly, and enunciates his words in a bold tone while turning. The record being completed, the mouthpiece is withdrawn from the cylinder, and the crank turned backward until the original position is reached. The mouthpiece is then restored to its place, the large funnel attached to it for the purpose of reinforcing the sound, and the crank is turned forward as before. The words previously spoken by the operator are now repeated by the instrument with all their peculiarities of accent, emphasis and pitch. Musical tones, the cries of animals, laughter, falsetto notes, and sounds of every description, are imitated by the instrument with the same exactness as the articulations of human speech.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

PRINTS FOR SALE

COLOR PRINTS. Flowers, fruits, birds, views, costumes. Fine old lace, paper Valentines. Wholesale & retail. Wanted: Valentines before 1870 only. Pinprick pictures. Kate Greenaway cards, all.—K. Gregory 222 East 71st St., New York 21, N. Y. fl28632

CURRIER & IVES PRINTS. Send 25c in stamps for list, large and small folios.—Frank W. Mathews, Scottsville, N. Y. ja120521

CURRIER & IVES. Send large stamped envelope for list.—Jacques Schurre, 313 Maple Avenue, Falls Church, Va. jly6445

OLD PRINTS. Collections sent on approval. Discount to dealers.—Hazel Swayze, Connecticut, Antiques, Pomfret Center, Conn. ap3652

ORIGINAL COLORED fashion prints. Petersons Magazine, 4 prints $2.—C. K. Johnson, Hurley, N. Y. jly6064

Original old colored Peterson fashion print (1860-88) $.85. Full list for stamp.—Blackford, 2002 N. 4th St., Harrisburg, Penna. ap3654

CURRIER - IVES. Winter, Sporting, Railroads, Clipper Ships, etc. Send for price list. Buying also.—Laurin's Old Print Shop, 235 Post Road, Darien, Conn. my3253

TAIT: Black and white (10x12) drawing of "Sheep Fold, Central Park, New York City". $25.—Leonard M. Robinson, Vineyard Haven, Mass. ap1251

ReSTORING — FRAMING

PRINTS, PAINTINGS, Documents, etc., restored or cleaned. Maps and samplers wanted. Prints matted and cellophane wrapped. Engravings cleaned and colored. Old frames, moldings. Complete picture framing service. Satisfaction guaranteed.—Hazel Swayze, Connecticut Antiques, Pomfret Center, Conn. je3675

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 36)

instrumentalists. The cornetist may have been Jules Levy, who had played in public demonstrations with the phonograph in 1878. Eugene C. Rose, who made demonstration cylinders which Edison displayed at the Paris Exposition of 1889 and who is still living in Freeport, New York, could have made the flute and piccolo numbers. The clarinet player may have been William Tuson. Frederick W. Hager has generally been considered the first violinist to make commercial records, but he is not likely to have played the ten numbers listed by North American. I have no idea who recorded the "piano ducts." The two male quartet records may also upset the belief that the Manhasset Quartet, consisting of John Bieling, Roger Harding, Jim Cherry and Joe Riley was the first foursome to make a record. The late Mr. Bieling said he had been told the Manhasset were "absolutely the first," but the two records of "Negro Melodies" and "Popular Songs" listed by North American probably antedate his singing career.

The cylinders on this 1890 list did not

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

More About the Early Days of the Phonograph

(Continued from the April Issue)

By JIM WALSH

Early HARPER'S Article

Many readers of HOBBIES probably saw the October 1 issue of "Variety", "The Bible of Show Business," which contained a special section commemorating the 75th anniversary of the invention of the phonograph and the 50th anniversary of the RCA Victor Company. Editor Abel Green hit on the idea of the special edition after I sent him an article on the phonograph's early days. It was published with the streamer headline on page one. I also had 43 other articles in the same issue on historical aspects of recorded music; a few under my own name; others disguised with the pen names of J. W. Jefferson, G. Fenn Grace, Bob Walton, Ronnie James and James L. Shaw, but most unsigned.

So much material was contributed that when the issue was complete Editor Abel had considerable "overset." One article, left out because of lack of space but of which he sent me the proofs, was entitled "The Phonograph" and was taken from "Harper's Weekly" of March 30, 1878. Published little more than seven months after the invention of the talking machine, it is of so much interest that I feel it should be preserved here, so I am including the proofs with this article and hoping that the HOBBIES linotype operator will forgive my asking him to re-set it in six-point, to save space:

If it were not that the days of belief in witchcraft are long since past, witch-hunters such as those who figured so conspicuously in the early history of our country would now find a rich harvest of victims in the Tribune Building. Here are located the headquarters of two marvels of a marvelous age. The telephone, which created such a sensation a short time ago by demonstrating the possibility of transmitting vocal sounds by telegraph, is now eclipsed by a new wonder called the phonograph. This little instrument records the utterance of the human voice, and like a faithless confidante repeats every secret confided to it whenever requested to do so. It will talk, sing, whistle, cough, sneeze, or perform any other acoustic feat. With charming impartiality it will express itself in the divine strains of a lyric goddess, or use the startling vernacular of a street Arab.

A few days ago a reporter for Harper's visited the phonograph for the purpose of ascertaining, so far as an unscientific person might, the peculiar characteristics of the marvelous little instrument. Prepared for an elaborate system of weights, pulleys, levers, wheels, bands, such as abounded in the case of Barnum's talking machine, whose utterances, by-the-way, were confined to some half dozen inarticulate sounds that no man living could understand, it was rather startling to find in the famous phonograph a simple apparatus, which, but for the absence of more than one cylinder, might have been a modern fluting machine.

This single cylinder of hollow brass is mounted upon a shaft, at one end of which is a crank for turning it, and at the other a balance-wheel, the whole being supported by two iron uprights. In front of the cylinder is a movable bar or arm, which supports a mouth-piece of gutta-percha, on the under side of which is a disk of thin metal, such as is used for taking tin-types. Against the centre of the lower side of this disk a fine steel point is held by a spring attached to the rim of the mouth-piece. An India-rubber cushion between the point and the disk controls the vibration of the spring.

The cylinder is covered with a fine spiral groove running continuously from end to end. In using the phonograph the first operation is to wrap a sheet of tin-foil closely around the cylinder. The mouth-piece is then adjusted against the left-hand end of the cylinder so closely that the vibration of the voice on the disk will cause the point to press the tin-foil into the groove, making minute indentations resembling, on a very small scale, the characters of the Morse telegraph. The cylinder is moved from right to left by the screw crank, so nicely adjusted that the steel point is always against the centre of the spiral groove. While turning the crank the operator talks into the mouth-piece in a voice slightly elevated above the ordinary tone of conversation. Every vibration of his voice is faithfully recorded on the tin-foil by the steel point, the cylinder making about one revolution to a word.

In order to reproduce the words—that is, to make the machine talk—the cylinder is turned back, so that the steel point may go over the indentations made by speaking into the mouth-piece. A funnel, like a speaking-trumpet, is attached to the mouth-piece, to keep the sounds from scattering. Now turning the crank again, every word spoken into the mouth-piece is exactly reproduced, with the utmost distinctness.

Thus the disk is either a tympanum or diaphragm, as the case may be, the first when it listens, and the second when it talks. Herein the phonograph seems actually to have got ahead of that other marvelous construction, the human body. In our anatomical economy the contrivances by which we are enabled to hear and talk are not only separate and distinct, but are also much more complicated than the method by which the phonograph accomplishes the same results.

While comparing this remarkable machine to the race whose characteristic attribute it has stolen, it is, we believe, habitually asserted by people who have no means of knowing anything whatever about the matter that man is the only animal that talks, it may not be unfitting to allude to the admirable ex-

Music Boxes

1. Parker Band Organ. Needs repair.
2. 27" Automatic Regina. Needs repair. Comb good. Mah. About 20 disks.
3. 20 3/4" Automatic Regina. Needs rep. Mah. Comb good. About 20 disks.
4. 8" Regina good condition. 8 disks.
5. Swiss box with matching table. Cylinder over 20" long. Playing condition.
6. Swiss box with bells. Playing condition. Beautiful box with brass handles. Chased bells with humming bird strikers.
7. Large drum and bell Swiss box. Butterfly and bee strikers. Brass handles & nice inlay. Needs work.
8. Swiss box 8 tunes. Good condition.
9. Symphonium 12" double comb. Table model. Mechanically good.
10. Clariona paper roll hand organ walnut and in good condition.
11. Concert roller organ with 1 doz. rolls. Good condition walnut.
12. 3 Gem roller organs. 2 good, 1 needs work. 1 doz. rolls with each.
13. Musical casket. Walnut. Good condition.
14. Tangbar, German made accordian plays paper roll. Good condition.
15. Musical album. Red plush with brass trim. Good condition.
16. Musical alarm clock. Glass front and sides. Needs work.
17. Swiss miniature by Polliard. Nice inlaid burl wood case. Plays 6 tunes. Original tune card.
18. Small hand crank box 3 1/4" diameter.
19. Small hand crank box 3 1/2" diameter.
20. Musical jug. Plays "School Days." Good.
21. Swiss box by Nicole. 6 tunes. Original tune card. Like new condition.
22. Some extra rolls and disks.

RAY ALBERTSON

1107 Locust

Atlantic,

Iowa
myp

For the Record Collector

AL. McREA, Sr.

Box 182, Westville, N. J.

The man "JIM WALSH" has wrote about lately "EDDIE MORTON." I have just received four in excellent condition. Victor-5545, "Don't take me home," 16011—"Music makes me sentimental," 16012—"A singer sang a song," 16050—"If he comes in I'm goin out." They'll go to highest bidder.

I have just made up new lists of stage & screen stars. Ask me for your favorites.

Plenty of new items in Billy Murrays, Henry Burrs, Ada Jones, Jones & Hare, Chas. Harrison Hawaiian, also cornets, saxophone, xylophone, banjo and other instruments.

Next month June, I will list names of the great bands and orchestras of period 1920 to 1940.

RECORD OF THE MONTH

VI-19986-That means nothing to me/Do I love you. IRENE BORDONI. EXCELLENT. Also records by Irene Franklin, Marie Cahill, Yvette Rugeil, Fifi D'Orsay, Mizzi Babos, Nora Bayes, Miss Patricola, Marion Harris and many others. Send for these lists and prices ample it sets many garrulous and wearisome individuals. The phonograph never speaks until it has first been spoken to. Herein it also offers a worthy admonition to many ambitious but inexperienced writers. It has no original ideas to advance, or else is possessed of that spirit of modesty which precludes the possibility of its annoying the public with unripe fancies and crude speculations. The phonograph only consents to astonish the world at the instance of some dominant and controlling mind. When it is about to exhibit itself, an operator must be on hand to put it through its paces. On the occasion in question this gentleman was Mr. William H. Applebaugh, General Superintendent of the Telephone Company of New York.

myo

Seating himself before the instrument, Mr. Applebaugh confided to the disk names, numbers, scraps of poetry, comic songs, and various other bits of information calculated to amuse the phonograph, but not improve its mind. These were faithfully recorded upon the foil, which was made to revolve by turning the crank. Then the disk was sent back to the original starting-point, the crank again set in motion, and the metallic point brought into contact with the foil. Presently the phonograph began, in clear, distinct tones, to count, to call names, to describe its own peculiar talents, to give its own address, and finally to sing:

"There was an old man whose name was Uncle Ned,
And he died long ago, long ago;
And there wasn't any wool on the top of his head,
On the place where the wool ought to grow.

..This dropping into poetry apparently gave a sentimental turn to the thoughts of the phonograph, for presently, in spite of the fact that it was discoursing to a mixed and unsympathetic audience, it began to long for

The touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still.

As yet the phonograph is in its infancy. Its discovery was the result of an accident, and so far but little idea can be formed of the development of which it is susceptible. The gentleman who has the honor of being its inventor is Professor Thomas A. Edison, the famous electrician who, is experimenting with the telephone, happened to notice the manner in which the disks of that instrument vibrated in accordance with the breath used in speaking. Believing these vibrations could be recorded so as to be reproduced, he set to work to manufacture a machine for the purpose, and the result is the phonograph.

In a short time we shall, no doubt, have the curious little contrivance worked up to its highest perfection. And then, possibly, there will follow a revolution in all departments of public singing and speaking. There is no reason why we should not have all the great men of the age, as well as all the brilliant singers and actresses, taken possession of and driven off the course by the phonograph.

Let them sing or speak once in any place, there words and tones will be captured by the phonograph. The tin-foil, whereon all they have said is duly recorded, will be electrotyped, and copies sold at so much a piece. We shall all waste a portion of our substance on these little instruments; and then we have only to turn a crank, or set a kind of clock-work in motion, in order at any time to hear the great ones of the earth discourse in our own parlors.

The Story of Mary and Her Lamb

The final paragraph of that "Harp-er's" article has a striking similarity to the "New York World's" interview, quoted in the August HOBBIES, in which Mr. Edison predicted songs, symphonies and even complete novels would be "electrotyped" and sold for home entertainment and educational use.

And, speaking of Mr. Edison, although it has been repeatedly mentioned that the first recording of the human voice was his recitation of "Mary Had a Little Lamb," how many of us know the story of that favorite childhood poem? Some interesting statements concerning it have been made by Edward O. Cutler of Kew Gardens, N. Y., who wrote the following letter to the "New York Times" on March 31, 1951:

Your article concerning the little red schoolhouse of "Mary's Little Lamb" fame is of interest to old and young alike. The children of future generations will thank Henry Ford's Wayside Inn Corporation for preserving the schoolhouse. . . "Mary's Little Lamb" has been called America's greatest tradition.

My grandmother, who lived in Clinton-Lancaster, Mass., knew quite well Mary Elizabeth Sawyer, the "Mary" of the poem, and occasionally took my mother over to Sterling, three or four miles away, to visit "Mary." My mother was born in 1845 and my recollection of the stories she told me many years ago would place the visits around 1855.

My mother always spoke about "Sarah Hale" as the writer of the poem, and I believe they were acquainted; so I feel Bartlett's "Familiar Quotations" is probably correct in attributing the authorship to her.

Hoyt's New Cyclopaedia of Practical Quotations says that the verse was first printed in 1830 as part of Mrs. Hale's "Poems for Our Children," and that she "definitely asserted her claim to authorship before her death." However, it seems that Mary Sawyer Tyler (apparently the grown-up married name of the little girl about whom the poem was written) maintained it was written by one John Roulston — a claim disproved by a son of Mrs. Hale in a letter to the "Boston Transcript" on April 10, 1889. So even this innocent little poem has been the subject of controversy!

RECORDS FOR SALE

VICTOR, 10", Good, Excellent: McCormack, 15, $2.50; 50, $20; Gluck, 12, $2.50; 20, $4.50; Violin, 20, $3.50; 50, $8.; Blue, 30, $6.50; Purple, 15, $2.50; Jazz, 75, $17.50; Misc., 12, $2; Heritage Series, $1.75. — Toby's, 2426 Jackson, Kansas City, Mo. my1023 made by Stewart and Chickering, Tremont Street, Boston, Massachusetts during the first years of the 19th century — in playing condition but needs tuning — length 6 ft. — height 3 ft. — depth 23 in. — case in extra good condition. Price $350.00 crated F. O. B. Boston.

MAHOGANY INLAID PIANOFORTE

F. B. HURLEY & CO. Liquidators
364 Broadway, Cambridge, Mass. myv

FOR SALE

VICTOR RED SEAL RECORDS

Artist	Number	Title	Price
Culp	74527	Silver Threads among the Gold	$1.50
Caruso	88376	Dream of Long Ago	2.25
"	88378	The Lost Chord	2.25
" & Scotti	89001	Swear in This Hour	3.00
" & Melba	95200	Thou Sweetest Maiden	8.00
Farrar	88238	My Old Kentucky Home	3.00
Galli-Curci	74532	Shadow Song	3.00
"	74500	Lucia Il dolce suono	3.00
"	74512	Juliet's Waltz Song	3.00
Gluck	74251	Home Sweet Home	2.25
" & Male chorus	74420	Carry Me Back to Old Virginny	1.50
Gluck	74534	Aloha Oe	1.50
Gadske	88546	Kathleen Mavourneen	5.00
Hempel	88541	Ben Bolt	4.00
"	88567	The Last Rose of Summer	5.00
"	88540	Blue Danube Waltz	3.00
"	88588	Wine, Women and Song	3.00
Homer	88309	There's a Green Hill Far Away	2.50
"	88128	Old Black Joe	2.50
Juch	74014	Elsa's Dream	6.00
Martinelli	76032	Malida, I Love Thee	4.00
Melba	88454	Old Folks at Home	3.00
"	88455	John Anderson, My Jo	4.00
"	88073	Lo, Hear the Gentle Lark	4.00
"	88066	Jewel Song	4.00
Paderewski	74535	Crucienne Fantastique	2.50
Powell	74412	Large (Handel)	1.50
"	74531	Fifth Nocturne	1.50
Ruffo	92039	Barbiere di Siviglia	3.00
Schumann	88547	Lorelei - Volkslied	3.00
Heink	88138	Silent Night	3.00
"	88417	Delliah's Song of Spring	4.00
Tetrazzini	88349	The Swallows	3.00
Witherspoon	74417	One Sweetly Solemn Thought	2.50
Whitehill	74321	Love's Old Sweet Song	2.50
Wm. S. Evan	74160	Forgotten	2.50
"	74119	Crossing The Bar	3.00
Value of entire collection, $117.25 —
First $100 takes them all.

LUCILLE HUGHES

(Phone Adams 3494)

2204 Lawrence Ave.,

Toledo

(6)

Ohio

myo

MUSIC

must take rank as the highest of the fine arts — as the one which, more than any other, ministers to human welfare.

IBID. On the Origin and Function of Music

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By MOSORIAK & HECKERT

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

$5.00 Postpaid — Insured

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Arthur Fields

Part One

By JIM WALSH

"The Arthur Fields tragedy was the worst I can recall in my whole lifetime. . . . God rest poor Arthur. He surely went straight to Heaven, if ever a soul did. He was a great guy."—FRED WHITEHOUSE.

Sometimes tragedy strikes with sudden, cumulative, irresistible force.

On Sunday, March 29, 1953, I found myself thinking constantly of my friend, Arthur Fields, the famous recording artist and song writer. I knew that Arthur, who was living in Florida, had been in poor health because of arthritis, and I kept wondering how he was. Although I call him my friend, we had never met, but he had told another friend, Song Writer Ray Walker, that he hoped to drive to New York this spring and intended to stop in Roanoke to see me. So I was anticipating a "get-together" that would intensify the friendly feeling we had already formed by correspondence.

I spent much of that Sunday afternoon compiling lists of records made by Frank Crumit and George O'Connor, two recording comedians about whom articles will later appear in HOBBIES. In many instances, Crumit and O'Connor sang on only one side of their double-faced records, and quite often the opposite side was by Arthur Fields. That kept Arthur even more on my mind, and I went to bed thinking of him.

Late on the night of Monday, March 30th, I was at work in the news-room of Radio-TV station WSLs, and was watching the teletype spell out news from the outside world. Suddenly, I was horrified to see an item saying that among the many persons burned to death in the fire that destroyed the Littlefield Convalescent Home at Largo, Fla., was "the well known song writer, Arthur Fields."

For a few moments I couldn't believe what my eyes told me the coldly mechanical teletype was saying. Arthur Fields burned to death! Surely it couldn't be! I knew, as I have said, that Arthur was in poor health but I hadn't known anything of his being put into a nursing home. I told myself he surely would not have been admitted merely for treatment of arthritis, as painful and crippling as that can be. I simply couldn't accept what the "ticker" said.

But the teletype's unfeeling revelation was true. Arthur Fields had suffered a stroke of paralysis, was admitted to the nursing home and, on the early morning of Sunday, March 29th, was one of more than 30 persons burned to death. The fire occurred just 11 hours after he was admitted. Fortunately, the naturally genial and jovial comedian was under the influence of opiates and knew nothing of his terrible fate. Had he been aware of what was happening, he could have done nothing to save himself. It was the overpoweringly horrifying effect of his paralytic seizure and sudden death that caused his old friend and fellow recording artist and song writer, Fred Whitehouse, to term his tragedy "the worst I can recall in my whole lifetime" and to pay the heartfelt tribute I have quoted at the beginning of this article.

Perhaps Arthur Fields' death, though ghastly, was merciful. Doctors had told his wife, Mrs. Selma Fields, that he could never recover or be any better. In one catastrophic stroke he was relieved from the possibility of a long term of suffering. Nevertheless, the news of his passing was a terrible shock to his countless friends and admirers, including myself who had thought of him so constantly on the very day he had already been burned to death.

II A Letter from Mrs. Fields

On the morning after the night on which I learned of Arthur's passing I hurriedly wrote an article for Variety, recalling some of the colorful phases of his more than 50 years as a public personality. The article appeared in the April 8 issue and brought me several letters from friends of the comedian-composer. I have also heard from his widow, Mrs. Selma Fields. The result is that, combining the information thus obtained with what I already knew of Fields' recording career, I have almost an embarrassment of riches from which to choose in preparing this biographical sketch. As I set about the writing, I find myself wishing that it could have been published and received Arthur Fields' approval during his lifetime, instead of appearing as a posthumous tribute. But "it was not so to be."

Perhaps it would be well to begin with excerpts from the letter written to me on April 12 by Mrs. Fields:

My dear Mr. Walsh: Your very nice letter made me feel that I have known you always. Thank you kindly.

Arthur would have indeed been proud to know how all his friends eulogized him. Radio Station WFLA in Tampa spoke beautifully of him and played his songs for one hour. So did WTAN in Clearwater. . . .

Arthur had suffered two minor strokes, (besides) the one on March 11 which I was told he could never recover from. The sad part of it all was that his wonderful brain refused to function. I visited him daily, but he never recognized me, although the nurses told me that he was constantly calling my name. To think that he was checked into the Littlefield home only eleven hours before that terrible holocaust happened has me in a state of collapse. . . .

It is very kind of you to write an article about him, and I appreciate it immensely. Arthur was born August 6, 1888 (in Philadelphia.) His real name was Abe Finkelstein. His father's name (was) Mortimer and his mother's, Elizabeth. I do not know her maiden name. She passed away in 1907, long before I came into the family.

He was a very popular recording artist from 1914 until electrical recording came in. The vaudeville team of Weston, Fields and Carroll also did very well. In 1923 he traveled for a year with the Avon Comedy Four. Around 1920 he and Fred Hall did the first hill-billy radio show at N. B. C. for Rex Cole, sponsored by General Electric. It was called "The Rex Cole Mountaineers." Arthur always called it "The Times Square Hillbillies." He had a terrific sense of humor.

After five years with Cole they did a morning show called "The Streamliners." Arthur did a single called "The Old Man of the Mountains." Every Saturday they did "No School Today," all from N. B. C. in New York — also "The Sunday Drivers." After Fred and he parted company, Arthur did an early morning show on WJZ called "The Woodshedders." . . . And that is about all the information I can give you. Again my sincere thanks for your consolation. Wishing you every success in the years to come, believe me, cordially yours, SELMA FIELDS.

III Recollections of George Graff

One of the most interesting letters I received shortly after Arthur's death came from his old friend, George Graff, of Stroudsburg, Pa. Mr. Graff has been an outstanding writer of popular song lyrics. He is one of the comparatively few authors of words for songs whose work is always literate, grammatical and in good taste. For years he was the associate of the late Ernest R. Ball. Together they gave music lovers such virtual popular classics as "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling," "Teach Me to Pray," "Till the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold," "As Long as the World Rolls On," "I Love the Name of Mary," "Mother of Pearl," "Little Crumbs of Happiness" and a musical prayer to do away with war, "Let Us Have Peace," which was dedicated to President William Howard Taft. With other composers Mr. Graff wrote "In the Garden of Tomorrow," "Out Where the Blue Begins" and "Wake Up, America!"

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 37)

Arthur Fields

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 24)

George Graff's recollections of Arthur Fields follow:

Arthur spent most of his early days in Utica (New York). He sang solos as a boy in church there and when about 16 went on the road with a minstrel show.

Around 1907-08 he helped form a vaudeville act — Weston, Fields and Carroll — one of the earliest, and possibly the first, Rathskeller acts. Eddie Weston was a veteran performer and a few years older than Arthur and Harry Carroll, who were about 19 at that time. The act was a great success and headlined the Keith Circuit until Weston died. Fields and Carroll worked together for a while. They were both writing songs and Carroll had a couple of pretty big hits. He then did acts with girl partners.

Arthur stayed in vaudeville too with different partners and for a while was with the Avon Comedy Four. He began making records and soon was singing for all the record companies. At one time he had his name or nom de plume on more records than any other singer. A little later he started the team of Fields and Hall and played vaudeville and, later, radio. They wrote a lot of songs which they published themselves as Piedmont Music.

When they broke up around 1941 Arthur started the Arthur Fields Publications. He had written "On the Mississippi," "It's a Long Way to Berlin," "Aba Daba," which was revived a year or two back, and "Eleven More Months and Ten More Days," among many songs during the years past. He had a lot of creative talent and now wanted to write songs of a different type. He and I had been friends from the Weston, Fields and Carroll days, so he came to me and asked me to join him. We both loved to write songs and had a lot of fun together turning out numbers that satisfied us even if no one would buy them.

The hymns he sang back in Utica as a boy had made a great impression on him and we decided to write some sacred songs. This was a labor of love for both of us and we wrote and published forty or more hymns which we called "Hymns of Happiness."

One day I read an article about fireflies and in it was a quip about who would have thought of sticking a taillight in a bug. The steps to the many things only God thought of caused me to write "Who Else But God?"

I knew it had great commercial possibilities that our little venture couldn't realize for it, but Arthur would have been heartbroken if he couldn't have had it. He gave it the perfect musical setting, and while it never made us any money the letters we have received thanking us for writing it have repaid us in ways more valued than money. Arthur was on radio at that time and never used "Who Else But God?" without getting many wonderful letters. . . Cordially, GEORGE GRAFF.

IV Ray Walker Recalls

Probably no one, aside from Mrs. Fields, was more distressed by the news of Arthur Fields' death than his old friend, Ray Walker. On the day my Variety article was written I received a letter from Ray, who was then living at Miami Beach but has since returned to New York, telling me he was worried because of having learned that Arthur had suffered a stroke and been placed in a hospital. Then on April 1, the ever helpful and obliging Ray Walker wrote:

"Feel lousy today. Read in the newspapers about Arthur Fields being burned to death in that fire in the Littlefield Nursing Home near Largo, Fla. His wife wrote me the other day and mentioned a different hospital."

Almost incredible as it seems, Arthur Fields and Ray Walker were working together in "show business" some 53 years ago when Fields was not quite 12 and Ray only a little older. Walker's letter added:

"Arthur worked with me at Coney Island around 1900, singing illustrated songs. Four years ago we did a radio show on WKAT at Miami Beach, billing ourselves as The Tavernaires. . . I can't begin to tell you what a shock this has been to me."

On April 6, Ray, still upset over the loss of his old friend, wrote: "Haven't felt well since I heard about Arthur Fields. . . Just received . . . a letter from Mrs. Fields. She probably has written you also. Her letter is very sad. It seems that Arthur was only in that hospital (convalescent home) 11 hours when the fire broke out. All they could identify Arthur from was his teeth. His body was a charred ruin . . . you could put in a pillow case. She had him cremated, and they played his song, 'Who Else But God?' at the funeral . . . I am sick about it."

In the same letter Ray said: "I found out that Arthur lived in Utica, New York, when he was about 10 years old. His father was in business there."

It was like Ray Walker not only to go to the trouble of jotting down some notes about Arthur Fields' life but also to send me a letter he received last January from Arthur, which contained some colorful reminiscences.

From Ray's notes, it appears that Fields sang at Wackie's moving picture house, Coney Island, when he was 11, with Walker as his accompanist. When he was 17 he joined the Guy Brothers Minstrel Show. In 1908 he sang at a New York place, "The German Village." One of the other entertainers was Sophie Tucker. A year later, Arthur was singing in the Bohemia Cafe at 41 West 29th street. In 1910 he was master of ceremonies at College Inn on Coney Island. Tess Gardella, later known on radio as "Aunt Jemima," also sang there, and Mel Craig led the orchestra.

A short time afterward while singing in the Garden Restaurant, at 50th street and Seventh Avenue, Fields formed the trio of Weston, Fields and Carroll, already mentioned by Mr. Graff. After Weston died, Fields and Carroll continued as a vaudeville team. In 1912, with Ballard MacDonald, they wrote a big hit, "On the Mississippi." According to Walker, Fields first met his future recording and radio partner, Fred Hall, at the Emerson Record Company offices in 1923.

One interesting thing mentioned by Ray is that Arthur had "a collection of thousands of old records. Some were made by stars but not released, due to errors in the making. One record I heard was by Bing Crosby. The first part is OK, but someone hit a blue note and Crosby started to swear through the whole second chorus. He had other similar records, some very funny. He also had thousands of old song copies — one with Yoelson's (Al Jolson) picture on the title page."

The deep sorrow evident in Ray Walker's letter was echoed in comments from friends and admirers throughout the nation as the bad news spread. Part of Fred Whitehouse's expression of grief has already been quoted. He likewise said: "Arthur was always a friend of mine. Many a time, Arthur, Irving and Jack Kaufman, Billy Murray and the rest of the old recording boys and myself would meet up at Columbia, Brunswick, Pathé or the other studios and have a regular get-together."

Henry Marshall, the veteran song writer, who lives at 515 Bumble Bee Lane, Scotch Plains, New Jersey, (so named in honor of his two biggest hits, "On the 5:15" and "Be My Little Baby Bumble Bee") wrote that he was grief-stricken because of Fields' passing and said he suspected my Variety article "brought tears to the eyes of many of Arthur's friends." Daniel J. McNamara, publicity director for ASCAP, wrote to tell of the sorrow Arthur's fellow members felt because of his death.

A 14-year-old record enthusiast, Gordon Hunter of Portland, Oregon, sent an air mail letter to say: "I am very sorry to hear of the death of Arthur Fields. . . He was one of the great artists who brought so much joy to the troops in the field of battle during World War I. The phonograph has lost another of its pioneers."

Albert Via, Jr., of South Boston, Virginia, wrote: "I was certainly sorry to hear about Arthur Fields' fate. It was a terrible way for a fellow to come to an end. I got some of his Edison records together Monday night. He was good, all right."

Al. McRea, the Westville, New Jersey, dealer in rare records: "I just got Variety and must congratulate you on your masterful article about Arthur Fields. I read the account of the fire but didn't know he was caught in it. . . Right now I am playing a Bell by him called 'Me and the Boy Friend.' On April 21 Mrs.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 43)

Arthur Fields

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 37)

Fields wrote, saying: "Allow me to congratulate you on the splendid article you wrote in Variety. It arrived, today, thanks to you." I hope this HOBBIES article likewise will bring some consolation to Mrs. Fields, who is now living at 4722 North Lois Avenue, Drew Park, Tampa, Florida, in the home of Arthur's cousin, E. Goldstein.

V. Arthur Fields' Own Recollections

When Arthur Fields set down some reminiscences of his long career for Ray Walker last January, they included the following, which reveal that he saw more than a little of the seamy side of some phases of New York life during his earlier days:

I worked in the German Village for five years. Worked in the "Cellar" with George Piantadosi (he was a waiter); Joe Schwab (tenor singer); Curly Monroe (also a tenor); Lew Weston (a comic), and Jack Schiller, who played piano. Schiller was a remittance man — a two-fisted drinker. His dad owned a hotel in Canada and paid him so much a month to stay away from Canada. Charlie Muzocci played piano on the second floor. . . . Sophie Tucker worked with him and so did Flossie Crain. On the third floor Al Piantadosi played for some guy that was crippled up but a great entertainer — Joe something-or-other — I can't recall his name. That was somewhere around 1908. . . .

I also worked with Arthur Stone (Blind Stoney). We were in the Bohemia. I saved his life by pushing him in back of the piano when the Humpty Jackson gang came to square some account with another gang. Three men were killed. One man dragged himself all the way to Bellevue Hospital in the snow. One saved himself by rushing across the street into the Heidelberg. From the Bohemia, Stoney did an act with two other fellows.

Fred Hall played piano with the gang at Sennett's. In fact, he helped to write "Maybe" . . . Corbett, Shepard and Donovan were already an act at the College Inn, where I was the M. C. when I was but a kid. . . . It was from there that Eddie Weston became sick and died. . . .

About my being a charter member of ASCAP (the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers) in 1914, I left the organization because I didn't think I was adding anything to it when I started singing for phonograph records. E. F. Bitner, of Feist, kept up my dues for a while, but I didn't know it. Anyway, I rejoined in 1937.

VI A Newspaper Interview

On Friday, April 22, 1949, the Sun-Tattler, a newspaper published in Hollywood, Florida, contained an article about Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Fields having come to Florida to live. Since it is largely biographical and contains considerable information about Fields' later years, it is worth reprinting here. There is also a picture, showing the singer-composer playing a record, and with cut lines reading: "Works on Program Script — Arthur Fields, songwriter, composer and singer, is shown preparing script for his daily radio program at his home, 1931 McKinley St. Mr. Fields says he purchased the home because it had a large garage, giving him ample room for a den to store his collection of records and sheet music."

Under the heading, "Famed Stage Tenor of Past Now Makes His Home in City," the article said:

Although he has made his home in this city for the past three years, few Hollywoodians know that the Arthur Fields residing at 1931 McKinley St. is the same golden-voiced tenor who helped popularize hit tunes of a quarter century ago. More than a thousand recordings which caught the fancy of another generation after the turn of the century are filed away in his garage den. All carry the title, "Solo by Arthur Fields." Many have been reintroduced in the last five years and are heard over the radio and wherever juke boxes are played.

Mr. Fields. . . is listed in the ASCAP's official publication as a composite song writer, author and composer. In short, he has tackled a little of everything in the musical world and in recent years collaborated with George Graff on a radical departure. That was a series of sacred hymns, published as "Forty-eight Hymns of Happiness."

His outstanding accomplishment as writer and composer includes "On the Mississippi," written with Harry Carroll 30 years ago. That song sold two million copies and is still used today as theme music. . . . Others were "Aba Daba Honeymoon," written with Walter Donovan, which went over the million mark in sales, and "There's a Blue Sky Way Out Yonder," released in 1930 and still popular as a ballad.

The song, "Eleven More Months and Ten More Days," also released in 1930, is another of his better known ditties. This one caught on like wildfire in London and started a craze for hill-billy tunes among the English people.

Mr. Fields was born in Philadelphia in 1888. First billed as a child singer, he made his professional debut at the age of 11. By the time he was 16 he was appearing regularly in minstrels when that type of entertainment was at its peak. In 1907, three years later, he swung into vaudeville and teamed with Harry Carroll, with whom he later composed a number of songs.

About this time he went into the recording field and started a long series of vocal solos for Columbia, Victor, Banner and other leading companies of that day. Many are no longer in business. . . . Oddly, Mr. Fields recalls that leading singers were reluctant to make recordings and often insisted on being billed under a fictitious name. Mr. Fields himself recorded under several pseudonyms.

. . . For a number of years (he) held a personal contract with Thomas Edison in vocalizing tunes for the Edison company.

One of the most popular songs at the time of World War I was "It's a Long Way to Berlin," which Mr. Fields wrote, and which he sang on recruiting tours in New York City. With Earl Carroll, who was recently killed in an airplane crash, he introduced "Auntie Skinner's Chicken Dinner" and then followed with "Alice, I'm in Wonderland." The former song clicked to the extent of more than a million and a half copies.

In recent years, Mr. Fields returned to radio in New York, where he continued his singing and also wrote scripts. His most recent musical composition is "Frisky Little Filly," written three years ago but which failed to catch on.

The serious illness of his wife, Selma, brought the Fields to Florida in 1946 on doctor's orders. They left "Tin Pan Alley" for good, and headed for Miami. Both liked Hollywood better than anything they saw in Miami and their purchase of a home followed. . . . Since making his home here, Mr. Fields has swung back to radio, while continuing his song writing. He has a one-half hour program over WKAT, Miami, Monday through Friday, known as the "Arthur Fields Program," dealing with favorite songs of yesteryear and tributes to the song writers and composers fraternity. . . . In addition, he recently ran into an old friend, Ray Walker, well known pianist and writer, who fashioned "Good Night, Nurse," and "Poor Pauline." The pair are now contemplating night club engagements and a radio show.

With George Graff, a pianist now residing at Stroudsburg, Pa., Mr. Fields attempted something different in 1943 by going into the field of sacred music. . . . (This) led them to publish another hymn, "Who Else But God?" which Mr. Fields today looks on as one of his finer efforts.

In writing "Who Else But God?" the two men attempted to capture a tender-

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 46)

KATE GREENAWAY'S VALENTINES

(Continued from Page 39)

In Spielmann and Layard's "Kate Greenaway," facing p. 74, is an illustration of three water-color drawings intended, according to the book, for use on Christmas cards. These drawings depict children in ulsters, as follows:

1. A maiden in fur-trimmed green ulster, with muff and hat;
2. A maiden in red ulster, with muff and hat;
3. A boy in blue ulster and hat, carrying an umbrella in one hand and a French poodle dog under the other arm.

Although intended for use on Christmas cards, these designs were also used for other purposes. We find two of them in Mrs. McPhail's collection with fancy printed frames in gold and colors and with illustrations (2 7/8" x 4 1/4") with cut corners. Legend ribbons at top and bottom say: "St. Valentine's Day," "Forget Me Not," "I

Send This Little Maiden;" "With Loves' Best Wishes Laden." (The Christmas cards appeared on the cover of HOBBIES in December, 1950.)

There are no verses on the back and hence it seems likely that these cards were intended for mounting on larger sheets or, more likely, in a booklet which would accommodate two or even three cards. This set is of the later period and is one of several which have only three subjects, a departure from the sets of six or four, during the earlier period. This is explained by the change in greeting card fashions from verse cards and folders to booklets and sachets.

For purposes of identification, we will call this the "Children in Ulsters" set.

In our concluding article, we will mention several more of the later designs which were also used for valentines. We will then review the sets of valentines described and attempt to arrange them in a logical order.

BENJAMIN WEST

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 36)

listening to the story of the life of Socrates and his historic death as related by the English governess, and his imagination quickly acted on the hint of the gunsmith. The figure of Socrates he completed to his satisfaction, but when he came to the slave handing the poison—"The slave ought, I think, to be naked," going, in his dilemma, to his friend of the forge, "and I have always painted men clothed." The gunsmith returned to his forge and presently brought out one of his workmen, half-nude and splendidly formed, saying "There is your model." West introduced him with his bare limbs into the picture. So early as this did he show that his conceptions of art were the purest.

West had now been roaming about so long indulging his one passion that at the age of fifteen we find him with barely the rudiments of an education. Dr. Smith, whose kindly interest in the boy induced him to undertake the part of tutor, with mistaken judgment allowed Benjamin to shirk hard and disagreeable study and to skim through the classics, fastening his attention only to those incidents likely to inflame his imagination. What he needed most was severe and methodical study, but this his indulgent tutor and more indulgent parents did not realize.

There was now a serious question to be discussed and answered. One of the peculiar articles of faith among the Quakers was the condemnation of the art of painting as being an agency "employed to embellish life, to preserve voluptuous images, and add to the sensual gratifications of man." The Wests were Quakers, and conformed in all things as did the others to the strictures of their sect. The question as to whether Benjamin might follow the beckonings of his genius was submitted to the Society for their wise consideration. Benjamin was ruled out while these deliberations of such deep moment to him were held. The spirit of inspiration came first to a Mr. Williamson. "God has bestowed on this youth a genius for art," he said, "shall we question his wisdom? I see the Divine hand in this; we shall do well to sanction the art, and encourage the youth." Like a wind that bends every golden wheat-head down in assent to its whispered love-tale, the same spirit moved over the hearts of these Friends, and every head bowed in grave consent to the words that had been spoken. Benjamin was called in, and Mr. Williamson continued his address: "We have classed painting among vain and ornamental things and excluded it from among us. But this is not the principle, but the misemployment of painting. In wise and pure hands it rises in the scale of moral excellence, and displays a loftiness of sentiment worthy the contemplation of Christians. God has endowed this youth with rich gifts. May it be demonstrated in his life and works that the gifts of God have not been bestowed in vain, nor the motives of the beneficent inspiration which induces us to suspend the strict operation of our tenets prove barren of religious or moral effect." The voice ceased. One man arose and laid his hand in silent benediction upon West's head; another followed, till all the men had blessed him, and then the women consecrated him, each by a kiss, to his work. West now considered himself dedicated to Art, to uphold its sanctity and purity.

BELLS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 35)

well as an old, old Soho bell, each bring to mind interesting English scenes and times. But my most highly prized bell from England is doubtless a graceful pewter tap bell from the Queen Anne Period. It stands on a polished base of fine-grained English oak and beckons with a marvelously sweet tone. This bell was purchased originally by John Adams, second president of the United States, who liked fine old decorative pieces and purchased many of them while Minister to England from 1785-1788. When I first saw this bell at an old estate, the date of purchase, etc., was well preserved on a sticker in Adam's own characteristic script. By the time the bell was offered for sale a year later, a careless housekeeper had torn off half the brittle old sticker . . . but the story remains, thanks to that earlier examination of the bell.

ARTHUR FIELDS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 43)

ness which they believe is inherent in the heart of man. . .

Who else but God could have thought of these things,
Dew on a petal, a tendril that clings,
The throat of a bird and green moss on a log,
A bee on the wing and a fern in a bog;
The sweet smell of clover, of grass after rain,
The flame of October and full fruited grain,
A tree in its glory a seed in its pod.
Who could have thought of such beauty but God?

Who could have thought of a meadow in bloom,
An orchard in blossom, a lilac's sweet perfume,
The egg of a robin, the sun through the trees,
The touch of cool water, a soft summer breeze,
Or white drifting clouds with wild geese wheeling by,
The blaze of a sunset, a star in the sky,
Eternity's span and a butterfly's wings;
Who else but God could have thought of these things?

Thrilled as a child I give thanks for these things,
Praising my God for the blessings He brings,
So grateful for bounties that crowd every day,
And for His forgiveness when I go astray.

Oh, how can I show all the joy in my heart,
And humbly, devotedly do my small part!
I know of the tears on the road that He trod;
Who could have loved us so—who else but God!

And now, having touched on some of the highlights of Arthur Fields' singing and song writing career, we may retrace our steps to 1914, when he made his first records and became one of the most popular singers the phonograph has ever known.

(To be continued)

Music Box Collection in California

A pleasant vacation stop in California this summer would be Altadena. You can easily identify it by the sweet sound of old music boxes you hear coming from the 24x24 foot Hobby House of Homer (Bud) Witten.

Here he has 180 early phonographs in working order, including early juke boxes, possibly the first portable, a German Symphonion which plays on bells, and a Rocking Melodion (lap organ), ranging in size from portables to large console models.

Edison's voice can be heard on one of his 6,000 or more old records, reportedly one of four in existence. Speeches by William Jennings Bryan and songs by Caruso can also be heard.

"Bud" says visitors are welcome, just phone Sycamore 7-7982 to make sure he will be home. He is adding another 24 feet to his Hobby House, so there will be a little more room if all collectors come at once.

"Bud" began collecting in 1938, by accident when he bought an old phonograph that played cylinder records from a Pasadena house wrecker for 25 cents. After repairing it, he began looking for records, and thus acquired the collecting spirit.

He repairs many of his finds, using hopeless cases for spare parts. He now has about 55 of these in his attic.

His music boxes range from magnificently intricate Swiss machines that play eight tunes on one cylinder, to glass-doored symphonion consoles several feet tall. These play punched steel records more than a foot in diameter.

His collection of 180 phonographs and 30 music boxes, plus records, is estimated to be worth $100,000 Bud says. But, although he has a few duplicates for trade, he doesn't seem to plan to sell any of them.

HAMILTON ORGAN

Approximately 100 years old,
Owned only by two people
$125.00

MRS. JENNIE GAINES HARRIS
6432-34 S. Green St., Chicago 21, Ill.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Arthur Fields

Part Two

By JIM WALSH

Arthur Fields was only twenty-six when he began his long record-making career late in 1914, but he was already a veteran entertainer of some fifteen years experience. Starting as a boy singer in a place on Coney Island, he had traveled with a minstrel show, been master of ceremonies at "clubs," headlined in vaudeville and won sufficient recognition as a writer of popular songs to be admitted as a member of the newly formed American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers. As his recording career got under way, "The Aba Daba Honeymoon," for which he had written the words to music by Walter Donovan, was a big seller, and as sung by Collins and Harlan it remained the first record listed in the alphabetical Victor, Columbia and Edison catalogs for several years afterward. It was the first because "Aba" came nearer the beginning of the alphabet than the initial word of any other song title, nosing out "Abide With Me," which had been the accepted leader.) Some thirty-five years after the song was first written, it was revived in a movie and again swept the country.

Fields' first record, however, was not one of his own compositions. Instead, it was written by a young fellow of about Arthur's own age—one, who like Fields, had begun his career as a child, was of Jewish descent and, as a fledgling entertainer, had seen something of the less savory aspects of New York life. The other young man, beginning to be recognized as the greatest popular song writer of the day, was Irving Berlin, and his song, which Arthur Fields sang for his recording debut, was "Along Came Ruth." He was to record many other Berlin songs in the years that followed.

In those days the number of singers who could make satisfactory records was limited, and a large percentage of artists elected to "freelance." More often than not, they sang under more than one name. Arthur Fields at first didn't use any name but his own, but he appeared for the first time on record lists in both the Victor and Columbia supplements for December, 1914. And in both instances he sang "Along Came Ruth," which many of his admirers still insist is one of the best records he ever made. I remember that some years ago Arthur's friend, Joe Franklin, the successful young New York disc jockey, wrote me he considered "Along Came Ruth" the best Fields recording.

The Victor record, No. 17637, was issued without comment, merely appearing under the heading, "Popular Songs of the Month." It was fortunate in being coupled with one of Billy Murray's masterpieces of rapid-fire ragtime, "I'll Do It All Over Again." This pattern of Fields on one side of a double-faced record and Murray on the other was repeated many times, especially in 1918-19, after Murray had returned for a year to free-lance recording. The record companies seemed to think it sound business policy to put two of their most popular comedians on one disc. Murray and Fields were good friends and, as will be seen, Billy frequently assisted Arthur in Edison recordings that featured Field's solo voice.

The Columbia version of "Along Came Ruth" was No. A1612, and had the most popular ballad tenor of the day, Henry Burr, singing "You're the Same Old Girl on the Other Side." The Supplement commented: "one of the best popular numbers in every respect that have been issued in many months is 'Along Came Ruth,' the new Berlin-Snyder publication whose title is taken from the very successful play of the same name. Our record introduces a new singer, Mr. Arthur Fields, a baritone whose voice and style are preeminently adapted to selections of this same character."

Here an oddity appears. Columbia called Fields a baritone, but Victor termed him a tenor. This difference of opinion was even more noticeable later when Fields was singing for all the American record companies. Victor (and Emerson) continued to maintain he was a tenor; Columbia, Edison and many others held to the baritone designation. And, in spite of his also having been called a tenor by a Florida paper which interviewed him, I believe "baritone" is the correct description for his voice. Certainly, I think it strikes the average person as too deep to be considered a tenor.

Arthur Fields

Fields must have signed an exclusive two-year contract with Columbia, because he did not appear again in Victor record lists until August, 1918, and, as far as I can determine, didn't sing for any company except Columbia until he was mentioned in the February, 1917, Edison supplement. In January, 1915, he had two selections in the Columbia list—A1628, another Irving Berlin song, "Stay Down Here Where You Belong," coupled with an irresistible bit of Berlin ragtime, "He's a Rag Picker," sung by the Peerless Quartet; and A1626, "Poor Pauline," a composition by Charles McCarron and Ray Walker, satirizing the pioneer movie serial, "The Perils of Pauline," which starred Pearl White. The other side was "Do the Funny Fox Trot," by Collins and Harlan.

I have not heard Fields' version of "Stay Down Here Where You Belong" but it was the sort of song he should have sung well—one in which the Devil admonished his son to stay beneath the ground rather than venture to the earth, where the first World War was causing "more hell up there than we have here below." On the other hand, "Poor Pauline" doesn't represent Arthur at his best. The recording seems to be bad, and the voice has a shrill, apparently distorted quality.

Fields' next Columbia record, issued in April, 1915, was an excellent comic song rendition, "He Comes Up Smiling," coupled on A1696 with a Peerless Quartet interpretation of a Harry Von Tilzer tune whose title at least deserves to be immortal, "Cows May Come, Cows May Go, But the Bull Goes On Forever." On A1699 he sang a song in praise of the 1915 Pan-American Exposition, "San Francisco (At That San-Fran-Pan-American Fair)" doubled with "Come Over to Dover," by Albert Campbell and Henry Burr.

In June came No. A1755, "The Little Ford Rambled Right Along," probably the funniest of all songs about automobiles, combined with an Irving Berlin "rube song" masterpiece, "Si's Been Drinking Cider," by Collins and Harlan. Here again Fields seem to have had recording, for "The Little Ford" record isn't as good as some of his other early Columbias. Perhaps it was because of technical defects that Columbia had it re-recorded in the early 1920's by Frank Crumit — the recording of whose voice also could have been improved.

There is no point in attempting to list all the records Arthur Fields made for Columbia or any other company. His "waxings" are numbered in the thousands — under his own name as well as a bewildering variety of nom de disques, some of which will be listed. Occasionally, it is possible to append fairly complete listings of the records made by singers who were not especially prolific, but this is impossible in the case of a highly popular artist like Arthur Fields. Lack of space would prevent, if nothing else did. A specialist such as Julian Morton Moses, of the American Record Collectors' Exchange, with his valuable "Price Guide to Collectors' Records," has found it possible to publish compilations of the Red Seal type of disc, with their approximate retail value, and Will Roy Hearne of Hollywood has done a like service for jazz collectors in his "Hollywood Premium Guide." But both Moses and Hearne would say, "No, thank you!" if asked to compile an absolutely complete list of all the discs and cylinders made by such untiring recorders as Arthur Fields, Billy Murray, Henry Burr, Collins and Harlan, Ada Jones, Charles Harrison and Irving Kaufman, to name only a few. And, even if they were willing to undertake the job, it would be virtually an impossible assignment when one considers how many different companies some of these artists, like Fields, sang for under a variety of names.

II Field Sings for Edison

It is always a pleasure to trace in the recorded work of a painstaking, conscientious artist such as Arthur Fields a gradual but consistent improvement in his singing. Throughout his phonograph career, the comedian's recordings showed betterment in both voice and style. But he was not assured of consistently good recording until he became one of the Edison staff artists. Although many Diamond Disc surfaces were bad, the recording itself was uniformly and unfailingly excellent, unlike the output of the needle record companies, which was sometimes good and just as often bad. In my opinion, nearly all the best records Arthur Fields made in the pre-electric days are Edisons.

Fields is first discussed as an artist in the Edison Amberola Monthly for February, 1917. His Blue Amberol cylinder, No. 3112, "Don't Leave Me, Daddy," was mentioned as scheduled to be issued in March. Although dubbed from a Diamond Disc, it never appeared in disc form. The following interesting biographical sketch was given:

Arthur Fields, widely known as a vaudeville singer and as a writer of popular songs, makes his debut in the Blue Amberol catalog with the March list. Mr. Fields is the possessor of an exceptionally fine baritone voice and his manner of rendering ragtime numbers and other varieties of topical songs has made him exceedingly popular in the leading vaudeville centers of America. Mr. Fields was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1888 and he made his first appearance on the stage in Utica, N. Y., in 1904. Only sixteen years old at the time of his vaudeville debut, it was some years before his voice reached maturity. But during that time he filled many vaudeville and theatrical engagements. For the past five years he has been in vaudeville continually, traveling on the big circuits exclusively.

While Mr. Fields has gained much prominence in the theatrical world through his work in vaudeville, his reputation as a song writer is international. Among the big song hits that have been written entirely or in part by Mr. Fields are "On the Mississippi," "Auntie Skinner's Chicken Dinner" and "The Aba Daba Honeymoon." He is known by name and reputation to all persons who keep themselves informed on affairs of the stage and his records should be ready sellers because of their exceptional artistic merit and the wide renown of Mr. Fields.

Oddly enough, a check of the Edison record lists reveals that the Amberola Monthly was wrong in saying Fields appeared for the first time in the March supplement. The month before he had been represented by No. 3083, "Honolulu, America Loves You." This also was his first Diamond Disc. It was coupled on No. 50414 with "How Could Washington Be a Married Man and Never Tell a Lie?" by M. J. O'Connell. (O'Connell appears to have got the jump on every other recording artist with this song, for he hurried around and made it for Victor, Columbia, Pathe, Emerson and perhaps some other companies in addition to Edison.)

Fields' third Blue Amberol, not issued on the Disc, came out in April and was 3163, "Rolling Stones (They All Come Rolling Home Again)", a bit more serious number than the type he ordinarily sang. Two months later, in June, he was represented by 3197, "Everybody Loves a Jazz Band," one of the first songs written about the jazz (at first spelled "jass") craze then beginning to sweep the country. It also appeared on Diamond Disc 50439, combined with a hilarious antimatrimonial ditty, "I'm a Poor Married Man," by Billy Murray.

Shortly after he was engaged by Edison, Fields began to free-lance in earnest, singing for virtually every company then making records. Starting in 1918, he made many splendid Pathé sapphire discs. Some, such as "The Darktown Strutters Ball" and "In the Land o' Yamo Yamo," which had accordion duet accompaniments by the Boudini Brothers, were especially good. On one of his 1918 Pathés, "The Tishomingo Blues," he called himself Arthur Mack — possibly the first time he recorded under a name other than his own — or, rather, the one which he had adopted years before for theatrical purposes.

III War Song Singer — Recruiter

Arthur Fields had already gained considerable popularity as a recording artist but his fame reached new heights after the United States entered the first World War in 1917. As soon as hostilities were declared Tin Pan Alley began flooding the country with patriotic songs, and Fields, perhaps more than any other popular artist, had exactly the right personality, pep and enthusiasm to put them over. Columbia may have been the first company to recognize his specialized gifts, but all the others fell in line. Arthur must have had to work around the clock to supply the demand for his recordings of war tunes.

His popularity also was not impaired by the fact Fields himself wore the American uniform and won a reputation as one of the most effective military recruiters in the country. He does not appear to have gone overseas, but as a recruiter in the New York "Gay White Way" district probably gave his country more valuable service than he could have anywhere else.

Under the heading of "Five Hundred Recruits Secured by Edison Artist," the Edison Amberola Monthly for December, 1917, said:

"Arthur Fields, Edison artist and writer of popular songs, has made a big hit singing his own compositions and the stirring recruiting songs, 'Where Do We Go From Here?' and 'Goodbye, Broadway, Hello, France.' "Arthur Fields joined the New York National Guard at the outbreak of the war and volunteered his services for unique recruiting work. He donned his uniform and with Lieutenants Farrell and Orsengo, Corporal Daniel F. Kelly and Private Leon Flatow, of the 71st Regiment, began a stirring campaign to build up the National Guard of New York. A large auto truck was contributed, this was decorated with bunting and a piano installed, and the boys set out to make the White Light district hum.

"Private Fields was highly commended by the military authorities for the splendid work he had inaugurated. Its appeal was strong. The soldier singers made a big impression on the blasé youths of the Great White Way. This was evidenced by the hundreds of recruits who volunteered for service in the army. Three thousand names were turned over to the recruiting offices of Uncle Sam and at least 600 boys are now 'Somewhere in France' preparing to fight for democracy as a result of the work started by Private Fields. The 71st Regiment obtained 500 recruits through the spectacular appeal made nightly by the singers. One of Fields' own compositions is the war song sung by U. S. Soldiers, It's a Long Way to Berlin, But We'll Get There."

Fields recorded the "Long Way to Berlin" song for Edison and several other companies. He wrote the words and the music was by Leon Flatow, already mentioned as one of his fellow enthusiasts in the recruiting drive.

It would be tedious as well as unnecessary to list all the passingly popular war songs of which Fields made records. However, one of his especially popular numbers was "I Don't Want to Get Well," a clever comic number about a hospitalized soldier in love with a Red Cross nurse. He sang this as a solo for Columbia and other companies, but on his Edison Blue Amberol cylinder had the assistance of a contralto, Grace Woods. Mention of this record brings out the rather odd fact that Fields seldom sang duets with other artists and appears not to have been a member of any recording quartet. His duet work with women seems to have been largely confined to three numbers with Miss Woods — "I Don't Want to Get Well," "Whose Little Heart Are You Breaking Now?" and "Sweet Mama, Papa's Getting Mad," all of which appeared on Blue Amberol cylinders but not on Diamond Discs. In 1919 he made a duet with the well known concert baritone, Royal Dadmun, of a post-war song, "Homeward Bound," for Pathé. And he sang a few duets on Emerson records with one or other of the Kaufman Brothers — Irving and Jack. One of these, "Swanee Shore," by Fields and Irving Kaufman, was written by the pair. He also made a 1919 Columbia of "Breeze (Blow My Baby Back to Me)," with Jack Kaufman, on which Jack was described as a tenor — which he wasn't. Irving Kaufman was a tenor, but Jack had a strong baritone. And in 1923 Arthur joined Al Bernard in sing "Maggie (Yes, Ma'am Come Right Upstairs)" for Pathé Actuelle. "Grace Woods" was just a disguise for Helen Clark.

One of the oddities of the songs about World War One was the way some writers thought an approach to profanity would help pep up their numbers. Fields recorded a Teddy Morse tune, "We'll Knock the Heligo Into Heligo Out of Heligo Land."

"We're All Going Calling on the Kaiser" had a refrain which said: "We'll wish him well with shot and shell — the son-of-a-gon — we'll give him — well, we're all going calling on the Kaiser!" "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here!" was revived for war use, but although the records said, "what the heck do we care?" the soldiers didn't sing it that way. And records of "Tell That to the Marines" bluntly referred to the Kaiser's "damned old U-boats."

Fields' first Columbia under an assumed name was A2530, issued in June, 1918, on which he sang two big hits, "Good Morning, Mr. Zip-Zip-Zip" and "K-K-Katy." In the first he had the assistance of the Peerless Quartet, which worked with him on a number of Columbias, including "I Ain't Got Weary Yet," "I Wonder What They're Doing Tonight," "Johnny's In Town," "The Navy Will Bring Them Back," "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight" (with the words revised to bring them up-to-date for war use), "We're All Going Calling On the Kaiser," "When I Send You a Picture of Berlin" and "Where Do We Go From Here?" On the record just mentioned, A2530, he called himself Eugene Buckley. This and the Pathé pseudonym of Arthur Mack were the start of a long list of assumed names which he was later to use.

In June, Columbia issued another zippy Fields combination, A2528, "The Yanks Started Yankin'" and "Hunting the Hun," with this comment: "Arthur Fields' 'war songs' are the hit of the day — because he has a voice you can hear, understand and enjoy. A. F. 'sings on his toes'; his latest Columbia records show it." A month later came A2539, "Pay Day (That Was His Favorite Call)," written as well as sung by Fields, with "What'll We Do With Him, Boys?" by the omnipresent Peerless on the other side. Said the monthly supplement: "There are a score of bugle calls we civilians know nothing of and Arthur Fields introduces us to the most popular one of all, 'Pay-Day' — his own song, sung in the spirit which has so successfully aided recruiting wherever Fields has appeared." Two other excellent Fields records, treating the war from a humorous point of view, were Archie Gottler's still well remembered "Would You Rather be a Colonel With an Eagle on Your Shoulder (Or a Private With a Chicken On Your Knee?)" and Sam Ward's now forgotten but perhaps even funnier, "Your Boy is on the Coal Pile Now."

The August supplement contained several Fields numbers, including a re-listing of A2496, "Tom, Dick and Harry and Jack" and "I'll Come Back to You When It's All Over," which had been originally announced months before. The supplement said the unusual success of those songs "has prompted this re-listing of two of the best bits of popular melody in print." The singer-recruiter's Columbia version of "Over There" was also highly popular.

In August, Fields reappeared in the Victor supplement. He had not made a Victor record since "Along Came Ruth," almost four years previously, but now he came through with "When I Send You a Picture of Berlin," with the admirable assistance of the Peerless Quartet, whose members made so many records they were suspected of frequenting recording studios in their sleep. The other side was one of the cleverest and most original songs that came out of the war, "Indianola." Sung by Billy Murray, it told of how an Indian chief, "Bugaboo," set out to scalp Kaiser Bill. For the next year records by Arthur Fields were prominent features of the Victor list.

One of the best, undoubtedly, issued in September, was No. 18489, combining Irving Berlin's classic "Oh! How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning" (the best song written by anybody about a typical doughboy's "grousing" at army life) with "Oh, Frenchy." The page devoted to the record included an excellent photograph of Fields as a handsome young man, together with this write-up:

In the army the bugler shares the fate of the fat man, for nobody loves him. "Oh! How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning" is a breezy song by Irving Berlin, sung to perfection by Arthur Fields, and outlines a soldier's intention to murder the bugler—to "amputate his reveille and step upon it heavily." "Oh! Frenchy!" tells how Rosie went to France with an ambulance and fell in love with Jean. The clever words are by Sam Ehrlich and the music by Con Conrad.

Arthur Fields is a cheery singer, warranted to chase the blues a mile away on a hot day. (He) is well known, not only as a singer, but as a writer of popular songs, many of which have become household words with the general public. As soon as the war started, he was one of the first to place his gifts at the service of his country, and did great work helping the old 71st Regiment to fill its ranks. In this war, as in all others, the ancient power of music to draw soldiers to the colors has been vindicated beyond dispute, and much has been done in this way by such singers as Arthur Fields. In the two songs given here, he has happily caught the gay and venturesome spirit of our soldier boys. Though engaged upon serious business, they wisely refuse to take the work too seriously, and in their songs especially give rein to the high spirits and good humor so characteristically American.

Victor was astonishing late issuing "Good Morning, Mr. Zip-Zip-Zip," which Fields, as Buckley, had sung for the May Columbia supplement. Victor didn't get around to it until January, 1919, after the war had been over for two months. It was doubled with another belated war song, "When Tony Goes Over the Top," by Arthur's persistent coupling companion, Billy Murray. The Peerless Quartet again gave Fields harmonious reinforcement. Describing the record, Catalog Editor "Jim" Richardson remarked, in his characteristically graceful style: "Good Morning, Mr. Zip-Zip-Zip". . . is a typical soldier song, brisk and lively — sharp as a needle. Anti-tobacco-nists will appreciate the line, 'Ashes to ashes and dust to dust,' if the Camels don't get you the Fatima's must."

In April, Fields sang a clever song about the excitement caused by the return of overseas service men, "Johnny's In Town," this time without the Peerless but with Billy Murray rendering "My Barney Lies Over the Ocean (The Way He Lied to Me)" on the reverse. That same month he and Billy also were paired on what must have been one of the biggest selling popular records ever made up to then. Fields sang the irresistibly catchy "nut song," "Ja-Da," while Murray had one of the best of all the songs written about the imminence of prohibition, "The Alcoholic Blues."

A much later, Arthur was represented by perhaps the best Victor record he ever made, although "Oh! How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning" and "Ja-Da" could give it a run. This was "How Ya Gonna Keep 'Em Down on the Farm?" which I would nominate as the best comic song written about the problems caused by the return of soldiers to their normal ways of life, with Irving Berlin's "I've Got My Captain Working for Me Now" a close second. And who should turn up on the other side of "How Ya Gonna?" but Billy Murray

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 39)

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Transcription's, Armed Forces Radio Service Recordings & etc. By Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo & Ink Spots. Money no object.—Paul Adams, 30 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. d120061

RECORDS FOR SALE

Attention Record Collectors: Inaugurating auction sales. Rare and cut-out vocal records. Free lists. — C. Brown, 1375 East 18th St., Brooklyn 30, N. Y. au3825

WANTED: Cylinder records, operatic disk records. Best prices for new or mint records.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. jly6806

THOUSANDS of used records, all varieties. Send wants.—Perry's 3914 Van Buren, Culver City, California. s3042

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought. — E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122511

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: Collectors' items to just good "listening". Large, constantly changing stock. See for yourself! Write, or visit. We Buy Collections.—Record Collectors Service, 530 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. o68801

RARE VOCAL RECORDS: Items for the most discriminating collector. Interesting free lists sent upon request. Patti, de Lussan, Galski, Caruso, Sembrich, Bonci, etc. Available at prices not to be bettered elsewhere. Write:—Georg Pluck, Waterloo Village, Grass Lake, Michigan. s3426

VOCAL CLASSICAL RECORDS wanted. State price and condition. — Leon Stolzenberg, 4004 Lawrence St., Detroit 4, Michigan. jly1821

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. s3084

Al Jolson Collectors — Complete sound-track to the film—"Heart Of New York", recorded on discs.—ARG, Box 341, Cooper Station, N.Y.C., N.Y. au3825

Auction Sales: Rare and cut-out vocal (G. & T., Zonophone, Polydor) and instrumental records. Free lists. —Arthur May, 85 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn 26, N. Y. mhl28022

"If its been recorded—we have it."—Lewin Record Paradise, 5600 Hollywood Blvd., Los Angeles 28, Calif. jly3804

Operatic Collector's Attention: Drastic clearance; thousands of fine vocal records, classical and operatic. Priced 50 cents to $1.50 each. All originals. Free lists.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. jly3447

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. n6407

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs. — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. mhl24201

MUSIC BOX DISCS

Metal music box discs, 18½" Miras, $3.; 15½" Miras, $2.50. Also 12" $1.50; 9¼", $1; 6 13/16", 75c. Send for lists or tunes wanted. — Squires, 2328 Channing, Berkeley, Calif. jly1633

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Catalog 15c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. o124201

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list. —Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, California. s3863

MELODEONS FOR SALE

MELODEON. Rare double keyboard; beautiful rosewood. Also Harmonium. See April HOBBIES, p. 107. Both instruments refinished and in perfect playing condition.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Michigan. s3844

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

EDISON CYLINDERS, playing condition, 2 and 4 min., $25. 2 min., $20. Morning Glory horns with each machine. 2 min. records, 10c each. Amberol 20c, in lots of 25 each. Express collect. —Coppennoll's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, New York. au3259

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS.—Latest hits and old favorites, all 75c. Send for free list. Extra roll boxes, 4¼c. Also player material, parts, service.—Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Company, 222 South Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. d12211

MISCELLANEOUS MUSIC

WANTED: Edison, Columbia cylinder phonographs, records, catalogues, small horns. Catalogues. —Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. jly6215

TOY DISC PHONOGRAPHS WANTED. Hand powered or spring motor as Owens: (open works) Berliner; National Gram-O-phone; Zon-O-phone; Eldridge R. Johnson Talking Machine Company, models "A", "B", "C", "D". Also Monarch Series. State condition and price. —Aaron B. Mc Fall, 952 Pleasant St., Oak Park, Illinois. mhl20051

AUTOMATIC PIANOS. Selling entire collection. Choice pieces such as Seeburg flute piano with keyboard; Nelson-Wiggen piano-orchestration with 10 instruments; Western Electrics, Mills Violina-Virtuosos, etc. Also stock of parts for rebuilding and restoring. Write your wants.—J. D. Mitchell, Sebring, Florida. s3276

COLLECTION OF SONGS, ballads, verse, over 100,000 different. Very old. Many song folios and sheets, 1920's and 1930's. Old hymn books. Sheet music 1900-1938. 55,000 post cards, all kinds; old German Magazines, 52 copies DAS ECHO, Industriellen. Pub. in Berlin, 1899-1901, 130 copies Die Gartenlaube, Illustriertes Familienblatt, Pub. in Leipzig 1894-1901. Life magazine file, 1936 through 1940 and 1944 complete, other years incomplete. Some stamps.—L. H. Peevey, Rt. 1, Box 328, Creswell, Oregon. au36121

For Sale: Rare Piano excellent condition. Organ combination—one keyboard push-lever for change organ to piano. Over hundred years old. Rosewood case. Will send photo if interested. —Northwest Settlement Inc., Wisconsin Dells, Wis. s3215

MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina, Criterion, Mira, Monarch, New Century, Orphenion, Polyphon, Stella, Symphonion, Thorens. State size wanted. Lists. Send for Want List, offering premium prices for certain discs.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, New Jersey. s3426

MUSIC BOXES: The A. V. Bornand Collection at 139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y., is open to visitors Monday through Friday mornings during July, August & September, or by appointment. Pelham 8-1506. s3695

Wanted: Old music boxes, larger types, also items of the Old West.—George Trambitas, 3126 Elliot Ave. Seattle 1, Wash. je120291

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By MOSORIAK & HECKERT

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

$5.00 Postpaid — Insured

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

gloom. The greens and browns of the subject, and the once white and fleecy clouds all seem to be approaching a common grey.

Pigments embedded in a hardened mass of oil, that have changed their chemical composition and hence their colors, cannot now be returned to their original appearance as the artist saw them. No feasible "restoration" can bring back the beauty of the scene that every one who has viewed it remembers it, and as the painter undoubtedly portrayed it.

Contrasted with this are paintings, often of the same period, whose colors are also dulled, but for another reason, by varnishes and dirt. It has always been considered good practice to varnish paintings, after they have dried sufficiently. Varnishes of various kinds have been used for generations, to preserve as well as to improve the light reflecting properties of paintings. As time passes, such coatings become discolored and dirty, until finally the original brilliance of the painter's work is obscured by a dark brown film of dirty varnish.

Restoration usually includes the removal of such discolored varnishes, and replacement with fresh and cleaner coats. This is the sort of painting the collector would like to have, as the original freshness of the colors, if they have retained their brilliance, can be brought back by judicious use of cleaning agents.

Antiquity alone does not make a painting valuable. There are plenty of old paintings encountered here and there in homes, auction houses, antique shops and even museums, that have little to commend them save that they were painted many years ago and by some half-forgotten painter, who perhaps may even at one time have had a following.

But original paintings with that necessary combination of composition, colors and ideas, that sets the artist apart from just the painter, and in good condition, or sufficiently sound condition that they may be restored, are always desirable, and will continue to be valuable, regardless of how good or cheap printed reproductions may come to be.

Your Local Museum and Library are worthy of your whole-hearted support and encouragement

Check and double check and if they have not yet subscribed to HOBBIES, a gift subscription would make an ideal remembrance of the season.

Keep in mind that HOBBIES already has a large circulation among this group, so please check first.

HOBBIES

1006 S. Michigan, Chicago

CIRCUS HORSES

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 29)

ed commands of their trainer or the cues from his whip. With their arched necks and flashy trappings, few animals under the big top capture the admiration more than do these spirited beauties. The arched neck is due to the bearing-rein which draws down the head and keeps the animal under control. It does not hurt the horses, however. It maintains order and protects the horses themselves from one another when so many are working together.

A special attraction of any circus performance is the presentation of high school horsemanship. L'haute école is a precision act which brings to the highest perfection the intelligence of a horse and the teaching of man. A shifting of weight on the part of the rider, a slight touch of the reigns, or a touch of the heel gently on the horse's side will mean a certain command to a dancing horse. They can trot slowly with their knees almost touching their chin. They learn to walk in a light, springy fashion, and to canter in a slow, rolling motion. Many are taught two extra gaits known as the "slow gait" and the "rack." No dance step seems too difficult for them to master — the waltz, the jitterbug, the carioca, the rhumba, or the polka. In addition they do the Spanish walk, side walk, running walk, side trot, Spanish high trot, canter, side canter, single foot, and march.

Circus horses have more leisure now that snorting tractors and other machinery have taken over some of their chores of the past. Traffic increases have spelled an end to the great circus parades with the forty-horse teams. And the smell of gasoline and jet fuel may get even stronger over our land in the years ahead, but one thing is certain — the horse began the circus, and so long as there is a circus big top somewhere there will be circus horses performing under it.

"DISCHI FONOTIPIA"

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 24)

ors still do not realize. J. R. Bennett's introduction — all too brief — gives a glimpse of the Company's history and system of numbering. I wish he had treated this at much greater length. A list of the principal artists follows and then the main body of the work — the numerical listing of every record issued by Fonotipia from its inception in October, 1904, until its identity had become indistinguishably merged with Odeon in the late twenties.

The layout of this section makes it very easy to read. The original number of the record is given, followed by the artist and selection, by the matrix number when known, and occasionally by the corresponding Odeon number. All numbers are listed and in the few cases where the record is not known, the information is left to be added in later editions. No attempt has been made to indicate couplings or to give subsequent Odeon-Decca-Parlophone, etc., numbers as this would have been too confusing even if the information had been available.

This is the kind of book that a true collector cannot put down until he has read every page for before his eyes will pass a procession of the best representation of bel canto on records, including many of the rarest prizes in the record collecting world. Also, this is the first time that a complete listing of Fonotipias, both acoustical and electrical, is available under one cover. Heretofore no listing beyond 1909 existed. I can unreservedly recommend this book to every collector as an indispensable addition to his catalogue library and, am sure, it will greatly stimulate interest in one of the most worthwhile and rewarding fields of record collecting.

ARTHUR FIELDS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 28)

singing another clever prohibition dirge "How Are You Goin' to Wet Your Whistle?" Since Billy was a total abstainer, this and "The Alcoholic Blues" didn't represent his personal sentiments. Mr. Richardson's comments are worth quoting:

"How Ya Gonna Keep 'Em Down on the Farm (After They've Seen Paroo?)" is a conversation between old Reuben and his wife. It is a lively number and the contrast between farm life and Broadway is well brought out in the accompaniment with imitations of cows and chickens to emphasize the farm and some jazzing for Broadway. This popular number is by Sam M. Lewis, Joe Young and Walter Donaldson. As a companion Billy Murray asks another question that is also agitating many of us in "How Are You Goin' to Wet Your Whistle (When the Whole Darn World Goes Dry)?" He sings the song as few could sing it, and adds a merry interpolation of his own that nobody else could sing at all — to finish up with. The band enters into the spirit of the jest by playing a few bars of "Down Where the Wurzbarger Flows." The "whistle" that is to be wetted appears right at the start. This song is by Francis Byrne, Frank McIntyre and Percy Wenrich. The timely nature of these two numbers will appeal to those who like to feel they are getting the music they want when they want it. The returning soldier and a dry world have furnished topic for endless discussion, but few of these discussions are as "worth while" as the humorous remarks of Arthur Fields and Billy Murray, each past master at the art of revealing new and humorous aspects of familiar topics. Each has his own special way of being funny, too. So the two numbers are well contrasted in style, the one complementing the other.

And now that we have reached the period when the service men were returning home, this seems a good place to end the discussion of Arthur Fields' remarkable record as a recruiter, singer and writer of war songs. Although he gained popularity and profited financially by the war song vogue, it is nonetheless obvious that the military authorities owed him a real debt of gratitude for services rendered.

(To Be Continued)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Arthur Fields

Part Three

By JIM WALSH

IV

"Tone Tester" Fields Signs Up with Emerson

The April 19, 1919, issue of the Saturday Evening Post contained one of those Edison ads that reduced the advertising writers for other phonographs and record companies to helpless annoyance. The ad, which also appeared in the National Geographic and many other publications, was headed "Broadway Is Gay Again!" A photo taken in the Edison recording laboratories was reproduced with a heading that became something of a catch phrase, "It's You Arthur!" It showed Fields singing in direct comparison with a New Edison Diamond Disc phonograph to prove there was "no difference" between the Edison recording of his voice and his actual tones. There wasn't—as long as he kept his voice modulated to the phonograph volume level. The "tone test" was something that no other phonograph company could give.

Some of the reading matter of the advertisement is worth quoting for present day record collectors who have never heard — perhaps have not even heard of — an Edison tone test:

There are those who appear to believe that the Edison Recording Laboratories specialize on grand opera and classical music to the neglect of the songs of the day. Nothing could be farther from the truth. . . . The artists who sing the new songs and play the new dance music for the New Edison will testify that Mr. Edison's recording experts are as painstaking and exacting in recording the latest nonsense from "Tin Pan Alley" as they are in making a record of a grand opera aria. Recently, after repeated rehearsals, a celebrated singer of comic songs said disgustedly to his companion: "Edison certainly makes you earn your money. You'd think I was going to sing 'Celeste Aida' instead of a thing that nobody will remember the name of twelve months from now." (This sounds like something Billy Murray might have said.—J. W.)

. . . For the same reason that the New Edison brings to your home everything the ear can give you of the art of the world's great opera singers, it also puts the very breath of Broadway into its RE-CREATION of the Broadway song and dance hits. The illustration on the opposite page is from a photograph taken at the Edison Recording Laboratories on Fifth Avenue, New York City, as Arthur Fields was making the acid test of singing in direct comparison with the New Edison's Re-Creation of his voice. If you will close your eyes as you listen to the New Edison's Re-Creation of Mr. Fields' voice in some of the recent Broadway song hits a magic carpet will transport you to Longacre Square, and Fields' performance will be as entertaining to you as if you were sitting in a second row seat at the Palace Theatre.

Arthur Fields, the great vaudeville favorite, is a past master at putting the "punch" into popular songs. . . . The test of direct comparison is an Edison test. It is made by no other manufacturer. At the table (in the photo) are seated three experts, who pass on each Edison recording. In the group surrounding them are several popular Edison artists who happened to be at the Edison Recording Laboratories when this test was made. Among them are Collins and Harlan, world famed singing comedians; George Wilton Ballard, the popular ballad singer; Cesare Sodero, Director of Sodero's Band; and Eugene Jaudas, Leader of the Jaudas Society Orchestra. The verdict of this critical assemblage was expressed in the spontaneous ejaculation, "It's you, Arthur!" The New Edison has never failed, in similar comparisons, to bring forth a similar verdict.

I have already said I consider most of Arthur Fields' best records are Edisons. If I had to pick my favorite it probably would be "Ja-Da." The accompaniment is not so ingenious as on the Victor, but the Edison record's greater length allows leeway for the incidental "business," which was usually an attraction of Edison recordings. Fields sings the first verse and chorus in an irresistible rollicking manner. Then it is sung softly by a group of male voices, and Fields, turning to Billy Murray, says: "Kind of got you going, hey, Billy?" To which Billy replies: "It certainly has, I'm humming it all the time!" then leads the group in singing part of the refrain. Still later, Billy again takes the lead. The Edison recording laboratory seems to have operated on the principle of a fine stock company. No matter how famous an artist was in his own right, he would frequently be called on to sing in the chorus of some other performer's record. Thus Murray was often heard subordinating his own great talents to those of Fields.

Other fine Diamond Discs by Arthur Fields are "You'll Have to Put Him to Sleep With the Marseillaise and Wake Him Up With an Oa-La-La!" in which he displays his ability to sing very softly and sweetly in the final refrain an amusing "Stuttering song," "Oh Helen," in which a young man in love with a girl named Helen sounds as if he is using profanity in his fervent efforts to praise her; "All Those in Favor Say Aye," "Madelon," "Ragging the Chopsticks" and "Singapore." All are of the 1918-19 period.

Since he was recording for virtually all the other American record companies, I have often wondered why Arthur agreed to pose for that tone test photo, which could not have a hit with Edison's competitors. A lot of record buyers were surprised when another Saturday Evening Post ad, appeared a few months later. It contained pictures of Arthur Fields and his old "buddies," Irving and Jack Kaufman, signing exclusive Emerson contracts. They were to make solo and duet records, and when all three sang together were to be known as the Three Kaufields. Obviously, Emerson must have made an attractive offer to persuade three such popular free-lancers to give up working for any other record company.

Nevertheless, Arthur, Irving and Jack soon realized they had made a mistake. The recession which set in late in 1920 hit some of the phonograph companies hard. Many Victor dealers, unable to get adequate supplies of Victor records in 1917-18, had taken on the Emerson line, but Emerson discs were made of a material that didn't wear well and the recording could have been better. Business declined in 1920 and 1921, and when the trio's two-year contracts ran out they didn't renew, but returned to free-lancing.

V

Again a Free-Lance

Arthur Fields was back in the Victor list in August, 1921, with "Anna From Indiana," a catchy comic about a Hoosier farm girl so fat that "she hides the farm when she sits down." In December he was represented with a conventional type of love song, "Who'll Be the Next One to Cry Over You?" Aside from singing a few refrains for dance numbers he never afterwards made Victor records.

Edison recording studio, 1919. Arthur Fields sings in direct comparison with the new Edison. Edison officials, recording artists and members of the orchestra exclaim, "It's YOU, Arthur!"

Fields also made a number of new Columbia discs, but didn't regain his former standing as one of the company's most popular stars, although during the later years of his career he recorded extensively under various names for the 50 cent record made by Columbia which was sold bearing the Harmony, Diva and other labels. An unusual record, apparently never listed in the regular Columbia catalog, was his 1922 rendition on No. A3447, of "Hail, Chicago!" which had been chosen as "the official Chicago song" in a contest sponsored by the Chicago Herald-Examiner. Prince's Band played "Chicago," the second prize song, on the other side.

It was during this second free-lance period, shortly before and immediately after the introduction of electrical recording, that Arthur Fields began to pile up his remarkable total of records under different names — most of them made for the so-called "off-brands." He was a particularly prolific recorder for Grey Gull, makers of a cheap record which was also sold under a number of other labels, including Radiex Madison and National Music Lovers. On these labels he was known as "Vel Veteran," "Mr. X," William Lewis, George French and, occasionally, as Bob Thomas, although this name was usually reserved for Ernest Hare.

On Phantasie records, which were Lyrics under a different label, he was called Walter H. Dale. Nom de disques used on Emersons included Padric O'Brien, for Irish songs, and Donald Baker and Fred Stone. These names also were used for Regal and Medallion records, made by Emerson. On Harmony he was Jimmy Ryan, and Arthur Seelig. On Cameo-Oriole-Romeo, he was Charles Dale, Arthur Baldwin, Andy Britt and Harry Crane. I also have a Romeo record on which he sings "Hugs and Kisses for Two," with a woman I can't identify.

The artists' names are listed as "Gent and Wheeler." He likewise took part in Romeo records listed as by "The Hometownners" and "The Lumberjacks." I have seen only two Melva records, and know nothing about that brand, but one of them contains a solo by Fields, disguised as Jack Martin.

Some of Arthur's most interesting and unusual recording assignments came from the minor companies, such as Grey Gull. After Vernon Dalhart's 1924 Victor and Edison records of "The Wreck of the Southern Old 97" turned out to be sensational hits, Arthur recorded the number for Grey Gull, but with words credited to "Watters" that differ widely from the Dalhart versions, which had been copied from an Okeh record by a Virginia mountaineer, Henry Whitter. He also sang other hill-billy numbers for Grey Gull and was frequently called on to record old-time songs — both comic and sentimental — as well as Christian hymns. Some typical titles are: "The Last Rose of Summer," "Break the News to Mother," "A Bird in a Gilded Cage," "And Her Golden Hair Was Hanging Down Her Back," "Tell Mother I'll Be There," "When the Roll is Called Up Yonder" and "Throw Out the Life Line." He even sang the refrain of "My Old Kentucky Home" for a Hawaiian guitar duet by Franchini and Dettborn. Frequently, he did the refrains for Grey Gull dance records, as on the beautiful "Lane of Dreams," without receiving label credit. An excellent Grey Gull record is his rendition of "Down at the Old Boarding House," which might be construed as an indirect plea for racial tolerance written by him and Fred Hall.

When William Jennings Bryan died in 1925, Fields recorded for Paramount a typical hill-billy paean of praise for "The Great Commoner," "Bryan Believed in Heaven (That's Why He's in Heaven Tonight)" The death of the screen's "great lover" brought such songful tributes as "Rudolph Valentino (The Great Director Has Called You)" and "There's a New Star in Heaven Tonight."

In 1926 Arthur returned to the Edison ranks, after an absence of seven years. One of his first Diamond Discs of this later period was a brilliantly sung and spoken version of "My Dreams of the Big Parade," given with thrilling fervor. It was perhaps the type of serious number which Fields did best. He also recorded "Flaming Ruth," a tribute to Ruth Elder, the woman aviator who tried unsuccessfully to match Lindbergh's ocean-crossing feat.

A year later Edison began to issue records by "Arthur Fields and His Assassimators." Field sang in these and the dance music probably was played by B. A. Rolfe's Orchestra, or Dave Kaplan's. These continued until Edison quit the record business late in 1929. One of the best was "Goodbye, Broadway, Hello, Montreal," a jolly anti-prohibition effusion.

After electric recording was introduced in 1925, vocal refrains for dance numbers became more and more popular, and Arthur Fields and Irving Kaufman undoubtedly sang more of them than any other artists. Both Arthur and Irving believed they had the largest total. I shan't try to decide between them, but both must have sung several thousand.

VI

Song Writing and Radio

In the late 1920's, Arthur's association with Fred Hall caused him to pay more attention to song writing than he had done for a good many years, and they specialized for a time in comedy and hill-billy numbers. Their "Eleven More Months and Ten more Days" was a real hit in 1930. Under the name of the Piedmont Music Company, Fields and Hall published an album of country and Western songs for which the Edward B. Marks Music Corporation was the sole sales agent. It included "There's a Blue Sky Way Out Yonder," "Eleven More Months," "Our Home Town Mountain Band," "Why Do They Call Them the Funnies?" "Don't Believe It," "Hang It in the Hen House," "You Can't Win," "When I Went Around With Mary," "I Laughed So Hard I Nearly Died," "I Don't Want to Get Married," and "When I Pumped the Organ for the Old Village Choir."

A composition by Billy Rose and Fields and Hall, which deserves special attention is "I Got a Code in My Doze," perhaps the only really funny song ever written about that unfunniest of afflictions, the common cold. As sung in a "little girl" voice on a Victor record by Rosetta Duncan, of the famous Duncan Sisters, with accompaniment by her sister Vivian, it deserves to rate as a comedy classic. Arthur and Fred also wrote material for other artists, including a series of "medicine show" and "minstrel" records for Okeh. For Harmony they recorded songs about Amos 'n' Andy and Hank Simmons' Show Boat. They sang "Piccolo Pete," and other comedy numbers for Okeh.

The great depression of 1929 practically destroyed the record business for the next half dozen years, although Victor, Columbia, Brunswick and a few small companies limped along, doing about five per cent of the business they had formerly enjoyed. Arthur Fields' virtual disappearance as a recording artist, like that of many another once well established singer, dates from this time. However, he and Hall did well, writing songs, appearing on radio, and recording transcriptions. I still recall their programs of the early 1930's, in which they were assisted by a girl named, if I remember right, Ann Page. In memory, I can hear Miss Page's ecstatic squeals to the sardonic Hall: "Oh, Freddy, you're so masterful!" The boys had a theme song which ended something like:

Don't you think our voices are marvelous? . . .

If you do you're off your nut!
(CONTINUED ON PAGE 33)

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Transcription's, Armed Forces Radio Service Recordings & etc. By Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo & Ink Spots. Money no object.—Paul Adams, 30 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. d120061

RECORDS FOR SALE

Attention Record Collectors: Inaugurating auction sales. Rare and out-out vocal records. Free lists. — C. Brown, 1375 East 18th St., Brooklyn 30, N. Y. au3825

THOUSANDS of used records, all varieties. Send wants.—Perry's 3914 Van Buren, Culver City, California. s3042

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought. — E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122511

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: Collectors' items to just good "listening". Large, constantly changing stock. See for yourself! Write, or visit. We Buy Collections. — Record Collectors Service, 530 East 83th St., New York 28, N. Y. o63801

RARE VOCAL RECORDS: Items for the most discriminating collector. Interesting free lists sent upon request. Patti, de Lussan, Gadske, Caruso, Sembrich, Bonci, etc. Available at prices not to be bettered elsewhere. Write:—Georg Pluck, Waterloo Village, Grass Lake, Michigan. s3426

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. s3084

Al Jolson Collectors — Complete sound-track to the film—"Heart Of New York", recorded on discs.—ARG, Box 341, Cooper Station, N.Y.C., N.Y. au3825

RECORDS: Vocal Classics, new and old, Victor, red, blue, black, Heritage, Columbia, TRI-COLOR, blue, green, $1.00 each — August only.—Toby's, 2426 Jackson, Kansas City, Mo. au1002

Auction Sales: Rare and cut-out vocal (G. & T., Zonophone, Polydor) and instrumental records. Free lists. —Arthur May, 85 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn 26, N. Y. mh128022

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. n6407

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs. — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. mh124201

Fifty years of popular vocal records; Monarch, Victor, Grand Prize, Columbia and many others. Every Pioneer Recording Artist represented in fine condition at the astounding price of 50 cents each. Send for free "Pops" lists.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. o32301

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, cylinder records, catalogs, small horns, recorders, reproducers and old flat records over 40 years old. Bought, sold and exchanged. —A. Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. ja6698

BOOKS FOR SALE

MAN AND MASK, Chaliapin; Souvenirs, Georgette Le Blanc Maeterlinck; Men, Women, Tenors, Alda; Jenny Lind, Mrs. Raymond Maude (daughter); Edouard Remenyi, Violinist, Struggles and Victories, Yvette Guilbert; Melodies and Memories, Melba; Melba, Colson; Mapleson Memoirs, 2 Vol.; Anna's of Covent Garden Theatre, 2 Vol.; Sims Reeves, Pearce; Marie Malibran, Pougin.—G. O. Moran, Lodi, Wisconsin. au1234

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. d128402

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Catalog 15c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. o124201

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list. —Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, California. s3863

MELODEONS FOR SALE

MELODEON. Rare double keyboard; beautiful rosewood. Also Harmonium. See April HOBBIES, p. 107. Both instruments refinished and in perfect playing condition.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Michigan. s3844

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

EDISON CYLINDERS, playing condition, 2 and 4 min., $25. 2 min., $20. Morning Glory horns with each machine. 2 min. records, 10c each. Amberol 20c, in lots of 25 each. Express collect. —Coppernoll's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, New York. au3259

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS.—Latest hits and old favorites, all 75c. Send for free list. Extra roll boxes, 4 1/2c. Also player material, parts, service.—Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Company, 222 South Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. d122112

MISCELLANEOUS MUSIC

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts. Music boxes, hand roller organs, as Celestina and Gem. Roller and rolls. Private collector.—Newmann Miller, 436 West Colorado Blvd., Glendale 4, Calif. o3844

TOY DISC PHONOGRAPHS WANTED. Hand powered or spring motor as Owens; (open works) Berliner; National Gram-O-phone; Zon-O-phone; Eldridge R. Johnson Talking Machine Company, models "A", "B", "C", "D". Also Monarch Series. State condition and price. —Aaron B. Mc Fall, 952 Pleasant St., Oak Park, Illinois. mh120052

AUTOMATIC PIANOS. Selling entire collection. Choice pieces such as Seeburg flute piano with keyboard; Nelson-Wiggen piano-orchestration with 10 instruments; Western Electrics, Mills Violina-Virtuosos, etc. Also stock of parts for rebuilding and restoring. Write your wants.—J. D. Mitchell, Sebring, Florida. s3276

COLLECTION OF SONGS, ballads, verse, over 100,000 different. Very old. Many song folios and sheets, 1920's and 1930's. Old hymn books. Sheet music 1900-1938. 55,000 post cards, all kinds; old German Magazines, 52 copies DAS ECHO, Industrielles. Pub. in Berlin, 1899-1901, 130 copies Die Gartenlaube, Illustriertes Familienblatt, Pub. in Leipzig 1894-1901. Life magazine file, 1936 through 1940 and 1944 complete, other years incomplete. Some stamps.—L. H. Peevey, Rt. 1, Box 328, Creswell, Oregon. au36121

For Sale: Rare Piano excellent condition. Organ combination—one keyboard push-lever for change organ to piano. Over hundred years old. Rosewood case. Will send photo if interested. —Northwest Settlement Inc., Wisconsin Dells, Wis. s3215

REGINA, 18x21", 13" high, 15 metal discs, 15 1/2" on original cabinet, 34" high, 47" overall, $150. Edison cylinder phonograph, mahogany cabinet type, 3 drawers for records, $30. Edison cylinder with morning g. horn & stand, $30. Edison cylinder with small horn, 5" at bell, $20. Edison cylinder built in horn, $15. Another extra nice cond., $20. Edison with Tuba morning glory horn, $40. Edison discs, built in horn with 20 disc records, nice condition, $11.50.—Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. au1466

MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina, Criterion, Mira, Monarch, New Century, Orphenion, Polyphon, Stella, Symphonion, Thorens. State size wanted. Lists. Send for Want List, offering premium prices for certain discs.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, New Jersey. s3426

MUSIC BOXES: The A. V. Bornand Collection at 139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y., is open to visitors Monday through Friday mornings during July, August & September, or by appointment. Pelham 8-1506. s3696

Wanted: Old music boxes, larger types, also items of the Old West.—George Trambitas, 3126 Elliot Ave. Seattle 1, Wash. je120291

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.

(Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

legend, the carp swims up the Yellow River till it reaches the Dragon Gate Falls. It then jumps the falls and turning into a dragon upon reaching the top of the falls is caught up in a cloud and carried off to the skies.

The shops in Seoul were not fancy, but I was anxious to find what treasures they held. In one shop I found a large fifteen-pound bowl gong. When struck, this gong would continue to vibrate for several minutes. Later I discovered that originally it was made for a temple in Japan. As I continued my search I found more and more bells that I wanted. The news traveled fast. The Korean merchants would meet me at their doors with bells in their hands. Children would run up with small animal bells to sell to me. I became so loaded down with bells that I despaired of being able to carry them all, so I hired a Korean man with a wooden "A-Frame" attached to his back. Then I inverted the bowl gong and set it on his "A-Frame" and piled it to the top with the other bells. I thought to myself, "He looks like a Bell Collector's Santa Claus." On this trip I acquired many items which I consider priceless. Three of the bells have snake-like characters in what is apparently a forgotten script. I could find neither Japanese, Chinese, Korean nor Indian who could translate it. They were also of interesting shape. All three have handles with a ring at the top. One is an open mouthed bell, while the other two were closed, with loose jinglets on the inside. One was barrel shaped, about the size of a short water glass, and the other was cubic. An interesting feature was that the latter two stood on three short pegs. There was evidence that the metal of these bells contained gold because in the smelting this metal had not been perfectly amalgamated, and had left gold-like streaks in the bell.

Another important bell which I bought is called the Mokugyo, (Wooden Fish). It is a roundish, hollow wooden instrument about the size of a human head. It has a few scale-like designs carved on it, so it symbolizes a fish. Its origin is described in the legend that Buddha had a very rude and stubborn disciple who was punished by being born a fish in his next life. In addition to living in the sea he was plagued by having a large tree growing from his back. Every time there was a storm at sea, the tree was tossed about and he was in great pain. As penance for his misconduct in his first life, the fish offered the tree to be used as Buddha saw fit. So this wooden bell was fashioned out of it. It is still struck with a stick at every service by way of proving the disciple's repentance. In my collection I have such "Wooden Fish" made by Chinese, Japanese and Korean Craftsmen. Some have as a handle the fish biting its own tail, possibly a symbol of eternity. On others, the handle consists of the heads of two open-mouthed dragons, struggling for the possession of the Sacred Jewel.

I found one bell treasure in Seoul, whose true value I did not learn until I returned to this country. It was a deeply scalloped Lotus bell. It is inscribed "Lo-Lang," which was a Chinese Colony founded in 108 B. C. on the southern banks of the Taitong River in North Korea. The colony flourished several centuries and then passed out of existence. The bell is an hexagonal, conventionalized lotus, and is green with the natural patina of great age. In 1921 Japanese archaeologists started excavating the ancient tombs of Lo-Lang which lay across the river from Pyongyang, the present North Korean Capital. Their findings provided the modern world with its first accurate knowledge of the structure and contents of Han Dynasty tombs. A good deal of their contents went to the Seoul Museum, which was later repeatedly looted whenever the city changed hands during the bitter conflict. This bell may be one of those museum pieces and a relic of this ancient Chinese colony.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

BELLS WANTED

WANTED: Bells.—Mrs. Tilden Patton, Lexington, Illinois. d12407

UNUSUAL COMMEMORATIVE Liberty Bells wanted. Send complete description and price. — Box SPL, HOBBIES Magazine, 1006 S. Michigan, Chicago 5, Illinois. tfx

FOR SALE

BELLS: Iron farm bell complete, $12; three without hangers, $6 each; 10 brass hand bells, assorted sizes, one dated 1878, $30.—Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. au1802

Travel Search for Bells

By A. C. Meyer — $2.50

Published by

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING CORPORATION

1006 So. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois

A story about the Meyer's personal search for bells, a down-to-earth summary of a fascinating hobby.

or Europe, but there were whispers that union members were taking part in "sneak sessions" of recording. Records appearing under the Hit label were a particular cause of controversy.

One of these, combining "Der Fuehrer's Face" and "Gee, But It's Great to Meet a Friend from Your Home Town" was represented as being by Arthur Fields. Since it was understood that only assumed names were being used on Hit records, an inquiry at once arose as to why the company had given a supposedly disguised artist the name of one of the most famous former record makers. The Billboard and Variety quoted Fields as saying he didn't make the record and as threatening suit against the manufacturer. Whether there were any further developments I don't know. I have the record, and "Der Fuehrer's Face" doesn't sound like Arthur to me, but the other side does. It could have been made by Fields years before for some other company and the master obtained for use on the Hit recording. The strike ended, and the incident was forgotten.

And so ends the story of Arthur Fields' recording career. During the last decade of his life he was more and more preoccupied with writing religious music, although the revival of "The Aha Daba Honeymoon" in a movie was very welcome, and at the time of his death he was anticipating a similar revival of his and Walter Donovan's ditty about the love life of frogs, "Gila Gala Galoo." Then the March 29th fire in the Littlefield Convalescent Home at Largo, Florida, brought to a tragic finale the long and colorful career of a fine performer and a lovable gentleman. Mercifully, it also relieved poor Arthur of an indefinite period of future suffering.

I have done my best to pay tribute in these articles to the accomplishments of a friend whom I knew only by correspondence. As I have previously said, I wish Arthur Fields could have lived to read them and give them his approval. Failing that, I do hope they will be a source of pleasure to Selma, his sadly stricken widow.

THE END.

ARTHUR FIELDS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 28)

Sometime in the early 1930's, Fields and Hall made a spoken Brunswick record which I believe was called, "Hello, Artie; Hello, Freddy!" But that was in a period when records weren't selling, and this one was no exception.

The remainder of Arthur Fields' career has been fairly well covered in the first installment. However, one interesting thing remains to be told having to do with his recorded music associations. During the second World War the American Federation of Musicians called a strike against the record companies. Union musicians were forbidden to play for "platters," but records continued to be turned out. Some were said to have been sung or played in Mexico

Committee Appointment

The following committees for the current season of the Musical Box Hobbyists Organization were announced recently by Lloyd G. Kelley, President. Below are the chairmen of these committees:

Ways and Means Committee: Glenn P. Heckert, Massillon, O.; Publicity: Mrs. Ruth Bornand, Pelham, N. Y.; Fair Practice: Perry Ghare, Indianapolis, Ind., and Committee on By-Laws, U. B. Lust, Fremont, O.

Among the fifteen new members welcomed for the year, is the firm of Baud-Freres, of Ste. Croix, Switzerland, the last remaining music box firm in Europe.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Frank Crumit

Part One

By JIM WALSH

A Detroitier informs me she was anxious to get a recording of Frank Crumit singing "Abdul Abulbul Amir." Not only was she unable to get the record, but in the music shops she visited they told her they had never heard of Frank Crumit. The ignorance of many small shop owners as to their business is depressing. No wonder there are so many failures in small business enterprises. Frank Crumit, who died about ten years ago, was one of the best known recording artists in the country. Also a well-known radio star in partnership with his beautiful and talented matrimonial mate, Julia Sanderson.

When the foregoing paragraph appeared in E. V. Durling's column, "Life With Salt on the Side," earlier this year in the New York Journal American, it carried me back in memory to the afternoon of Tuesday, September 7, 1943. I was then a reporter for the Roanoke World-News and had taken Monday (as it was Labor Day) as my day off. Among other things I had enjoyed a radio program by my favorite duet team, Julia Sanderson and Frank Crumit, which ended with their singing "It's So Peaceful in the Country."

On Tuesday afternoon, when the first edition came off the presses, I was turning through it when I came to a headline, "Frank Crumit, Radio Star, Dies." I stared, uncomprehendingly and unbelievably, just as I was to do almost ten years later when the teletype at radio station WSLs coldly and unemotionally brought the news that Arthur Fields had been burned to death in the fire that destroyed the Littlefield Convalescent Home at Largo, Florida.

Frank Crumit dead! What sort of foolishness was this? Why, only a few days before, I had written my friend Frank a letter asking for some information and, knowing his habit of replying promptly, was expecting an answer almost any day! Not only that, but I had heard him, in obviously good health and spirits, singing on his radio program just the afternoon before! There must be something wrong. Either my eyes were tricking me or the Associated Press had made a mistake. Frank Crumit, in his early fifties, was too vital and alert, too full of the zest of living, to be dead!

But the "story," necessarily brief for the first edition, was true. It read:

NEW YORK (AP)—Frank Crumit, radio entertainer, composer, and former vaudeville star, died suddenly of a heart attack in his hotel apartment early today.

His wife, known in the entertainment world as Julia Sanderson, was at his bedside.

Crumit shared his radio programs with his wife and the two were sometimes called "the ideal couple of the air."

He had lunched yesterday with several friends at the Lambs Club and appeared in good health. He was a former Shepherd of the club, a theatrical organization.

Crumit and his wife appeared on two radio programs, one a five-day feature broadcast in the afternoon, and the other an evening show, titled "The Battle of the Sexes."

The unexpected news of Frank's death was so shocking, especially in view of the warm friendship we had enjoyed through correspondence for almost a decade, that I finished my day's work deeply depressed and in a condition that could have developed into hysteria if a newspaperman's busy life had permitted excess emotion. The most poignant touch came when I reached home that afternoon, and my poor mother, who was in bad health and fated to die only a little more than three years later, met me at the front door. She was crying bitterly.

"Son," she said, "have you heard anything sad today?"

She had learned of Frank's death from the radio and had been crying ever since.

Another tug at the heartstrings came the following afternoon when I returned home to find one of Frank's familiar letters waiting for me. I shall have more to say later concerning that typically genial and kindly missive, which quite possibly was the last letter he ever wrote. It

A typical broadcasting pose of "The Singing Sweethearts," Julia Sanderson and Frank Crumit.

APPROVAL FROM JULIA SANDERSON

"Dear Jim Walsh: I read the enclosed through my tears, and think it is just grand! You have accurately presented the sequences in Frank's life, all so tenderly expressed. He and I are very grateful. . .

"I have a large collection of Frank's records and would like the Phi Delta Theta Library . . . to have them when I go. Somehow at this time, I cannot bear to part with them. I surely appreciate Mr. McFall's interest in collecting them, and I wish I had duplicates. So many radio stations have asked for them.

"Again my thanks, dear Jim Walsh. All good wishes for you. Very sincerely, Julia."

was postmarked in the late afternoon, only a few hours before his sudden death in the early morning.

During the days that followed I gave two "Frank Crumit Memorial Programs" from Station WDBJ in Roanoke, where my "Walsh's Wax Works" then originated, and sent copies of the scripts to his wife, Julia. She wrote me that she read them through her "flowing tears." I also received many clippings from Frank's admirers of newspaper articles relating the details of his career and the circumstances of his death.

Bearing these things in mind, I "saw red" when I came across the Detroit woman's lament that she had been unable to buy Crumit records, and—to make it worse—had encountered only stupid, uninformed persons who smugly said they had never even heard of him. I have good reason to know there are still innumerable admirers of Frank Crumit throughout the nation. None of his recordings are still listed in the Victor and Decca catalogs, but in England, where memory seems to be longer and affection toward an artist more enduring, the Gramophone Company still offers a number.

Incidentally, Frank Crumit was distinctive among American comedians in that he became through his records one of the most popular comedians the British Isles ever knew—apparently without any personal appearances abroad—and even after his recording career with Victor ended made a number of discs especially for sale by "His Master's Voice."

So, as I say, I saw red when I chanced to read what the Detroit woman had written to Durling and was strengthened in a determination I had already formed to write a HOBBIES series to begin in this September issue as a memorial tribute, a decade after his passing, to a fine artist and a lovable man. The tribute is all the more appropriate at this time of year because Frank not only died in September but was born on September 26, 1889. His father's name also was Frank, and his mother died when he was about four years of age.

II An Obituary Notice

One of the most comprehensive and informative death notices to come to my attention appeared in the New York Herald Tribune. It combines biographical detail with some details of Crumit's personality and is therefore worth quoting:

Frank Crumit, who with his wife, Julia Sanderson, formed one of America's best loved musical comedy and radio teams, died yesterday morning after a heart attack in his apartment at the Hotel Gotham, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-Fifth Street. . . Miss Sanderson was with the actor when he died. They first met in 1921, when they appeared together in the musical comedy, "Tangierine."

Mr. Crumit was born in Jackson, Ohio. Although he made his first appearance on the stage at the age of five, when he took part in an amateur minstrel show, he did not begin life as an actor, but as an engineer. It was not until many years after his graduation from Ohio State University, where he studied electrical engineering that he decided to go into vaudeville.

Wrote Own Songs

Once he had decided on a stage career it wasn't long before he had developed ukulele playing into a fine art. Meanwhile he was writing some of his own songs and his genial personality was winning him many friends. His act was informal. He would stroll onto the stage, order the orchestra out of the pit, pull a chair up to the footlights and sing to his own ukulele accompaniment.

It was a happy act and one that soon came to the attention of musical comedy entrepreneurs. He left vaudeville to play the leading role in "Betty, Be Good," and, after two seasons, joined Miss Sanderson's company in "Tangierine," which opened its New York run at the Casino Theatre in the summer of 1921.

It was for this show that Mr. Crumit wrote "Sweet Lady," which he strummed and sang to Miss Sanderson. The song was one of Mr. Crumit's most nostalgic numbers and eleven years after it was first heard on Broadway, Mr. Crumit estimated that he and his wife had sung the song for stage and radio audiences more than 16,000 times.

Subsequently, Mr. Crumit, with his songs and friendly patter, and Miss Sanderson, with her tinkling laugh, played together in many musicals. They took "No, No, Nanette," "Queen High" and "Oh Kay," on the road. They were married in 1927 and after "Oh, Kay" closed its run, Mr. Crumit and Miss Sanderson decided to retire from show business. They settled down at Dunrovin, their home at Longmeadow, Springfield, Mass., but they were not to have the rest they planned. In 1928 they began their appearances together in radio.

The public must have sensed something of the by-play which went on in the studio where Miss Sanderson and Mr. Crumit amused themselves by making faces at each other before the microphone, for the success of their program was immediate. They became the "Singing Sweethearts" of the air.

4,000,000 Records Sold

Mr. Crumit's versions of the songs, "The Gay Caballero" and "Abdul Abulbul Amir," did as much as anything else to make him famous and his recordings of those songs have sold more than 4,000,000 records.

Mr. Crumit was a former Shepherd of the Lambs. Funeral services will be tomorrow in Springfield, Mass. Burial will be in Hillcrest Mausoleum in Springfield. Friends of Mr. Crumit in New York will participate in memorial services at 2 p. m. tomorrow in the theater of the Lambs Clubhouse, 130 West Forty-fourth Street. The Rev. Randolph

Ray, rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, will preside.

Before going on to quote more biographical sketches, I should like to mention a few minor things. Mr. Aaron B. McFall, of Oak Park, Ill., a long-time admirer and fraternity brother of Frank's, tells me the singer's full name was Frank Poore Crumit. (It was at Mr. McFall's earnest request more than a year ago that I promised to pay this memorial tribute to Frank.) The statement that it was "many years" after his graduation before Crumit went into vaudeville is incorrect. And somewhere in this series I shall quote Frank's own account of how he came to write "Sweet Lady."

III What the New York Times Said

The New York Times also published an excellent obituary notice, from which I shall quote, omitting matter that duplicates the information already copied from the Herald Tribune:

Frank Crumit. . . died of a heart attack at 4 a. m. yesterday. . . Mr. Crumit and his wife, Julia Sanderson, were known on the radio to millions. . . Miss Sanderson. . . said Mr. Crumit had not complained of being ill. . .

Mr. Crumit, son of a Jackson, Ohio banker. . . at the age of five. . . had appeared a number of times in home-talent minstrels, and a year or so later, added to his experience as a motion-picture show entertainer in other Ohio cities. He attended high school, then Culver Military Academy, and the University of Ohio. From the latter he was graduated in electrical engineering, but never practiced.

The love of the stage was too strong and almost immediately—aged 20 or 21 (he) went into vaudeville. Except for a short period of retirement. . . following his marriage to Miss Sanderson, he had been on the stage and in radio ever since 1910. He became head of the Lambs in 1935.

Few stage or radio performers had a more winning style or personality. With his ukulele, in the old vaudeville days, he liked to stroll on stage, sit down, order the orchestra to retire backstage and "join the pinochle game." He would then converse informally with the audience and sing the songs that made him famous. . . Many were of his own composition. His repertoire, it is said, included nearly 10,000 songs.

His recordings sold in the millions. . . He began recording in 1923 with an old friend, Frank Banta, at the piano. Six months later Jack Shilkret and orchestra took over the job. At last Monday's broadcast Mr. Banta was again at the piano for the singer. His last song was "It's So Peaceful in the Country."

Miss Sanderson, so the tale goes, walked out of a stage rehearsal of "Tangierine" in 1922 when she learned Mr. Crumit was to be the leading man. She came back, however, and thereafter the couple appeared in numerous stage productions. . . On the closing day of "Oh Kay" in 1927 they were married. . .

Mr. Crumit and Miss Sanderson originated the "Battle of the Sexes" over the Columbia network from WABC in 1930 and in 1938 the quiz went to the National Broadcasting Company through WEAU, where it was a feature until last July. Following a brief lay-off the pair began the two current series at WABC.

Mr. Crumit seemed to have the unusual ability of picking a song that "would go over." He rarely was mistaken. One single melody ("The Gay Caballero"), strummed on guitar or ukulele in his inimitable style, made him famous almost overnight. . .

The New York Times article also calls for a note or two. Crumit did not begin his recording career in 1923, although his first Victor record may have been made then. He started recording for Columbia in 1920. Jack Shilkret's Orchestra may have provided the accompaniment for some of his records, since Shilkret's group played for Victor and Jack conducted the orchestra heard on many of Frank and Julia's radio programs. However, it's more likely the Victor accompaniments were by Jack Shilkret's brother, Nat, then in charge of Victor popular recording.

IV An Ohio Appraisal

Many columnists commented on Crumit's death. Ed Sullivan remarked, in the New York Daily News: "Too bad Frank Crumit died before he heard the great news of Italy's unconditional surrender." (This, of course, was written while World War II was in progress and the end not in sight.) In the Daily Mirror, Nick Kenny said: "Radio fans who smiled last Saturday night when Frank Crumit tossed his cheerful 'See you next Saturday night' into the mike were shocked by the sudden passing of the beloved balladeer of stage and studio. That Great Sponsor Up There must have grown weary of earthly cares and called for radio's merry minstrel."

One of the most interesting appraisals of Crumit as a man and a performer appeared in an Ohio newspaper, the Cleveland News, for Thursday, September 9. Headed "Show Time" and written by Peter Bellamy, it read:

The untimely death Tuesday of Frank Crumit, Ohio born singer, composer, musical comedy star and radio entertainer, brought back to us a flood of youthful recollections of this completely charming and lovable man.

Crumit, of course, was the husband of Julia Sanderson, our cousin, and we can still remember the excitement which came to us with the news that Cousin Julia and Frank were coming to town in another show. Their arrival came under the heading of WONDERFUL events.

Frank Crumit could win the heart of a child or an adult in 30 seconds flat. In dealing with children, he had the rare and wonderful gift of making himself just as young as they. He didn't have an ounce of affectation, artificiality or condescension in him.

The adage that you can take the boy out of the country, but you can't take the country out of the boy, applied to him. Born and raised in Jackson County, he always retained the warm, boyish, unspoiled manner and neighborly friendliness one associates with rural communities.

He could sing merry songs and tell funny stories by the hour. If you were a boy, he could show you how to throw a baseball. If you were an adult, he could give you a lacing at golf. Grantland Rice said he played the best game of golf of any actor alive.

A big fellow, Crumit played football and baseball at Ohio State. On one of our early birthdays he gave us a football and then took us out in the street to show us just how to boot it. He made children feel as though his attentions to them were more important than his success in the theater.

Remarkable Career

He and Julia Sanderson had a remarkable career together. Just when the musical comedy was fading and their days on the stage appeared numbered, they branched into radio. Until Tuesday they had been broadcasting 14 years or longer than any team with the possible exception of Amos and Andy. There was no harsh jazzy jingle in Frank's musical soul. He loved to sing nostalgic tunes like "The Parlor is a Pleasant Place to Sit In Sunday Night" and "Grandfather's Clock" and gay jingles like "The Preacher and the Bear." He was widely known as composer of the "Buckeye Battle Cry," an Ohio State football song.

He and Cousin Julie appealed to those who like home entertainment devoid of flipness, cheap sophistication and vulgarity. Their audiences were mainly composed of sentimental, gentle people of whom there are still happily quite a number.

Their married life was as sweet as the songs they sang. Walter Winchell recently wrote that they had gone to the movies together every night of their 16 years of marriage. This may be a slight exaggeration, but it was indicative of the devotion they had for each other.

Frank carried his kindly personality into his professional life. We recall some years ago when he took Fred Allen's place on a summer radio program. There was an amateur contest connected with the show and Frank always felt bad that some of the contestants got the gong. He truly wanted them all to be good and win prizes.

In view of Frank's lifelong interest in sports, it is worth noting that several Ohio papers mentioned that his sister Mary, who died in 1939, was the first wife of George M. Trautman, now president of the minor leagues' organization, the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues. One paper mentions his also writing "Round On the Ends, Hi in the Middle" for Ohio University, where he became a member of the Ohio Gamma Chapter of Phi Delta Theta Fraternity. A Columbus paper said: "The Crumit-Sanderson team's first joint commercial program was in 1929 with Ted Husing and Leonard Joy's Orchestra. A recent radio poll showed they had a weekly audience of 15,000,000. Frank Crumit ranked among the leaders in popularity of his recordings. 'The Sun Goes Down On Ohio' was among his most recent compositions."

V Associated Press Feature

Since I'm trying to capture, if rather haphazardly, as much as I can of the warmly human side of Frank Crumit's personality (and, for that matter, the appealingly sweet and feminine nature of his beloved Julia), I shall quote a few paragraphs of an Associated Press feature story by Sigrid Arne, which appeared just after Crumit's death:

Frank Crumit had fun any day. Labor Day was more of the same. He strolled to the Players Club (this should be Lambs—J. W.) and for some tall tale telling with cronies of the theater.

At 3 p. m. he and his wife, Julia Sanderson (holding hands as they always did) sang and wise-cracked into the microphone for their regular five-a-week program. They trailed out through the studio, still humming and holding hands, and across town, a few blocks, to their home at the Hotel Gotham. In the early morning hours Crumit died of heart failure.

It's uncertain what will happen to their "Singing Sweethearts" program. They had earned that title. Crumit's sudden death, just before his 54th birthday, has been a severe shock to Miss Sanderson. But their first absence from the air in many years was to be filled by an old friend from their theatrical days, Irene Beazley, who planned to sing "Sweet Lady," a song Crumit wrote for his wife.

Crumit was known for singing the old favorites. But he never lost his ability to pick winners. He and Miss Sanderson introduced "Deep in the Heart of Texas" and "Jingle Jangle Jingle."

An interesting item from a September, 1943, issue of The Billboard concerns Crumit's song, "The Buckeye Battle Cry," which he wrote for Ohio State University and recorded for Victor, although for reasons to be explained later it is probably his least known Victor disc:

Frank Crumit, stage and radio star who died last week, wrote a song, "The Buckeye Battle Cry," that will endure as long as Ohio State has a football team. This information appears in the Chicago Daily News.

Crumit never went to Ohio State and never intended to write a marching song for the Buckeyes. He attended Ohio University, a smaller and older school at Athens, in the southeastern part of the state, where he played on the line. About 20 years ago he set out to write a song for his alma mater. It so happened that Crumit's brother-in-law, George (Red) Trautman, was assistant director of athletics at Ohio State, and the Buckeyes were seeking a new song to go along with their new stadium. So Trautman persuaded Frank to write an Ohio State song. "The Buckeye Battle Cry" was the result and it quickly won a place among football's immortal songs, along with Notre Dame's "Victory March," "On Wisconsin" and Michigan's "Victory." For years Crumit arranged his stage or radio engagements so that he could attend Ohio-Michigan games and hear his song played by the band he liked best.

In going through a scrapbook in which I had pasted items concerning Crumit's death, I find this interesting paragraph in a Cleveland Press article which, perhaps carelessly and certainly incorrectly, gave his age as 64: "The son of a banker, he was slated for the medical field to follow in the footsteps of his grandfather, but when he entered Ohio University . . . and had his first view of a dissecting room he decided he wasn't fitted for medicine."

VI Julia Returns to Radio

The Roanoke Times several weeks later carried an item headed: "Radio Star To Return To Air—Julia Sanderson to Have New Show on Dec. 2." The news of Julia's return to the air was greeted with rejoicing by my mother, who was especially pleased because December 2 was her birthday. She cherished an autographed photo, which I still have, of Julia, and always referred to her as "The Queen." The Times article said in part:

Julia Sanderson, one of the best loved radio performers, stars in a new daytime coast-to-coast Mutual network series—her first air show since the death of her husband and co-star, Frank Crumit—Thursday, December 2, from 1:30 to 2 p. m. The program, entitled "Let's Be Charming," will be heard over WLSL. Appearing with Julia will be veteran emcee Pat Barnes, the piano-organ team of Jack Shilkret and Johnny Gart, and a rhythmic trio featuring singers Guy Bonham, Wamp Carlson and Dwight Latham.

"Let's Be Charming" will provide welcome relief to daytime listeners from the routine radio fare usually heard. A highlight of the weekly show will be helpful hints on how women listeners can be more charming. . . . Since Julia has retained all the charm and beauty that has made her a star for more than two decades, she is a likely candidate for the chore of helping others to become more attractive.

But, although Julia bravely tried to overcome the near-heartbreak that Frank's death had brought her, it was obvious that without him she had no real enthusiasm for continuing her career. She did not remain many months in radio, but returned to "Dunrovin," with her mother as her inseparable companion. During the last year or so she has been further saddened by the loss of her mother, who was Mrs. Albert Sackett. Julia's father was an actor in stock and a favorite of Philadelphia theatergoers for many years. When little Miss Sackett decided to go on the stage herself she took her mother's maiden name, Sanderson, for her professional cognomen.

VII Other Crumit Clippings

Searching through old, inadequately indexed scrapbooks makes it hard to arrange these items about Crumit in ideal order. Here is a clipping from the Roanoke Times of July 18, 1937, which gives more information concerning Frank's emergence from his brief retirement:

"I've had my share of work in the entertainment world. I have a nice home in Massachusetts, and there Julia Sanderson, my wife, and I are going to retire and stay retired."

That, in essence, is what Frank Crumit has said twice—once in 1928 and once last fall. And yet here he is back on the air as the jovial master-of-ceremonies and ballad singer of Columbia's "Universal Rhythms" programs.

It might seem, after some 13 years on the air—off and on—and a stage career which goes back to 1909 that Crumit would welcome complete rest and relaxation. But both he and Julia, also a radio and stage star of long standing, were restless in the inactive months taken up largely in motoring, golf and developing their garden.

In desperation, Frank, who is husky, healthy and alert, went into the bond business after the 1928 retirement. He was successful at it, and happy at the diversion. But that still left Julia out and so, not long afterward, they were both back on the air.

Until the conclusion of their CBS series last fall, the two were broadcasting pretty steadily. Once more they tried desperately to retire but again it didn't work. So eager was Frank to spend all of his energies in the entertainment field that, in addition to his current radio work, he is producing a musical show which will appear on the New York stage in the fall.

And Julia? Well, Frank says that the two will doubtless be back on the air together in the fall. He won't predict when the third retirement is to take place.

As we know, only death brought that third and final "retirement" to Frank Crumit.

I have just remembered that "Lord Broadway," a book by Dayton Stoddard about Sime Silverman, the founder of Variety, has an incidental reference to Crumit as he was in his younger days. The scene is Maxim's, a New York night club or "cabaret," as such places were called then:

"... A young fellow... came out, sat down on a chair and began to strum a ukulele. He was a good-looking lad, smooth-cheeked, dressed in a sack suit. 'Looks like a college boy,' said Sime."

The whitish cone of the spotlight bore down on the lad. In its light, the faces and shirt fronts and bare shoulders were close enough together to make a living carpet."

The book goes on to tell how Crumit made a hit singing "The High Cost of Loving," and adds, "That was Frank Crumit's professional debut in show business." Sime is quoted as telling Percy Elkeles, the Maxim's manager, "You got box office for the dames there, Perce," and the book also says he was fascinated because "Crumit was wearing a shirt and the shirt was soft with soft collar attached. Soft shirts were just coming in." Silverman, who was a free-and-easy dresser, decided he wanted a dozen soft shirts for himself.

Mr. McFall has sent me a copy of Phi Delta Theta's publication, The Scroll, which throws some incidental light on an even earlier stage of Crumit's career. The article is primarily concerned with a radio personality, Jim McWilliams, who formerly conducted the "Askit Basket" program. It mentions Frank in this way:

In the fall of 1910 Brother McWilliams got his accidental but fortuitous start in vaudeville. While staying at the New York Delta house at Columbia he was asked by Jay Hugo Fish, a Yale man, and Frank Crumit (Ohio '12), a brother Phi from Ohio University, to accompany them on the piano while they performed their routine in a neighboring theater. The manager suggested that the group take the pianist out of the pit and put him on the stage. They were an instantaneous success and became known as the "Three Collegians." This performance launched a long career in the entertainment world and during their years of traveling the vaudeville circuit the devotion of Brothers McWilliams and Crumit to Phi Delta Theta continued to grow. They were known throughout the realm of the Fraternity.

Phi chapters all over the country got the word that the "Three Collegians" were good. Wherever they performed, Phi gathered from miles around to see them. During their travels they visited 40 Phi chapter houses and often gave impromptu performances for their adoring undergraduate brothers. It was in 1914 that the "Three Collegians" decided to split and do single acts. Each went his own way, though Brothers Crumit and McWilliams remained close friends through the years that followed.

It was after he left the trio, of course, that Frank began singing at Maxim's. During this 1914 period Columbia issued Record No. A1509, called "A Night at Maxim's," arranged by J. Louis Von der Mehden, Jr., later the Pathé musical director, in which the choruses of several popular numbers are sung by entertainers from the cabaret. If Crumit takes part, it is the first record he made. However, I have not been able to hear in it any voice resembling his.

This seems the logical place to mention that Mr. McFall, whose address is 952 Pleasant Street, Oak Park, Ill., is trying to assemble a complete library of Frank Crumit's records, which he will present to the Phi Delta Theta Memorial Library at Oxford, Ohio. He has most of the Crumit numbers, but is having a hard time finding a copy of DL-5, a ten-inch long-playing "demonstration" record issued when Victor introduced the pioneer LP's in 1931. This is a miniature concert by the Revelers and other Victor artists with Crumit as master of ceremonies singing part of "A Gay Caballero" and "Donald the Dub." If any reader has a copy of this record in good condition Mr. McFall would be glad to hear from him. The May, 1953, Scroll contains an article describing Mr. McFall's generous proposal.

What I hope is a complete list of Frank Crumit's records will be published at the end of this series.

(To be continued.)

Recent Music Books That Are Helpful

THE SPICE OF "VARIETY." Edited by Abel Green. 277 pages. $3.50. Henry Holt & Company.

FIRESIDE BOOK OF FAVORITE AMERICAN SONGS. Selected and edited by Margaret Bradford Boni, with music arranged for the piano by Norman Lloyd. 360 pages. $5. Simon & Schuster.

THE VICTOR BOOK OF OPERAS. Louis Biancolli and Robert Bagar. 596 pages. Simon & Schuster.

The three books listed above all contain much of interest to music lovers, record collectors and readers fond of the theater. "The Spice of Variety" was compiled by Abel Green, editor of "The Bible of Show Business," as a representative collection of the best articles contributed by theatrical celebrities and other noted persons to Variety's annual huge green-covered anniversary issue. Most of the material is on the light and amusing side. Contributors include Fred Allen, Jack Benny, Eddie Cantor, Jimmy Durante, George Jessel, Joe Laurie, Jr., and more than two-score others. This is the sort of book that is especially good bedtime reading—or that will make time pass more pleasantly when you're trying to get over the flu. It's to be hoped Editor Abel will bring out other similar compilations.

"The Fireside Book of Favorite American Songs" must be one of the handsomest books published in years. It gives a representative selection of the songs that have been popular with Americans from the arrival of the Pilgrim Fathers through the early years of the 20th century. The book's progress into the past is backward—that is, the newer songs come

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 37)

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By MOSORIAK & HECKERT

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

$5.00 Postpaid — Insured

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Frank Crumit

Part Two

By JIM WALSH

I Crumit's Columbia Records

When Frank Crumit first began making records in 1920, the electric process was still five years distant and the technique of singing or playing into a horn was much the same as it had been when the famous counter-tenor, Richard José, was interviewed by Ashton Stevens of the San Francisco Examiner thirteen years before. Stevens asked if there was "a great deal of mystery connected with recording for talking machines, or if there was any secret in singing for that purpose," and José replied:

"Secret! It's the most secret thing in the world—for the singer. You're locked all alone with the band in a big bare room. Your back is to the musicians and your face to a bleak blank wall through which protrudes a solemn horn. A bell rings—one. That is to get ready, for the receiving instrument is so sensitive that if you moved your sleeve against your coat the sound would register. Somebody outside presses the button—two. The band starts the prelude, then you sing, turning neither to the right nor left, always looking and singing into that protruding horn. And you can't even let out a breath after your last note; you must close your lips on it and wait for the little whirr within the horn to cease."

"When do you hear the result?"

"In hardly no time. And if you are new to the game it nearly kills you. When I first heard my own voice I turned clammy all over and shook like a frightened child. I had to be quieted down before I could go on with the next ballad. No man knows what his own voice sounds like till he hears it reproduced by a machine; he can't know otherwise; his auditory apparatus is too closely mixed up with his vocal machinery—he can't get the distance!"

Frank Crumit probably was not so nervous and easily upset as José appears to have been, for he had presence of mind enough, in singing his first record, to fill in during a few bars rest by exclaiming "Sweet lady!" which later became the title of the popular song he sang to his wife, Julia Sanderson, in "Tangerine." But, like José, he had a high tenor voice, though of course not a counter-tenor.

Personally, I think Frank was unfortunate in that the microphonic method of recording had not been developed when he signed his Columbia contract. Some singers sounded better when recorded by the horn system than under the early electric process, but Crumit did not. He came into his own after the "mike" succeeded the horn. I have never believed that any of his Columbia or Victor acoustic records do justice to his voice or style of singing in the early 1920's. The most successful recordings of that day were those with naturally strong, well-rounded voices, such as Caruso's, or those who expended large quantities of energy by "hammering"—that is, singing vigorously into the horn. Frank's easy, relaxed, informal method of singing was not adapted to acoustic techniques. Too often it was made to sound rather nasal, flat and without enough "body." But with electric recording Frank Crumit stepped triumphantly forward as one of the most completely natural, charming personalities the phonograph has known.

The stocky, blue-eyed, brown-haired comedian with the heartwarming smile that could be heard in his voice first appeared in the Columbia list for May, 1920. He made his recording debut at the age of 30. The title of his initial Columbia disc was "My Gal" (No. A2884), and it was a rather amusing song redeemed from mediocrity by a few, ingenious twists in the lyrics and some unusual orannotations in those days were usually perfunctory. The writer merely said: "My Gal" is 'some gal' and introduces Frank Crumit, a new and exclusive Columbia artist, well known on the vaudeville stage."

A typical broadcasting pose of "The Singing Sweethearts," Julia Sanderson and Frank Crumit.

Crumit was fortunate in having his offering coupled with a really great hit, Al Jolson's version of George Gershwin's first outstanding success, "Swanee." Jolson's interpretation made the song famous and was notable for a whistling interlude, such as that which caused his later Brunswick record of "There's a Rainbow 'Round My Shoulder" to be enormously popular.

Despite his slight advance "build-up," genial Frank's personality surmounted the generally poor recording he received on those early Columbia discs, and he became a favorite from his first record, appearing in almost every supplement. In June he was represented by A2915, "What a Day That'll Be," combined with "Jean," by the Peerless Quartet. July brought a coupling of perhaps the cleverest "nut song" ever written, "Oh! By Jingo" on A2935 with another hit of the day, "So Long, Oolong (How Long You Gonna Be Gone?)" This was one of the best of the Columbia Crumits. In August, on A2940, he sang "I've Got the Profiteering Blues," doubled with Jolson's "Some Beautiful Morning."

Something of a mystery surrounds a double-faced Crumit record listed in October, "Goodbye, Dixie, Good-bye" and "Don't Take Away Those Blues." It was listed, and that was all. It didn't appear in the 1921 catalog, nor have I been able to find it in any succeeding issue. Just what happened—whether it was withdrawn because of a technical defect after only a few copies had been pressed or was "cut out" for some other reason—is something I don't know. At any rate, it is the rarest of Crumit's Columbia records—nearly all of which had large sales.

Undoubtedly, one of the biggest sellers of this early period was A2973, on which Crumit sang "The Love Nest" from "Mary," with Henry Burr's interpretation of a beautiful Ernest R. Ball ballad, "Down the Trail to Home, Sweet Home" on the other side. In November, Crumit teamed up on A2981 with Lew Brown, the song writer, in "She Gives Them All the Ha-Ha-Ha." A Crumit solo, "My Little Bimbo Down On the Bamboo Isle," was on the other side. Brown wrote the words of "Oh! By Jingo" and was also the lyric writer of "She Gives Them All," with the music by Albert Von Tilzer, who had composed the weirdly original melody for "Jingo." He was one of the few singers with whom Crumit made duets.

Another excellent Crumit interpretation of a "nut song" was issued on A3303 in December. It combined "Jinga-Bula-Jing-Jing" with "Nobody to Love." And January, 1921, might almost have been called a "Crumit month." On A3320 he sang "I'm Coming Back to Dixie and You" with "Kentucky," sung by the well known popular song writer, Benny Davis, on the other side. Two excellent comic songs, both by Frank, were on A3324, "Palesteena" and "I Wish That I'd Been Born in Borneo." To complete the month's Crumit procession, he and a baritone, William Davidson, sang the big hit, "Whispering," on A3323, while the Crescent Trio did "For Every Boy Who's On the Level" on the reverse. Mr. A. B. McFall says "Wild Bill" Davidson was a trumpet player who is still active in New York.

It is not necessary to go down the entire list of Crumit's Columbia recordings, since I have prepared an approximately complete tabulation of all his discs to appear at the conclusion of this series. But a few high lights should be mentioned. During the next three years, the versatile tenor helped to popularize a number of hits, including "Margie," "Three O'Clock in the Morning," "Dapper Dan," "Stumbling," "I Gave You Up Just Before You Threw Me Down" and "Say It With a Ukulele." The latter, issued in February, 1924, was his last Columbia record. He began in 1921 a series of records in fox trot time with the Paul Biese Trio playing "novelty accompaniments." Toward the end of that year he sang "Sweet Lady," the number so intimately associated with his devotion to the lady who became his wife. He also re-made two "automobile songs" which had been originally recorded in 1914 and 1915 by William J. Halley and Arthur Fields, respectively—"He'd Have to Get Under" and "The Little Ford Rambled."

During that same period he revived and recorded the first number of the "old time" variety in which he later was to shine for Victor. All Crumit's Columbia records were of current popular songs until he made A3459, "Frankie and Johnny," in a "cleaned-up" version of his own. The other side was a new song, "I Ain't Nobody's Darlin'," in the "rube" tradition which Byron G. Harlan had made famous on records. But "Frankie and Johnny" was a foretaste of what he was to do much more successfully for Victor.

Another Columbia record deserving mention is the February, 1922, doubling of "Da Da Da, My Darling," (a song for which Crumit must have had a fondness, because he sang it years later for Victor) with "When Francis Dances With Me."

Columbia encountered financial difficulties late in 1923 and went through the bankruptcy wringer. Although it stayed in business, its prospects didn't appear bright, and that no doubt had a bearing on Frank Crumit's decision to sign an exclusive Victor contract. It is worth mentioning that in 1923 his success as a song writer brought him membership in the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, better known as ASCAP.

II Crumit's Victor Career Begins

Frank Crumit's first Victor record appeared in the supplement for March, 1924—a rather unpropitious time when the phonograph companies were beginning to feel the pressure of radio competition. Disc sales had been large throughout 1923, but they took a nose dive the following year with each month's figures showing a decline over those preceding. The downward droop continued until Vernon Dalhart's Victor coupling, No. 19427, "The Prisoner's Song" and "The Wreck of the Old 97" came along late in 1924 to stimulate the sale of records in general. The Dalhart record was the biggest seller ever made up to that time. In 1925 the advent of electric recording and new instruments to play the different-sounding records gave the business another badly needed shot in the arm.

However, Crumit's first Victor records were among the company's best sellers and racked up excellent totals, considering the state of the business as a whole. His initial offering combined "Oh, Baby!" with a song written by Crumit himself, "Sweet Alice." The supplement said:

"First Victor record by Frank Crumit, clever Follies star. 'Oh, Baby!' has that master-hand, Phil Ohman's, at the piano. 'Sweet Alice' (not Ben Bolt's, but Frank's, now being featured in vaudeville), has the orchestra. This comedian has a good voice and an easy style. 'Oh, Baby!' is a model of piano-accompaniment in the popular style. Its companion, 'Sweet Alice,' has amusing rhythms and an easy swinging tune of the popular-waltz persuasion. This record will make a lot of new friends for the artist." It is worth noting that this shows the New York Herald-Tribune erred in saying Frank Banta accompanied Crumit's "first (Victor) record." The accompanist was really a good friend of the two Franks—Phil Ohman.

Crumit also appeared in the same supplement, singing "Mindin' My Business." Marcia Freer, Lewis James and the Manhattan Merrymakers and then there is some really lovely rendered "Linger Awhile" on the other side. The accompaniment of the Crumit number was by The Virginians, a small jazz ensemble headed by Ross Gorman.

Despite an occasional jazz accompaniment, Frank's heart never was in that type of music. Only a few months after he made his Victor debut he showed his fondness for singing older numbers of the "nostalgic" type by coupling two former Eddie Leonard hits, "Ida! Sweet as Apple Cider" and "Roll Them Roly Boly Eyes." Incidentally, the photos of Crumit reproduced in the Victor supplements during this period are interesting. He seems to have had a changeable taste in headgear. Sometimes he is wearing a cap; at other times a hat—among them a derby. Sometimes he was snapped with a pipe in his mouth.

I have long thought it a shame that Frank's least known Victor record is the coupling of the football song, "Buckeye Battle Cry," which he wrote for Ohio State University at the request of his brother-in-law, George Trautman, with another Crumit gridiron composition, "Hi-Hi-Ohio." This excellent record was not listed in any monthly supplement but was "dumped" into the 1925 yearly catalog, together with a good many other popular and classical selections, without any public announcement. Consequently, it went almost unnoticed, was sold in only small quantities and is little known today. Billy Murray's version of an Irish dialect comic song, "Officer Kelly, Don't You Think It's Time to Wake Up?" was another that met the same fate. Only a few months after the 1925 catalog appeared, electric recording was introduced and began to make even the most recent acoustic numbers seem virtually obsolete. The electric recording wasn't necessarily more natural—in many instances, it was less so—but it was louder and had more range, and so the acoustic process was dismissed as "old stuff."

Billy Murray's recorded voice, for one, was almost ruined at first by what the electric process did to him. But Billy was a "hammering" singer of the old school who found it hard to relax under a changed system. On the other hand, microphonic recording suited Frank Crumit to perfection. The way in which it captured his seemingly careless, easygoing personality and gave added depth and body to his tones not only did him more justice than he had ever received under the acoustic method but brought about corresponding improvement in his singing. Because of his complete adaptability to the "mike," his records were among those which the company insisted that its dealers play to demonstrate the Orthophonic Victrola. For instance, the house organ, The Voice of the Victor, urged in the January, 1926, issue that dealers use Crumit's revival of an old song, "The Parlor is a Pleasant Place."

It said: "For utter naturalness of both vocal and instrumental tone it would be hard to equal this record. The voice is practically of actual volume; each syllable comes as distinctly as if the artist were standing before you. You will think you hear the old cabinet organ that used to ornament the parlor of many homes; and then there is some really lovely tone as the guitar is played. You will not have to lean forward and listen for the words; you will hear them distinctly without effort."

"The Parlor" was one of the many records in which Crumit played his own guitar accompaniment. It became one of his biggest sellers up to that time, especially since it was combined with a quietly effective "plantation song," whose pathos, if you are in the right mood, is almost heart-breaking, "I'se Goin' From the Cotton Field."

III Frank Approaches His Recording Peak

For several months, while the Orthophonic still had powerful appeal as a novelty ("you can even hear the singers breathing in it!" awestruck listeners used to say) Victor kept on directing attention to the value of Crumit's records as "demonstrators," as in the April, 1926, Voice:

"Show Me the Way to Go Home." Nothing but the Orthophonic Victrola could reproduce the peculiar intimacy and naturalness of Frank Crumit's highly individual style. You will, when you hear this music, feel that the singer is actually before you with his ukulele and the accompanying piano. The Orthophonic instrument must not be held responsible for the change of 's' to 'sh' in certain parts of the song; that's only Crumit in an amusing imitation of a man whose s's begin to wobble after drinking not wisely but too well! The point is, the Orthophonic Victrola reproduces exactly whatever sounds the performer makes—note, for example, the clean-cut Scotch dialect."

In May, when Frank combined the age-old favorite, "Billy Boy," with "Grandfather's Clock":

Frank Crumit has a way about him, you'll have to admit that when you hear this old song... A jolly old tune, given with the guitar accompaniment in the old-time manner—and each word as clear... (as) if the artist were standing... before you. If you have forgotten the words of this old tune, just listen, naturally without any effort and you will find that you can hear them all.

And in June, when Crumit was represented by a popular song, "Thanks for the Buggy Ride":

Talk about the "voice with a smile!" Frank Crumit certainly has it. And with the Orthophonic Victrola you can almost see the smile; unquestionably you can feel it. You say to yourself, "There's a good fellow" when you hear him sing; that's because this instrument seems to catch that elusive thing called personality.

The "annotator" was right. It was perhaps this quality of being a "good fellow"—and, more than that, a good man—one cordial, affectionate and lovable—that somehow most irresistibly impressed the listener to Frank Crumit's best records.

During the next year or so, Frank's records became increasingly popular, the latest successes alternating with the old-time numbers for which the tenor cared most. One of the best popular song records combined two brilliant Rogers and Hart compositions, "Mountain Greenery" and "The Girl Friend." This was followed by two numbers in the style of a past era, "Pretty Little Dear" and "Get Away, Old Man, Get Away."

In August, 1927, Frank was represented by his next-to-best selling record: "Frankie and Johnnie" (a far better performance than he had given on his earlier Columbia record) and "Abdul Abulbul Amir." The former beautifully printed Victor supplements in booklet style had given way early in 1926 to a folder printed on cheap "butcher paper," but the incomparable James E. Richardson was still writing the record descriptions, and this is what he said of the new Crumit coupling: "('Frankie and Johnnie') is the famous 'low-life' ballad. Frankie, with her bucket of beer, is put wise by the barkeep to the philanderings of her man Johnnie. Frankie takes out her gat—but hear the record! With it is the epic sword-fight in genteel humorous style."

Both "Frankie and Johnnie" and "Abdul" proved tremendously popular and were widely recorded by other singers for competitive companies. Edison, for one, issued a record with Billy Jones singing "Frankie" and Ernie Hare giving an unctuous, deep-voiced interpretation of the Mock Russian ballad on the other side. Only a year or so later Victor put out a hill-billy record of "Frankie and Johnny," by the legendary Jimmy Rogers, which was almost, if not quite, as popular as Crumit's.

Frank's brooding, wistful style—the sort in which I doubt that he has ever been equaled by any other popular singer—was beautifully displayed in the February, 1928, coupling of "That Old Wooden Rocker" and "I Miss You, 'Lize." By this time Mr. Richardson had died, but his successor as supplement writer (probably Charles O'Connell) said:

"It's no use talking... Frank Crumit has something you can't describe, but it gets you. A bit of homely sentiment, a bit of humor, sometimes a little pathos; a genial voice and personality plus—these are some of the ingredients of Crumit's popularity. And he likes to sing old-fashioned songs like these just as much as you like to hear them. 'That Old Wooden Rocker' is just the kind of crooning, comfortable song you'd hope for... only you couldn't guess how delightfully Crumit does it. There's more than a bit of pathos in 'Lize'... and an unusual touch in Frank Banta's expert fingering of the piano, and the lingering notes of the lute."

This same supplement listed without comment, a record which became much more popular than the one just described. It combined Gene Austin, then perhaps the most popular Victor artist, in "Lonesome Road," with Frank singing "Wake, Nicodemus" to the accompaniment of an organ and his own guitar. "Nicodemus" was written by the composer of "Grandfather's Clock," Henry C. Work, a musician of the Civil War period for whose songs Crumit seems to have had considerable affection. Its popularity was somewhat overshadowed by the nationwide vogue for "Lonesome Road," but it is one of the best Crumit records—one which really grips at the heartstrings with its story of how the jubilant freed Negro slaves longed to wake their "prophet," Nicodemus, lying dead in a swamp, who had predicted that the "great day" of deliverance was almost at hand.

The next Crumit record also contained one of Work's songs, "Kingdom Coming" (which would have made a perfect coupling for "Nicodemus") combined with the nonsensical old college song, "Bohunkus." Then came one of the all-time Crumit masterpieces for sheer infectious nonsense, his own "The Song of the Prune." A little later he was called on to do re-makes of one of the most popular double-faced talking records in the catalog: "No News, or What Killed the Dog," which Nat M. Wills had first spoken into the horn in 1909, and the 1912 version of "The Three Trees," originally made by the English comedian, Tom McNaughton, who was the husband of Alice Lloyd.

(To be continued)

OLD POPULAR SONGS

Original copies of all the big hits of the past 50 years for sale. Call, phone (MA-6-0841), or send 10c stamps or coin for big list.

DEAN SNYDER

102 S. Main Los Angeles, 12

s45c

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Frank Crumit

Part Three

By JIM WALSH

IV "A Gay Caballero" and Its Successors

And now we come to the all-time Number One Crumit record—the one said by the New York Herald Tribune to have sold four million copies: "A Gay Caballero," doubled with a musical setting by the comedian of Rudyard Kipling's poem, "The Ladies." On the record it was called "I Learned About Women From Her."

The Victor advertising department seems to have slipped badly when this record was issued in the December, 1928, supplement. Descriptions are given of many other popular records whose sales were small by comparison, but the Crumit number simply appears in "The Complete List of Victor Records for December" with no "annotation" whatever. Perhaps the company thought it was strong enough to sell on its own merits without a special blurb; or perhaps the artist and repertoire department didn't recognize a big hit when it was recorded.

However that may be, the disc received a favorable review in The Phonograph Monthly Review, then edited by Axel B. Johnson and published in Boston, although all the enthusiasm was for "I Learned About Women" with the "Caballero" getting a mere mention: "Crumit is always at his best in semi-folk or 'men's songs,' and his own setting of Kipling's 'I Learned About Women From Her' (21735) gives him ideal material. The coupling is 'A Gay Caballero.'"

Reviewing the "Caballero" ditty

later when it was sung by other artists, the P.M.R. critic expressed belief it wasn't very funny. But that wasn't the opinion of the general public, which found uproarious comedy in the adventures of the modern Don Juan who wound up by having his ear chewed off by a jealous husband. The tune, too, was irresistible. Within a few weeks "A Gay Caballero" was the biggest selling Victor record and it continued to be for months. In an effort to get some share of the "gravy," other companies issued it by various singers: Edison by Billy Murray; Columbia by Billy Jones and Ernest Hare; Brunswick by Frank Luther; Okeh by Pete Wiggins (who probably was Luther in disguise); Harmony by Vernon Dalhart, and Domino by Irving Kaufman. All the rival versions were good, with Murray's perhaps the best, but none quite equalled the specialized touch given to it by Crumit, who had either composed it or adapted it from an old college song. There are different stories of the "Caballero's" origin. However, many buyers of the Victor record complained that it soon wore out because the combination of a heavy orchestral accompaniment with the deep notes of Frank's guitar shattered the grooves when played on the typical phonograph of that day.

Riding high with "A Gay Caballero" and "I Learned About Women," whose literary quality and unforced pathos many listeners found even more attractive than the comic number, Frank turned out another masterpiece for May, 1929. This combined "The Road to Vicksburg," a quietly humorous study of Negro character, with a brilliant comic song, "The King of Borneo," which ended with "the strains of 'Hiawatha' played by the royal band." The Phonograph Monthly Review said:

"Victor lists some of the individual winners of the month, particularly Frank Crumit's finest record to date, 'The Road to Vicksburg,' which has the distinction of being genuinely amusing, (besides) containing also a number of the finest rag-time masterpieces . . . sung in the most delightful fashion. The coupling is a gay tale of 'The King of Borneo,' sung in cheerful vein and featuring a virtuoso clarinetist in the very ingenious accompaniment. May we have more releases of this type from Crumit!"

Once more Victor had failed to pick a winner, because this record also was issued with no fanfare.

V Downfall of the Record Business

Although there was no reason at the time to suspect it, "A Gay Caballero" marked the peak of Frank Crumit's career as a recording artist. Less than a year after it appeared, the terrible depression of 1929 arrived and the record business, which had been in a prosperous condition, within a couple of years was barely managing to survive, with sales down to about five per cent of what they had been. It was this, rather than any falling off in personal popularity, that led to Frank's decline as a Victor performer.

However, he remained as alert and ingenious as ever. Shortly after the stock market crash he recorded a satiric number with the topical title, "A Tale of the Ticker," and combined it with "The Return of the Gay Caballero," which was almost as amusing as the great original. Two of his couplings issued early in 1930, before the depression reached its worst, also did comparatively well. Two golf songs, "Donald the Dub" with "And Then He Took Up Golf" appeared on one, and a couple of highly amusing numbers, "Down By the Railroad Trac" and "Around the Corner" on the other. They were followed by "The Return of Abdul Abulbul Amir" and "I'm Betting the Roll on Roamer," which got hardly anywhere. People who still had jobs were wondering how much longer they would have them. The majority of Americans had decided radio had made the phonograph obsolete, and there were any number of things they'd rather buy than records. Even when Victor splurged on a long-playing record late in 1931 the public remained apathetic. And there was good reason. The L-P volume was low; the records were full of pitch wavers; satisfactory 33½ motors were available, and the material on which the discs were pressed wasn't good. As was told in the preceding installment, Crumit was the master of ceremonies on a "dealers' demonstrator" record, relating the "wonders" of those early long-players.

"DUNKOVIN"
HOME OF MR. AND MRS. FRANK CRUMIT, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

Record sales continued negligible, with the all-time low being reached in 1932. Only two of the Crumit records made during the depths of the depression call for special mention. One is "Would You Like to Take a Walk?" the first number he recorded with his lovely Julia, her inimitable giggle being much in evidence. In England this was referred to as "the most charming record ever made," and the "His Master's Voice" supplement for mid-May, 1931, termed it "a duet that will enchant you for months to come." But it didn't sell in the States and had been cut out when the 1933 Victor catalog was printed. The record is now a collectors' rarity. I paid $2.50 for mine.

A word must be said, too about Crumit's solo stint of "I'm a Specialist." This was a musical setting of "Chic" Sale's famous booklet, "The Specialist," and the few persons who bought it considered it comedy of a hilariously amusing, if earthy, sort. They did, that is, if they were average Americans. The Gramophone's critic, however, looked down his nose at it and, in the April, 1932, issue remarked: "I'm a Specialist' . . . I imagine is too much of the American brand of humour for most of us to appreciate." Perhaps, but had the record been issued in 1929 instead of 1932, its sales over here probably would have rivaled those of "A Gay Caballero!"

VI English Comments

I mentioned in the first installment that Frank Crumit was one of the most popular singing comedians whose records were ever sold in England, and that he still has a British following. As far as I know, his acoustically recorded Columbias and Victor records were not sold abroad, but after the electric process was introduced, H. M. V. began to import his Victor matrices, frequently coupling them differently than the way they were issued on this side, and their success was instantaneous. This is true, even though The Gramophone took exception to the label's giving Frank credit as the composer of "Abdul Abulbul Amir." The critic said the song was one familiar to English college men at the time of the Crimean War, and added something to this effect: "Mr. Crumit is not a young man, but even he is not old enough to have been living that long ago." (Frank actually was only 39 when the "Abdul" record was issued!)

It is a pleasure to turn to more favorable criticisms from the same source. When H.M.V. issued "A Gay Caballero" in July, 1929, The Gramophone said: "One of the best items in a very good H.M.V. July issue is Frank Crumit singing 'A Gay Caballero' and 'Jack is Every Inch a Sailor.' Crumit never fails." In August Gramophone readers were told: "The best record of the month . . . is another by Frank Crumit. He sings two delightful songs, 'The King of Borneo' and 'The Road to Vicksburg' in the sing-song rhythm at which he is such an adept."

In February, 1930, a Crumit record of "Dolan's Poker Party" and "O'Hooligan's Ball," which Victor never issued in its regular catalog but in the special booklet (hill-billy, mostly) of "Familiar Tunes Old and New," appeared in a special H.M.V. Irish supplement. The Gramophone writer said Crumit got "every ounce" out of them. The verdict in June, 1930, on "Donald the Dub" was that it was one of Crumit's "most light and airy songs, full of rhythm and humour, all about golf. On the other side is 'And Then He Took Up Golf,' which is not quite so good. Hurry up and send this to your golfing neighbor or he will have heard it before."

In March, 1931, the Gramophone pontificated, with a touch of condescension: "Frank Crumit . . . has an American accent that would hurt no one and delight most people in 'Three Little Words' and 'I Miss a Little Miss.' The lilting accompaniment is first class." Crumit's accent was compared favorably with that of Eddie Cantor, of whom the writer gloomily predicted: "His fame as a film star will surely introduce this record into thousands of English homes where his really execrable accent will distil its poison." Three months later the Sanderson-Crumit duet of "Would You Like to Take a Walk?" was termed "a triumph of artistry."

March, 1932, found the Gramophone saying: "Frank Crumit never fails to charm, and his own adaptation of 'Little Brown Jug' is . . . charming."

The comparatively unfavorable review of "I'm a Specialist" has already been noted, and another of the "not so good" kind was pronounced in February, 1933: "Frank Crumit, an old recording friend, is only this time an imitation jewel; after the first glance you realize that the glitter wears off quickly. After all, it is difficult to be really amused for three and a half minutes by the trials and tribulations of the vegetable kingdom." The record referred to was one of five-doubled faces discs recorded by Crumit for Victor but intended for sale abroad rather than in the United States. It had "They're Always Together" on one side and "The Vegetable Blues" on the other. Another of the British-only titles was "The Grandson of Abdul Abulbul Amir," which is still in the H.M.V. catalog—or was in 1949.

The July, 1933, verdict on "My Girl Ran Away," which occupied both sides of a record, also was unenthusiastic: "Frank Crumit's story of all the various men his girl ran away with . . . does not stand up to two sides of a ten-inch disc." However, as a whole the British attitude toward Crumit's artistry was warmly appreciative and, unless they have all been cut out of the latest catalog, which I haven't seen, several of his records are still selling there.

Next month I shall give some details of Crumit's Decca recordings, made from 1934 to 1942, quote from his correspondence to me and end this series by publishing the promised list of his recordings.

Page Ellis interviewing Jim Walsh, author of "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists," on her "Woman's Radio Journal" program from WSLS, Roanoke, Va. Jim told of his record collecting activities and his HOBBIES articles and "Fan Mail."

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Frank Crumit

Part Four

By JIM WALSH

Before relating the details of my friendship by correspondence with Frank Crumit—one of the many dear "friends by mail" whom I have unfortunately never been privileged to meet in person—I think I should mention two of his Victor records which were passed over without notice in the second part of this series.

One is the fox trot, "Just a Night for Meditation," played by Nat Shilkret and the Victor Orchestra, with Frank singing the refrain. As far as I have been able to learn, this 1928 disc is the only dance number in which Frank was the vocalist.

The other is the 12-inch "Victor Minstrel Show of 1929," probably the best minstrel record ever issued, in which Crumit was one of a galaxy of all-star entertainers, each performing brilliantly. He sang the irresistible "coon song," "Abraham Lincoln Jones," to his own guitar accompaniment. Other features included Billy Murray, caroling "Down Where the Watermelon Grows," and Henry Burr warbling "By the Light of the Silvery Moon." Although the jokes are only so-so, the singing is so excellent as to make the record well worth acquiring by anyone who likes good, clean entertainment done by the topmost recording talent of an earlier day—performers miles above anything the recorded repertoire offers today.

My first letter from Frank Crumit is dated October 7, 1933 and was written at his home, "Dunrovin," 154

Colony Road, Longmeadow, Massachusetts. I had long been one of his most ardent admirers not only from tireless listening to his records but also from faithful hearkening to his radio programs sponsored by Blackstone Cigars and other firms. Finally, I wrote to tell him how much his and his wife, Julia Sanderson's, art had meant to my mother, my brother Chad and me, and received a characteristically cordial reply, which I am sure HOBBIES readers will find as interesting as I did:

Dear Mr. Walsh: Thank you so much for your very charming letter. I am awfully glad you liked my two songs.

I did start recording in 1920 for the Columbia Phonograph Company. My first record was on the back of one of Al Jolson's, and was called "My Gal." This little item may interest you. In the middle of the song I had a couple of bars rest and filled it in with just two words—"Sweet Lady"—and thought at the time what a great title it would be for a song. Shortly afterwards, I wrote it and was very happy to see it become such a big success sung by us in the show, "Tangerine."

I attended Jackson, Ohio, High School, Culver Military Academy and University of Ohio at Athens, Ohio. I played baseball and football most of my life and today my athletics consist mostly of golf. My handicap is seven in Massachusetts.

In 1919 I wrote the "Buckeye Battle Cry" for Ohio State University, which is still being used before all games. My brother-in-law, George Trautman, was assistant athletic director there at the time.

JIM WALSH
WANTS TO BUY

Old phonograph record catalogs and supplements (mostly prior to 1925); back copies of phonograph publications—Talking Machine World, Talking Machine News, the Gramophone, the Phonogram, Diamond Points, Edison Phonograph and Amberola Monthly, Voice of the Victor, etc.—photographs, advertisements, and all sort of reference material dealing with the history and development of sound recording that will provide background information for

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Please do not send me lists of records for sale. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. Address:

JIM WALSH

Box 131

Vinton, Va.

The record business over here has gone all to pieces, but I still record for the Victor Company and the pressings are sent to the Gramophone Company of England. I am glad to say their sales have not decreased very much.

Sorry I haven't time to write more, but I do hope this information may be of value to you. Thanks again for saying so many nice things and we send you our very best wishes. Sincerely,

FRANK CRUMIT.

P. S. I found a little more time, and as records have been so close to my heart for so many years I thought I would try to think up a little more information for you. During the three years I was with Columbia I averaged around 40 records a year. A great many of these I have up in the attic at home. If you would care for a few for your collection I would be glad to ship them to you.

I have averaged for ten years around twelve records a year for Victor. The biggest seller for Victor was the "Gay Caballero," closely followed by "Abdul" and "Frankie and Johnny."

A little more data on the theater. I played vaudeville over the Keith and Orpheum circuits for six years from 1912 to 1918. From 1918 to 1928, when Mrs. Crumit and I retired, I played in about six musical comedies. We started radio work in 1929 and have been on the same two programs ever since.

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION

RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
the following labels:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH, DE LUXE & GRAND PRIZE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS, such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G. & T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.
- ★ Old record catalogs.

Persons offering material not specified above or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

OLD POPULAR SONGS

Original copies of all the big hits of the past 50 years for sale. Call, phone (LA-6-0841), or send 10c stamps or coin for big list.

DEAN SNYDER

102 S. Main Los Angeles, 12

s45c

If anyone failed to receive a reply from my October advertisement, please write again!!

Does anyone have pre-war German, Italian, or Japanese dollar bonds? Perhaps found in the estate of deceased persons?

Write to:

J. B. ELLIS

8806 Holmes Ave. Los Angeles 2, Calif.

dp

and was bringing suit for money which he considered still due him under his contract. He also sued a New York radio station for playing his records without permission, maintaining the playing infringed his rights as a recording artist. The Decca Company made itself a party to the suit, contending that since Crumit had been paid for making the discs, it was really the manufacturer's rights which were infringed. The suit must have gone in favor of the station, for records of all sorts continued to be played.

But, although Frank's "pancakes," made when the depression was still almost as bad as it had been in 1932, didn't sell well, some of his best recordings are included in his first Decca productions. The first, No. 113, was a huge 35 cents worth, coupling "A Gay Caballero" with "Frankie and Johnnie." No. 114 offered "Abdul Abulbul Amir" and a captivating medley of songs written by Gus Edwards—"School Days," "By the Light of the Silvery Moon" and others. Even more delightful was the two-part "Harry Von Tilzer Medley," with "In the Sweet Bye and Bye," "Down, Where the Wurzbürger Flows," "Goodbye, Boys," "Take Me Back to New York Town," "On a Sunday Afternoon" and "I Want a Girl." The remainder made during this first Decca engagement were all good comic songs—"The Pig Got Up and Slowly Walked Away," "The Dashing Marine," "There's No One With Endurance Like the Man Who Sells Insurance" and "Whoa, Josephine."

There is now a gap of several years in the letters I shall quote from Frank. Some were written during the intervening period, but I didn't find them in the limited time I could spare for searching. I remember that when he was having guest artists on a 1938 program, sponsored, I believe, by Alka-Seltzer, I wrote, suggesting that he use Billy Murray. He replied, saying he had recorded programs with both Billy and Monroe Silver the week before.

A few weeks later I was happy to hear by transcription the program on which Billy told Frank of the time he was walking near his home and met a man who thanked him for saving his life many years before. When Billy replied that he couldn't recall the life-saving exploit, the man told of having been sent by his firm to China. He almost died of homesickness and was thinking of suicide when he passed a store and heard a phonograph playing a Murray record of "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway." The homesick Yankee bought the machine and record (presumably other records as well), took them to his room and played them over and over, almost feeling that he had been transported back to Broadway. Gradually, the homesickness wore off, and he always gave Billy's record of "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway" credit for saving his life. To finish with, Billy sang the number in his own inimitable style, showing he was every bit as good as he had been when the record was made more than thirty years before. It was a memorable experience, and I was grateful to Crumit for providing it.

My next letter from Frank is undated, but was postmarked January 19, 1940. I had written that I hoped to be in New York around Labor Day for the Elbeetian Legion convention and suggested that perhaps he could use a group of the former Lone Scouts as guests on "The Battle of the Sexes" program, which, as you may remember, was one in which four men took part in a quiz program against four women. Usually, husbands competed against wives on the quiz, sponsored by Molle. Sometimes there were other divisions, but always four men opposed the same number of women. The winning lineup received wrist watches as prizes.

Frank replied:

Thanks for your very interesting letter and for the editorial you wrote. We enjoyed it very much. I'm always glad to hear from you and would like to have you on one of our programs. We couldn't use you alone, but if you knew of three other fellows in your game who were going to be in New York at the same time, I think I could fix it. We are only accepting challenges in teams of four.

We would really like to sing more, but the present craze is for questions and answers, so we stick to that formula. . . . I may go back to recording for the U. S. Record Corporation, twenty years after I first started. . . . Wish I could pick up your radio program. It sounds great to me. Be sure and let me know when you come to New York. . . . I would like to meet you and have a talk.

I'm with you in your opinion of modern songs and hope you have a very happy and successful 1940.

My opinion of modern songs, which Frank shared, was distinctly unfavorable, but if he were still living I'm sure he'd agree the average popular tune of that day was a masterpiece compared to most of the drivel being ground out now, when what Variety calls "non music" appears to have reached its all-time low. In another letter he said he'd like to shake hands with me for preferring the old popular songs to the new.

I learned that Frank and I had another taste in common. We both liked to "talk back" to radio announcers when they were being nontifical or sounding off with high pressure commercial. (That of course was before the days when I had become a radio news editor and nothing short of an Act of Congress, a major operation or a firing squad would induce me to listen willingly at home to any radio program!)

At any rate, I replied, explaining more about the Elbeetian Legion and saying it should be possible to line up teams of husbands and wives for a broadcast during the Labor Day convention period. This eventually was arranged and the program was given, but I was unable to be in New York for the occasion. My visit was postponed until October, when I spent two weeks with Billy Murray at his beautiful home in Freeport on Long Island. I also attended a meeting of New York Elbeetians (pronounced L-B-tee-ans), and the fellows who had appeared on the program enjoyed flaunting their new wrist watches before my envious eyes. One who had taken part, Charles A. Wright, then a member of the faculty of Temple University, had already written me: "We enjoyed the Molle broadcast, but were awfully sorry that we couldn't have you with us. Frank Crumit spoke of you quite affectionately."

From another source I learned that "General Julia" was bewildered because wives of Elbeetians were known as TOTAS (pronounced Toters), and it didn't seem much clearer to her when she was informed the initial letters stood for Tribe of the Accepted—a term that had been taken from the former Lone Scout organization. Frank himself commented on the program in a letter written on September 30, 1940, in reply to one from me sending birthday greetings:

Dear Jim: Thanks for your birthday good wishes. Fifty-one years have gone by and because I have no kids I suppose my slogan should be "A half-century of no progress."

We had fun with your friends, and am sorry you weren't there.

We'll be in town on October 11, making transcriptions. I should be here in the early afternoon. Drop in and have a chat.

Shortly, afterwards, I made my first trip to New York and looked forward eagerly to meeting Frank and Julia. But I was not destined to come face to face with the pair whom I regarded as dear friends. I remember driving with Billy Murray and his pal, Jimmy Martindale, to a house in which the Crumits' accompanist, Jack Shilkret, had lived, with the hope of finding out whether they were in town. But Jack either had moved or was not at home.

Then, on the night when Frank and Julia were to give their weekly broadcast, I went to the radio station where the program originated, showed the note from Frank and asked an usher if I could see him.

"You can," he drily replied, "if you can get to Hollywood in a hurry. Mr. and Mrs. Crumit went to California a few days ago."

So near, in a way, and yet so far! I didn't visit New York again before Frank's death, less than three years later, and that was the nearest I ever came to meeting him. I wrote to tell him of my disappointment, and on December 20 he wrote:

Sorry we were out West when you were in New York. We were there for three broadcasts and had a great time. I don't wonder that you liked New York. It's quite a place, but very heartless. . . . Julia wants to join me in wishing you a very Merry, Merry Christmas and the Happiest of New Years.

There is now another gap in the correspondence I have been able to find from Frank until July 7, 1943, exactly two months before his death. Letters were exchanged in the interim, but I have not come across them. My mother had decided she would like for "The Singing Sweethearts" to "dedicate" a song to her, and I had written, requesting this. Frank replied:

If I had received your card yesterday instead of today, I could have mentioned your mother's name, as we sang "Comin' In On a Wing and a Prayer" yesterday. However, I'll get her name in real soon on our request list. I'll bet you have some priceless items on your "Wax Works." (I like that title.) Best of luck.

A few days later, a number was sung for my mother, but I can't remember what it was. Frank decided he'd also like to sing one for me, and I asked him to do it on my "day off" so I could be sure to hear it. During that war period it was against security regulations to sing any requested number at a given time, for fear enemy spies might be using it as a code system, but on July 14th, Frank and Julia did sing for me "You Never Knew About Me," from a 1917 musical comedy production, "Oh Boy!" The choice was appropriate since the words were written by another friend of mine, P. G. Wodehouse, to music by Jerome Kern.

On the following day Frank wrote me this amusing description of what he went through to make that dedication:

Dear Jim: Wish you could have seen the scramble to mention your name yesterday. War-time rules forbid mentioning a name on any certain date or time, because it might send a message or be a signal or "sumpin'." I had to tell how long we have corresponded and all I know about you. Thought you'd be amused. Best to you and your "Ma."

Again, it was characteristic of Frank Crumit's thoughtfulness and consideration to go to the trouble of getting FBI clearance in order to sing a number for an unseen friend.

And now I come to the last letter I was ever to receive from Frank Crumit. But before quoting it I must catch up a couple of loose ends. In one of his 1940 letters he mentioned the likelihood of his singing for the American Record Company. The negotiations apparently fell through, but in 1938 he had settled his differences with Decca and made several excellent records, which are included in the list accompanying this article. All the eight 1938 titles are good, but my personal choices are "The Girl With the Paint On Her Face," a frivolous ditty with a weirdly haunting, plaintive melody and an excellent accompaniment by Al Duffy's Gilt-Edged Four, and "The Old Apple Tree," a rollicking burlesque of the old-time sentimental "sob song." It is a far remove from my favorite tear-jerker ballad. "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree!"

By this time Frank's voice had deepened, if the recorded quality can be trusted, from a high tenor to a baritone range. These deeper tones were even more in evidence in the delightful album he and Julia sang for Decca of their best known musical comedy hits. The album, issued in 1942, was a good seller but is now out of print, although Julia's rendition of "They Didn't Believe Me" is still available as part of a long-playing medley.

And now we come to my last letter from Frank—written on the afternoon of Labor Day, Monday, September 6, just a few hours before he suffered his fatal heart attack the next morning. I had written to tell him that George O'Connor, a popular Washington entertainer and former recording artist whom I had recently interviewed, wanted to find the sheet music of "O'Hooligan's Ball," of which Frank had made a Victor record years before. I asked if he had any idea where the music could be had. I also asked if he had any information concerning some one-time vaudeville and recording stars. In his reply, possibly the last letter he ever wrote to anyone, Frank said:

Dear Jim: Have been trying to get some dope for you. The old Empire City Quartet were Harry Tally, Harry Mayo, Harry and Irving Cooper. H. Cooper and H. Mayo are dead, I hear, and Harry Tally was running a cigar stand out in California some time ago. Joe Downing, the old monologist, is getting Irving Cooper's address for you. Downing and Joe Laurie, Jr., remember Eddie Morton as the "Singing Cop," but don't know where he'd be.

I'll keep a lookout for George O'Connor. As I remember, Donald Brian gave me the words to "O'Hooligan's Ball" and I hummed the melody to our recording orchestra. Next time I go up to Massachusetts, I'll look and see if I have the lead sheet. "Donnie" Brian is playing in "Abbie's Irish Rose" up in Boston now, I think, or soon to be.

I have been lucky in finding old records at the Liberty Music Shop, 50th Street and Madison Avenue. They specialize in finding the "oldies." Have you ever corresponded with Jerry Vogel, 112 West 44th Street, New York City? He's an expert on old songs. Jack Norworth is out on the Coast at present but should be back soon. . . Best, Frank C.

And so, on the accustomed note of helpfulness and geniality, ended my ten years correspondence with Frank Crumit. For him there was to be no trip back to Massachusetts—except that final one to the last resting place from which no one returns.

Ten years have now passed since Frank Poore Crumit's death—a period long enough to have caused him to be half-forgotten, perhaps, by thousands of Americans who were once his warm admirers. But there are thousands of others, especially collectors of his records, who have not forgotten, and will not forget, the fine artist and lovable gentleman whose art gave, and still gives, them so much pleasure. Frank's fellow Lambs still display a large oil painting of him, as their former Shepherd, in their Club at 130 West 44th Street, New York. Quentin Riggs, an Oklahoma City record collector, now doing military service in France, wrote me about seeing it last year when he had lunch at the Lambs with the famous tenor and song writer Geoffrey O'Hara.

And to this day I know of no more relaxing, soothing treat, when I am in the vein for light music, than to load my automatic record player with a stack of twenty Crumit discs and drink in that heartwarming voice mingling side-splitting humor with delicate pathos. I can hear him for hours without tiring. Few popular singers have been so signally and individually gifted.

It is my earnest wish that these notes, inadequate as they may be, will be accepted by Frank Crumit's loyal admirers, and especially by his devoted wife, Julia Sanderson Crumit, as a sincere tribute on the 64th anniversary of his birth and the tenth of his untimely death. The writing has truly been a labor of love.

Records by Frank Crumit

(Unless otherwise noted, both sides by Crumit.)

COLUMBIA 10-INCH (1920-1924)

- A1457 He'd Have to Get Under, Get Out and Get Under (remake of original 1914 version by William J. Halley) and Pussy Cat Rag (Ada Jones and Peerless Quartet)
- A1754 Little Ford Rambled Right Along (remake of original 1915 version by Arthur Fields) and Si's Been Drinking Cider (Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan)
- A2884 My Gal and Swanee (Al Jolson)
- A2915 What a Day That'll Be and Jean (Peerless Quartet)
- A2935 Oh! By Jingo and So Long Oolong
- A2940 I've Got the Profiteering Blues and Some Beautiful Morning (Al Jolson)
- A2946 Early in the Morning and In Sweet September (Al Jolson)
- A2948 Marion (You'll Soon Be Marryin' Me) and Pretty Kitty Kelly (Charles Harrison)
- A2952 Chhi Bean (acc. by Paul Biese Trio) and Bells of Monterey (Biese Trio)
- A2965 Goodbye, Dixie and Don't Take Away Those Blues
- A2973 Love Nest and Down the Trail to Home, Sweet Home (Henry Burr)
- A2981 My Little Bimbo on the Bamboo Isle and She Gives Them All the Ha, Ha, Ha (duet by Crumit and Lew Brown)
- A2982 In Old Manila (acc. by Art Hickman's Orchestra) and Cuban Moon (Hickman's Orch.)
- A3303 Jinga-Bula-Jing-Jing and Nobody to Love
- A3320 I'm Coming Back to Dixie and You, and Kentucky (Benny Davis)
- A3323 Whispering (duet by Crumit and William Davidson) and For Every Boy Who's On the Level (Crescent Trio—Charles Hart, Lewis James and Elliott Shaw)
- A3324 I Wish That I'd Been Born in Borneo and Palestine
- A3332 Margie and I'm a Lonesome Little Raindrop
- A3346 Rosie and My Gee Gee (From the Fiji Isle) (Tod Weinhold)
- A3352 Timbuctoo (acc. by Paul Biese Trio) and Rose (Biese Trio)
- A3359 Happy Hottentot (acc. by Paul Biese Trio) and Remember Me (Biese Trio)
- A3375 Home Again Blues and Ding-a-Ring-a-Ring (Al Jolson)
- A3388 No Wonder I'm Blue and I Used to Love You But It's All Over Now
- A3406 Nestle in Your Daddy's Arms and Pucker Up and Whistle
- A3407 Hortense and Oh, Sweet Amelia
- A3415 All By Myself and Madeline
- A3430 Mimi (acc. by Paul Biese Trio) and Oh Me! Oh My! (acc. by Biese Trio)
- A3431 Three O'Clock in the Morning and Moonlight
- A3459 Frankie and Johnny (acc. by Paul Biese Trio) and I Ain't Nobody's Darling (acc. by Paul Biese Trio)
- A3475 Sweet Lady and You're Just the Type for a Bungalow
- A3477 Dapper Dan and Ten Little Fingers and Ten Little Toes (Irving Kaufman)
- A3521 Da Da Da, My Darling and When Francis Dances With Me
- A3530 Delia and In My Heart, On My Mind
- A3543 Boo Hoo Hoo and Sally, Irene and Mary
- A3573 Ha! Ha! Ha! and She's Mine, All Mine
- A3587 Walkiki (I Hear You Calling Me) and Hawaiian Rainbow (Vernon Dalhart)

A3613 Down On Avenue A and Mama Loves Papa, Does Papa Love Mama?
 A3625 Sheik of Avenue B and My Yiddish Mamma (Irving Kaufman)
 A3626 Stumbling and Coo-Coo (Al Jolson)
 A3651 Pinkie, The Flapper Song and By the Riverside
 A3666 Nineteenth Hole and In My Home Town
 A3699 My Honey's Lovin' Arms and I Wish I Knew (both acc. by Ray Miller's Novelty Orchestra)
 A3705 True Blue Sam and Toot, Toot, Tootsie (Al Jolson)
 A3715 Where the Bamboo Babies Grow and I'm Through Shedding Tears Over You
 A3744 If You Don't Think So You're Crazy and Lost (A Wonderful Girl) (Al Jolson)
 A3785 I Gave You Up Just Before You Threw Me Down and Don't Say Good-bye (piano and banjo acc. in both by Phil Ohman and Harry Reser)
 A3812 Jimbo, Jambo and Wanita (Al Jolson)
 A3827 Everything is K. O. in K-Y and Sweet One
 A3932 Sweet One and That's My Baby
 A3933 When You Walked Out Someone Else Walked Right In and Waitin' for the Evenin' Mail (Al Jolson)
 A3968 Stingo, Stungo and That Big Blonde Mama (Al Jolson)
 A3984 Oh! Min and You've Simply Got Me Cuckoo (Al Jolson)
 A3997 Old-Fashioned Girl and My Home Town in Kansas
 26-D Say It With a Ukulele and Ko-Ko-Mo (Billy Jones and Ernest Hare)

VICTOR 10-INCH (1924-1932)

19236 Sweet Alice and Oh, Baby
 19269 Mindin' My Business and Linger Awhile (Marcia Freer and Lewis James) 19275 Where the Lazy Daisies Grow and You're In Kentucky Sure as You're Born
 19365 Ida! Sweet as Apple Cider and Roll Them Roly Boly Eyes
 19437 How Come You Do Me Like You Do? and Knock at the Door
 19468 Buckeye Battle Cry and Hi-Hi-Ohio
 19469 Oh! Didn't It Rain! and No One Knows What It's All About 19549 Get Yourself a Broom and Insufficient Sweetie 19582 Cross Word Mama (You Puzzle Me) and Why Couldn't It Be Poor Little Me?
 (Following titles electrically recorded)
 19701 My Sweetie Turned Me Down and Ukulele Lady
 19739 I Married the Bootlegger's Daughter and How's Your Folks and My Folks? (Happiness Boys—Billy Jones and Ernest Hare)
 19774 Old Uncle Bill and Sonya
 19777 I'se Goin' From the Cotton Field and Parlor is a Pleasant Place to Sit In Sunday Night
 19928 I'm Sittin' On Top of the World and Sweet Child (Gene Austin)
 19937 I Wish't I Was in Peoria and Show Me the Way to Go Home
 19945 Billy Boy and Grandfather's Clock
 20030 Thanks for the Buggy Ride and My Bundle of Love (Gene Austin)
 20124 Girl Friend and Mountain Greenery
 20137 Pretty Little Dear and Get Away, Old Man, Get Away
 20462 Crazy Words, Crazy Tune and High, High, High Up in the Hills
 20486 My Lady and Sunny Disposition
 20715 Frankie and Johnny and Abdul Abulbul Amir
 20919 Bye-Bye, Pretty Baby and Some Day You'll Say "O. K." (Jim Miller and Charlie Farrell)
 21029 Da Da Da, My Darling and 'S' Wonderful
 21091 I Miss You, Lize and That Old Wooden Rocker
 21098 Wake Nododemus and Lonesome Road (Gene Austin)
 21108 Bohunkus and Kingdom Coming
 21430 Song of the Prune and Down in de Cane Brake
 21466 No News; or What Killed the Dog? (remake of original 1909 version by Nat M. Wills) and The Three Trees (remake of 1912 version by Tom McNaughton)
 21579 Dolan's Poker Party and O'Hooligan's Ball
 21668 Jack is Every Inch a Sailor and Bride's Lament

21735 Gay Caballero and I Learned About Women From Her 21899 Road to Vicksburg and King of Borneo
 22021 High Silk Hat and a Gold-Top Walking Cane and Mountains Ain't No Place for Bad Men
 22154 Return of the Gay Caballero and A Tale of the Ticker
 22323 Donald, the Dub and And Then He Took Up Golf
 22423 Down By the Railroad Track and Around the Corner
 22482 Return of Abdul Abulbul Amir and I'm Bettin' the Roll on Roamer 22579 Three Little Words and I Miss a Little Miss 22630 Would You Like to Take a Walk? (duet with Julia Sanderson) and One Little Raindrop
 22859 I'm a Specialist and Lady of My Dreams
 22943 Rhymes and Plink! Plonk! I Pluck My Guitar
 23515 Foolish Facts and What Kind of a Noise Annoys an Oyster?
 24091 Granny's Old Armchair and Gum Tree Canoe
 24092 Little Brown Jug and Life is Only a Merry-Go-Round
 V-40214 I Don't Work for a Living and Tramp, Tramp, Tramp, Keep On a' Trampin'

(NOTE—Crumit also sang the refrain in Victor No. 21647, "Just a Night for Meditation," by Nat Shilkret and the Victor Orchestra, coupled with "If You Don't Love Me," by Johnny Hamp's Serenaders. He was an end man and sang "Abraham Lincoln Jones" on 12-inch Record 35961, "Minstrel Show of 1929." Crumit was also master of ceremonies on a 10-inch Victor dealers' demonstration record, DL-5-B, issued in 1931 to give a sampling of the new long playing records.)

Crumit records, pressed from Victor matrices and issued, 1926-1934, by the Gramophone Company, Ltd., of England. (The last five double-faced records in this series were never issued in the United States.)

B2293 I'm Sittin' On Top of the World and Sweet Child (Gene Austin)
 B2325 Billy Boy and Thanks for the Buggy Ride
 B2526 Girl Friend and Mountain Greenery
 B2620 Bye, Bye, Pretty Baby and Some Day You'll Say "O. K." (Jim Miller—Charlie Farrell)
 B2712 Bohunkus and Kingdom Coming
 B2787 Song of the Prune and Down in de Cane Brake
 B2859 No News and The Three Trees
 B2921 Bride's Lament and You're a Real Sweetheart (Sam Coslow)
 B3054 Gay Caballero and Jack is Every Inch a Sailor
 B3065 Road to Vicksburg and King of Borneo
 B3208 Abdul Abulbul Amir and Get Away, Old Man, Get Away
 B3234 Dolan's Poker Party and O'Hooligan's Ball
 B3269 Return of the Gay Caballero and Frankie and Johnny B3419 Donald the Dub and And Then He Took Up Golf
 B3528 Around the Corner and Down By the Railroad Track
 B3569 I'm Bettin' the Roll On Roamer Return of Abdul Abulbul Amir
 B3722 Three Little Words and I Miss a Little Miss B3833 One Little Raindrop and Would You Like to Take a Walk? (duet with Julia Sanderson)
 B3883 Foolish Facts and What Kind of a Noise Annoys an Oyster?
 B4059 Granny's Old Arm-Chair and Little Brown Jug
 B4102 Lady of My Dreams and I'm a Specialist
 B4331 I'm In Love With Susan and Grandson of Abdul Abulbul Amir
 B4356 They're Always Together and Vegetable Blues
 B4441 My Girl Ran Away—parts 1 and 2
 B8032 Antonio Pasquale Ramonio and Wrap Me Up in My Tarpaulin
 B8075 King of Zulu and Riding Down From Bangor

DECCA RECORDS BY FRANK CRUMIT 10-INCH (1934-1942)

113 Gay Caballero and Frankie and Johnny
 114 Abdul Abulbul Amir and Gus Edwards Medley
 205 Harry Von Tilzer Medley—parts 1 and 2
 313 Pig Got Up and Slowly Walked Away and The Dashing Marine 475 There's No One With Endurance Like the Man Who Sells Insurance and Whoa, Josephine 1697 Josephine and Connie's Got Connections in Connecticut
 1708 Old Apple Tree and I Can't Stand Sitting in a Cell
 1729 Sissy and Nettie is the Nitwit of the Networks
 1749 Girl With the Paint On Her Face and Sunday in the Park
 Decca Album 245, "Frank Crumit and Julia Sanderson in a Group of Famous Song Hits From Their Best Known Musical Comedies":
 18154 Sweet Lady and Hello! I've Been looking for You
 18155 Same Sort of Girl and We'll Never Grow Old
 18156 You're Here and I'm Here and Bring Me a Rose (solo by Miss Sanderson)
 18157 They Didn't Believe Me and The Girl With a Brogue (both solos by Julia Sanderson) . . . "They Didn't Believe Me" is currently available on Decca Long-Playing Record DL 8019, "Memorable Moments in Musical Comedy."

BRIEFS

From the glittering world of tinsel and film, to the down-to-earth capes and sounds on our Eastern Coast, the people of this great land have hobbies of some kind.

Lovely Marta Toren, a Hollywood actress, collects photos of the actors with whom she has worked. She also collects miniature animals.

Dr. Ralph G. Bussler, Boston,
 Mass., makes toy soldiers of the Civil War period. He has sold more than 5,000 to collectors, hobby shops, and stores.

Another Californian, Edward C.
 Schmidt, has a fabulous collection of pencils. There are around 3,500 specimens, and one which he made himself that measures eleven feet, ten and one-half inches long.

On and on it goes! Old ballot collections, hand carved pipes, rabbit figurines, Oriental art, tape measures disguised as figurines; everything from the weird to the unique;
 antique to ultra modern.

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By MOSORIAK & HECKERT
 INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

$5.00 Postpaid — Insured

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Albert Benzler

By JIM WALSH

NOTE—This article is dedicated to two of my friends. One is Clarence A. Ferguson, of Merrill, Wis., a veteran dealer in Edison products, who was also a friend of Albert Benzler's and who for years has urged me to write a sketch of that versatile musician's life. The other is Eugene Carbaugh, Jr., an attorney and business man, who recently moved to Roanoke, Virginia, from Newark, New Jersey, the city where Albert Benzler was born and died. Without Mr. Carbaugh's help I still would not have enough information about Benzler to put my notes into print.

From the standpoint of obtaining adequate information, this has been one of the most difficult tasks I have ever undertaken.

Although at the time of writing—June 2, 1953—Albert Benzler had been dead less than twenty years and even though he was a noted musician in his heyday, the details of his life have become so obscure that I have found it well nigh impossible to obtain sufficient data on which to base an article concerning him.

There are still gaps in my information. I don't know the names of Benzler's parents, whether he had any brothers or sisters, any of the details of his early life or whether his second wife, who survived him, is living. I don't even know what the middle initial, W., in his name stands for. But HOBBIES readers are chiefly interested in artists' recording careers, and thanks to investigation that has extended over a good many years, I hope to write a passable account of Albert Benzler's achievements.

For a time my chief stumbling block was the refusal of either the Bureau of Vital Statistics in Newark or the New Jersey State Health Department at Trenton to send me a copy of Benzler's death certificate. This was refused on the ground that I, not being a relative of the deceased person, had no legal right to a certificate.

Then, fortunately for me, Eugene Carbaugh, Jr., a native of Kansas City, Mo., and a graduate of the University of Virginia, came into my life. Gene Carbaugh arrived in Roanoke as head of a group which is building two huge parking garages to help ease the city's traffic problems. He and his associates had already constructed a similar garage, which is in successful operation at Newark, where Gene lived for a good many years before coming to Roanoke and liking Southwest Virginia so much he decided to make it his home.

One day, as part of my news editing work at Radio-TV Station WSL, I phoned to Mr. Carbaugh for information concerning the first parking garage. Then, with what has since struck me as a considerable amount of gall, I asked if he would do me a big favor the next time he went to Newark. I explained that for years I had been trying to assemble information enough to write a biographical sketch about a musician, Albert Benzler, who had died in Original copies of all the big hits of the past 50 years for sale. Call, 'phone (MA-6-0841), or send 10c stamps or coin for big list.

OLD POPULAR SONGS

DEAN SNYDER

102 S. Main Los Angeles, 12
s45c

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

OF

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive free of charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

Single rarities and entire collections purchased for cash

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Room 1135, DuPont Bldg., Miami 32, Florida

Established 1938

etc

MUSIC BOXES

From December 15th to February 10th my shop will be closed. However, my mail will be forwarded and I will answer any important letters pertaining to music boxes, etc. After Feb. 15th, I will again be of service to you.

GEORGE A. BIDDEN

Barrington, Rhode Island

etc

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES

Fine pieces ready for DELIVERY
Swiss and Disc types, wide price range
Send for lists

Expert repairing, prompt service, work guaranteed.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. Pelham, New York
Originally established in Switzerland in 1826.

etc

MUSICAL MUSEUM

of

Deansboro, N. Y.

Visitors are invited to play our restored musical antiques.

OPERATED BY

THE OLD MUSIC STORE

(Please enclose stamp when writing)

etc

Newark some years before, but had been stymied because of the bureaucratic refusal to let me have a copy of his death certificate.

My plight seemed to bring out the Good Samaritan in Gene Carbaugh, a warm-hearted gentleman by nature. He swore that if there was a copy of that certificate in Essex county, I should have it. Since he is an extremely busy man of large affairs, I really didn't expect him to think any more about it, but I didn't fully comprehend Mr. Carbaugh's energy, enthusiasm and zeal in what he considered a good cause. Not long afterward, he called me up and said he had inquired at Newark, only to be referred, as I had been, to State headquarters at Trenton. This busy man had then driven to Trenton, solely with the big-hearted desire to help my research work. He was told a copy of the death certificate would be immediately sent to me and that it might also be possible to send one of Benzler's birth certificate.

Several weeks passed, but the certificate didn't come. Evidently some Higher Up had again intervened to keep the harmless information contained in that printed form away from me. But now Gene Carbaugh was getting mad at being balked. He went back to Newark and this time, thanks to his peculiar powers of persuasion and his willingness to sign an affidavit, he got a copy of that death record and gleefully presented it to me one night when I had nearly resigned hope of ever seeing it.

II What the Death Certificate Says

After I obtained the certificate I found that it contains disappointingly meager information, but it does list Albert Benzler's birthdate as November 13, 1867, and the day of death as February 19, 1934. His birthplace is given as Newark and the place where he died as 117 Bank street. Benzler was 66 years, three months and six days old when he succumbed to what the certificate calls "sudden death in a grocery store." I believe, however, that 117 Bank street was his home address rather than that of the grocery. The city medical examiner, C. G. Berardinelli, set down the cause of death as "hypertensive cardio-renal disease." A physician who happened to be with Mr. Carbaugh when he handed me the certificate interpreted this as meaning a combination of heart and kidney disease involving hyper-tension and resulting in a blood clot that was the cause of Benzler's sudden passing. The certificate, from the office of Newark's City Clerk, Harry S. Reichenstein, also says Benzler was married but doesn't give his wife's name.

III Help From Clarence Ferguson

Clarence Ferguson, as a long-time friend and admirer of Albert Benzler's, has been able to give me some help. When I wrote him the glad news that Eugene Carbaugh had brought me the long wanted death certificate, my Wisconsin friend, although grieving because of the recent death of his wife, found time to reply:

Dear Friend Jim: Glad to hear that you have a little more on Al W. Benzler. Sorry it doesn't give more. For a fellow who was as well known as Al was, it is hard to believe his life is such a blackout. The Orange Lodge of Elks should know him well, as he was an old member, and the Union of Newark should know him as he was one who started it. It is odd that his wife's name is not listed. She was his second wife. His first passed away some years ago. The second one did not know him in his recording days.

He started out as a doctor and went through school, but gave it up for music. He played in the orchestra in one of the theaters in Newark for years, after the U. S. Phonograph Company closed out.

In an earlier letter, Mr. Ferguson had written:

After Al died his second wife sold the home. Al lived in Newark about two blocks from the Orange and Newark city line... I used to see his name a lot in the Elks paper, back around 1929-30. My father was an Elk. I have a letter from Al in which he lambasts the Edison Company. He was to have been the musical director, but the know-it-

Wanted: Early American Church Music Books, mostly prior to 1830.

Books wanted by such authors: William Billings; Supply Belcher; Jeremiah Ingalls, John Tufts; Timothy Swan; Stephen Janks; John Wyeth; Asahel Benham; Samuel Metcalf; Oliver Shaw, etc.

J. D. Hartzler
Willman, Iowa

jax

A belated wish to everyone for Season's Greetings and a Happy New Year

In the coming year I stand ready to serve you with almost every type of record from 1896 on, Victor, Columbia and other labels. These records are mostly in excellent condition and you will be surprised how well they play. An example of the rare items are a Geo. M. Cohan, 10 Russ Colombos, 12 Ben Bernies, many Al Jolson's, Eddie Cantors, Van & Schenk, Nora Bayes and others. In the operatic field many Carusos, Schumann-Heink, Farrar, Galli-Curci, Nellie Melba and others as well as the great instrumental artists of past and present.

Let me choose this opportunity to thank all my satisfied customers who have written and told me how much they enjoyed the records I have sold them and invite new ones to send me their wants. In sending for lists please specify what kind of record you want as I have over 50,000, and what artist or outfit you want. This will expedite my sending you lists.

AL McREA, Sr.

Box 182,

Westville, New Jersey

all "musical clique" put a wrench in the machinery.

Some of the points touched on by Clarence Ferguson call for a bit of comment. I wrote to the Elks Lodge, but received no reply. My luck with the musician's union was somewhat better. On March 13, 1951, Matty Franklin, secretary of Local 16, wrote:

Dear Mr. Walsh: Albert Benzler was made a member of Local 16, A. F. of M., Newark, prior to 1917. We have no records beyond that date. He played for many years at the Empire Theater, then called Miner's... He was a member of the Board of Directors of Local 16 for many years. I do not know his relatives. Perhaps Mr. Leo Cluesmann, 220

JIM WALSH WANTS TO BUY

Old phonograph record catalogs and supplements (mostly prior to 1925); back copies of phonograph publications—Talking Machine World, Talking Machine News, the Gramophone, the Phonogram, Diamond Points, Edison Phonograph and Amberola Monthly, Voice of the Victor, etc.—photographs, advertisements, and all sort of reference material dealing with the history and development of sound recording that will provide background information for

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Please do not send me lists of records for sale. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. Address:

JIM WALSH

Box 131

Vinton, Va.

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION

RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
the following labels:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH, DE LUXE & GRAND PRIZE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS, such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G. & T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.
- ★ Old record catalogs.

Persons offering material not specified above or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

Mt. Pleasant Avenue, Newark, could furnish some further information.

I wrote to Mr. Cluesmann, who is secretary of the American Federation of Musicians, but received only a briefly courteous reply: "... Regarding the late Albert Benzler, regret that I am unable to furnish the information you desire. I have delayed this reply in hopes that somewhere I might obtain some information, but to no avail."

The librarian of the Newark News informed he couldn't find an obituary notice of Benzler in the paper's "morgue." And a check of the Newark and Orange directories revealed no mention of Mrs. Benzler, who, if she is still living, may have remarried. Mr. Ferguson's references to Benzler's criticising Edison and to the "closing out" of the U. S. Record Company will be explained at the proper places in my account of Benzler's recording career. He appears to have been associated with only two phonograph firms - Edison (then known as the National Phonograph Company) for ten years or more, and the concern which made U. S. Indestructible cylinders, from 1909 to 1913. When U. S. went out of business, Benzler, who was its musical director, the post he had expected to hold with Edison, ceased to be active as a recording artist. He is almost unique in that he apparently never made a disc record, unless he played in some band or orchestra. As far as I know, his solo work never was recorded on flat records—but I have long since learned not to make dogmatic statements on any subject dealing with the phonograph industry!

IV Early Recording Days

Just when Albert Benzler's first association with Thomas A. Edison's record making activities began is something I haven't learned. However, he appears in that famous group photo of forty-two Edison artists taken near the Edison laboratory in 1900. He is No. 22 in the picture and is described as a pianist. Although only in his early thirties, he looked, judged by present-day standards, considerably older, and to me resembles a studious German professor. The cast of his face seems unmistakably Germanic. His expression is thoughtfully serious, he wears a mustache and his eyes are shaded by heavy spectacles. If he were known in advance as a musician, he might easily enough be taken as a scholarly exponent of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms rather than as a specialist in ragtime piano playing who had obtained much of his professional experience in a burlesque house.

Although Benzler is shown in this 1900 picture, I have not been able to find his name in any Edison record catalog issued before the middle of 1903. His first solo record apparently was a two-minute cylinder, 8462, "Alita (Wild Flower)," issued in August, 1903, and it was an orchestra bells solo rather than a piano number. Throughout his career, it was a player of bells and xylophone rather than as pianist that the versatile Al was best known to the Edison public.

However, Benzler's greatest service to Edison from the time he first became a member of the recording staff, back in the '90's, was as a piano player. Just how he happened to join Edison is not known to me, but it seems obvious enough that his playing at a Newark theater brought him to the company's attention. The large city of Newark is, so to speak, in the front yard of the comparatively small town of West Orange, where Edison records were made, and consequently Benzler's engagement was only natural.

Just as Bach, Beethoven and Brahms are known as the three "B's" of fine music, so Edison had as accompanists five pianists whose names began with B. They included Fred Bachman, an excellent musician who was born in Europe and obtained his training there; Frank P. Banta, who also directed bands and orchestras and died in 1904 at the early age of 33; C. A. A. Booth; John F. Bruckhardt, who, like Benzler, made bells and xylophone solos and continued to be an Edison staff member through most of the Diamond Disc period; and, of course, Benzler. Bachman, Banta and Booth also worked for other companies. Billy Murray has told me that Fred Bachman was his accompanist when he made his first records for Victor. Booth made one or two Victor piano solos.

Actually, Edison's fondness for pianists whose names began with B. was not restricted to these five. Karel Bondman was the first master of the keyboard to make four-minute Amberol cylinder records. Until Sergei Rachmaninoff began recording for Edison in 1918, the only Edison disc piano solos were by Albert Spalding's accompanist, Andre Benoist. Charles Albert Baker played accompaniments Edison records by Arthur Middleton and other noted artists, and Frank E. Banta, son of the Frank P. Banta already mentioned, occasionally did Edison accompaniment work and played the piano passages in the 1928 record of George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" by the Edisonians. Come to think of it, a young lady named Bessie Brookhurst accompanied two 1928 clarinet solos by Felix Vevier. When Benzler's phonograph career began, all vocal records had piano or occasionally, banjo accompaniments. Most of the piano accompaniments might as well have been played by the banjo, for the recording was nearly always very bad and the piano came out more like a banjo with a pitch waver than anything else. Reproduced electrically, Edison two-minute cylinders sound much better than discs of the same period in most classes of music, but the discs beat them on piano tone and Victor and Columbia band and orchestra records are usually better than the contemporary cylinders. The method of recording the piano was crude. The instrument stood on a platform raised about four feet above the floor and the recording horn was pointed at the piano's back, focused on the middle and treble notes. No effort was made to record the bass, which came out only as a blur. No pedaling was allowed, and the performer played with a thumping, staccato touch. After the Diamond Discs were introduced, Edison piano recording was far better than that of any other company and was virtually perfect from about 1921 on.

Edison himself in the 1920's attributed the superior quality of his piano recordings to the "advantage" he enjoyed because of having defective hearing. He said: "The phonograph never would have been what it now is and for a long time has been if I had not been deaf. Being deaf, my knowledge of sounds had been developed till it was extensive and I knew that I was not, and no one else was, getting overtones... Deafness, pure and simple, was responsible for the experimentation which perfected the (Edison Diamond Disc) machine. It took me twenty years to make a perfect record of piano music because it is full of overtones. I now can do it—just because I'm deaf."

A small red-bound book, "The C. W. N. Handbook of the Phonograph," written by C. W. Noyes and published in 1901, before the gold moulded process was introduced, contains an interesting drawing, showing three singers—Grace Spencer, Arthur Collins and Joe Natus (the latter said by Clarence Ferguson to have been related to Benzler)—"making records of their popular selections listed among the trios." When I received this book, I was astonished by this picture because I had never before heard that Grace Spencer (Mrs. Grace Spencer Doolittle, who died, aged 80, in New York on August 13, 1942) had sung with Collins and Natus. Her trio work was supposed to have been restricted to singing with Harry Macdonough and William F. Hookey in the Lyric Trio after Estella Louise Mann left that organization, and I have never seen any Edison catalog in which Spencer-Collins-Natus records are listed.

The pianist, sitting on an elevated "throne," with his back to the singers, is probably Benzler. He unmistakably is shown in another illustration of Byron G. Harlan singing into several horns. Harlan used to maintain he was the first singer to record with an orchestral accompaniment instead of the piano, and

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By MOSORIAK & HECKERT

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

$5.00 Postpaid — Insured

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

within a few years after this picture was made the orchestra took the piano's place almost entirely. But Benzler continued to be a useful man in the Edison recording laboratories as a rehearsal specialist. Singers would run over their numbers with him at the piano before they sang into the horn with an orchestral accompaniment. The December 15, 1906, Talking Machine World contains an article devoted to an account of the National Phonograph Company's recording studios, then in the Knickerbocker Building at Fifth Avenue and 16th street, New York, and one of the eight pictures shows Benzler trying a number with a singer who may be Billy Murray. In another picture, the artist making a record with orchestra accompaniment is unmistakably John Young, while one singing with a piano background may be Albert Campbell.

V Some Anecdotes of Benzler

Speaking of Harlan, his recording associates used to get a lot of fun out of the genial tenor's poor memory. He could never remember the words of a song, no matter how often he sang it, and always had to have either the music in his hands or the words printed in big letters on a large sheet of cardboard, propped against the back of the piano. On one occasion—probably during the concert given early in 1911 as a memorial tribute to Frank C. Stanley—he was singing "Two Little Baby Shoes," to Benzler's accompaniment. As usual, the words were printed on the cardboard. Then Benzler decided the audience wasn't hearing enough piano tone, and opened the top of the instrument. This caused the cardboard to fall into the footlights, and burn. Poor Harlan, the words completely gone, stood helpless, staring blankly, while his friends back stage went into hysterics. After a while, they gained enough control to troop onto the stage and sing the refrain of the number, to Harlan's infinite relief.

A former member of the Edison staff has given me some recollections of Benzler that help to bring out the human side of the man. He says: "I know nothing of Benzler's music background or intimate items of his career, except that he played in and around Newark and was quite popular with the band and orchestra leaders locally.

"Benzler was a character. He was our house pianist until about 1909 and was a good musician, playing different instruments, including bells and xylophone. He made an old wax recording of a tune called 'Violets' with variations that was one of the first big sellers of piano records. A good piano record was hard to make—they always sounded tinpanny. Later, of course, with new techniques we got fairly good results."

Here I interrupt my friend's reminiscences to say that this Edison piano solo, No. 8394, was originally recorded in 1903 by Frank P. Banta, but was re-recorded in 1907 by Benzler. This was probably done, not because of defects in the original master but to take advantage of slight improvements in recording procedures. When Edison first began experimenting with non-breakable cylinders as a prelude to developing the Blue Amberol, the company made a white unbreakable copy of the Banta record of "Violets" as a souvenir for his widow. The younger Banta, himself a better known pianist than his father, displayed it at the 1948 "John Bieling Day" party. The piano record was a "transcription" of the popular song by Ellen Wright—"transcription" meaning that the music was rearranged to be played entirely in the higher keys. Now back to the former Edison man:

Benz used to play at "Waldman's" opera house in Newark—a burlesque theater—and he always claimed that was where he got a knowledge of so many tunes, and where he learned to fake the accompaniments. Some of the performers did a lot of "ad lib" singing and the pianist had to be ready for it, and Benz certainly was.

We also had another pianist in the '90's—his name was Bachmann—and he and Benz were always playing jokes on each other. I am passing on an in-

RECORDS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o 120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought. — E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o 122511

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: Collectors' items to just good "listening". Large, constantly changing stock. See for yourself! Write, or visit. We Buy Collections. — Record Collectors Service, 530 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. ja3445

RARE VOCAL RECORDS: Treasured performances by the greatest artists available at reasonable prices. Gadsaki, Renaud, Sembrich, Bonci, Tetrazzini, etc. Write for interesting free lists. All inquiries promptly answered. — George Pluck, Waterloo Village, Grass Lake, Mich. mh3065

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 42 Church St., Norwich, Conn. mh3084

THOUSANDS OF USED RECORDS, all varieties. Send wants. Stanley Brile, 3914 Van Buren, Culver City, Calif. ja3652

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. my6238

FOR SALE: Regina Symphonium, Stella, Mira, Olympic discs. — Harry Brody, 1972 72nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y. mh124201

Fifty years of popular vocal records; Monarch, Victor, Grand Prize, Columbia and many others. Every Pioneer Recording Artist represented in fine condition at the astounding price of 50 cents each. Send for free "Pops" lists.—Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. ja32301

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, cylinder records, catalogs, small horns, recorders, reproducers and old flat records over 40 years old. Bought, sold and exchanged. — A. Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. ja6698

HUNDREDS OF IMPORTED cutout vocals rare Gold-n Age operatics—G&T, Fonotipia, etc., hard to get Music Hall, musical comedy and personality records, unusual band and orchestral items, all may be found on our free mailing lists. Write today—Ross Court & Co. (Canada), 121 Simcoe Street, Toronto, Ont. f66351

RARE OLD RECORDS: Write for sales lists. Operatic, vocal, instrumental, popular, jazz. Collector's items.—Delano, 349 Lindenwood, Ambler, Penna. ja3403

FOR SALE: Edison cylinder phonographs with horns, $25. Edison Amberol machine (built-in horn), $25. 1 Columbia (disc) machine with wooden horn, write. Shipped Express collect. Send stamp for list of records—cylinder or disc to—Connors' Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. mh3656

PHONOGRAPH RECORD COLLECTION for sale. Consisting of Classical, Jazz, Bop, Sweet Dance, Collector's Items, and Limited Editions. In this collection are approximately 20,000 - 78 rpm, 4,000 - 45 rpm, and 6,000 - LP's. 95 percent of collection in new condition. Bargain Price - $20,000.00. Also will include parts for many record shelves and a P. A. system if wanted. No lists available, but inspection invited by appointment. Write—B. Shirar, 1450 Van Ness Ave., San Francisco, 9, Calif. ja32111

THE LITTLE MICE SPEAK: "The tunes were so wonderful, we ran to the village square." The wise old Pied Piper knew his music, and knew what to play. The irresistible notes reached every little crevice in old Hammelin Town, the little mice could not help, but follow on to the land of dreams. And so it is with the notes that come from the old original discs, recorded by the Great Singers of the past. From the magic little sound crevices, come the golden tones, the like of which will never be found in modern re-issues, re-recording, and LPs. Record collectors jump with ecstasy at the sight of those old original recordings. The desire to get them is boundless, and the true record collector will not rest until he finally owns them. We can fulfill those desires, and make the lot of every record collector, whether beginner or advanced, a very happy one. Let us be friends, write—Record Treasures, 740 E. 183rd St., New York 57, N. Y. ja38362

SEND FOR LIST of old Red Seal records, fine condition, $1 up.—Corner Shop, 450 Granite Avenue, E. Milton, Mass. ja1061

Auction Sales: Rare and cut-out vocal (G. & T., Zonophone, Polydor) and instrumental records. Free lists. —Arthur May, 85 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn 26, N. Y. mh128022

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Edison, Columbia, Victor phonographs. Collections bought. Reproducers, cylinder records. Describe—price. —Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. mh6215

SPEECH, phonetics, language, dialect records. Also, private recordings of voices of ordinary people.—Howie Shayer, 32 Brighton Tenth Path, Brooklyn, N. Y. ja3023

Attention Collectors: Rare operatic vocal records at auction. Send for free interesting lists — C. Brown, 1375 East 18th St., Brooklyn 30, N. Y. av3825

WANTED: Transcriptions, Sunday Serenade programs, Air-shots, "armed forces recordings, etc. by "Sammy Kaye," also transcriptions, Air-shots armed forces recordings etc. by "Ink Spots,"—Paul Adams, 30 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. je6299 cident that was told me about 1902. It seems both Benz and Bach used to take off their shoes and wear slippers when playing. The shoes were left at the side of the pianos so as to be handy when they were ready to quit. It is told that one day Benz drove a nail through the soles of Bach's shoes and fastened them to the floor. When Bach finished he got up from the piano, dropped off his slippers and slid one foot into a shoe. When he tried to raise the shoe to tie it he couldn't budge it. Then he found it nailed and then there was a wild man.

In 1908 or 1909 Benzler left us to go into the record business with a couple of others. One of them was Frank Hofbauer, our experimental mechanic. They made a four-minute record—the U. S. Everlasting—but they did not last long. After they busted up, Hofbauer went with Brunswick and was one of their recording men. He got up the idea of using a continuing groove at the end of the regular disc record groove. This groove made a couple more turns and ended in a circle. The idea was that after the record was played you did not have to jump up to raise the reproducer; it just continued in the extra grooves until it hit the circle.

It is this eccentric or run-out groove that makes automatic record changers possible today.

When the New York Edison recording studios were moved to 79 Fifth Avenue on February 1, 1908, we had a couple of studio pianos on one truck, and Benzler went along to see that they were handled right. When we got to the building and got one of the pianos on the freight elevator, Benz lifted the lid and started playing on the trip to the eighteenth floor, then went down for the second one and also played going up. When they got to the top the elevator operator remarked to Benz, "Any man who can play the piano like you is a d—chump to stick to the moving business." Benz got a great kick out of this observation.

Benzler lived at the boundary line between Newark and East Orange—think it was 17th street, near Central Avenue—and in East Orange. Harvey Emmons, one of our recording technicians who used to make chimes records (he also recorded under the name of Henry Nesbit) at one time was a tenant of Benzler. Most of this neighborhood is now a negro one. Most of Benz's old pals have passed on. We have many stories of him, but not details of his background. Benz was a member of the Musicians' Union in Newark. Besides playing in the orchestra at Waldman's, he also played in Proctor's and other theaters, and in local bands. Most of his outside work was at night, and he had days free for recording.

Benz had a daughter, Viola, who married. Don't recall her marriage name nor if she is still living.

When I first came with the Company, the elder Frank Banta was with us, but because of illness he had to quit and passed away a short time later. I believe the studio bought a bunch of his music from his widow, but this has gone with all the rest of our music and arrangements. I don't recall his son playing for us, but I did hear of him—many of the singers used to tell about him playing accompaniments when they recorded elsewhere. You refer to his ability to play accompaniments without benefit of sheet music, and another one that could do this was Al Benzler. All you had to do was give him a hint of the words or tune and he went ahead and played it. He said he learned when he played in the burlesque house. On the same lines, Eugene Jaudas and Justus Ring staged competitions during waiting times when records were being made. Both played violin and one would start a tune, play a few bars, and the other would have to pick it up and continue for a few more bars. They didn't use current tunes, but tried more or less unknown ones. The idea was to get something the other couldn't play. Some of the other musicians listening couldn't follow and admitted it, but I don't know that Jaudas or Ring ever got stuck. One had got his training at Tony Pastor's and the other at Koster and Bial's.

This really happened. We were recording a song and in one part chimes were to be heard in the distance for three or four bars. To get the distant effect we had placed the chime stand by the door in an adjacent room with the door partly closed. After everything was set we started on the last master—but when the chimes were supposed to ring there was no sound. Walter Miller, who happened to be in the recording room at the time, looked behind the door to see what was wrong, and there was Benz in a chair fast asleep. After waking him we started and finished the master O. K. Miller didn't bawl Benz out, but the ribbing he got from the singers and musicians for a long time after didn't make Benz too happy.

VI Benzler's Edison Cylinders

Albert Benzler's activities as a recorder of Edison bell and xylophone solos do not call for extended comment. Before he began making orchestra bells records in 1903, the Edison bells soloist was Edward F. Rubsam, a Newark musician who soon afterwards became an exclusive Columbia artist and played in the Columbia band and orchestra a good many years. Charles P. Lowe, who seems to have been the pioneer of all xylophone record makers, had played for Edison in the '90's. He was succeeded by J. Frank Hopkins, and Benzler in turn took Hopkins' place. Many of the Hopkins titles were popular, but by 1908 Benzler had remade them all. Among these were "Down Where the Wurzbürger Flows Medley" (8412), "I Have Grown So Used to You" (8005) and "Mr. Dooley Medley" (8366). Benzler's original recordings were of the same type, mostly collections of popular songs, of which No. 8931, "Come Take a Trip in My Airship Medley" and 9044, "Down in Blossom Row Medley," are typical, and a sprinkling of marches. His bell solos were less of a strictly popular nature, and he and "Henry Nesbit" made two bells and chime duets—8912, "Monastery Bells," and 8956, "A Summer Dream." Benzler and James W. Hager also played a very popular bells and xylophone duet version of Theodore Morse's great 1904 hit, "Blue Bell."

In January, 1907, the second Edison gold moulded cylinder of a piano solo was issued, No. 9437, Benzler's transcription, or transposition, of "Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms." The description in The New Phonogram sounds rather jubilant:

This is a record that will be greeted by many expressions of satisfaction by phonograph owners everywhere. Ever since we put out the transcription or "Violets" we have had hundreds of calls for more piano solos. We are learning more about piano recording than we once knew and have no hesitancy in claiming that this is the best piano record ever put on the market. Like "Violets" it is a transposition and in its rewritten form is admirably suited to the piano. Mr. Benzler is quite as much of an artist on the piano as he is on the xylophone and bells, and gives a splendid rendition of this well known ballad.

Compositions for piano recording use were still being rewritten, it will be seen, in order to avoid the bass notes. In October there was another Benzler piano solo:

9653. CHAPEL IN THE WOODS. In accordance with the many requests for another piano solo, we have had Mr. Benzler make this record. It is played with his usual brilliancy of execution, and will be a welcome addition to the others he has made. It was composed by Gustave Lange.

Edison began making the four-minute Amberol cylinders late in 1908, but Benzler was represented by only one of these longer records. It was included in the first list and was No. 9, "Light as a Feather." The description said it was "by far the most elaborate bells solo ever attempted."

VII Benzler and U. S. Records

A few months after Edison introduced his "longer-playing" cylinders, Benzler left the inventor's company to become musical director of the U. S. Phonograph Company, whose recording laboratory seems to have been in Newark, although its sales offices and manufacturing plant were at 1013 Oregon Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio. Perhaps he had become convinced that the fragile cylinders made by Edison were steadily losing ground in competition with the stronger, more convenient discs, but that there was still a good future for an unbreakable cylinder. And, as Clarence Ferguson has said, his decision to change jobs also was influenced by the fact that he had not been appointed Edison's musical director.

The U. S. Everlasting record was made under patents controlled by Varian M. Harris, who, with Edmund A. Balm, had started the Indestruct-

MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina, Criterion, Mira Monarch, New Century, Orphenion, Polyphon, Stella, Symphonion, Thorens. State size wanted. Lists.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, New Jersey. mh3084

Wanted: Old music boxes, larger types, also items of the Old West.—George Trambitas, 3126 Elliot Ave. Seattle 1, Wash. je120291

MELODEONS FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED instruments. Also buy and repair. Reasonable prices.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. je6445

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS: Latest hits and old favorites. Send for free list. Player material, parts, service.—Durrell Armstrong, 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. d122741

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Catalog 15c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. o124201

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, California. mh3863

ible Phonograph Record Company in Chicago in 1900. His process of making a cylinder virtually non-breakable and wearproof consisted of using a thin layer of celluloid mounted on a filler of wax impregnated wood pulp. From the standpoint of durability and tone quality, most of the U. S. Everlasting records were excellent, and a great many leading popular artists sang and played for them.

A story has made the rounds that Mr. Edison was so incensed at Benzler's leaving his company he ordered all Benzler records stricken from the catalog and the moulds destroyed. The story is fiction. Stung into action by loss of business to the disc record companies and to the Indestructible and U. S. Everlasting cylinders, Edison issued his own unbreakable Blue Amberols in the fall of 1912. But up to that time Benzler records continued to be listed. They included the four-minute bells solo; 15 two-minute bells solos; three piano numbers; six xylophone solos; the two bells and chimes duets by Benzler and Nesbit, and the "Blue Bell" duet by Benzler and Hager.

Mr. Ferguson comments:

Edison thought a lot of Al. It was the gang that passed on the records that Al had no love for.

After his U. S. record days, one of Al's friends had him come to the Lab one day to make a test recording along with other players. When the record was done they sent for Edison, who came into the room and went over to the machine to hear the recording. When it came to the xylophone part, Mr. Edison turned and looked over the players, then came over to Al and said, "Why, hello, Al, where have you been?" He wanted to know how he was and what he was doing. He knew by the playing that it was Benzler.

I told Al he should have told Edison what had happened years back. "Oh, that is all long gone now, and in the past, so why bring it up?" he told me.

According to Mr. Ferguson, when Benzler decided to leave Edison he went to a friend of his, Charles Daab, who also was a bells and xylophone virtuoso, and suggested that he try for Benzler's job at Edison. Daab did, and made records for the company for several years. Another friend of Daab's recalls that this talented performer, who has been dead a good many years, was one of the few persons who could sign his name in musical notation. He used to write C. DAAB for fun in this way with musical notes on a staff.

Benzler's name also became prominent in the U. S. Everlasting record catalog. The one for October, 1912, issued just as the Edison Blue Amberols were appearing, includes three four-minute bell solos and one four-minute xylophone number by him. There were also nine two-minute bell solos and eight numbers on the xylophone. Even more interesting, there were two-minute piano recordings of "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms" and "Black and White Rag."

However, I believe that before the U. S. Company went out of business, Benzler must have made many more piano solos. I am sure that as a child I had never seen a catalog of the then defunct U. S. Company, but the pencil tablet in which I began the catalog of my imaginary Walsh Talking Machine Company contains a long list of piano solos by Benzler. I can't recall how I learned that he was a pianist or where I obtained the titles of the records I catalogued. Possibly someone had given me an old Montgomery Ward catalog containing lists of U. S. Records. (I think they may also have been sold by the Charles William stores.) At any rate, I considered Benzler my "official staff pianist" and offered many records, mostly of the ragtime type, by the gifted player.

Benzler played the piano accompaniment for Fred Van Eps' U. S. banjo records, and I have also discovered an unusual selection which should be added to the list of records by Vess L. Ossman and George and Audley Dudley, which I published some months ago. On two-minute record No. 323, Vess Ossman, one of the Dudleys (presumably Audley) and Benzler played a banjo-mandolin piano version of "Dixie Girl." This record must have been made around 1910, after the Dudley Brothers supposedly had ended their business association with "The Banjo King."

Al Benzler accomplished at least one noteworthy thing while serving as the U. S. Company's musical director and instrumentalist. He made a cylinder which may have been played more than any other number ever recorded. Here is the story of the amazing achievement of a record that was played 40,444 times on a 1910 "juke box" as related in the November Talking Machine World of that year:

What would you think of an investment that would yield over 115,000 per cent? Wouldn't it look good to you? The following, isn't a bait for "get-rich-quickers," nor an advertisement of gold bricks, but the sober recital of facts about a U. S. Everlasting Record No. 223, "Peter Piper March" (xylophone), by Albert Benzler.

This record was placed in a penny arcade last March, where it remained on a machine equipped with an ordinary reproducing sapphire until the middle of October. During that time it was played 40,444 times by automatic count, and earned for the proprietor of the arcade the sum of $404.44. The record cost 35 cents.

The U. S. Phonograph Company have
(CONTINUED ON PAGE 35)

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: For cylinder phonographs, small horns, reproducers, recorders, catalogs. State price postpaid.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. my6676

WANT TO BUY PIANO ROLLS for National Automatic piano. Send lists and prices. Also want coin-operated SEEBURG Model "X" EP-RESSION PIANO and other coin-operated musical instruments.

B. Shirar, 1450 Van Ness Ave., San Francisco, Calif. f8084

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts. Music boxes, hand roller organs, as Celestina and Gem. Roller and rolls. Private collector.—Newmann Miller, 436 West Colorado Blvd., Glendale 4, Calif. ja3844

TOY DISC PHONOGRAPHS WANTED. Hand powered or spring motor as Owens: (open works) Berliner; National Gram-O-phone; Zon-O-phone; Eldridge R. Johnson Talking Machine Company, models "A", "B", "C", "D". Also Monarch Series. State condition and price.—Aaron B. Mc Fall, 952 Pleasant St., Oak Park, Illinois. mh120053

IF YOU LIKE GOOD MUSIC, and have a tape recorder, send stamp to—Attle Melodies, Box 6, Cornwallville, N. Y., for interesting proposition. ja32301

WANTED: Harpsichord, vintage of 1700, (encased harp).—Harold Warp, 1100 N. Cicero Ave., Chicago 51, Ill. f3652

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, direct imports, $1.65. Jules Wolff, 74 Worthstreet, New York. ja4633

WANTED GUITARS: Martin Gibson, either round-hole or F-hole. Write me price and model. Eddie Bell, 101 West 46th St., New York, 36, N. Y. ja3614

INDEX to HOBBIES articles on historical records from Sept. 1935 through Dec. 1953, now available from W. R. Moran, 1335 Olive Lane, La Canada, California for $1.00. mh3483

CARDS FOR INDEXING phonograph records. Spaces for title, record number, vocalist, orchestra, reverse side, and musical notes. 100 3x5 cards $1.—B. H. Steere, 1232 Chenango Street, Binghamton, New York. mh3084

NICKELODEON ROLLS. All classical and operatic. Will play on any electric piano that takes an "A" 65-note roll. These rolls are single selections and medleys, 50c and $1 per roll.—G. T. Merriken, 112 Lynnmoor Dr., Silver Spring, Md. ja1023

PHONOGRAPHS: Sixteen Edison, Columbia and Victor, $17.50 to $45. Several Berliner records recorded 1896, $2 each. Victor dog about 12" high, needs paint touchup, $5. Beautiful large Olympia music box in cherry case with 30 records, $150. Want: Edison Opera model (mahogany case preferred); early Edison with electric motor; Edison Kinetoscope.—Phillips, 843 S. Citrus Ave., Los Angeles, Calif. mh3829

RECORDS FOR SALE

ALL IMPORTED vocal operatic records. Free list on request. Many G&Ts, Odeons, Fonotipias, Zonophones, Pathes, etc.—Collector's Haven, 1131 Bergen St., Brooklyn 16, N. Y. my6867

Attention Collectors: Rare operatic vocal records at auction. Send for free interesting lists. — C. Brown, 1375 East 18th St., Brooklyn 30, N. Y. ap3825

PHONOGRAPHS

WANTED: Edison Stethoscope phonograph, with 5c slot and earphones attached with rubber tubes.—Harold Warp, 1100 N. Cicero Ave., Chicago 51, Ill. f4353

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, records, catalogs, parts. Bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. my6844

ROLLS—COIN MACHINE

WANTED: M music rolls for coin operated Cremona music machine, will pay extra for good rolls.—R. J. Hamilton, Star Rt., Tule Lake, California. mh3673

PIANOS—ORGANS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Estey organ, 1890, walnut fancy case, excellent condition throughout. Chickering square piano, made about 1839, 73-note scale, walnut cleaned down to natural wood, playing condition. Steinway square piano, 1870, good condition throughout. Come haul the above three instruments away for $250.—Sannebeck Music Co., 1425 E. Liberty St., Mexico, Mo. ja1804 on the morning after the British fleet had left Fort McHenry, using notes he had hurriedly made while a prisoner of the British. The manuscript was purchased from the Walters Art Gallery for the sum of $26,400.

* * *

A special exhibition entitled "Old Fashioned Winters" opened in November at the New York Historical Society. Such things as paintings and prints depicting winter scenes in New York City as well as sleighs, wooden ice skates and other winter objects from the society's collection are on display. An early American room setting displays articles used by our ancestors to keep warm, such as foot warmer, toddy mug, and pewter hot water bottle. The exhibit will be on view through February 15.

* * *

The Medical Museum of the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, Washington, D. C., has assembled an exhibit to show the development of the X-Ray in war and peace from the first simple instrument used by the inventor, Dr. Roentgen, to the latest developments designed by the Armed Forces and the Picker X-Ray Corporation for use in Korea. The exhibit traces the various scientific discoveries which contributed to Dr. Roentgen's discovery as well as the current progress of the x-ray in modern medicine. The exhibit was first shown at the Fourth Mid-Eastern Conference of X-Ray Technicians in Washington from November 13 to 15. The exhibit is to tour the major cities of the United States in 1954. Included in the exhibit is the laboratory where Roentgen made his discovery of the ray, an eight scene diorama which shows the uses to which the x-ray has been put by the Armed Forces from the Spanish American War to Korea, to mention just a few of the highlights of the exhibit.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 29)

the record now on exhibition at their general offices in Cleveland, where it is played in comparison with new records of the same selection and from the same matrix. They are confident in asserting that absolutely no difference can be detected in the reproductions, and that a microscope fails to detect any traces of wear on the surface of the record...It is in perfect condition, the company claims, to be played 50,000 times more...A run of 40,444 playing is equivalent to continuous running day and night for 56 days. The sapphire on the reproducer travels 194.8 feet to play this record once. In playing it 40,444 times the sapphire travelled 7,878,491 feet, or 14,921.3 miles.

Perhaps the most remarkable thing about this achievement is the fact that xylophone records, because of their sharp "pingy" notes, wore out more rapidly on ordinary wax cylinders than any other kind of music. No wonder, Edison, the grooves of whose four-minute Amberols quickly broke down, decided he'd have to put out an unbreakable, wearproof record himself! And just imagine trying to get 40,444 plays out of a present-day "juke box" disc!

IX Finale

That brings us to the end of the story of Albert Benzler. Edison is said to have threatened the U. S. Company, which made cylinder phonographs as well as records, with suit for infringement of patents. The company, unable to buck competition from the Blue Amberols, and financially unable to withstand expensive litigation went out of business in 1913.

In turn, that, as far as I know, ended Albert Benzler's phonograph career. He continued to play in New York theaters, bands and orchestras and for a time had his own Benzler's Band. He remained a prosperous musician but not a recording artist until his sudden death in 1934. Today, even though the facts of his life have become relatively obscure, many of his records remain to testify to his musical abilities.

Met Announces Opening of Major Collections

Opening dates for three major collections now being installed in three wings of The Metropolitan Museum of Art that have been reconstructed since 1950 were announced recently by Francis Henry Taylor, Director. Scheduled at intervals during a five-month period beginning January, 1954, openings will return to public exhibition some 7,500 masterpieces of European painting and decorative art in 95 modernized galleries and six period rooms. The collections and dates of their first public showing are:

THE PICTURE GALLERIES—Saturday, January 9, 1954.

THE GALLERIES OF MEDIEVAL AND RENAISSANCE ART—Friday, February 19, 1954.

THE GALLERIES OF POST-RENAISSANCE DECORATIVE ART AND PERIOD ROOMS—Friday, May 7, 1954.

Also scheduled to open at the Museum early in 1954 are a modern restaurant with facilities capable of seating upwards of 300 persons and the Grace Rainey Rogers Auditorium accommodating an audience of more than 750 people.

Commenting on the initial stage of reconstruction, new building and reinstallation of the collections at the Museum which is now drawing to a close, Mr. Taylor said that it would involve a total expenditure of approximately $9,000,000.

"This undertaking which has been part of the Rehabilitation and Reconstruction Program of the City of New York has been made possible by the joint application of funds from the City and from private sources," Mr. Taylor said. "The Metropolitan Museum would like at this time to express through the kindness of the press its deep appreciation of the generosity of the City and the individuals who have made this program possible. The Museum is indebted particularly to the three Mayor's under whose administrations this program has been planned and executed; to the Commissioner of Parks, the Honorable Robert Moses, who has constantly presented the Museum's case to the Board of Estimate; to the Members of the Board of Estimate themselves; and to the Museum's Trustees, both elective and ex-officio."

The rehabilitation of the three oldest wings of the Metropolitan from basement to roof, the construction of a new unit linking the North Wing of the building fronting on Fifth Avenue with the Morgan and American Wings to the west in Central Park, and the cost of the various installations will account for $7,700,000 the Director said. Of this, the City of New York appropriated approximately $3,100,000, including $400,000 of deferred maintenance. The remainder was from the museum including funds accumulated for the building program during and following the 75th Anniversary Campaign of 1945-46.

"The construction and equipment of the new auditorium involving $1,150,000," Mr. Taylor said, is being derived entirely from the Museum's private funds, a sizable portion coming from the estate of the

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 43)

Correction and Addition to Frank Crumit Record List

By JIM WALSH

One error was made in the December listing of Columbia records by Frank Crumit. No. 3922 shows "Sweet One" combined with "That's My Baby." The first title should be "Oh, How She Lied To Me."

It should also have been mentioned that a few of Crumit's Columbia discs were dubbed onto the single-faced 5½ Little Wonders that sold for a dime in five-and-ten cent stores. "So Long, Oh Long" was one. In the absence of a complete Little Wonder catalog, it is impossible to give a full list of the dubbed Crumit numbers.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Albert Spalding

By JIM WALSH

The country has lost one of its finest artists and one of its best citizens in the death of Albert Spalding. He retired from the concert field almost three years ago, but he continued to be a vital part of the intellectual and artistic life of his country. He leaves an empty place that will not be easily filled.

His pathway to artistic recognition was actually more difficult because of the fact that he was so very much an American. He came of an American business family, successful and respected. But in his time, indeed for most of his life, almost all of the great violin virtuosi who were beloved by Americans were foreign born. Mr. Spalding won some degree of eminence abroad before he was accepted in his own country with the respect that is given to true greatness.

His musicianship could never be challenged. He was anything but flamboyant and his achievement was all the finer because it was completely divorced from anything that could smack of cheap showmanship.

He will be remembered, also, as a patriot who gave distinguished service to his country in two wars. He also gave a distinguished life to his country in time of peace. We can be proud that he was an American, just as he was proud of being one, and we can be grateful for the pleasure and beauty that he brought into our lives.

The foregoing editorial from the New York Times of Friday, May 29, 1953, admirably sums up the career and character of Albert Spalding, the world-famous violinist who had died three days before. It was so pertinent and so well expressed that I could not resist quoting it.

This is the first Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists article that I have written concerning a musician of such widespread acclaim and distinguished intellectual attainments as Albert Spalding. Most of these biographical sketches have dealt with the "popular" performers whom I can never sufficiently honor because their recorded work did so much to make my childhood happy. In their way, most of them deserve to be considered great artists, but their greatness was of a different, less exalted kind than that of the recently departed violinist.

I feel a certain diffidence at stepping out of my accustomed role to relate the life story of Albert Spalding, but think I am justified in doing so because of having the honor of a slight acquaintance with the virtuoso.

My knowledge of the death of Albert Spalding came while I was tearing news from the teletype of Radio-TV Station WSLs in Roanoke, Virginia, just as I had been doing a few months earlier when I learned of the passing of Arthur Fields. As I read the brief item telling of Spalding's sudden fatal seizure at the age of 64, my memory went back to the morning of December 6, 1940, one year and a day before the Fall of Pearl Harbor — when I began what proved to be perhaps the most hurried, harried and hectic day of my entire news writing career.

I was then chief reporter, editorial writer, feature writer and columnist for the Johnson City Press in upper East Tennessee. When I came to work early that morning my city editor told me he had received a tip that one of the most trusted men on the Johnson City police force was about to be exposed as an impostor who had stayed in the local Soldiers Home a considerable time, before joining the police department, under a false name, and had bilked the Federal government of a considerable sum of money. It was also reported that he had escaped from a State penitentiary in Texas while serving a long sentence. The chief of police had agreed to let the paper know when the arrest was about to be made. Meanwhile, I, as police reporter was expected to remain alert.

II. An Interview With Spalding

News of the impending arrest complicated my morning's schedule besides making me feel genuinely sorry. The suspected officer was a dear friend of mine. He had a fondness for doing little kindnesses for people and frequently sent my mother gifts of jelly, fruit or other things he thought she would like. Only the week before he had handed me a sweater too small for his own little boy and had asked me to "give it to some poor little colored boy that it will fit." I found it was just the right size for the six-year old son of our Negro maid, and gave it to the youngster, to his delight and gratitude.

Not only was I worried because of the revelation about my friend, I also wanted to get an interview with Albert Spalding. I knew that he and his invariable accompanist and longtime friend, André Benoist, were to give a recital that night in East Tennessee State Teachers College. I had long been an ardent admirer of both men from their many Edison records, and I wondered if I couldn't squeeze in an interview by catching them early in the morning.

Luck was with me. When I went to the John Sevier Hotel and phoned to Mr. Spalding's room, he said he was just about to come down to breakfast, and asked me to join him. He seemed eager for the meeting when I told him I was not only an interviewer but "an old Edison Diamond Disc fan."

Within a few minutes the great violinist appeared and we shook hands. His step was brisk, his manner simple and unaffectedly friendly, and he looked to me like a middle-aged, middle-weight athlete who had kept himself trim and wiry from constant exercise. Although the New York papers described him after his death as "of average height," I received the impression, perhaps, because of his slenderness, that he was rather tall. I'm sure he looked younger than his 52 years.

Mr. Spalding and I went into the dining room, where he ordered breakfast, and a few minutes later we were joined by Mr. Benoist (pronounced Ben-wah.) The famous pianist was ten years older than Spalding and was completely bald, though with a rather young appearing face. He was shorter and stockier than his companion, and puffed much of the time at a pipe while Spalding smoked cigarettes. One oddity of the interview was what seemed to me a foreign quality in Spalding's speech

Albert Spalding, distinguished American violinist and Marie Rappold, Metropolitan opera soprano, performing in 1916, in direct comparison with their Edison Diamond Disc of the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria."

(perhaps derived in part from his years of study in Italy), which made it hard for me to understand some of the things he said, despite his being born in that perhaps most American of cities, Chicago. Benoist, on the other hand, although a native of France, spoke perfect English without a trace of any accent that I could detect. I understood his frequently brief sardonic remarks much more easily than I did the more extended conversation of Spalding.

When Benoist first came down, Spalding introduced me to him as—in the term I had already used—"an old Edison Diamond Disc fan." Benoist understood him to say "man" instead of "fan" and, after looking me over, exclaimed: "That's funny! I can't seem to remember ever running into you around the Edison studios!" Spalding then explained I was only a record collector and an admirer of Edison recordings and had never been a company employee, and Benoist gratified me by saying: "I thought you looked too young to have been with Edison back in the recording days!"

I told my two new friends that I'd have to hurry the interview more or less and, in confidence, gave them an idea of what was about to happen to my friend, the policeman. Spalding exclaimed, "That's a shame!" and I shall never forget the energy with which Benoist said: "Well, if, as you say, the fellow has gone straight since he's been a policeman and has a wife and several small children—I hope they pardon him instead of taking him back to Texas!" I also mentioned that I not only had the top news stories to get but must also write a supply of editorials and the "Sunlight and Shadows" column before calling it a day. "I do a lot of things for the paper," I explained, and Spalding said: "You are the paper!"

We talked about the days of Edison recording, and Spalding recalled that he began as an Edison artist by making four-minute Amberol cylinders. "Afterwards," he said, "I played for the Diamond Discs, but many of them were dubbed onto Blue Amberol and Royal Purple cylinders. And—I can't be quoted on this because I'm now under contract to Victor—but from the standpoint of silent surfaces and absolutely perfect reproduction of tone, those Diamond Discs are the finest records that have ever been made."

"I agree," I said. "But a lot of people with technical training would scoff at that statement. They say that the Edison frequency range was limited, and present-day records have a wider range, consequently are more natural."

Spalding nodded. "I know," he said. "Lots of them have said that same thing to me. But the truth is that recording engineers and other technicians are the world's worst judge of musical quality. With them music is just a matter of charts and graphs. They have no ear for it at all. Some of my engineer friends show me graphs illustrating how many more frequencies are recorded by the electric method than we used to get by playing into the horn. All I can stay to that is that I used to play my fiddle on the stage in direct comparison with Mr. Edison's recordings, and not a soul in the audience could tell when I stopped and the phonograph took over except by watching the movements of my bow. Today if I tried to play in direct comparison with my electrical Victor records, everybody could tell the difference—and a big one. Victor recording of the violin," he added, "is improving, but it's still far from what it should be. Edison's was perfect."

Albert Spalding in his later years

"You mentioned the silent surface of the Diamond Discs," I replied. "Of course you were thinking of those made from 1912 to about 1916. Because Edison couldn't get anything but inferior materials during the First World War, most of the Diamond Discs of that period had a bad background of noise."

Spalding agreed, and went on to relate some of his Edison record making experiences. Despite the excellence of Edison recording, there were days—mostly when both the temperature and the humidity were high—that a good master record couldn't be obtained. "Quite often," he said, "we'd have to postpone a recording engagement when the weather wasn't suitable. Something or other—we didn't know what—seemed to happen to the recording diaphragms, the horns, the wax master records—or all. I learned to avoid having a recording date in hot, sultry weather."

"Speaking of the effects of the weather," he went on, "I remember being told that the right color for the Blue Amberol cylinders could be obtained only under certain climatic conditions. As I remember, they would watch out for bright, star-lit nights and mix huge batches of the coloring. It seemed to reach just the right hue and consistency on such nights—but I'm not sure I remember that right."

Of course Thomas A. Edison himself was mentioned, and both Spalding and Benoist had some anecdotes of "The Old Man's" eccentricities and his frequently odd choice of numbers to be recorded. "Speaking with all respect for the dead," Spalding said, "Old Man Edison was a terrible crank, and Walter Miller, Bill Cronkhite and the other fellows who had charge of recording were scared to death of him. They knew he would listen to every record before it could be issued and they wouldn't take a chance on recording anything they thought he wouldn't like. Most of my Edison records were of good music—mainly, though, the well-worn concert 'war horse' stuff—but he really made some of the other artists do some queer things."

"You're—telling—me!" Benoist chimed in. "I made a record of a Chopin etude that Walter Miller and I thought was fine. The piano tone was the real thing—and that was hard to get in those days. The Old Man listened to it and returned it with a note, saying, 'Rotten. Ain't got no tune.' So to please him they had me record 'Old Black Joe'—with variations." Benoist also mentioned that he played the accompaniment for many of Jascha Heifetz's Victor records.

I recalled a story, for which I said I couldn't vouch, that Edison discharged one of his most trusted employees for issuing a piano record of "Monastery Bells," by Henry W. Lange, without waiting for his permission. According to the story, everybody at the Edison studios thought the piano recording was wonderful—and it was—but Mr. Edison swore when he heard it, saying it sounded more like a tin pan than a piano. However, it stayed in the catalog and, so legend has it, became the biggest selling piano record Edison ever made. Incidentally, Benoist's record of "The Two Larks" was usually played during "tone test" recitals by other artists to give the public an idea of the progress Edison had made in recording piano music. The tone was usually termed perfect, as far as it went, but some critics said that because of its avoidance of bass notes the general effect was that of a Swiss music box. A few years later, Edison could record the bass as well as he did the treble and Edison superiority in piano recordings was perhaps more marked than in any other kind of music.

Benoist shuddered slightly when I said the title of the piano solo that allegedly infuriated Edison was "Monastery Bells." Apparently, the thought of a composition with such a banal, commonplace name shocked his finer sensibilities.

I asked Spalding what had been his biggest selling Edison record and he didn't surprise me much when he replied "The Meditation From 'Thais.'" It sold, within a few years, he said, some 300,000 copies. Dvorak's "Humoresque" took second place. Knowing the stock violin repertory of the old phonograph days, my guess would have been the "Humoresque" first and the "Meditation" second. Anyway, 300,000 was a whale of a sale for a $2 record that could not be played on conventional phonographs but required the special New Edison instrument.

Before I parted from Spalding and Benoist, I commented on their long friendship and musical association and, in an effort to be lightly facetious, said: "You two go together like ham and eggs!" "I'm the ham!" Benoist wryly exclaimed, while Spalding gently said: "I think pork and beans would be a better comparison." Spalding, who lived at Great Barrington, Massachusetts, promised to send me a photo of himself, and Benoist said he would mail me one from his home at Monmouth Beach, New Jersey. In return I promised—and kept my promise—to send them copies of the Press with my "story" about the policeman.

Benoist was prompt to keep his word. He mailed me an autographed photo and showed his strong sense of humor by inscribing it to "Jim Walsh, from the first half of ham and eggs—André Benoist." I didn't get one from Spalding, although I wrote one or two letters reminding him. In fact, I had no further communication of any sort with the great violinist until I acted on an impulse last December 6, and wrote him a letter, recalling our meeting in Johnson City exactly twelve years before and saying I still hoped for that photograph. On December 15, Mr. Spalding wrote me a charmingly contrite note from his home, Aston Magna, at Great Barrington:

Dear Mr. Walsh: Indeed I do remember you and our meeting some twelve years ago in Johnson City—and, to my shame, of that unredeemed promise of a photo. By this same mail I am making good and the photo will be on its way. With all good wishes,

Yrs sincerely,

ALBERT SPALDING.

The photo suitably inscribed, arrived, and I am submitting it with this article in the hope that it can be reproduced in HOBBIES. I imagine that when Spalding read my note and realized he had kept me waiting twelve years for a photo, he shook his head wryly, as he had done when I asked him what he thought of the early electric records he made for Brunswick after ending his fifteen year's association with Edison. "Terrible!" he said. "My Victors are much better. But it's still true that the acoustic Edisons are the only perfect recordings of my playing."

And now, having set down some of the things I remember about that 1940 interview, we may proceed to a consideration of Albert Spalding's career as concert violinist and recording artist. But if you are wondering what happened to the policeman, I'll reveal that the denounce-ment was more dramatic than I had been led to expect. When he was summoned to headquarters, he admitted that not only had he entered the Soldiers' Home under the name of his dead brother, but that he had been convicted in Texas for murder and sentenced to life imprisonment. After shaking hands with me, he insisted that he would "tell the whole story" only if he were locked in a room with Jim Walsh. It turned out that he had married a wealthy woman much older than himself and after her sudden death had been found guilty of hiring two men to kill her. He had managed to escape while a trusty on a Texas State prison farm. He was returned to Texas, leaving his second wife and three small children in Johnson City. Later, I understood, Texas authorities pardoned him and he began serving a term on the Federal charge. Whether he is still alive and out of prison I don't know, but if he is and is making an honest living I wish him well. He was always an unselfishly good friend to me.

It was pathetic that my reformed officer friend had to leave his wife and children in Tennessee, fearful, as he expressed it in a letter he wrote to me from prison, that they would "go on sufferance." But to me the most pathetic thing about that memorable news-gathering experience was related by the colored maid to whose little boy I had given the policeman's son's outgrown sweater. That afternoon, the Press came out with a front page "streamer" headline above my "story," which I had written frantically in "short takes." There was also a large photo of the arrested officer. The little boy saw it and began laughing. "Mama," he said, "here's a picture of that nice man that was so good to me!" The mother looked at him sorrowfully. "Honey," she said, "that nice man is in terrible bad trouble! They've put him in jail and they're going to send him back to Texas."

The tot began crying then, she told me, "as if his heart would break." "They oughtn't to do that to him! He was so good to me!" the grateful child sobbed.

To cap the climax of that most upsetting day, just when I was about to go home in the late afternoon a young lady from a Southwest Virginia town, who was an admirer of my radio program, phoned that she was in a Johnson City department store and insisted that I hurry over to meet her. Groaningly, I went, in anything but a romance-seeking mood. She later wrote she had been much disappointed in me because I appeared completely distraught and seemed to have almost no idea of what we were talking about!

(TO BE CONTINUED)

ROLLS—COIN MACHINE

WANTED: M music rolls for coin operated Cremona music machine, will pay extra for good rolls.—R. J. Hamilton, Star Rt., Tule Lake, California. mh3673

Current Collectors' Records

By ALLEN G. DEBUS

Jim Walsh has now been writing his fine series of articles for HOBBIES for twelve years. In that time many new recordings and reissues of old recordings have been pressed by the various companies by the all time stars. These records are collectors' items just as truly as are their early Brunswicks, Black and Silver Columbias or Victor Monarchs. Perhaps they are even rarer than the earlier records because in many cases these discs have been issued by small firms which have had little money to advertise their releases, and many collectors who would have bought them have never heard about them. Here is a list of a few of the artists who have recorded in the last twelve years: Al Jolson, Sophie Tucker, Eddie Cantor, Maurice Chevalier, Helen Kane, Billy Murray, Monroe Silver, Gus Van, Joe Howard, Gallagher and Shean, Groucho Marx, Harpo Marx, Nick Lucas, George M. Cohan, Jr., Gene Austin, Harry Richman, Belle Baker, Eddie Peabody, Benny Fields, Blossom Seeley, and even W. C. Fields. Besides these there have been innumerable repressings. Of course not all of these are available now, but many still are, and I am going to try to list as many of these as I can in this column every month. There may be many current collector's items that I haven't heard of, so if you readers think I am missing some rare ones please write in and I will list your discoveries here.

This month I'd like to mention some brand new banjo and banjoline solos by Eddie Peabody for the Dot label. These are wonderfully brilliant recordings by an artist whose early electric discs are always in demand. If you like banjo recordings at all, don't miss these.

Dot 15098 - Baby Face and I'm Looking Over a Four Leaf Clover/St. Louis Blues

Dot 15099 - Stars and Stripes Forever/Sing Song Girl and Chinatown, My China Town

Dot 15100 - La Golondrina/Tea for Two

Dot 15101 - Sleep and I'll See You in My Dreams/Sweet Sue—Just You

Brunswick's Crooning Troubador of the twenties, Nick Lucas, has made several excellent discs lately. The Capitol records below are a couple of years old and may be a little difficult to get from your dealer unless he puts in a special order.

Capitol 15242 - Tip toe Through

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Albert Spalding

PART II

By JIM WALSH

III. Albert Spalding's Concert Career

Some of the salient details of Albert Spalding's long and brilliant career were summed up in the biographical sketch which appeared in the 1940 edition of the Victor Record catalog:

Happily a biographical note of Albert Spalding does not begin with citing his poor and struggling parentage. Albert Spalding, America's own violinist, was born in Chicago of a quite well-to-do family. He inherited much of his talent from his mother, who was conspicuously identified with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra under Theodore Thomas. Albert Spalding began playing the violin at the age of seven and his principal teachers were Chiti of Florence, Buitrago of New York, and Lefort of Paris. He was graduated from the Bologna Conservatory of Music at fourteen with the highest honors ever accorded anyone since Mozart. His first American appearance was at Carnegie Hall as soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra under Walter Damrosch.

Mr. Spalding has since appeared in practically every civilized country of the world, and today is one of the most popular of the world-famous violinists. Radio audiences have repeatedly voted him their favorite violinist. Mr. Spalding is distinguished not only as an executant but as a composer. He has written more than sixty works for the violin, twenty-five for piano; thirty songs; several quartettes and several works for orchestra, not including many transcriptions and arrangements. Charming, handsome, debonair, Mr. Spalding is a conspicuous ornament to America in music and to music in America.

As the New York Times remarked in its obituary account, Spalding, born on August 15, 1888, was "one of the few native American violinists to attain a reputation of world importance." His father, J. Walter

Spalding, and his uncle, A. G. Spalding, were partners in the famous sporting goods house of A. G. Spalding and Bros. His mother, Marie Boardman Spalding, maintained a music salon in Florence, Italy, for many years. Much of the Times article is so informative that it may well be quoted:

"I was an ordinary looking child," he said, after he had reached the top of his career, "undersized for my age but with a kind of restless and wiry energy that was always getting me into scrapes and accidents."

He was seven when he asked for a violin, and when it arrived at Christmas it was a half-sized instrument that cost $4 and was intended for a joke. But the boy would not put the little fiddle down, and eventually lessons were started. They went so well that he was enrolled in the Bologna Conservatory.

His formal debut was in Paris in 1905, and that same season he attracted much attention by appearing on a gigantic benefit program with Adelina Patti. Mr. Spalding's accompanist was delayed, and Patti offered the use of her own. They played without rehearsal and were very successful.

His American debut was made Nov. 8, 1908, in Carnegie Hall as soloist with the New York Symphony under the late Walter Damrosch. It was the beginning of a close friendship and led, more than a decade later, to one of the most dramatic events of Mr. Spalding's career. This was his trip through Europe with Mr. Damrosch and his orchestra, sharing soloist honors with John Powell, the pianist. (Mr. Powell, like me, a native of Richmond, and an old friend of mine, is perhaps Virginia's most distinguished native musician.—Jim Walsh.) The tour was the first ever made by an American symphony orchestra and it attracted wide attention on both sides of the Atlantic.

After his debut, Mr. Spalding toured frequently in the United States and Europe. In 1939 he made his 200th Atlantic crossing. In addition to appearing as soloist with the world's leading orchestras, Mr. Spalding had the distinction of being the only American violinist to perform in La Scala of Milan. He also was believed to have been the only

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION

RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on the following labels:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH, DE LUXE & GRAND PRIZE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS, such as ODEON, FONOTIPLA, G. & T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.
- ★ Old record catalogs.

Persons offering material not specified above or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout.

Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By MOSORIAK &amp; HECKERT

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

$5.00 Postpaid — Insured

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

American, and one of three world-famous violinists—the others being Fritz Kreisler and the late Eugene Ysaye—to be invited to play with the Paris Conservatory Orchestra.

When the United States entered World War I, Mr. Spalding cancelled more than $35,000 worth of concert commitments to enlist in the Army Aviation Corps. A commission as a lieutenant soon followed, and he was assigned to serve in Italy, where he became adjutant to Major Fiorello H. La Guardia, later Mayor of New York. Upon his discharge the violinist married in 1919 Mary Vanderhof Pyle.

In World War II Mr. Spalding returned to Italy to serve in the psychological warfare branch of the Allied forces. Conservative and immaculate in appearance, Mr. Spalding never hesitated to try new things, sometimes with unexpected success. One of these ventures was begun in 1940, when he became violinist and master of ceremonies on an important national radio program. In addition, he composed largely, although not many of his works reached the broader audience. Mr. Spalding was one violinist virtuoso who did not use a Stradivarius. His favorite instrument was a Guarnerius del Jesu dating from 1735, although occasionally he played a Mantagnana, fourteen years older.

Mr. Spalding was a Chevalier of the French Legion of Honor, and held the Cross of the Crown of Italy. Besides his wife, Mr. Spalding leaves a brother, H. Boardman Spalding.

With reference to the New York Times death notice, it is interesting to recall that the Virginia pianist-composer, John Powell, is one of the most enthusiastic advocates of the theory that great American music will be constructed from our Southern and Western "folk tunes." Spalding apparently had much the same views. The Edison Phonograph Monthly for December, 1916, said: "Albert Spalding . . . is an enthusiastic advocate of the use of the folk-song in the recitalist's repertoire and he declares that America has a wealth of such songs that are as fine as any that can be found. He believes that folk-songs should be judged by their merit when unsupported by an accompaniment. 'A tune whose outline is not strong enough to stand without props has no right to be counted as a folk-song' is his dictum."

The "lead" of the Times article said that Spalding died about 8:30 p. m., May 26, of a cerebral hemorrhage at his New York home, 3 East 77th Street. He and his wife were about to go to dinner when he collapsed and died within a few minutes. His death occurred within a month of the third anniversary of his last concert appearance, on June 20, 1950, at the opening of the Lewishon Stadium Season, with Efrem Kurtz directing the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra. The next day Olin Downes commented: "Mr. Spalding has been before the public for 45 years. His delivery of the music (a Beethoven violin concerto) gave us the true measure of his sincerity, his inalienable perception of beauty, and unfaltering ideals."

The New York Herald Tribune's death notice quoted Walter Damosch as saying: "Spalding is the first great instrumentalist this country has produced," and added: "By 1941, almost ten years before his retirement as an active concert violinist, it was estimated that he had earned more than $2,000,000 from stage appearances alone. A soft-spoken man of average height with a ruddy complexion, he served in Italy . . . in World War II as 'Major Sheridan' (making) regular broadcasts to the Italian partisans and for a few months in 1944 was in charge of Radio Rome for the Allied Powers.

"At his farewell concert . . . he said he wanted to retire from the routine of concerts to devote his full time to writing, teaching and composing. He added, almost jokingly, that he wanted to leave 'while they still regret to see me go.' . . . During a dinner in Mr. Spalding's honor at the Waldorf-Astoria in April, 1951, Fritz Kreisler said of the honored guest: 'He never fails to play on the heart strings of his listeners.' Mr. Kreisler described him as a 'wonderful violinist . . . a distinguished citizen and patriot.'"

"Aside from his musical career, Mr. Spalding had been a director in his father's sporting goods firm, although he took little active part in its operations. His books included 'Rise to Follow,' an autobiography published in 1943, and 'A Fiddle, a Sword, and A Lady,' a biographical novel based on the life of Giuseppe Tartini, Italian violinist of the eighteenth century."

Spalding's novel, which received generally favorable criticism, was published only a few months ago. In "Rise to Follow" he gave considerable information about his record making activities and said that in some years his royalties from Edison records equaled his concert earnings. Spalding said he felt that he was in a favorable position as the only Edison violinist with a wide popular following, whereas Victor had a whole "stable," such as Kreisler, Elman, Heifetz, Zimbalist, Kubelik, and Maud Powell. Edison of course recorded other noted violinists—among them Carl Flesch, Vasa Prihoda, Kathleen Parlow, Mischa Violin and Mary Zentay—but only Spalding became a prime favorite with Diamond Disc buyers. One of the favorite stunts of the "Tone Test" days was to play violin records by Spalding and Flesch and ask the audience to observe how the New Edison brought out perfectly the characteristic touches of both—Spalding's elegant, graceful bowing as contrasted to the sturdier, more "masculine" technique of Flesch. Frequently, another violinist, for example, Arthur Walsh, an Edison staff member; Rudolph Polk, Abraham Bond or Richard Czerwonky would play with the Spalding or Flesch records, to demonstrate that the phonograph actually did "recreate" violin tone.

IV Albert Spalding's Records

Little space remains for consideration of Spalding's recording career, which lacked most of the picturesque experiences of performers who had begun earlier. His first record, Edison four-minute Amberol No. 177, was issued when he was 21, in August, 1909—the year which I consider the end of the pioneer recording period.

The New Phonogram commented:

Mr. Spalding is a young American violinist, who, by virtue of his unusual talent, has scored a great success. We regard ourselves as fortunate indeed in inducing him to reproduce some of his marvelous talent on our records. Violin solos of Henri Wienawski, the composer of this selection ("Polonaise in D Major"), are very popular with concert performers, and are found in the repertoire of every violin artist. Wienawski was himself a renowned violinist as well as composer. His "Polonaise" . . . calls for that artistic conception and brilliancy of technique so essential to the true violinist.

This first Spalding record sold at the regular price for four-minute cylinders, 50 cents. He appears not to have made any two-minute records. The August issue of Phonogram also contains a biographical sketch, which says that Spalding made his first appearance when ten years of age before the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. "When fourteen years old, he successfully passed the severe test of an examination for professorship at Bologna Conservatoire. He secured 48 marks out of a possible 50 and was declared by the professors composing the committee on examination to be the youngest on record to pass such an exacting examination."

Although some of Spalding's records were of too intellectual a type to appeal to the predominately "middle-brow" Edison clientele, he never-

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: For cylinder phonographs, small horns, reproducers, recorders, catalogs. State price postpaid.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. my6675

TOY DISC PHONOGRAPHS WANTED. Hand powered or spring motor as Owens; (open works) Berliner; National Gram-O-phone; Zon-O-phone; Eldridge R. Johnson Talking Machine Company, models "A," "B," "C," "D." Also Monarch Series. State condition and price.—Aaron B. Mc Fall, 952 Pleasant St., Oak Park, Illinois. mh120052

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts. Music boxes, hand roller organs, as Celestina and Gem. Roller and rolls. Private collector.—Newmann Miller, 436 West Colorado Blvd., Glendale 4, Calif. my3464

SWISS MUSIC MOVEMENTS, assorted tunes, direct imports, $1.65. Jules Wolff, 74 Worthstreet, New York. ap3422

INDEX to HOBBIES articles on historical records from Sept. 1935 through Dec. 1953, now available from W. R. Moran, 1335 Olive Lane, La Canada, California for $1.00. mh3483

CARDS FOR INDEXING phonograph records. Spaces for title, record number, vocalist, orchestra, reverse side, and musical notes. 100 3x5 cards $1.—E. H. Steere, 1232 Chenango Street, Binghamton, New York. mh3084

PHONOGRAPHS: Sixteen Edison, Columbia and Victor, $17.50 to $45. Several Berliner records recorded 1896, $2 each. Victor dog about 12" high, needs paint touchup, $5. Beautiful large Olympia music box in cherry case with 30 records, $150. Want: Edison Opera model (mahogany case preferred); early Edison with electric motor; Edison Kinetoscope.—Phillips, 843 S. Citrus Ave., Los Angeles, Calif. mh3829

WRITE FOR LISTS of top rarities to be auctioned soon. Price lists will also be issued. Includes best and rarest in both acoustic and electrical vocal classics. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.—W. B. Harr, 106 N. Halamano, Carlsbad, N. Mex. my3276 theless became a favorite with those who preferred a higher grade of music, and when Edison decided to compete a bit more energetically against Victor and Columbia in the "higher brackets" of music, he was one of the several artists "promoted" to a 75 cent classification. His first Amberol cylinder in this classification appeared in February, 1912. It was the Prize Song from Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," with piano accompaniment by the ever faithful Benoist. In addition, Spalding also played a violin obligato to Marie Rappold's soprano solo of the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria." They afterwards recorded this hackneyed but ever popular bit of religiosity on a Diamond Disc, and it was a big seller. Sometimes Mme. Rappold and Spalding gave "tone tests," singing and playing in unison with the record as in a phonograph I have.

There is an interesting article in the August, 1918, Edison Amberola Monthly concerning the war services of Spalding, who had made a long list of Diamond Discs before he went overseas the year before. The article is illustrated with a photograph of Lieutenant Spalding with "Captain (Congressman) F. H. LaGuardia, Commanding Officer of one of the American Aviation Camps in Italy." Although only LaGuardia's head and shoulders are shown, somehow the cocky little Fiorello, who afterwards was one of New York's most controversial mayors, appears to be strutting, while Spalding is smiling in a rather shy way. The article quoted an interview with Spalding in an Italian newspaper, The Rome Giornale d'Italia. Asked how he could keep up with his music and still serve as a soldier, Spalding replied:

"You cannot do two things, and do them properly, at the same time. At the present moment there is more music for me in the factories so gloriously grinding out planes and motors than in a symphony by Beethoven. And today I would rather run an office-boy's errand for my country, and do it as well as I can, if it is to serve my country, than play successfully the Bach chaconne, and I would rather hear a well-directed battery of American guns blasting the road to peace and victorious liberty than the combined applause of 10,000 audiences. And I want you to believe that the artist in me is not asleep in telling you these things, for it is my conviction that art has as much at stake in this war as democracy. Art depends as much on the freedom of individual thought and action as democracy. How, then, could it hope to endure and prosper in the face of a German peace—the triumph and vindication of a human machinery and the crushing out of individualism? With a German peace we would have seen a world-wide spreading of that foul and insidious disease which has already sapped the life and spirit out of what was once Teuton art."

Those were pulse-stirring words, well suited to win the plaudits of the Allied world in war time, but as I type this tribute to Spalding on a burning hot Memorial Day, only about 90 hours after his death, I wonder if he would echo them now in the light of the demonstrated failure of both World Wars to bless the world with even a semblance of effective democracy.

Let us pass on to other less debatable considerations. The 1925 catalog of Edison records contains more than 70 titles by Spalding, representing music of varying degrees. He once said in an interview that he was grateful because Edison had never asked him to play "any unworthy music," but much of his list consists of comparatively trivial numbers which his more cultivated listeners would hardly consider worthy of his artistry—just as Kreisler's Victor output was the subject of much complaint. There is little frankly "popular" music, although "Marcheta," "Roses of Picardy" and "Love Sends a Little Gift of Roses" are represented. There are beautiful arrangements of "My Old Kentucky Home," "Old Folks at Home," and "Drink To Me Only With Thine Eyes." Apparently, the only compositions by Spalding himself are "Alabama—Plantation Melody and Dance," "From the Cottonfields," and two "etchings"—"Sunday Morning Bells" and "Hurdy Gurdy Waltz." Many of the arrangements of other composers' material are credited to Spalding. For the most part the repertoire is the standard concert "war horse" type, leaning to the lighter numbers such as "Humoresque," "Meditation," several of Joachim's arrangements of Hungarian Dances by Brahms; Sarasate's "Spanish Dance No. 5"; Mendelssohn's "Spring Song"; Kreisler's "Caprice Viennois"; Raff's "Cavatina"; Rubenstein's "Melody in F"; Beethoven's "Minuet in G," and Paderewski's "Minuet," the latter doubled with Spalding's transcription of Schubert's "Hark, Hark the Lark." Those titles give a general idea of his Edison repertoire.

Spalding's Brunswick list, beginning in 1926, was much briefer and no more impressive. When he began recording for Victor in the 1930's, however, although he duplicated many of his Edison offerings, he was given an opportunity to do more impressive things, such as playing Spohr's "Concerto No. 8 in A Minor" with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra; Tartini's Devil Trill Sonata; an album set of Franck's Sonata in A Major; another album of the Brahms Sonata No. 2 in A Major; and Handel's Sonata VI in E Major. He and the distinguished viola player, William Primrose, also recorded Mozart's "Sinfonia Concertante for Violin, Viola and Orchestra, in E-Flat."

During recent years Mr. Spalding

has made some Remington long-playing records of fine music.

I neglected to mention in the proper place that when Edison began issuing electric lateral-cut recordings in 1929, Spalding returned to the company with which he had made his start. At least one twelve-inch needle-cut record by him was issued in the new "Golden Seal" series which Edison hoped to launch as a revival to Victor's Red Seal. This record, No. 47005, contained "Humoresque" and "Hark! Hark! The Lark!" showing that the old favorites were still in demand. It was also issued on a Diamond Disc.

And three years earlier, when Edison brought out his vertical-cut long playing records, one of them playing 40 minutes (20 minutes to a side) consisted of a recital by Spalding and Benoist, dubbed from their conventional Diamond Discs.

Despite his later association with other companies, it is as an Edison star that the average record collector thinks of Spalding. In his death his native country and the world have lost a genius who was equally great as a lovable gentleman. What a pity that only three years were left to him after his retirement! The literary career which he was just beginning might have come in time—given enough time—to rival his musical achievements.

Since this article was written André Benoist also has died. He survived his long-time friend and associate less than a month. Mr. Benoist, who had been Spalding's accompanist more than 40 years, died Friday, June 19, at the Ivy House Nursing Home, Middletown, New Jersey. His home was at 5 Valentine Street, Monmouth Beach, New Jersey.

As has already been mentioned, Benoist was a native of Paris. In 1933 he was elected to the French Legion of Honor for his musical accomplishments. He was a member of the Friars and Bohemian Clubs of New York. Survivors include his wife, Mrs. Alice Moss Benoist; two daughters, Mrs. Harold Phillips and Mrs. Robert H. Higginson, both of Shrewsbury, New Jersey, and a son, Albert Spalding Benoist, of New York City.

On June 22, the New York Times paid Benoist this editorial tribute:

THE ACCOMPANIST. The life and career of Andre Benoist, who died on Friday at the age of 74, illustrate strikingly how important can be the role of those whose function is to help others without seeking the limelight for themselves. Mr. Benoist was one of the most gifted pianists of our generation, but he was known and loved not as the solo performer but in his supporting capacity. To musicians all over the world his name meant "the accompanist."

His marvelous skill added to the luster of some of the most famous instrumentalists. The three most outstanding violinists of our time, Fritz Kreisler, Jascha Heifetz and the late Albert Spalding, and the greatest cellist, Pablo Casals, had the benefit of his magnificently sympathetic understanding at the keyboard. Each was better for his assistance.

In other walks of life, similarly, there are many persons who voluntarily take

(Continued on page 41)

*Work is love made visible.
And if you cannot work with love but only with distaste, it is better that you should leave your work and sit at the gate of the temple and take alms of those who work with joy.*

—Gibran

Assorted Circus Facts

(Continued from page 29)

and of but 22 inches in stature. . . . She is willing to exhibit herself as a shew to such Gentlemen and Ladies as are desirous to gratify their curiosity, for one shilling lawful money for each person."

The smallest person who ever exhibited herself was Lucia Zarate, the Mexican Lilliputian. When she was twelve years old, she weighed only five pounds and was 20 inches high. She showed with Admiral Dot in the old Keith Museum in Boston. She died of pneumonia as a result of exposure while on a stalled train in a blizzard in the Sierra Nevada Mountains in 1889.

An "armless wonder," Miss M. A. Honeywell, made silhouette cutouts of the New York curious for twenty-five cents apiece from 1798 to 1831.

The first sea lion went on exhibit in Boston in 1716; the first camel there in 1739. A monkey is the first trained animal on record and was described like this in a New York newspaper in 1751: "He is a creature, called a Japanese, of about two feet height, his body resembling a human body in all parts except the feet and tail."

The first elephant ever to set foot on this country is supposed to have been shipped from Bengal in a ship called "America." It reached New York in April, 1796, and was shown at Broadway and Beaver Street before being taken on a tour of the country. Purchase price is said to have been $10,000.

The most famous elephant of all was Old Bet, who was bought in London for twenty dollars by the brother of Hakaliah Bailey, and sold to Hakaliah for $1,000.

Dan Rice—most famous as a clown, but well known also as a circus proprietor—experimented with electric lights for his Big Top in 1852. The Dan Rice Circus was one of the most successful of the old wagon shows. It toured the country from 1861 to 1879. Rice also at one time operated showboats on the Mississippi.

The largest of the circus boats operating on any of the rivers of America was Spaulding and Rogers' Floating Circus Palace, built in Cincinnati in 1851. This floating show resembled a huge box and was almost 200 feet long and thirty-five wide.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

(Continued from page 38)

the second role, gratified in their contribution to the success of others. It requires rare skill and deep human sympathy to do this well. Some, like Andre Benoist, do it supremely.

In considering a few of the uncountable songs that have been written with Mother and Mother Love as their theme, it's odd to see how little attention song writers have paid to Mother's Day. Off-hand, one recording of a song specially written for that occasion can be recalled. A quarter of a century ago, Ford Rush and Glenn Rowell waxed "I'll Wear a White Flower for You, Mother Dear" on a Columbia platter. It was appropriately combined with that hallowed old-timer, "A Boy's Best Friend is His Mother."

This makes it seem as if Irving Berlin may have missed a trick. Berlin, who gave the nation its unofficial patriotic anthem in "God Bless America" and its equally unofficial secular Christmas and Easter compositions, "White Christmas" and "Easter Parade," hasn't turned the trick for Mother's Day. However, in 1919 he paid homage to the Mother theme with "Was There Ever a Pal Like You?" (although Mother lives in an exalted sphere of her own, she is sometimes a Pal to her children) and in 1916 he had written "When the Black Sheep Returns to the Fold," a musical setting of the old prodigal son theme in which the wanderer's aged parents "shed tears of real joy as they whisper 'My Boy!'"

Just a cursory run-down of song titles makes it apparent that everything connected with Mother is sacred. The writer sheds tears of remorse and leads a better life as he recalls "My Mother's Prayer" or "My Mother's Bible." "My Mother's Rosary" was "ten baby fingers and ten baby toes"—"she'd watch them by the setting sun and when her daily work was done she'd count them each and every one." The theme of regret for past misdeeds runs through the revival hymns, "Tell Mother I'll Be There" and "Meet Mother in the Skies," as well as the one which Homer Rodeheaver used to intone at Billy Sunday's revival meetings, "Mother's Prayers Have Followed Me."

Ring Lore

(Continued from page 28)

is the first prince of our Saxon rulers who is recorded to have been served in silver dishes. We can easily understand a hermit's repugnance to bathing of any kind.

Some other instances of rings as tokens are related by mediaeval historians. We are told by Matthew Paris that Pope Innocent, desiring to gain King John over to favour his plans, and knowing that he was covetous, and a diligent seeker after costly jewels, sent him four gold rings adorned with precious stone, in token that the rotundity of the rings signified eternity; "therefore your royal discretion may be led by the form of them to pray for a passage from earthly to heavenly, from temporal to eternal things. The number four, which is a square number, denotes the firmness of mind which is neither depressed in adversity nor elated in prosperity; which will then be fulfilled, when it is based on the four principal virtues, namely—justice, fortitude, prudence and virtue. . . . Moreover, the greenness of the emerald denotes faith; the clearness of the sapphire, hope; the redness of the pomegranate denotes charity, and the purity of the topaz, good works. . . . In the emerald, therefore, you have what to believe; in the sapphire, what to hope for; in the pomegranate, what to love; and in the topaz, what to practice; that you ascend from one virtue to another, until you see the Lord in Zion."

From an old engraving.

Handwritten notes in the bottom left corner of the page: "April 1954" and "32".

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Helen Trix

PART I

By JIM WALSH

A few months ago I was glad to read in the New York Times that a writer, Joseph M. Graham, has organized "The Friends of Frank Merriwell." The purpose of this group is to bring together in a mutual interest the men who read Burt L. Standish's stories of those legendary Yale athletes, Frank and Dick Merriwell, in the five-cent Tip Top Weekly, and to make sure that although the stories of the Merriwell Brothers are out of print, Frank and Dick and their friends will not be forgotten.

I don't exactly belong in the charmed circle because Tip Top ceased publication years before I would have been old enough to read it. But when I entered my teens a great many back copies came into my possession and I have bought others since. The result is that I have a fair working knowledge of the Merriwell saga. And of all I have read I have the most recollection of No. 568, "Dick Merriwell's Regret; or the Friend He Never Knew." This was usually acclaimed the masterpiece of the more than 900 Merriwell stories turned out by Gilbert Patten under the Standish pen name.

The plot of "Dick Merriwell's Regret" deals with the tragic story of Ellis Preston, a quiet, retiring Yale student who worshipped the university's star athlete from a distance. Preston died, apparently from pneumonia following a hazing, and only after his death did Dick Merriwell learn of the admiration that shy Ellis had felt for him. This left Dick with a lingering sense of regret that there had been a true friend and admirer in his life whom he had never known.

"Standish" must have modeled himself on my favorite author, Charles Dickens, in writing the story's death bed scene, for it was crammed full of pathos—or bathos, if you prefer. I was fifteen when I read it and I cried myself sick, while the tune of my favorite sob-ballad, "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," ran like a leit motif through my mind. I have never since been able to separate my liking for the song from the memory of "Dick Merriwell's Regret."

Frank and Dick Merriwell have nothing to do with Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists except that as I set about telling the life story of Helen Trix I myself am filled with regret that I made a friend, and a dear one, whom it was never my privilege to meet face to face. That has happened more than once during the more than eleven years I have been writing for HOBBIES. Of course I have written about many artists whom I have met in person. Others were already dead before I wrote concerning them. But there have been still others with whom I corresponded and for whom I formed a deep affection but was never fortunate enough to greet in the flesh. Frank Crumit was one. And Helen Trix was another.

It will be a source of lasting regret to me that Helen and I were never able to put into effect the plans we had made for a get-together. This talented artist, who was born in a small Pennsylvania town but grew up to become a favorite in American vaudeville houses and English music halls and give several command performances before the Royal Family of Great Britain, had one of the most romantic careers of any pioneer recording artist. I am sure she was not only a gifted but also a lovable lady.

WANTED

Coin operated pianos and other coin operated musical instruments. Also rolls for the above, operators' manuals and catalogs.

ED. ZELINSKY

11 Jordan Ave. San Francisco 18, Calif.
jep

JIM WALSH WANTS TO BUY

Old phonograph record catalogs and supplements (mostly prior to 1925); back copies of phonograph publications—Talking Machine World, Talking Machine News, the Gramophone, the Phonogram, Diamond Points, Edison Phonograph and Amberola Monthly, Voice of the Victor, etc.—photographs, advertisements, and all sort of reference material dealing with the history and development of sound recording that will provide background information for

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Please do not send me lists of records for sale. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. Address:

JIM WALSH

Box 131 Vinton, Va.

MUSICAL MUSEUM

of

Deansboro, N. Y.

Visitors are invited to play our restored musical antiques.

OPERATED BY

THE OLD MUSIC STORE

(Please enclose stamp when writing)

From hints she dropped I knew my friend Helen was not in good health, but it was a shock when I received a telegram on November 19, 1951, from her sister, Josephine, who had been her vaudeville and musical comedy partner for many years. It said: "Helen Trix passed on Sunday. Services Wednesday 8 p. m., Campbell's Funeral Home, 81st Street and Madison Avenue, New York City. Josephine Fields." Unfortunately, I couldn't get away from my job as a radio news editor in Roanoke, Va., to attend the funeral and pay my last respects.

Some of the facts of Helen Trix's life may be found in "The ASCAP Biographical Dictionary of Composers, Authors and Publishers," but a bit more detail was contained in the New York Herald Tribune obituary notice:

A funeral service will be held tomorrow night . . . for Miss Helen Trix, 59, author and actress who died at St. Elizabeth's Hospital Sunday night. Her home was at 11 E. 32nd St.

Miss Trix was born in Newmanstown, Pa., and was graduated from Albright College, where she specialized in music and elocution. She entered vaudeville as both a singer and actress and while touring the circuits became interested in writing special material.

In 1920 she was featured in the London production of "League of Nations" and was herself composer, producer and star of a musical revue in London entitled "A to Z." With Andre Charlot she composed and produced a revue, "Tricks," in which she starred in 1925-26. She wrote and prepared radio material and songs for her own productions and gave several command performances in London.

Among the songs she wrote were "Parisian Peacock Girl," "It's Making Me Love You All the More," "That's How I Knew," "I Just Want to Give Myself Away" and "You'd Love to Live in Paris."

Surviving are two sisters, Mrs. Josephine Greenfield and Mrs. Alma Cirina, and a brother, Carl Yeiser.

The Herald Tribune also contained this notice, inserted by ASCAP: "We announce with profound sorrow the death of our beloved member and colleague, Helen Trix, in New York City, on Nov. 18, 1951. OTTO A. HARBACH, President, American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers."

(In passing, although Josephine Trix's husband is known professionally as Fields, the foregoing biographical notice makes it appear his name is really Greenfield. And since the last name of Miss Trix's brother is Yeiser, Trix probably is only an assumed name for theatrical use.)

The ASCAP book mentions a few other songs written by Helen Trix: "Follow Me," "In Boo Boo Boo," "There Will Come a Time," "Back to London Town," "I Never Worry About the Morning," "International Wedding Song," "Huckleberries," "Beautiful Shangri-La," "I'm Going Home," "Sweet Daddy," "Calico Ball," "The Fascinating Whistle of a Train," "The Bridal Waltz," "I Can Live on Memories" and "The Yankee Tango Girl." There were many others. None of her compositions, however, would be classed as outstanding hits.

II

Most of this department's readers, I imagine, are more interested in Helen Trix's recording career than in her many stage successes. Yet it is odd, at first sight, that the ASCAP biography and the obituary notices in the Herald Tribune and Variety all omit any reference to the fact that the comedienne was a pioneer recording artist.

I think I know the reason for this. The information in the ASCAP book was supplied by Helen herself, and the death notices contained information taken from the book. And any reference to Helen Trix's singing for records as long ago as 1906 would have brought her age into question. If the published statements are correct, then Miss Trix was only fourteen when she began making records. That of course is not impossible. A good many well known recording artists began their careers in their teens. But the age of fourteen is hard to reconcile with the statement that the singer attended college, and with Billy Murray's recollection that she was married to a vaudeville comedian, Frank Fogarty, when she started her phonograph career.

Stage personalities naturally like to appear as young as possible. It's a bread-and-butter matter with them. So it's likely that Miss Trix, in an entirely justified effort to conceal the advance of time, took off from five to ten years in preparing the notes from which the ASCAP material was taken. Of course it doesn't particularly matter.

At any rate, Helen wrote me that her first record was an Edison two-minute cylinder, "Is Your Mother In, Molly Malone?" This, No. 9365, appeared in the October, 1906, list, with the comment:

We take pleasure in presenting to the army of phonograph owners a new singer in Miss Trix, whose clear, well modulated contralto voice will, we believe, gain her a firm place in the galaxy of Edison stars. Her first offering is a song in Irish dialect, telling of the Irish lover, who, whenever he went to court Molly Malone, felt it his duty to first inquire if her father and mother were in . . .

Incidentally, I differ with Edison's description of Miss Trix as a "contralto." To me she sounds like a soprano.

In view of Helen's later successes in England, it's interesting to observe that early in her career she had already developed a knack of imitating the popular British music hall entertainers. Her second Edison cylinder, announced in November, 1906, was a take-off on the highly popular English comedienne, Vesta Victoria, singing one of her topical hits, "The Next Horse I Ride On":

A new note in popular songs was struck by Fred Murray and George Everard when they produced this composition, which has been chosen by Helen Trix as her second Edison record. A young girl's father came into some money and he insisted that his daughter should learn to ride horseback. The first time she was put on the horse the wrong way, looking backward . . . The second time . . . the girl had a no less unhappy experience. Each time she declared that "The next horse I ride on, I am going to be tied on." The song has a good swing. Miss Trix has made a record of it that will add to her popularity as an Edison artist . . . This song has been widely sung by Vesta Victoria, who also made a great success with "Waiting at the Church."

It probably will be a surprise to most collectors that Helen Trix even on occasion sang Harry Lauder songs. During the period in which she made Edison cylinders she was also singing for Victor and Zonophone discs, and one of her Zonos, No. 796, is a charming version of Lauder's success, "Stop Yer Tickling, Jock," which I prefer to Sir Harry's own recording. It contains no laughing and no monolog in Scotch dialect, but is sung vivaciously and attractively.

I recently obtained from Samuel

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION

RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
the following labels:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH, DE LUXE & GRAND PRIZE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS, such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G. & T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.
- ★ Old record catalogs.

Persons offering material not specified above or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY
50 Prospect Avenue
Valhalla, New York

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout.

Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

Tanenbaum, a Hartford, Conn., book dealer, some Zon-o-phone record lists for 1905, 1906 and 1907. In the supplement for July, 1907, this record is listed with the comment: "Humorous English song guaranteed to start the feet going and bring a laugh to the lips." As far as I know, this is the only Lauder song Miss Trix recorded during her brief American phonograph career of about two years.

The same supplement contains another Trix record of which I had not previously heard—No. 797, "The Story of a Clothes Line," which had the sub-title, "Another pair of stockings on the line." "The story," we are informed, "unfolds as new stockings appear on the line. Sung with great success by Alice Lloyd, the clever English comedienne."

And, although it really has nothing to do with Helen Trix, I cannot resist setting down here for my fellow collectors the (to me) astonishing knowledge gained from this supplement that when the Peerless Quartet was first organized in 1907 the baritone was Steve Porter instead of Arthur Collins. In all my years of amassing information about pioneer recording artists I had never heard Porter mentioned in connection with the Peerless, although he obviously takes part in some of the old Columbia Quartet records. The other members of the Peerless of course were Albert Campbell, Henry Burr and Frank C. Stanley. But because Campbell used the name of Frank Howard in singing for Zon-o-phone, the first tenor is referred to as "Mr. Howard."

In December, 1906, the comedienne was represented in the Edison list by No. 9426, "A Chip of the Block," which she also sang on an eight-inch Victor, No. 4923. The Edison is much better than the disc. I owned the Victor version for many years but couldn't understand more than half the words. Then, when I obtained the cylinder, I got every word at first playing. Here is what the Edison supplement said: "Father raised a family of six of the good old fashioned stock and they were all chips of the block. The two verses and chorus tell in a funny manner in what way each followed Dad's peculiarities. A feature . . . is Miss Trix's clever whistling. She is an expert in the art and few members of the opposite sex are her equal."

For a short time a new cylinder by Helen Trix appeared monthly. Her offering (No. 9450) for January, 1907, was her biggest hit as an American recording artist. It was the still well remembered "Bird on Nellie's Hat," which she also made on Victor record No. 4904. This clever number was a sensation, and after Miss Trix had gone to England the demand for a four-minute version was so great Edison had it re-recorded by Ada Jones. The supplement said: "A new comic song by Alfred Solman (music) and Arthur J. Lamb (words). The little bird on Nellie's hat sees and comments on the love making of Nellie's various beaux. Miss Trix . . . is in her usual clear and distinct voice."

The "Nellie" song also appeared in the January Victor list, with this comment:

A thoroughly original song, which has made one of the biggest hits of the season. The bird which Nellie wears on her hat is quite a knowing little rascal, and tells a number of things which Nellie would rather suppress. Miss Trix's singing of this song must be heard to be appreciated. Another number by Miss Trix, "Chip o' the Block," which is used in her clever vaudeville specialty, will be found in the 8-inch list.

In this same January Victor supplement was a duet by Miss Trix and Dan W. Quinn, No. 4914, "Is Marriage a Failure?" Editor Sam Rous wrote:

Here is still another new combination of singers—Miss Trix being a new comer, while Mr. Quinn is well-known as a famous entertainer. This amusing duet was one of the hits of "The Mayor of Tokio." The first verse pictures everything as lovely and serene in the family, but the second stanza is full of storms. The little conversations, one of which is supposed to occur in the ballroom, and the other at 3 a. m., when hubby comes home, are well done and quite amusing.

From the Victor reference to Miss Trix's "vaudeville specialty" it will be seen she had already begun doing stage work as well as making records.

In February, 1907, Edison issued one of the most unusual records in which Helen took part. It was No. 9471, the catchy "Whistle It," from Henry Blossom and Victor Herbert's operetta, "The Red Mill," in which she sang with Billy Murray and Edward Meeker—the latter being the Edison announcer as well as one of the company's popular comedians. Oddly enough the record by this talented trio didn't sell well and was discontinued by August, 1909.

As another oddity I'll mention that Billy Murray took part in at least four recorded versions of "Whistle It," each time with a different combination of assisting artists. On the Victor record he sang with Ada Jones and S. H. Dudley; on Zon-o-phone with Miss Jones and Steve Porter; and on Columbia with Ada and Frank C. Stanley. He once told me he recalled the Helen Trix of 1907 as "a little girl living in Brooklyn and with a slight German accent." "When we'd meet," he said, "she'd exclaim 'Hel-lo, Bil-lee!' After she went to England she acquired the British mannerisms so successfully that when I'd see her on one of her trips to this country, she'd intone 'Cheerio, Willie!'"

I believe there were only two other Edison records by Helen Trix. The May, 1907, issue included another of her Vesta Victoria take-offs, "I Told His Missus All About Him," and in June she sang a Harry Von Tilzer number, "Lulu and Her La, La, La." This was unsuccessful—not a common characteristic of Von Tilzer songs—and the record was cut out in 1909.

Just why Helen ended her successful Edison career after less than a year I don't know. Perhaps domestic unhappiness had something to do with it. Billy Murray thought she went abroad after her husband, Frank Fogarty, died of tuberculosis, but Helen herself said in one of her letters to me the marriage ended by divorce before Fogarty's death. In the March, 1909, issue of The New Phonogram an Elmira, New York, reader asked: "Does Helen Trix sing for you any more?" and received the reply, "She has not sung for us in some time."

Two Victor records by Helen Trix not so far mentioned are No. 4986, "It Ain't All Honey and It Ain't All Jam" (another selection popularized by Vesta Victoria) and No. 4946, "The Next Horse I Ride On." She largely duplicated her Edison repertoire on Victor. Because of Helen's seeming reluctance to discuss her recording career I never learned how she happened to begin making records, but perhaps she was a protegee of Dan Quinn and he introduced her to the recording studios. I have mentioned their Victor duet, "Is Marriage a Failure?" and they also sang No. 4959, a nonsense song, "Fol de Iddley Ido," from "Pearl and the Pumpkin."

I likewise have two Zon-o-phones by them—538, "Fol de Iddley Ido," and 549, "Whistling Mike." Miss Trix doesn't sing in the latter but whistles rather faintly in the background. Both these numbers are listed in the November, 1906, Zon-o-phone supplement, but probably had previously appeared in September. If so, they were issued a month before the Edison cylinder of "Is Your Mother In, Molly Malone?" which Helen believed to be her first record. Concerning No. 538, the supplement termed it a "humorous duet of exceptional merit, introducing singing and whistling," while "Whistling Mike" was "a humorous Irish selection; the words are clever, tune very catchy. Mr. Quinn sings the verses, Miss Trix whistles the choruses."

And now I have told all I know of Helen Trix's American recording career.

(To be continued)

Explaining Those "Mother's Day Songs"

By an odd accident which I can't clearly explain, four paragraphs of an article about Mother's Day songs appeared at the end of my Albert Spalding article in the March issue of HOBBIES. Of course they didn't belong there.

I recognize the paragraphs as being from an article which I wrote last year for Variety. Possibly a discarded sheet of manuscript got mixed in with the ones about Spalding and was set into type. At any rate, the article properly should have ended with the quotation from the New York Times, commenting on the death of Spalding's accompanist, Andre Benoist. This explanation is given for the benefit of those who have been puzzled by the incongruous combination of parts of two separate articles.

—Jim Walsh

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Helen Trix

(Continued from the April Issue)

By JIM WALSH

I don't know just when Helen Trix went to England or why. Perhaps it was to forget the wreck of her unhappy marriage, for in her life with Fogarty the answer to "Is Marriage a Failure?" was "yes."

The next we hear of this brilliant comedienne and accomplished lady the year is 1912, and the source is George Jessel's autobiography, "So Help Me," in which he confesses that at the age of 14 he loved Helen Trix:

Our act, "The Kid Kabaret," began a tour of . . . the Orpheum Time circuit in Winnipeg. One of the other attractions on the bill was Helen Trix. She had been born in a little town in Pennsylvania, had gone to Europe as a pianist and had now returned to America as a typical English lady, singing gentle songs with a decided British accent. At the finish of the act she appeared as a boy, her very feminine figure even more impressive in pants. She was the first gentlewoman I had ever known. It was through her that I started reading poetry. When the Orpheum Circuit ended I knew most of the Indian Love Lyrics by heart. Helen used to read them to me on the long sleeper jumps through the tour.

I was fourteen and terribly in love with her. She had been married to a famous Irish monologist, Frank Fogarty (sic), but they had been divorced. She was very sweet to me. One morning as we were arriving in San Francisco she held my hand and told me she would not be seeing so much of me from now on, for in Frisco was waiting her man, Jimmy Britt, former lightweight champion of the world. This news was a knockout for me. I found myself mumbling aloud one of the poems she had taught me, "For This is Our Wisdom" . . .

I kept repeating this . . . until one day, dining in a kosher restaurant on Turk Street in San Francisco, (Eddie) Cantor said to me, "Georgie, stop crying in the noodle soup. It's weak enough as it is."

It must have been during this American tour that Helen wrote three songs which Witmark published in 1913. She did both the words and music of "Chiquita Chi" and "Are You Coming to the Ball?" and the music of "In Boo-Boo-Boo" to words by Fred Leigh. Presumably, she was never married to Prizefighter Jimmy Britt—certainly a rather surprising choice of "heart interest" for so refined and feminine a lady.

IV

Just when Miss Trix's younger sister, Josephine, joined her as her partner in the "sister act" which made them outstanding favorites in England is something I have not learned. They were well established by the early 1920's. I have a faded clipping from a Baltimore newspaper, probably published in 1922, which shows a blurred photo of the pair, then appearing at the Maryland

Theater. They were obviously two attractive young women, and probably many admirers indulged in the same pun as did a friend to whom I showed a picture of the sisters:

"Well, they certainly were cute little Trix!"

They also must have been one of the first so-called "sister teams." About the first of the sister acts to make records in the United States were Fanny and Kitty Watson, who sang for Okeh, Pathe, Emerson and other records from 1917 to 1920. They still play an occasional date at the Palace in New York. Then came the Farber Sisters (Columbia and Pathe); the Heart Sisters (Columbia), who sang with Al Jolson in "Bombo";

WANTED

Coin operated pianos and other coin operated musical instruments. Also rolls for the above, operators' manuals and catalogs.

ED. ZELINSKY

11 Jordan Ave. San Francisco 18, Calif.

jep

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout.

Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION

RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on the following labels:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH, DE LUXE & GRAND PRIZE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS, such as ODEON, FONOTIPLA, G. & T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.
- ★ Old record catalogs.

Persons offering material not specified above or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue
Valhalla, New York

ttt

Vivian and Rosetta Duncan (Victor); the Brox Sisters (Victor and Brunswick); the Dennis and MacDowell Sisters (Edison); Ethel and Dorothea Ponce (Edison and Columbia); the Tietge and Pickens Sisters (Victor); and the Frohne and Paull Sisters, who sang with dance bands playing for Edison. Ethel and Eleonora Olson made duets in Norwegian for Edison and Victor, and I knew the Bowman Sisters of Johnson City, Tenn., who had sung hill-billy and "blues" duets for Columbia, with Sister Jenny playing an accordion accompaniment, in the late 1920's. In more recent years there have been the Boswell Sisters (Brunswick), the very popular Andrews Sisters trio (Decca), the Wallace Sisters (Decca) and the teen-age Bell Sisters (Victor).

The Trix Sisters were going strong a good many years before most of the others got started. They were making records in England as long ago as 1922—probably earlier. One of their 1922 offerings was HMV B1302, on one side of which they sang "There'll Come a Time." On the other, with the appropriate assistance of the dapper English musical comedy star, Jack Buchanan, they did "Dapper Dan."

After electric recording was introduced, the Trix Sisters were features of the English Columbia catalog. Both Helen and Josephine recorded alone as well as a pair. Issues of The Gramophone in the late 1920's frequently contained reviews of records by the Sisters. In October, 1926, there was praise of their version of "I'm Sittin' On Top of the World." Three years later, in November, 1929, the critic said: "Their many friends will welcome another record by the Trix Sisters, especially as it contains two such popular numbers as 'S'posin' and 'Come On, Baby.'"

Roger Wimbush had an article in the June, 1929, Gramophone, in which he said: "The success of the Trix Sisters . . . shows that there is a definite public for female interpreters of jazz. . . . These in particular make excellent records since they chiefly rely on vocal harmony, and if the listeners can imagine the two sisters in the daintiest of evening frocks (not a great strain on the imagination, surely) he will be enjoying all there is to enjoy. Their rendering of 'I'm Crazy Over You' is worth hearing if only for the amazing imitation of the saxophone toward the end." Wimbush's article was accompanied by a drawing showing Helen at the piano, while Josephine, standing, apparently was "singing the lead." Personally, I don't like the typing of the Trix Sisters as "jazz singers."

In July, 1929, appeared this comment: "The Trix Sisters have another record, but this time they each have a side. Josephine sings 'I Must Have That Man' and Helen 'Digga Digga Do.' They are both good efforts." The 1930 English Columbia catalog listed twelve double-faced records by the sisters. One side of No. 5368 sounds particularly interesting. The title is "Negro Complaints." It is sung by the sisters, with Helen at the piano and Len Eillis playing the guitar

THE TRIX SISTERS
Helen and Josephine

My friendship by correspondence with Helen Trix began in 1941, after she had come back to her native country because of World War II. I read in Variety of her return and wrote to her to tell her how much I had enjoyed her records—the American ones, for I have never heard the English Columbias. On September 24, she replied, in a large and dashing type of handwriting that appears characteristic of theatrical personalities, and at times wasn't easy to read:

Dear Mr. Walsh: Thanks for your letter of August 10th. I shall be very glad to meet you if you get to New York any time. Our mutual friend, Billy Murray, will know where to get hold of me, as I am giving up this apartment the first of October. All good wishes, sincerely, Helen Trix.

At that time I was living in Johnson City, Tenn. On January 31, 1942, Miss Trix wrote:

Dear Mr. Walsh: . . . I don't know yet if you ever got to New York. Never saw Billy Murray after I wrote you saying he would know where to find me. Well, I have been writing songs again and we are starting off with the enclosed number. We think it will be a good spring and summer song. Do give it a plug down there. Next week we are having several records made by some of the hit record-girls. The song is light, catchy and easy to learn. The chorus makes a good singing blues idea. Am hoping it will be a hit.

The song, "Huckleberries," didn't turn out a hit, although it was a good novelty number which I was glad to give several plugs at radio station WJHL in Johnson City.

There must have been another letter or two which I didn't find while assembling material for this article. The more intimate part of our correspondence began in February, 1951, when I received a letter addressed to me in care of Walsh's Wax Works, WSLS, Roanoke, Va.:

Dear Jim Walsh: Hello, this is Helen Trix speaking. Read your very interesting article in Variety Christmas and it was indeed fine. I have been back in the song writing business a few years. . . . Last year I wrote "The Calico Ball," recorded by Johnny Long and his band. And yesterday the record of the enclosed came out and it's a peach—Abbey records. The music boys in New York think I may have something worth while as there are hundreds of brides a day. Let us hope so. . . . I trust this finds you well and still enjoying the music world as I do.

The "enclosed" was the sheet music of the song she had written, "The Bridal Waltz," a very pretty number as I learned when the Abbey record was sent to me.

From this time until her death I heard from Helen frequently and we soon seemed old friends. By February 26 I had become "Dear Jim" and she was "Dear Helen":

Thanks for your very charming letter and thanks for your kind cooperation down there on "The Bridal Waltz." They are giving it a plug up here at quite a few places and they (the publishers) are getting special cards out to forward to all prospective brides. A splendid idea, don't you think?

About the party (for pioneer recording artists) at Garden City, L. I., I shall be delighted to come along if I am in town. Dear old Billy Murray! I have not seen him in a long time. About Elida Morris, I never knew she came to England and heard nothing of her being there, but I did know her here and we played on the bill with her several times. I always thought she was a very good artist. I never knew Billy Whitlock. . . . I am sorry not to be able to send you a photo. The old ones are stored in trunks with my sister in Brooklyn, and I don't want to have any new ones done until I do something worth while.

I am working hard on the writing of songs and have a few more coming along. My sister Josephine is out of the business and lives right near me. She does not care for show business any more, although she says she would make records with me. . . . Her husband is in the antique business and doing well. They went through the war in London and lost everything they had, but they have pulled out beautifully and are doing fine. . . .

I had already known that Josephine was in "the States," for I had saved a clipping headed "Josie Trix Back in U. S." from the November 15, 1944, issue of Variety, which said: "Josephine Trix, of the former vaude team, the Trix Sisters, arrived in New York from London last week, accompanied by her husband, Eddie Fields, London comedian-producer. Couple had been trying to get out of London since last April. An American, it's Fields' first time here in twenty-nine years. Their London home was bombed, but they escaped unscathed. Couple are making their home in New York with the other Trix sister."

About this time I sent Helen a snapshot of myself, made while I was eating breakfast at the Swan Luncheonette in Vinton, Va. On first reading I thought she was thanking me for a "Plute," but I finally made it out to be "photo." I found her comment on the flash shot both flattering and amusing:

"Dear Jim: Your letter and photo arrived. Writing later. Will try and scout up an old picture and forward same. You should have been a Broadway leading man. You have the appearance of such."

In turn, I amused Helen by sending her an envelope I had received in 1945 from my dear friend, the late John L. Norton, Sr., who with his son Jack operated the Woodymay Record Company in Boston, Mass., and whose advertisements appeared regularly in HOBBIES until his death. "Satan," as the elder Norton delighted to call himself, had a fondness for putting all sorts of odd return addresses on his envelopes. The one I sent for her to see was purportedly from "Helen Trix, Canary-voice, New York." She was also amused when I told her that because of her "pepper-pot" personality in her "Chip of the Block" record, I always thought of her, when I was a small boy operating the imaginary Walsh Talking Machine Company, as a lady of uncertain temper who would become annoyed if any delay occurred in her recording engagements and stalk indignantly out of the studio. As I remember expressing it in one of my imaginary stories about the recording artists who obsessed my imagination: "Miss Trix had long since gone home in disgust."

By this time Helen Trix had only a few months to live, but for some time longer her mood continued cheerful. Her letter dated March 16, 1951, is especially interesting:

Thanks for your nice long letter. I was quite amused at your imaginary dramas. I am returning the envelope, and he wrote my name almost like I do at times. Yes, I do remember doing "Chip of the Block." My first record was "Molly Malone." I did "The Bird On Nellie's Hat" . . . and I do remember the one with Billy Murray and Ed Meeker. I had forgotten Ed's name till you mentioned it. Yes, Jim, I will come to the party. . . . Thanks for sending me a copy of HOBBIES. . . . I shall be delighted to give you an article for it and am sure I can give you a good one. . . . I still sit at the piano and sing songs and songs. I have written some lovely ones. Am in hopes of placing some with the publishers. All you need is one good hit, so shall keep on working. . . . I should love to get back to making records again, and I feel I will one day.

I am sending a photo of the Trix Sisters. This was one of our much used ones in our heyday. One day I shall send you an up-to-date one. Do you ever hear from Billy Murray? If you do ask him to give me a ring. . . . If he gets into New York I could say hello to him and have a chat. I know he lives in Freeport. . . . Now don't work too hard. Life is beautiful, so don't hurry it and knock yourself out. About Clarice Vance, I think she passed on several years ago. Take it easy, Jim! All the best from HELEN.

On April second, Helen wrote:

We had our ASCAP dinner last week and it was really lovely to see so many old friends. . . . Did I tell you I placed another song with Jack Mills and they seem to be very keen on it? Title, "The Black Sheep Is Back in the Fold." With all the spiritual pictures and songs of a sacred order now in swing I hope it will hit. Josephine and I made a swell record of it in harmony. When they start getting the dubs out I will send you one.

Unfortunately I was never sent a dubbing of this Trix Sisters record, nor did I get the "up-to-date" photo I was promised.

A letter misdated May 26, 1950, instead of 1951, is less cheerful than the preceding ones. Helen said she had learned that eleven songs called "The Bridal Waltz" had been written and registered with ASCAP during the past seven months, and this naturally was interfering with promotion of her song by the same name. I had mentioned her marriage to Frank Fogarty and my belief that he died before the marriage ended. She commented: "Yes, I was married to Fogarty, and it's a horrible memory. I left him long before he died. . . . It's like a book—you read and forget the details, Jim."

On June 2, Helen wrote me she didn't remember making the Zonophone record of "Stop Your Tickling, Jock," and shortly afterwards I sent her a dubbing. She was more cheerful when she wrote four days later: "Dear Jim: Thanks for HOBBIES. . . . Shall look it over thoroughly. Here is good news. Darewski Music Company of England, whom I have known for years, just bought the British rights of 'The Bridal Waltz.' Hurrah for a break!"

On June 26, Miss Trix again misdated a letter as 1950 instead of '51. Referring to the dubbing, she said: "'Stop Your Tickling, Jock,' was like (something) out of the dark and handed me a laugh. It's no more like me today than someone else. I shall try it again on a better player. It goes to show how we have all gone forward when we hear these old things. We had news from London. 'The Bridal Waltz' had a splendid reaction after being broadcast and they are doing records. . . . I am hoping for the best. . . . I enjoyed HOBBIES very much, Jim. It's quite a magazine."

With the "Jock" dubbing I sent Helen a recording of my own voice. On July 13, she wrote: "Yes, you have a Southern drawl and I like it. So don't let anyone tell you it's too much. I also sounded better with 'Stop Your Tickling, Jock.' Today was the first chance I had to hear that record on a good machine. . . . I had a letter from London saying 'The Bridal Waltz' was their Number One plug and they were crazy about it. Joe Loss, the top band, did a record of it. . . . I had a long chat with Jack Mills and he is very keen on me doing TV."

In August and September I received only three postals from Helen, who was obviously unwell and becoming worse because the handwriting grows progressively shaky. On the one for September 20, she complains of "feeling seedy."

My last letter from Helen Trix was dated October 16, just a month and two days before her death. In part it said:

My dear, I have not written before as the devil has just tried to knock me about like mad. I have felt so rotten, have not been near a publisher in weeks. All I want to do is lie around. . . . The publisher that publishes "The Bridal Waltz" in London is here and I will try and see him before he returns. I really don't know what is going on as I have not even seen a Variety. Well, that's the way it goes at times. . . . It's just a battle, old dear, and may the best man win.

We are having Indian summer . . . and I love it. I cannot stand the cold weather. Keep well, Jim, and let me hear from you when you can. All the best. Ever, HELEN.

I replied, but heard nothing more from, or about, Helen until the telegram from Josephine came, telling me of the death of my dear friend by correspondence, "The Little Pepper Pot," who had enjoyed triumphal appearances before British royalty but whom I was fated never to see. For her the battle was over. The shock was great and my sorrow was the greater because it was out of the question for me to go to New York for the funeral services. Recalling how much her records had meant to me and how our acquaintance through the mail had deepened into an almost tender intimacy. I was left feeling much as Dick Merriwell when he experienced that gnawing regret because of the death of "the friend he never knew."

It had been my plan to have a long talk with Helen and write a HOBBIES article based on what she told me. Failing in that, I have done the best I could, on the basis of what information I have, to pay a tribute to the memory of a gifted and gracious lady.

MUSICAL MUSEUM

of

Deansboro, N. Y.

Visitors are invited to play our restored musical antiques.

OPERATED BY

THE OLD MUSIC STORE

(Please enclose stamp when writing)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

ADA JONES

and the Shannon Four Give a Concert in Roanoke, Va.

By JIM WALSH

Fifty years ago a Columbia Graphophone Company official talked turkey to the great Leonard Garfield Spencer.

The official walked in one day while Len and Billy Murray were rehearsing what used to be called a "coon song," with Spencer taking the part of a Negro man and Murray, his tenor voice pitched to a falsetto, enacting the role of the "wench." For a moment the official, who probably was Victor Emerson, stared in disgust, then he exclaimed:

"Oh, for gosh sake! If you've got to do this sort of thing, cut out this business of having a man pretend that he's a woman! From now on use a woman when the part calls for one!"

That was an historic moment. Billy told Len of a young woman he had heard singing popular songs a few days before in Huber's Museum. So Spencer, whose varied talents had caused him to become the first famous recording artist in the early 1890's, no longer did duets with Billy Murray, but engaged Ada Jones as his partner, and (as related in a series of HOBBIES articles from July, 1946, through January, 1947), Miss Jones became by far the most popular feminine record maker. By an ironic twist, she began recording sentimental duets with Murray three years later, and their team work was so popular it gradually pushed the Jones-Spencer descriptive sketches into the background.

A decade or more before she won international fame as Len Spencer's associate, and probably while she was still in her teens, Ada Jones made experimental cylinders for the ill-starred North American Phonograph Company. However, her career as a professional recording artist began in 1904 and continued until her death 18 years later. At the height of her popularity the buxom comedienne was almost a legendary figure. False reports that she had died were constantly in circulation. Today, although she has been dead nearly 32 years, there remains a fantastic side to Ada Jones' life story, for she has admirers among record collectors who refuse to believe she is not still living. Unfortunately, some of the details of this gifted artist's life are so obscure that in spite of my extensive investigation she remains much of a "mystery woman."

That statement brings to mind my article, "Her Dolls Depict Favorite Phonograph Stars," in the January HOBBIES. In describing the dolls dressed by Mrs. Margaret E. White to represent Ada Jones and Billy Murray, I wrongly gave Mrs. White's address as Rockport, Mass. The skillful doll's dressmaker's son, Lester L. White, has a home there but his mother lives at 261 Derby Street, West Newton, Mass. In July, 1953, I made a plane trip to visit Mrs. White, whom I have "adopted" as my godmother, and she has presented me with the Ada and Billy dolls, which she considers among her finest achievements.

At the conclusion of the article I said that I hoped to learn the exact date of Ada Jones' birth by writing to the Central Registrar of Vital Statistics in London, England. And I promised to share with HOBBIES readers any information I received. I am sorry to report that my efforts once more proved fruitless. H. W. Taylor, the Registrar General at the General Register Office, Somerset House, London, replied that the archives contained birth records of a large number of persons named Ada Jones; consequently, he said, the information I was able to furnish was "too meagre and indefinite to permit of a search being made." He was also unable to find any listing of the birth of Charles D'Almaine, the once famous violinist, whose life story is difficult to piece together but shall yet be related in these pages.

II

Just after I had typed the preceding paragraph, I received a letter from my old friend, Clarence A. Ferguson, well known Merrill, Wisconsin, dealer in Edison discs and cylinders. Mr. Ferguson thanked me for writing the January article on Albert Benzler, and mentioned that in addition to being a virtuoso of the piano, bells and xylophone, Benzler played the violin. Says Mr. Ferguson:

"I have an old picture taken in the Edison recording room, where a record is being made, and (Eugene) Jaudas is directing the orchestra. . . . Benzler is one of the players, and he is playing a violin. He could take any instrument and play it like a master. The picture is about 1905."

My attention perked up when I read the next paragraph of the Ferguson letter:

"I believe I have some news on Ada Jones for you. . . . A woman who buys records from me . . . came from England, and the same town as Ada Jones. The lady was born December 6, 1878 . . . and she went to school with a girl by the name of Ada Jones. They were about the same age, (so) this would be the age of Ada. . . . I hope, Jim, this is what you are looking for, and sure hope you get some good luck out of it, as Ada's early years are in the dark."

For a moment I felt exhilarated after reading the foregoing. Then I remembered a devastating fact. Ada Jones' parents came to this country when Ada was a baby, and Ada was singing in a Philadelphia theater by the time she was seven. Obviously, she could not have gone to school in England with Mr. Ferguson's friend. As Mr. Taylor had pointed out, there were a lot of people in England named Ada Jones.

However, a lucky chance has come my way, which if it does not solve the mystery of Ada Jones' parentage and birth date at least does provide some additional information based on the comedienne's own statements.

Some months ago I was fortunate enough to find a photograph of Ada Jones and the Shannon Four, taken when she and that excellent male quartet, which had then been in existence only a few months, gave a concert in Roanoke, Va., 36 years ago this month, in April, 1918. At that time World War I had almost reached its frenzied climax and few observers dreamed the end was only seven months away. (The terrible influenza epidemic of the fall of 1918 also wasn't dreamed of.) It occurred to me that the photo would be an interesting one to reproduce in HOBBIES and that it likewise would be a good idea to go through the 1918 files of the Roanoke Times and re-print the newspaper's review of the concert. So I took a couple of hours one Saturday afternoon to make a search of the yellowed, decaying bound volumes, and my efforts were rewarded, even though my garments were unspeakably dirty before I got through. The remainder of this article, then, will be an account, supplemented by some background material, of what I found in the file room of the Roanoke Times.

ADA JONES AND THE SHANNON FOUR photographed at the Roanoke Cycle Company on their visit to Roanoke, Va., in April, 1918. Standing—Charles Hart, Harvey Hindermeyer, Elliott Shaw and Wilfred Glenn, all of whom are still alive. Miss Jones died in May, 1922.

III

Since I didn't know the date on which the concert was given, it took a bit of preliminary searching to find the first reference to what was later described as "a musical event." But when I reached the issue for Sunday, March 31, I knew I was moving in the right direction. There was a large display advertisement headed: "Grand Musical Concert By World's Famous Talking Machine Artists," with a sub-head, "Personal Appearance in a Two-Hour Concert—a Real Show." The ad. was poorly printed and the lay-out man had made several errors, so that photos of members of the Shannon Four were accompanied by identification lines meant for others of the group. Here are the descriptions given by the ad. writer of the five men and one woman in the company:

ADA JONES. Everybody who knows the phonograph loves Ada. She has been a great factor in making the phonograph what it is today. Her pleasant personality and superior soprano voice afford the greatest pleasure by her unique comic songs and general concert work. Her impersonations are invariably perfect, each of its kind. Miss Jones will sing a duet with George L. Thompson, and don't come with cracked lips, for you will surely suffer if you do.

Among the most popular talking machine artists of the day are the Shannon Four. These singers were all engaged in solo and concert work in different parts of the country and their musical ability together with their peculiar qualifications for record making caught the attention of the scouts of the great record making firms, who put them under contract for exclusive work.

CHARLES HART is one of those tenor singers that wins by delivering the goods. You will appreciate why he is placed as the first tenor of the Shannon Four when you hear him.

HARVEY W. HINDERMEYER. He easily takes first place among the talking machine artists with his clear, rich tenor voice.

WILFRED GLENN. Mr. Wilfred Glenn too has helped make the phonograph famous. His voice with its remarkable range of some 2½ octaves from C below the bass clef to F sharp is one of the richest de profundo of bass voices. Soloist of the Cathedral of St. John, the Divine, and member of several leading musical organizations.

GEORGE L. THOMPSON. He is a veritable Gatling gun set to music. To see and hear him is a whole entertainment.

Presumably because of the sloppy make-up, I didn't find any cut lines for the Shannon Four's fine baritone, Elliott Shaw. Mr. Shaw continued to suffer from a "bad press." Another ad. on April 7, listed him as Elliott Low.

IV

Before proceeding further with my research, perhaps it would be well to say something about the artists who paid that visit to Roanoke so many years ago. After more than a decade of great popularity, Ada Jones was entering the declining years of her career. She had carried on successfully for several years after the death of Len Spencer in December, 1914, and her duets with Billy Murray remained popular. But, after 1917, her name appeared much less frequently in record lists. She and Murray did one duet, "I'll Take You Back to Italy," for Victor in 1918. They also sang the same number for Edison, but the most popular comedienne and comedian of their day appear not to have been paired again until they recorded "When Francis Dances With Me" for Victor late in 1921.

During 1919 Miss Jones made only a few solo records, but assisted Cal Stewart in a great many "Punkin Center" recordings. After his death in December, 1919, she did little aside from working with Steve Porter in making for Edison several descriptive specialties that she had originally recorded years before for other companies with their author, Len Spencer. Although in semi-retirement, she had returned to the concert field and was touring the country when she died in Rocky Mount, N. C., in May, 1922.

George L. Thompson was the least-known member of the troupe. Perhaps it would be fair to say he was a "make-weight." Or, to use a baseball comparison, from the popularity standpoint he was only a minor league performer while the other five singers were all major league. Thompson, who was born in New York City in 1875, made his first stage appearance in 1893. He was one of the "Cohen on the Telephone" recorders, having made a splendid Edison record of the famous old comic sketch. He also sang a few comic songs for Edison and recorded for Emerson, Okeh and other minor companies. One of his Okeh discs purported to be a representation of Horace Goldin's famous vaudeville sketch, "Sawing a Woman in Two." He presumably is the George Thompson, who made a 1930 Columbia record of two hill-billy numbers, "A Chaw of Tobacco and a Little Drink (Won't Send Your Soul to Hell)" and "Cross-Eyed Sue." Thompson died a few years ago.

Two of the Shannon Four members were recording artists of wide experience while the others apparently had been before the horn for only a short time. Harvey Hindermeyer was born in Easton, Pa., the son of a German father and a Bavarian mother. His first record, an Edison cylinder of "She Was a Grand Old Lady," appeared in 1907. The genial, short and stocky Harvey once told me of the elation he felt a few weeks after he made the record when he walked past a penny arcade in Philadelphia, and heard Edward Meeker's voice announcing: "She Was a Grand Old Lady." Sung by Harvey Hindermeyer. Edison RECORD!" Within a short time he was recording for Victor and Columbia as well as Edison. He also sang for Okeh and other companies, but during most of his career he was regarded as primarily an Edison artist and toured the country from coast to coast giving tone tests.

Wilfred Glenn, born on one of the great ranches in the San Joaquin Valley of California, had begun singing as an exclusive Victor artist in 1912, and had made a series of popular basso profundo recordings. His voice had, and has, a remarkably fresh and virile quality that won him great popularity.

Charles Hart and Elliott Shaw seem to have made their recording debuts in 1917. Hart's Victor record with the lowest number, 18283, was "Forever is a Long, Long Time," which appeared in the November supplement. For some reason its issue was delayed. The number indicates that it should have come out in June. The first two Hart records to be placed on the market were listed in July, 18294, "Thou Shalt Not Steal (a Heart Away)" and 18300, "It's Time for Every Boy to be a Soldier." He had a double-faced offering in August, No. 18319, "A Tear, a Kiss, a Smile" and "That's Why My Heart is Calling You."

Shaw seems to have done no solo work in 1917, but to have had his initial recording experience as a member of the Shannon Four, whose first Victor record, "I May Be Gone for a Long, Long Time," was issued in September, coupled with the American Quartet's version of the greatest hit of World War I, "Over There." Whoever coupled the Victor records made a big mistake by picking "I May Be Gone" as the more likely hit side of the two. The quartet was on hand in October with 18355, "Wake Up, Virginia (And prepare for Your Wedding Day)" and in November with 18358, "Break the News to Mother," a revival of a Charles K. Harris ballad that antedated the Spanish-American War, coupled with the American Quartet singing George M. Cohan's 1906 hit, "You're a Grand Old Flag."

The Shannons were represented by three Victor waxings in December, 1917: 18391, "Come Back Home"; 18401, "Hello, Aloha, Hello" and 18400, "Melody Land." A month later they came through with 18414, "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here"; in February with 18428, "There's a Vacant Chair in Every Home Tonight"; in March with 18434, "There's a Service Flag Flying at Our House," and in April with 18438, "Tom, Dick and Harry and Jack." And that brings us up to the month they sang in Roanoke—which is just across a small bridge from Vinton, Va., the town in which I live.

Meanwhile, the quartet was also recording for Edison. Among other records, it sang "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here" for a Diamond Disc. Only a few Shannon Four records were issued, however, by Edison under that name. Edison soon changed the name for its own purposes to the Lyric Male Quartet, and under that disguise the foursome provided harmonious backing for such distinguished artists as Anna Case, Marie Rappold, Frieda Hempel and Virginia Rea. By a similar trick, Pathé used the Shannon Four name only a couple of times before switching to Acme Male Quartet for many other recordings.

V

When I was in Chicago in October, 1951, I asked Lewis James, who succeeded Harvey Hindermeyer as the quartet's second tenor a few months after the Roanoke concert, how the name, Shannon Four, was chosen. He said it was so called because Irish ballads were very popular around 1917 and the ensemble intended to specialize in them. I then asked why the name was changed to Shannon Quartet in 1923, and James said it was because the singers decided "Four" sounded too much like a vaudeville group. I surprised the genial tenor by pointing out that the names of the different members of the original Shannon Four were more or less concealed in the first word. "Shannon," for instance, begins with the first three letters in Shaw. Its second and third letters are the first two in Hart; and the "nn" at the end corresponds to the last two letters in Glenn. There are also indications of Hindermeyer in the word. Lewis James frankly said he was astonished at what I had pointed out but was sure the quartet hadn't tried to incorporate parts of the individual members' names into "Shannon."

I find myself wondering just how long the little concert company had been traveling together when it came to Roanoke, who first thought of organizing it, and how long the troupe kept on the road during that fateful year of 1918. Perhaps the success of another group, known in those days as the Peerless Record Makers but destined to become widely acclaimed a couple of years later as the Eight Famous (or Popular) Victor Artists, had something to do with the second company of "world-famous talking machine artists" going into the concert field.

The Eight in those days was composed of Ada Jones' long-time partner, Billy Murray, as star comedian and master of ceremonies; Henry Burr as manager and second tenor of the Peerless Quartet; Albert Campbell, the quartet's first tenor; Arthur Collins, comedian and quartet baritone; John H. Meyer, quartet bass; Byron G. Harlan, tenor comedian and duet partner of Collins; Vess L. Ossman, "The Banjo King," and Theodore Morse, song writer and pianist—surely one of the most scintillating light concert companies ever put together. Of that inimitable Eight, only Billy Murray is now alive. But it's good to know that all the original Shannon Four members are still with us.

And now let's return to April, 1918, when the phonograph fans of Roanoke presumably were set agog by the knowledge that they were to have an opportunity of hearing some top-flight talent in person.

(To be continued)

Current Collectors' Recordings

(Continued from page 25)

is DL 6019 and it includes the following: Walter Huston, "September Song"; Julia Sanderson, "They Didn't Believe Me"; Mary Martin, "My Heart Belongs to Daddy"; Millie Weitz, "Nobody Makes a Pass at Me"; Ethel Merman, "I Got Rhythm"; Ethel Merman and Joan Carroll, "Let's Be Buddies"; Gertrude Niesen, "I Wanna Get Married," and The Foursome, "Bidin' My Time."

A quarter century ago one of the biggest stars was Helen Kane whose unique "boop boop a doop" style makes her recordings favorites with many collectors. Recently she sang one of her best numbers, "I Wanna Be Loved by You," in the MGM musical "Three Little Words." The sound track from the movie was released in album form by MGM and this record is included as number 30241. Later she disked a few more numbers for Columbia, the best of which is No. 39205 which has "The Aha Daba Honeymoon" coupled with "Hug Me, Kiss Me, Love Me."

Several months ago I mentioned that Nick Lucas had resumed his recording career with Cavalier records. I have since received a complete list of his discs made for that company. They are as follows: 823—Tiptoe Through the Tulips/Painting the Clouds with Sunshine; 824—Francine/My Blue Heaven; 825—Tear Drops/Coquette; 826—Til the End of Forever/Lady Be Good. They are also all available on a single 10-inch LP disc CAV 5003-LP. I have heard the records and I think they are really fine. If you can't obtain them through your local record store, tell the manager to write Cavalier Records, Inc., 1300 26th Ave., San Francisco 22, Calif., for more information.

Cavalier has another interesting artist in its catalog. Stan Wilson may not appeal to a collector whose records deal with only one phase of entertainment, but if calypso, folk songs, and blues interest you, buy "The Stan Wilson Story on Wax," CAV 5001-LP, which has all of these sung by a young man who does them all well.

Early Sleeping Equipment

(Continued from page 20)

rockers were of similar wood, an inch or more in thickness, set edge-wise into slots in the corner posts.

Heart shaped openings might be cut in the head and foot to be used as handles when the cradle had to be carried from room to room. These openings had a certain ornamental value as did the scrolled sides. Old Pennsylvania cradles were stenciled in the typical Pennsylvania Dutch style with red and blue tulips and other designs and colors as found on old dower chests, etc.

Today these stout old cradles find their use as wood-boxes beside the modern fireplace and usually they are strong enough to endure such usage.

The terms crib and cradle are often used interchangeably, but ordinarily we think of the crib as the bed for a baby that has outgrown the cradle age. There are cribs made with rockers and only a little advanced from the cradle, but for the most part our cribs stand up on casters, high enough to make it easy for mother to lift the baby in and out. The sides are spindled and may even be movable. There is no hood save as netting may be used.

It is the cradle, not the crib, that represents in our minds babyhood, and it is "cradle" not "crib" that is used symbolically as we speak of "from the cradle to the grave" or "the cradle of Liberty."

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

ADA JONES

and the Shannon Four Give a Concert in Roanoke, Va.

(Continued from the June Issue)

By JIM WALSH

VI

As the time for the concert neared, "teaser" advertising was published almost daily. On April 2, under the head of "Great Musical Concert," there was a picture of Ada Jones with these cut lines:

Sweet-voiced Ada Jones is one of the musical stars at the Academy of Music on April 17, together with the internationally famous Shannon Four and others. These phonograph musical celebrities are to stage one of the grandest treats Roanoke has ever known. Tickets, 50 cents, 75 cents and $1 at Barnett, Schenk and Roanoke Cycle Company.

The Roanoke Cycle Company was the Victor dealer sponsoring the artists' engagement. Barnett, Schenk was a drug store. The Academy of Music was a grimy old building. Though smaller, it was almost as dingy as New York's Metropolitan Opera House, but was sometimes said to have the finest acoustics of any theater in the South. It was torn down as a "fire trap" about two years ago, after six decades during which hundreds of the world's most famous theatrical personalities had been seen and heard on its stage.

An ad. featuring Glenn appeared on April 3, and one of George Thompson the next day. Ada Jones was shown again on the 5th, and the ad. said: "World's Famous Talking Machine Artists. Not a Tone Test! A Real Show! A Grand Concert! Professor R. H. Mazziotta, pianist. Shannon Four—Charles Heart (Sic!), Harvey Hindermeyer, Elliott Shaw and George L. Thompson." Here were two more mistakes—misspelling Hart's name and listing Thompson instead of Glenn as a member of the quartet.

I was amused that the April 11 ad. also emphasized that the concert was not a "tone test." This of course was inspired by envy of the fact that only the Edison Diamond Disc had sufficiently realistic recording to venture "the supreme test of direct comparison with the living artist." Since the Victrola and all other talking machines only approximated the sound of the living artists' tones, rather than "re-creating" them, dealers for the competitive makes tried to represent the Edison tone tests as nuisances which audiences didn't want to be bothered with. I was also amused by a Roanoke Cycle Company ad. headed "Play Victor Records On Your Edison," followed in smaller letters on a second line by, "Columbia, Sonora or Brunswick." This seemed to indicate that in 1918 the Edison was the most widely used phonograph in Roanoke with the exception of the Victrola.

Further advertising revealed that Professor Mazziotta, the accompanist, was the pianist of the Venetian Trio, which made Victor records. Collectors of old-time recordings will wonder what relation, if any, he was to Frank Mazziotta, who played flute and piccolo solos for Edison, Victor, Zonophone and Columbia around 1900.

But the most interesting thing in the April 11 Roanoke Times was a brief article, "Ada Jones Relates Her Experiences As a Phonograph Artist." From this article, purportedly written by the singer herself, I learned that old Edison record catalogs were wrong in giving Ada's birthplace as Manchester, England, and that this perhaps had led me on a blind trail in trying to learn just when she was born:

I was born in Oldham, Lancashire, England. As a child I developed a talent for mimicry and was known as "Little Ada Jones, the Child Wonder." If they could see me now they would laugh at the idea of my ever being little. For some reason or other, everyone thinks I am small, and it is humorous to see the look of blank amazement which passes over their faces when I meet people. I feel sorry to know I have disappointed them.

My first experience in making records was with the former North American Phonograph Company, and my voice was the first female voice to record successfully for them. My next venture in phonograph work was with Len Spencer for the Columbia Gramophone (should be Graphophone—J. W.) Company. From that time on I worked for the Victor, Edison and all the other companies.

I have often been reported dead, and I even have a double who has been singing throughout the country, using my name as "Ada Jones, Phonograph Artist." I was just out with a troupe of phonograph artists, in several entertainments where I was introduced as "Ada Jones, the mother of the phonograph." It made me feel quite ancient. I assure you. (Signed) ADA JONES.

The tone of the foregoing letter obviously is not that of an elderly woman. It sounds more like the expression of one just entering middle-age and strengthens my belief that Ada Jones was between 40 and 50 when she died four years later. Perhaps now that her birthplace has been revealed as Oldham, which is seven miles from the industrial city of Manchester, I shall be able, by writing to Oldham authorities, to trace more of the soprano's family history.

In that same issue the following was said of the Shannon Four:

Each and every one of them seems possessed of a magnetic personality and the snap and ginger they put into their efforts immediately wins an audience and holds them to the last note. It is by no means sufficient to be a good musician to be on the staff of any great phonograph record producing firms. There must be an unusual purity of musical tones, a positive, clearly defined enunciation, and the ability to transmit the living soul of music through the dead medium of the record. These artists have been sought and gleaned from the best musical combinations the country can produce and are under contract to the great record firms, who keep them on their regular staffs at great expense.

VII

And then, finally, the eagerly awaited concert itself took place on the night of Wednesday, April 17. Ada Jones and the Shannon Four came and they conquered. The next morning, under the heading of "Victor Artists Render Pleasing Program of Song," the Roanoke Times said:

One of the largest audiences of the season gathered at the Academy of Music last evening and was rewarded by a musical treat such as is rarely offered in cities the size of Roanoke. The galaxy of Victor artists appearing under the auspices of the Roanoke Cycle Company were at their best and entertained their auditors for more than two hours with a varied program embodying the best and most popular music not only of the day but of all time.

Decidedly the hit of the evening was made by the Shannon Four, the well known quartet composed of Charles H. Hart and Harvey W. Hindermeyer, tenors, Elliott Shaw, baritone, and Wilfred Glenn, basso. They presented a repertoire that appealed alike to the lover of so-called classical music and the admirer of topical songs and their solos, duet and quartet numbers were most enjoyable.

Ada Jones, the popular soprano and comedienne, sang several of her comic songs, giving them with the inimitable rendition that has made her such a universal favorite. Miss Jones appeared twice and each time was generously en-

THIS PHOTO OF THE VICTOR RECORD MAKER TROUPE, later known as the Eight Famous Victor Artists, probably was taken in 1917. It was sent to Jim Walsh by the late "Dolly" Morse, widow of the song writer-pianist Theodore Morse. She did not know where it was taken, and Billy Murray, only survivor of the Eight, also does not recall the place. The two unidentified men probably were Victor dealers. Front row, left to right: Billy Murray, comedian; Vess L. Ossman, "The Banjo King"; unknown; Henry Burr, second tenor of Peerless Quartet; and Theodore Morse. Another unidentified man is looking over Burr's shoulder, and John H. Meyer, Peerless Quartet basso, stands at the back of Burr and Morse. On the steps with only part of his face showing is Byron G. Harlan, comedian. His partner, Arthur Collins (baritone of the Peerless Quartet) is between Harlan and Albert Campbell, the quartet's first tenor. Campbell, Burr and Meyer were the Sterling Trio.

cored, responding with geniality on each occasion. "The Songs My Mammy Sang to Me" and "I'm the Only Star That Twinkles on Broadway" were given to vociferous applause and evidently were prime favorites with the audience.

Appearing with the Shannon Four and Miss Jones was Billy Hughes, who took the place of George L. Thompson and entertained with musical novelties and an assortment of stories, "some of them old and some of them new," and all of them mirth provoking in the extreme.

At the piano was Ralph H. Mazziotta, who proved to be a musician of excellent ability and an accompanist of unusual merit. Mr. Mazziotta's rendition of McDowell's "Polonaise" and "The Arabesque" was artistic in the extreme and received the warm applause that was richly deserved.

All the singers were most obliging in the matter of encores, and several of the most enjoyable numbers rendered came as encores. Mr. Shaw's rich baritone voice was heard to advantage in "Loch Lomond" and as an encore he responded with "Tommy Lad," than which no selection of the evening was more enjoyable. It was a matter of general regret that Mr. Shaw was down on the program for only one solo, for his voice is one of the finest ever heard by Roanoke auditors and his delivery is most pleasing.

Messrs. Hart and Glenn sang Faure's "Crucifix" in French, their voices blending beautifully and in delightful harmony. Mr. Hart's rendition of the ballad, "The Minstrel Boy," brought forth hearty applause and he responded to an encore with "I Hear You Calling Me" in which he displayed surpassing range, his bell-like tenor taking the high notes with appreciable ease without losing in the least its mellow sweet effect.

"The Rosary," sung by the Shannon Four, was rendered as only an artist quartet can render it, and was heard in that perfect silence which is the greatest of compliments.

Mr. Glenn's bass solo, "The Armorer's Song," from Robin Hood, gave him an opportunity to display the majesty and power of his splendid voice which combines sweetness with strength in pleasing degree.

The Shannon Four rendered several of the topical songs of the day, such as "There's a Service Flag Flying at Our House," "There's a Vacant Chair in Every Home Tonight" and "I May Be Gone for a Long, Long Time," with a spirit and dash that contributed to the successful impression produced on the audience. In songs of this kind the quartet is at its best, or at least so it seemed.

Mr. Hindermeyer's tenor solo, "Roses, Roses, Everywhere," was delightful and for an encore he responded with the whimsical, "K-K-Katy," bringing down the house.

The evening's program concluded with "Just a Bundle of Sunshine," by the Shannon Four, one of the new songs that is destined to become very popular from the start.

VIII

One or two comments seem necessary on the foregoing. I am not certain of the identity of Billy Hughes, who took the place of George L. Thompson, but suspect he was the blackface comedian who made records intermittently from 1908 to 1923 as Billy Golden's partner and was known as John Hughes on Victor, William Hughes on Columbia and Okch and Joe Hughes on Edison records. Just what his real given name was no one seems to know, but the bulk of evidence seems in favor of William (Billy). Or perhaps he was John William Joseph Hughes!

It seems odd that no mention was made of duets by Hart and Shaw, for they were soon to become one of the most popular duos on records.

However, their first Victor duet record, No. 18479, "My Belgian Rose," didn't appear until August, 1918, when Shaw's name was listed ahead of Hart's—a reversal of the usual procedure which has the tenor coming first. And Shaw wasn't represented by a Victor solo record until May, 1920, when he sang "I'm Always Falling in Love With the Other Fellow's Girl," on one side of 18660, doing a superlative job of an unusually clever popular ballad. He afterwards sang many solos.

Although Hart and Glenn sang together in the concert, I can't recall their doing recorded duets.

IX

It's a coincidence that since I began making notes for this article I found a review of a concert given by the rival troupe already referred to as the Eight Famous Victor Artists, but which on this occasion was referred to as The Victor Record Makers Concert Company. The Eight (with Fred Van Eps taking the place of Vess Ossman as banjoist) presented an entertainment in Uniontown, Pa., on Thursday, April 25, 1918—just eight days after Ada Jones and the Shannon Four made their big hit in Roanoke. The Eight was nothing short of sensational in Uniontown, and P. W. Simon, the Victor dealer there, brought them back for a return engagement on May 21. I shall yield to temptation and copy part of the review as an example of the high quality of entertainment purveyed by the popular recording artists of those days:

P. W. SIMON'S VICTOR CONCERT GREAT SUCCESS. . . . There never was a success in Uniontown like it. . . . It was entertainment of an ideal character with special features to please every taste and not one number that was not thoroughly enjoyed by the largest audience ever to fill the spacious Penn. . . .

A word or two is assuredly due the eight artists, who with their fine voices, delightful personality and generosity with encores entertained the big audience so charmingly that the two hours and a half passed as one. Big, manly Henry Burr, with his voice of pure silver; rotund, happy Arthur Collins, "coon shouter" of the real kind; Albert Campbell, whose lyric tenor makes ballads exquisitely tender; Fred Van Eps, a concert banjoist without a superior in the country; Billy Murray, who stole the hearts of all the girls with his stirring military songs and his sly native blarney; John Meyer, whose sonorous basso was so full and resonant; Byron Harlan, with his "rube" songs that were classics; and last, but far from least, Teddy Morse, composer, piano virtuoso and accompanist extraordinary, each one and all of them are deserving of a column. And only lack of space prevents their getting it.

Another article gave a vivid idea of the Eight in action:

For utter joyousness nothing like the Victor artists concert at the Penn last evening has ever been known in Uniontown. . . . It is perfectly safe to prophesy that records by Henry Burr, Billy Murray, Collins and Harlan, the Peerless Quartet, the Sterling Trio, and Fred Epps (sic!) will be heard soon in homes hitherto loyal to Red Seal artists only. And right here it is worthy of record that Theodore Morse, composer, pianist and accompanist, had such a big part in making the evening the success it was that it is hard to think of the individual artists without linking them to the smiling man at the piano whose proud and pleased grins were a sure tip that something new was being pulled off. . . .

There was a program . . . but from the manner in which it was not followed by the master of ceremonies, interlocutor Billy Murray, and Mr. Morse, it seemed merely for purposes of reference, for instead of the songs and selections printed in black and white, these generous entertainers just wandered all over the Victor catalog and, spurred on by the applause of an insatiate audience, picked out dozens of the most popular record numbers, singing them in groups of three and four and even six and seven at a time. Arthur Collins was given an ovation and his inimitable Negro minstrelsy made such a hit that he was brought back again and again until he answered the popular demand by singing "The Preacher and the Bear." The same thing happened in the Collins-Harlan duets, in which medley after medley was sung, until at last they swung into "Bake Dat Chicken Pie," one of their first and greatest records. Even then, with Collins leading, they turned their backs on the audience and faced that portion seated on the stage, "The Metropolitan Opera Chorus," according to Billy Murray—and the hint was taken.

In another place, the Uniontown Morning Herald said of the Eight:

They served a musical menu (such) as has seldom been served in Uniontown or anywhere else, comprising cocktails to cheese. Albert Campbell, tenor, was the cocktail; Burr and Meyer, the oyster and soup; Arthur Collins, the entree; the Sterling Trio, the roast and vegetables; Byron Harlan, the real rube, the "tomato surprise"; Fred Van Eps, the salad; Burr, the sweets; and the great Billy Murray himself the nuts and cheese and demi-tasse and everything else that might round out a melodious meal.

Yes, there were real musical giants among the popular recording artists of those days. It is sad to recall that only Murray and Van Eps are left of the Eight who created such a sensation in Uniontown, but good to know that, as has already been mentioned, the original Shannon Four members are still alive and active. I shall send copies of this article to Messrs. Hart, Hindermeyer, Shaw and Glenn, in the hope that they will enjoy reading of their long-gone success in Roanoke 36 years ago.

(The End)

MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina 15½", 20½", 27", 32"; Criterion 20½"; Mira 6½", 9½", 15½", 18½"; Monarch 15½"; New Century 18½"; Orphenion 16½"; Polyphon 24½"; Stella 14", 17½"; Imperial Symphonion 13½"; Thorrens 4½". State size wanted. Lists.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, New Jersey. s3867

FOR SALE. Regina 15½" tune discs. Price list.—William H. Eicher, 827 E. Central, Miamisburg, Ohio. j1y3652

MELODEONS FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED instruments. Also buy and repair. Reasonable prices.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. s3882

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS: Latest hits and old favorites. Send for free list. Player material, parts, service.—Durrell Armstrong, 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. d122741

PIANO ROLLS: Duo-Art, Ampico, QRS, etc. Popular and classical. For lists write—Howe, 158 East Dixon Ave., Dayton 9, Ohio. au3633

Current Collectors' Recordings

By ALLEN G. DEBUS

Whoever owns many of the fine recordings made by Gene Austin for Victor in the late 1920s might well have wished that the star was still making hit records today. Actually Gene Austin made a few Four Star, Universal, and Universal Double Feature records after the war, but to the best of my knowledge these fine discs are out of print today. Therefore I am particularly happy to write that he has once again signed up with RCA Victor and a new album including all of his most popular numbers has been released ("My Blue Heaven"—Gene Austin-LPM 3200—also available on 45 rpm extended play records). Besides his perennial "My Blue Heaven," he sings "How Come You Do Me Like You Do," "One Sweet Letter from You," "I'm in the Mood for Love," "I Can't Give You Anything but Love," "Sleepytime Gal," "Who," "Ramona," "Lonesome Road," "Somebody Sweetheart," "The Sweetheart of Sigma Chi," and "She's Funny That Way." If you like the music of the Twenties don't pass this album up.

"Ukelele Ike"—Cliff Edwards—has also come forth with a single platter that rivals the best he has ever made. It is "Singin' in the Rain" coupled with "June Night" on Mercury 5809 (78 rpm). The record is a few years old but it is worth while looking for.

A slightly more controversial album is RCA Victor's "Showbiz" narrated by George Jessel. Scanning the vast panorama of 50 years of American entertainment many collectors may feel that their special interest is being neglected, but to this I can only say that this was inevitable and that as a worth while documentary the album belongs on every collector's shelf who is interested in the growth of American entertainment. Smith and Dale, Jimmy Durante and others made special recordings for the album and dubbings have been selected with care from the vast vault of RCA masters. Here are a few highlights from the album that I think are worthy of mention: Smith and Dale—scene from their famous "Dr. Kronkheit sketch," Maurice Chevalier—"Mimi," Jimmy Durante—"I Can Do Without Broadway But Can Broadway Do Without Me," Charles King—"Broadway Melody," as well as many other selections by Sir Harry Lauder, Bayes and Norworth, Cole Porter, George Gershwin, Eddie Cantor, etc.

Now that the baseball season is in full swing it might be worthwhile to mention a new six-inch recording of "Take Me Out to the Ball Game" and "The Umpire" which has been recorded by a quartet of four top notch ball players: Phil Rizzuto, Tommy Henrich, Ralph Branca and Roy Campanella. It is one of the childrens' records put out by Columbia on the Little Golden record label. The number is sR 107 and costs only 35 cents.

PIANO ROLLS FOR SALE

PIANO ROLLS, 65 note, will play on any barroom electric piano that takes an "A" roll. 250 at 35c each. Special price for the lot.—G. T. Merriken, 112 Lynnmoor Dr., Silver Spring, Md. j1y1272

ORGANS

FOR SALE: Concert hand roller organ, sixteen rolls. Offer price.—Marion Broring, Lamoille, Minn. j1y1211

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Catalog 15c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. o 124201

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, California. s6637

PHONOGRAPHS

WILL PAY CASH for cylinder phonographs and records, also horn type phonographs and anything pertaining to early phonographs. Write—Pollard, 4109 Old Hiway 1, Santa Cruz, Calif. s3614

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, catalogs, horns, reproducers, records, parts, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. n6215

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. ja128402

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.

(Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Wizards of the Piano-Accordion

Guido and Pietro Deiro

By JIM WALSH

EDITED AND APPROVED BY PIETRO DEIRO

Dear Mr. Walsh: I am returning your article, together with notations that Dad made on the pages themselves . . . Dad enjoyed reading your article very much, and he has asked me specifically to request a copy. Also . . . we would appreciate permission to make reprints of the article to send it out to some 3,000 dealers and accordion studios that we supply.

Sincerely yours,
PIETRO DEIRO, JR.

One of my scrapbooks contains an undated clipping from a Billboard published many years ago. The clipping is one in which the magazine's research man tells a woman inquirer that he has scanned the music files of the Library of Congress without finding any trace of a composition called "Pedro's Return."

Had the lady's spelling been better or the researcher a bit more familiar with piano-accordion music he would not have had to report failure. The sought-for composition obviously was not "Pedro's," but "Pietro's Return," and it was a leading number in the repertoire of one of the greatest accordion players the world has produced, Pietro Deiro—known today as "The Daddy of the Piano-Accordion."

Pietro, still happily with us and operating a school of piano-accordion instruction in New York, and his brother, Guido, who unfortunately died in 1950, present the unusual spectacle of two members of the same family who had virtually equal talents and both of them came to be recognized as among the masters of their instruments as well as gifted composers. It might be taking in too much territory to say that they with the late Pietro Frosini, constitute the three greatest accordion players of the Twentieth Century, but all three certainly would rank among the dozen finest.

Although this article opened with a mention of Pietro, it is only fair to begin a consideration of the Deiro Brothers' stage and recording careers with Guido. After all, he was two years the older and his records were enjoying a wide sale before Pietro's name appeared on a label.

During most of his long and successful record making career, Guido Deiro was an exclusive Columbia artist, although the Minneapolis accordion and concertina specialist, C. Hilding Bergquist, says he made a few Cameo records in the 1920's under the alias of Carlo Pampini. He also made two Edison cylinders, and the important fact of his early career are rather inaccurately summed up in the Edison Blue Amberol catalog for April, 1914:

This young accordian player, who is one of the finest artists of his kind now before the public, was born at Torino, North Italy, in 1886. When a young man he took up the study of music at the Milan Conservatorio. For three years after his studies were completed he served in the Italian Army as musician, playing baritone. For five years after this term of service he toured the principal cities of Europe. Patrons of prominent vaudeville houses throughout the United States have had an opportunity to hear him for several years past, and he has a large and enthusiastic following; not only among them, but among Edison owners as well.

A 1911 issue of The Talking Machine News said that Deiro worked as a miner before he became a musician. It is hard to see just when he had this experience, which must have been brief if it occurred at all, but it is interesting to note the parallels in his life with those of his friendly rival, Frosini, who also studied at the Milan Conservatory and made a living for a time by playing in a military band. Frosini, however, played cornet with the British Navy Band at Malta and did not tour Europe so extensively as Deiro. Both came to the United States at about the same period and became stars in vaudeville as well as on records.

Pietro Deiro has several comments on and corrections of the foregoing statements. He is not sure, but believes Guido's exact birth date was June 10, 1886. He says that both he and Guido worked as miners, but that he came to the United States about a year before his brother. Pietro arrived in 1907 and Guido in 1908, and Pietro sent for Guido after he had been here a short time. The brothers made their American debut in 1909 at the Washington Square Theater in San Francisco. Pietro says he was appearing at the theater for two weeks and asked the manager for permission to bring in Guido so they could play a duet as a try-out. They played afterwards one week together at another theater, then split, going their individual ways.

Guido and Pietro's parents were Carlo and Maria Deiro. Their father was a general storekeeper. They were not born at Torino, but at the nearby town of Salto Canvanese. The Edison statement about the Milano Conservatory is incorrect, according to Pietro, who says that neither he nor Guido ever attended a conservatory. Rather, they studied with private teachers. Guido, he adds, started with a private musician while in Germany, and the term "in service" is "very wrong," since "his service lasted but a few months."

II. Beginning of Recording Career

The first Guido Deiro record issued by any American company was placed on the market in the May, 1911, Columbia supplement. It contained two of the biggest favorites in top accordion players' repertoires, "Sharpshooters' March" (which bore the Italian sub-title, "Il Bergsaglieri" on the label), and "Ciribiribin." These were the first accordion discs of any kind Columbia had listed except for a number made in England by another gifted pair of brothers, Daniel and Peter Wyper, whose life stories were told in HOBBIES for March, 1953. The Deiro record was so skillfully played and well recorded, by acoustic standards, that it was "sure fire" and remained one of the most popular Columbias for many years afterward. In spite of the introduction of the electric process it didn't disappear from the catalog until the phonograph business debacle of the 1930's. But by the time record sales had reached their lowest point in 1933, the Columbia catalog had been cut to a small fraction of its former size and there wasn't a single accordion record left.

The elder Deiro's next Columbia waxing appeared in the July, 1911, list, and in contrast to its sensation-ally successful predecessor, wasn't an especially good seller, although it stayed in the catalog several years. Announcement of this record, No. A1003, containing "My Treasure (Tesoro Mio) Waltz" and "Variety Polka," gave rise to the following supplement comment :

This astonishing young accordion player has recently become one of the sensations of the big vaudeville circuits in this country; partly by reason of the unique instrument he uses but mainly because owing to his own exceptional musical intelligence and skill, he is enabled to obtain from the accordion effects such as have never been heard. The Columbia was prompt in securing his services for a series of records and the first double disc, issued in May, practically outsold everything in that list. In his playing of the "Tesoro Mio Waltz," Mr. Deiro has given a remarkable interpretation of a famous instrumental number so well known as scarcely to call for any review. Its delightful waltz melody has never been heard to better advantage. Coupled therewith is a charming bit of modern Spanish composition in characteristic polka fashion.

In August, 1911, Edison issued the first of two four-minute wax Amberol records by Deiro, No. 743, "My Sweetheart Waltz"—apparently the same composition as the Columbia "My Treasure," for the name of the composer in both instances is Beccucci. A month later he was represented with No. 773, Eilenberg's "Italian Army March." Those two numbers ended Deiro contributions to the Edison catalog. He must have been signed up exclusively with Columbia immediately after playing them.

During the ensuing months, Deiro's Columbia records were so varied we would be justified in suspecting they were intentionally designed to prove his unlimited versatility. But probably the idea of "mixing 'em up" was to have something that appealed to the typical popular music fancier while not neglecting those of comparatively "egg-head" tastes. Thus, the third Deiro record coupled the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria" on A1040 with the "Miserere" from Verdi's "Trova-tore." Eleven numbers later, on A1051, came a ragtime classic with "Dill Pickles Rag" on one side, while the other combined two Ted Snyder and Irving Berlin numbers, "In the Land of Harmony" and "Stop, Stop, Stop."

Guido must then have been on tour, away from the Columbia studios, for a few months. At least there was a gap of 101 numbers before A1152 came out with two waltzes of Spanish flavor, "La Spagnola" and "Dolores." Then there was another wait of a few months before the advent of A1229 containing one of the classics of American popular music, L. Wolfe Gilbert and Halsey K. Mohr's "Waiting for the Robert E. Lee" coupled with Guido's own composition named in honor of himself, "Deiro Rag."

Left to right: Pietro Deiro and Guido Deiro, talented brothers.

Then what a switch on A1270—"Musetta's Waltz Song" from "La Boheme"! The opposite side contained one of the few couplings of Deiro records not played by the maestro himself, Rossini's "Semiramide Overture," performed on the ocarina, or "musical sweet potato," by Mose Tapiero, who had a habit of bobbing up on the odd side of accordion records.

Two couplings attractive to ragtime connoisseurs came next. On A1281 Deiro played "The Dream of the Rarebit Fiend," while that superb banjoist, Fred Van Eps, obliged with "Omena—Intermezzo." On A1294, Deiro played one of the great hits of 1912, Irving Berlin's "Everybody's Doing It Now," while Van Eps kept in step by romping through "Whipped Cream," by Percy Wenrich. The latest Deiro number to get into the November, 1913, Columbia catalog brought his act to a rousing patriotic finish, for the time being, by combining another of his compositions, "Deirina Mazurka" on A1351 with Sousa's immortal march, "Stars and Stripes Forever."

III. Brother Pietro Gets Into the Act.

Meanwhile, brother Pietro, two years younger than Guido, had got into the Columbia act. In July, 1913, this blonde, blue-eyed, fair-complexioned young man from North Italy, made his Columbia debut on A1323 with two of the day's biggest ragtime hits, James V. Monaco's "Row, Row, Row," published by Harry Von Tilzer, and Berlin's "When the Midnight Choo Choo Leaves for Alabam'." Said Catalog Editor George Jell:

The Columbia has so far been listing the best accordion solo records in the world by Guido Deiro. Mr. Deiro now has a formidable rival in the person of his own brother, Pietro Deiro, who has recently made some exceedingly successful records for us. These two new selections show the same broad, organ-like tones, vigor of execution and perfection of technique and detail that have so distinguished the Deiro accordion records throughout. The titles are already familiar everywhere as two of the catchiest and most successful of the recent ragtime hits.

Perhaps Pietro had already signed an exclusive Victor contract when this record was issued, and Columbia knew it. That would account for the slightly patronizing tone in which it was more or less intimated that he was a small boy following in big brother's musical footsteps.

The "Deirina—Stars and Stripes" combination by Guido was issued in September. Neither Deiro name appeared again until January, 1914, when there was a real tout de force—the creme de la creme of accordion offerings, duets by Guido and Pietro of Monaco's "I Love Her, Oh! Oh! Oh!" and "Mammy Jinny's Jubilee." Here is what the supplement said:

Two recent ragtime hits played . . . by Guido Deiro and his brother, Pietro. In a manner that will give a fresh impetus to the popularity of these numbers. The wonderful execution and tone work of the Deiros is again in evidence to an almost surprising extent.

There were no more duos by the Brothers Deiro. By the time Columbia issued the one just mentioned, Pietro's exclusive Victor engagement had been announced and his records were creating one of the greatest "stirs" of any popular productions up to that time. Thanks to lavish publicity and advertising, Pietro's Victor records in all probability far outsold any of Guido's Columbias, except, perhaps, for a few stand-outs such as "Sharpshooters."

Columbia, however, had several Pietro masters on hand and continued to issue pressings of these at intervals after his Victor contract had gone into effect. Suppose we glance briefly at them before going back to Guido and, still later, considering Pietro's Victor career.

In March, 1914, Pietro was represented by an excellent double (A1477), on one side of which he played "Danube Waves" and on the other "The Return"—called "Pietro's Return" on a later Victor record. (It was this number which The Billboard expert was unable to find in the Library of Congress files.) The supplement said:

Our patrons apparently cannot have too many of the Deiro accordion solos, judging from the sales of these remarkable records. These new numbers show Mr. Deiro's superiority in music of a standard type, his mastery of the resources of his instrument and his genuinely musical style.

The brothers shared sides on A1506, a May release. Guido played "O Sole Mio" and Pietro, "Bel Giorno" ("Fair Summer Day.") In July, Pietro held down one side of A1529 with Laval's "Pride of the Roses," combined with a concertina solo, "Catch Me if You Can," by Alexander Prince. The annotation said Deiro's side was played "in the customary masterly style associated in the public mind with this artist." Incidentally, "Pride of the Roses" is a corruption of the true title, "Bridal Rose Overture," which Pietro also made for Victor.

In October, Guido and Pietro had solos on A1568. Guido played "Unrequited Love," a waltz by Paul Lincke, composer of "The Glow Worm," while Pietro's offering, also a waltz, was "Repentance." Mr. Jell, or whoever wrote the annotation, remarked:

Two more of the famous Deiro accordion solos, one by Guido, the other by Pietro, and the two equally good. There is no need of enlarging on the Deiro tone and the Deiro execution. Everybody knows what they are. In these recordings they seem to have really outdone themselves in tonal volume and excellence of quality, the wonderful organ-like effect being truly astonishing.

Pietro made his final Columbia appearance in the supplement for November, 1914, when he played on A1598, "Wedding of the Winds Waltz" (a favorite of his friend Frosini) and "La Sirena." Said the supplement:

The Columbia, in continuing to issue its remarkable accordion solo records by Pietro Deiro demonstrates first its capacity to record him to unsurpassed perfection and secondly the undiminished popularity of the artist himself.

These comments apparently were a slap back at Victor, which was advertising that only "the unequalled Victor process" was capable of recording adequately Pietro's playing!

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Catalog 15c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. o124201

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, California. s6637

OLD POPULAR SONGS. Big list for 3c. Baker, 549 Park Drive, Daytona Beach, Fla. au1211

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. ja128402

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WILL PAY CASH for cylinder phonographs and records, also horn type phonographs and anything pertaining to early phonographs. Write—Pollard, 4109 Old Hiway 1, Santa Cruz, Calif. s3614

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, catalogs, horns, reproducers, records, parts, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. n6215

LARGE CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS. Opera models of Columbia and Edison. Millers, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. o3422

BAGPIPE WANTED

STRICTLY FOOL IDEA, but I want a Scotch bagpipe. Anybody got one?—Dr. H. R. Coats, 615 So. Broadway, Tyler, Texas. au1861

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

WRITE FOR LISTS of top rarities to be auctioned soon. Price lists will also be issued. Includes best and rarest in both acoustic and electrical vocal classics. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.—W. B. Harr, 106 N. Hala-guano, Carlsbad, N. Mex. au3276

Coin operated pianos and other coin operated musical devices wanted. Top prices paid. Music rolls, catalogues and instruction books for above also purchased. Write B. Shirar, 1450 Van Ness Avenue, San Francisco, Calif. s3297

WANTED: Some phonographs have high value. Up to $100 paid for certain phonographs. Send $1 and learn value of old machines and cylinder records. Collector of one of the World's Largest Private Collections of Antique Radios and Phonographs.—Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. o3886

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, records and parts. Music boxes, hand roller organs and other old organs, roller and rolls. Private collector.—Newmann Miller, 436 West Colorado Blvd., Glendale 4, Calif. o3464

ANY MUSICAL ANTIQUE sold or repaired. Automatic pianos, melodeons, music boxes, roller organs, phonographs, reed organs and pipe organs.—Old Music Store, Deansboro, N. Y. d6008

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Transcriptions, Sunday Serenade programs, Air-shots, armed forces recordings, etc. by "Sammy Kaye," also transcriptions, Air-shots armed forces recordings etc. by "Ink Spots."—Paul Scriven, 129 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. s3215

RECORDS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Record Collectors' items. Opera, ballad, popular, jazz, 1900-45. Special wants are requested.—Cath. V. O'Brien, 402 First Ave., Newtown Square, Pennsylvania. o120061

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122511

BING CROSBY Collectors, send for free catalog.—Arg. Box 341, Cooper Station, N. Y. C. o3802

MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina 15 1/4", 20 3/4", 27", 32"; Criterion 20 1/4"; Mira 6 3/4", 9 1/4", 15 1/4", 18 1/4"; Monarch 15 1/4"; New Century 18 1/4"; Orphenon 18 1/4"; Polyphon 24 1/4"; Stella 14", 17 1/4"; Imperial Symphonion 13 1/4"; Thorens 4 1/2". State size wanted. Lists.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, New Jersey. s3867

FOR SALE. Regina 15 1/4" tune discs. Price list.—William H. Elcher, 827 E. Central, Miamisburg, Ohio. o3652

MUSIC BOXES, imported from France, German, Austria and Italy with moving or dancing figures for either jewelry or cigarettes in the best metals, enamels, ivories, marbles, porcelains, woods and leathers available. Animated bar items, whistling figures, mechanical birds in cages and sterling silver boxes, revolving children's music boxes and Christmas angels, novelty clocks. Repairs.—Sponholz, 770 Madison Ave. (corner 66th Street) and 11 East 66th Street, New York 21, N. Y. o36921

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS: Latest hits and old favorites. Send for free list. Player material, parts, service.—Durrell Armstrong, 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. d122741

PIANO ROLLS: Duo-Art, Ampico, QRS, etc. Popular and classical. For lists write—Howe, 158 East Dixon Ave., Dayton 9, Ohio. au3633

FOR SALE—400 rolls, Ampico, QRS, others. Composer played by Kreisler, Rachmaninoff, Lopez, Rubenstein, German rolls, rarities, Adams-Schaff, mechanically perfect, pump player. Stamp for list.—Mrs. Goodwin, Box 64, Harlingen Air Force Base, Harlingen, Texas. au1403

FOR SALE: Used Player Piano Rolls, old favorites, fox trots, waltzes, marches, and others, write your wants.—Walter Garback, 7412 Outlook Ave., Cleveland 9, Ohio. o3004

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Wizards of the Piano-Accordion

Guido and Pietro Deiro

PART II

By JIM WALSH

EDITED AND APPROVED BY PIETRO DEIRO

Dear Mr. Walsh: I am returning your article, together with notations that Dad made on the pages themselves . . . Dad enjoyed reading your article very much, and he has asked me specifically to request a copy. Also . . . we would appreciate permission to make reprints of the article to send it out to some 3,000 dealers and accordion studios that we supply.

Sincerely yours,
PIETRO DEIRO, JR.

IV Continuing Guido's Columbia Career.

Too much space would be required to give a "play-by-play" account of Guido Deiro's Columbia career, which extended from 1910 to 1924. Just why it ended then isn't apparent. Seemingly, his records were still popular. But Columbia went through the bankruptcy wringer in 1923 and may have retrenched by ridding itself of some of its expensive artists' contracts. He continued for years to run the gamut of passingly popular tunes to "light classics," and contributed to Columbia's Italian series some numbers which were never issued in the American catalog. Among these was "Egipto — Fantasia," which Hilding Bergquist describes as "Guido's only classical original composition." Recorded in August, 1912, it was issued under two numbers, E3976 and C2219. It is now published as sheet music by Pietro's firm. For some unknown reason, Columbia never had Guido make any 12-inch records of overtures, such as were popular when Pietro recorded them on the larger size for Victor.

For more than a decade during the period when his popularity was greatest, the yearly Columbia catalogs contained the following reference to Guido:

Beyond question the most proficient accordion player of the present day is Mr. Guido Deiro, whose Columbia records have enjoyed a sale that has been nothing short of phenomenal. Mr. Deiro is a well-known stage figure, having traveled as a vaudeville headliner over the most important circuits of the United States and Canada, and has also appeared with sensational success in the Winter Garden and other well-known places of amusement in New York.

Actually, those few lines pretty well sum up Guido Deiro's career. Vaudeville engagements, recording, composing and writing accordion textbooks — those things constitute his life's story. Perhaps it would be as well to mention here that he seems usually to have been known by his last name, and it probably was because of this that his younger brother soon discarded "Deiro" and throughout most of his professional activities was known as Pietro.

Other well-known Deiro records are A2343, "Vesti la giubba" from "Pagliacci" and "Musetta's Waltz Song" from "Boheme"; A2395, "Siciliana" from "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Tancredi Overture"; A1843 "Down in Bom-Bombay" and "Put Me to Sleep With an Old-Fashioned Melody"; A1802, "Hop a Jitney With Me" and "My Little Girl" (both on one side) and "O Those Days"; A2202, "Madam Butterfly Selections" and "Poor Butterfly"; and A2615, "Serenade from 'Les Millions D'Arlequin'" and "My Florence." Toward the latter part of his Columbia career Deiro recorded a number of his own compositions, including A3665, "Lights and Shadows" and "Moonlight Waltz"; and on A3728, "Neapolitan Polka" and "Western Stars." Song hits which he played in the early 1920's include "Blue Diamonds" with "Zampa Rag" (A2969); A3875 "Underneath the Mellow Moon" and "Sahara Moon"; and A3451, "Crooning" and "I'll Keep on Loving You."

In March, 1924, two months after Columbia had introduced its New Process "scratchless" discs and changed its numbering system, Guido was among those present (on record No. 34-D) with Victor Schertziner's great success, "Marcheta," doubled with Deiro's own "Valse Caprice No. 1." The supplement comment is entertaining:

Cleek, one of the greatest detectives of all fiction, was known as "The Man With a Thousand Faces."

He was a whole army of detectives in one. We might call Deiro the Cleek of the accordion. When he presses his fingers on . . . his piano-accordion it is immediately transformed into a whole band. Play these two widely different waltzes . . . You will sit and marvel as the artist's deft fingers fly back and forth over the keyboard.

Deiro's latest Columbia records, issued in 1924, appear to be 94D, "Campana di San Giusto — Polka" and "Breitenbush March"; and 173D, Nevin's "Narcissus" with Guido's own "Valse — Pirouette." Bergquist lists two Cameos which Deiro made under that already mentioned disguise of Carlo Pampini — 533, "Campana di San Giusto" and "Lola"; and 719, "Vesti la giubba" and "My Treasure Waltz." The numbers seem to indicate the former was issued in 1924 and the latter in 1925.

V End of Career

For much of the remainder of his life Guido Deiro appears not to have been in robust health. However, he continued to play theatrical and night club dates and also composed and wrote instruction books. I have an undated clipping from a magazine whose type I can't identify, which says, under the heading of "Guido Deiro's Royal Method Wins New Friends":

Volume 2 of the Royal Method for the Piano Accordion by Guido Deiro, world famous piano-accordionist, reports the publisher, Nicomede Music Co., Altoona, Penn., is winning new friends again this season. One feature . . . is found in the listing of new ways to play the piano-accordion skillfully. Mr. Deiro has collected enough of these to win the approbation of teachers and pupils everywhere. P. Frosini, noted accordionist, recommends Deiro's method highly.

There was sad news for admirers of the brilliant virtuoso in The Accordion Review.

For April — May, 1950, although a hopeful note came in toward the close:

One of America's Accordion Pioneers and internationally-famous players, Guido Deiro, recently succumbed to a nervous breakdown brought about by overwork and exhaustion. At the time of writing he is well on the road to recovery, we are pleased to say, after several weeks spent in a sanatorium where he went to undergo treatment and convalesce. It will be quite a while, however, before he will resume his professional and teaching career, since he was recommended by the doctors to take a complete rest in the country.

A few months later there was an even sadder announcement which told of Deiro's death and also gave some information not previously mentioned in this article:

It is with regret we announce the death of Guido Deiro, who passed away on 26th July in California, after a long illness. Until some months ago he had been playing professionally and conducting his own studios. Owing to a heart attack, he was forbidden to teach or play again and, despite convalescence . . . his health did not improve.

Guido Deiro was probably one of the best known accordionists, having toured Europe, Africa, England, Australia and the Orient. He was the first to make (piano accordion) recordings when he waxed for Columbia . . . in 1911. In 1920 he played on the first nation-wide American broadcast and eight years later was the first to star in a picture featuring the Accordion.

Joe Laurie, Jr., gives a piquant mention of Deiro in his valuable book, "Vaude," the informal history of vaudeville. Laurie says that Guido Deiro was at one time married to Mae West! However, my song writer friend, Ray Walker, who knew both Deiro and Miss West well, says they were never married, although they were "very close friends." Walker's assertion is confirmed by Pietro.

Hilding Bergquist recalls that Guido Deiro wrote the music, to words by Herschel Henlere, of the popular Oriental type fox-trot, "Kismet," which he recorded as a solo on Columbia A2931, backed by "Karavan." Bergquist adds: "I've also seen one of his own marches, published in orchestrated form. I vaguely recall it as his 'Breitenbush March' but am not sure. I've also seen the sheet music of his 'Kismet.' He seemed to be fond of Oriental type tunes."

VI Pietro's Early Years

Pietro Deiro was born August 28, 1888. It probably would not be far wrong to say that he was born to play the piano-accordion. At least, an article in The Etude for August, 1931, gives that impression. The article, called "The Interesting Piano-Accordion: An Interview With Pietro Deiro, secured by El Vera Collins," contains this biographical note:

Pietro Deiro (known professionally as "Pietro") is what may be termed a pioneer piano-accordionist . . . This has placed him in the category of dean of American accordionists. When he was a child in Italy, the accordion fascinated him as a toy, because he could push the various buttons and try to guess what tone would come forth. No strict parental discipline made him practice hours a day . . . He did so of his own free will. For, besides being a joy in itself, it was a means of occupying his time in other ways than working in his father's general store. After Pietro Deiro came to America he put in twenty busy years of vaudeville concert playing, as well as in the making of phonograph records. All his spare time was devoted to arrangements and compositions for the piano accordion . . .

When asked recently to what he attributed the popularity of the accordion and why it should appeal particularly to pianists, Mr. Deiro made the following statements:

"A pianist has a great deal to gain by studying the piano-accordion. Some have had the mistaken idea that their art would suffer and that the piano-accordion is not sufficiently dignified to warrant their interest. The study of the piano accordion, however, will not only broaden their musical scope but also increase their versatility . . .

Before a pianist touches an accordion he already has eighty percent of the requirements for an accordionist, namely, his musical background, his ability to read music, his knowledge of harmony and his technique. The other twenty per cent may be readily obtained, as it consists of the knowledge of the correct manipulation of the bellows and of the left hand keyboard . . . There are few limitations to the possibilities of the piano-accordion. The most ardent lover of classical music can express himself through the medium of the accordion, with music arranged or composed for it . . . Arrangements have been made of selections by such composers as Verdi, Gounod, Von Suppe, Rossini and Beethoven. In addition to these there are many other original compositions written for the piano-accordion . . . The classical selections which have been adapted for the accordion do not suffer through being rearranged for the instrument. Indeed they are often enhanced on account of the organ effects . . . The piano-accordion of today is so constructed that, by the application of the register switch, it can produce the deep vibrant tones of an organ. When the register switch is released it can produce the clear sweet tones of a violin. Register switches have also been applied to the bass keyboard so that the effects may be varied in many ways."

The November, 1931 Etude contained an advertisement of Pietro's piano accordion instruction books and arrangements. One, "The Jazz Accordionist," was said to teach "how to play 'hot' and 'blue' and modern syncopation." There was also "Pietro's Piano Accordion Method," as well as ten new arrangements of songs that included "Dark Eyes," "Ay, Ay, Ay" and "Song of India." Of course the Pietro Deiro Accordion Headquarters today publishes a vast variety of such material.

VII. Pietro as a Victor Artist.

However, it is Pietro's career as a Victor recording artist that primarily concerns us. His first Victor record was announced in the supplement for January, 1914, under the heading, "Two records By a Famous Accordion Player." The double-faced disc, No. 17486, consisted of "Broadway Medley," which included "Mammy Jenny's Jubilee" and "Here Comes My Daddy Now"; and "Great White Way Medley," consisting of "I Love Her, Oh, Oh, Oh" and "You Made Me Love You." Catalog Editor Sam Rous wrote:

This accomplished player, who has been making a tremendous success in vaudeville, presents the unique spectacle of an accordionist who does not drop notes all over the stage, a fault quite common with many other players on this difficult instrument. Signor Pietro's execution is unusually brilliant and his playing is marked by correct fingering and a fine sense of rhythm. These reproductions of the playings of this artist, who now makes records exclusively for the Victor, will, we think, be pronounced quite beyond competition. Two pop-

MUSICAL MUSEUM

of
Deansboro, N. Y.

Visitors are invited to play our restored musical antiques.

OPERATED BY

THE OLD MUSIC STORE

(Please enclose stamp when writing)

CORNET and TROMBONE solos by Levy, Clarke, Kryn, Zimmerman, Pryor, etc. Send for auction list.

A few OPERATIC recordings of the golden age by Caruso, Gardon, etc. (mostly standard selections) to be sold at rock bottom prices - only a few over a dollar. Send for list.

Duplicate CELEBRITY VAUDEVILLE recordings from my collection to be sold outright. Will make up special lists. Ask for special wants.

I am cleaning out my personal collection of duplicates and unwanted items. So if you are interested in any of the above please write me. I am a collector only.

ALLEN G. DEBUS

918 Rogers Ct. Waukegan, Ill.

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By MOSORIAK & HECKERT

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

$5.00 Postpaid — Insured

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

ular medleys have been selected for Mr. Pietro's first record, and those who hear them are likely to insist on further specimens of the work of this unusual artist.

Note the reference to "Mr. Pietro." The artist's name was given, however, on record as Pietro Deiro, and it was not until his "Sousa Medley March" and "Blaze Away March" (17921) was issued in February, 1916, that his name was shortened on the label to Pietro.

In February, there were two new Pietro records—a 10-inch, No. 17506 "International Rag" and "Sailing Down the Chesapeake Bay Medley," and a 12-inch, 35345, "Bridal Rose Overture" and "Stradella Overture." The overwhelming success of the January record must have caused Victor to rush production on the February issues, which had been recorded the preceding November 13. Here is what the catalog editor said:

To say that the January Pietro records made a "hit" is putting it but mildly, and that much-abused word "furor" might even be used. That no such accordion playing has ever been produced on records is the universal opinion of customers who have heard the two fine numbers issued last month. For February we announce . . . two more popular selections and two fine overtures. The overtures are sure to cause a sensation and give one an idea of the wonderful instrument used by Pietro—which he calls a "piano-accordion." It might be called also a full military band and an orchestra, judging by the effects produced. Pursuing its usual policy of always giving Victor customers the best, Pietro, being the greatest accordionist in the world, has been engaged to make Victor records exclusively.

Pietro was also present in March with 17531, "Luna Waltz" and "Pietro's Return," that number for which The Billboard researcher sought in vain. In April he played, on 17551, the old faithful "Sharpshooters March" which Guido had made so popular on Columbia, combined with "Beautiful Days Waltz." He missed out in May, but in June was on deck with 17574, the A side of which contained two Irving Berlin songs, "This is the Life" and "My Arverne Rose." The "B" side likewise was all-Berlin, with "Down in Chattanooga" and "Kiss Your Sailor Boy Goodbye."

Collectors who have this record may ascertain with a little experimenting that it includes an amusing feature. After the music of "Down in Chattanooga" ceases, in the very last groove of the disc a voice (presumably not Pietro's) says "Cut it out!" The sound runs into the smooth inside rim, with the result that the voice repeats, "Cut it out! Cut it out! Cut it out!" over and over until the needle is lifted.

Editor Rous wrote in a humorous vein:

The unfortunate committee which has charge of the selection of records for the Victor Monthly Supplement has been scolded by some customers for allowing a month to elapse without new records by this famous player, who has made a success almost unprecedented with the splendid reproductions of his "piano-accordion." However, the blame must be laid on the record factory, which has not been able to take care of the demand for the Pietro records previously issued.

In August, Pietro was present with another 12-inch record, No. 35367, on which he gave remarkable interpretations of the "Rigoletto Quartet" and "Light Cavalry Overture." Two months later he was back with 17609, "Hungarian Rag" and "Hummer Medley," and Rous jokingly said: "The prize offered to any individual who can keep his feet still while Pietro is playing a 'rag' is still unclaimed." In December the first Pietro record with one side by another artist was offered: No. 17643, on which he played "Italian Favorites—La Spagnola Waltz" and "Ciri-biribin" while Dr. Clarence Penney gave a mandolin rendition of "Azalea Waltz."

Having followed Pietro through his first Victor year, we must, to conserve space, hereafter touch only the high spots. When 17709, "Tip-Top Medley Fox Trot" and "Crackerjack Medley Fox-Trot," was issued in April, 1915, this interesting comment was given:

Several famous composers have honored the accordion by writing music especially for it. Tchaikowsky used four accordions in his second orchestral suite, and Wolf-Ferrari effectively employs it in "Jewels of the Madonna." While the Pietro dance medleys are very pleasing, they do not permit the artist to exhibit his great skill as do the more serious compositions, and in a short time we hope to bring out several new overtures by him.

In September No. 17802 was issued, combining Pietro's own "Verona Waltz" with "Italian-Spanish Favorites." The promise to bring out more overtures was kept in November on 35488, when the virtuoso played "Il Guarany Selection" and "Tranquillo Overture," the latter written by himself. Two of the greatest favorites in the accordion repertoire appeared in December on 17865—"Wedding of the Winds Waltz" and Waldteufel's "Estudiantina Waltz."

When 17895, "Success Medley" and "Melody Rag" (the latter another Pietro composition) was issued in January, 1916, it was announced that "this accomplished player, who has been for sometime a vaudeville 'headliner,' has just renewed his exclusive agreement with the Victor for a term of years, and perfect reproductions of his playing made in the Victor Laboratory are thus assured to his admirers. In April, on 35524, he played a "Romeo and Juliet Selection" and "Overture to the Barber of Seville." A month later, 35503 coupled Keler-Bela's "Comedy Overture" with Pietro's own "Trieste Overture."

In September, a real novelty was offered. On one side of 17941, Pietro played "Vesti la giubba" while on the other "Pietro's Accordion Quartet," consisting of himself and the three Marconi Brothers, was heard in the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana." Said the supplement:

Here is another Victor novelty which is likely to make a hit with those who enjoy accordion music—and that means almost everybody.

The only Pietro has joined forces with those accomplished vaudeville favorites, the Marconi Brothers, who are pupils of the greatest of players on this instrument; and some remarkable effects are produced by these four players in this beautiful record of the Cavalleria Intermezzo.

VIII—Other Accordionists

For the sake of comprehensiveness, this seems a good place to mention a number of other expert accordionists who made records during the period in which the Deiro Brothers dominated the field. A separate article had been devoted to Pietro Frosini. The Marconi Brothers made several Columbia records in 1917-18. Another team of brothers, Phil and Dan Boudini, made Pathé records during the same period, and furnished the accompaniment for some of Arthur Fields Pathes. Other Pathe accordion players recording in the United States were Charles Klass, Joseph Peppino and Mario Perry.

Peppino and Perry also played for Brunswick in the early 1920's. About the same time Anthony Galla-Rini was making Vocalion records, and much later he turned out some splendid electrically recorded numbers for Victor and Brunswick. Around 1919-20, "Le Vaux" was playing "Beautiful Ohio" and other popular numbers for Aeolian-Vocalion. Phil Baker and Ben Bernie made an accordion-violin duet of "Goodbye, Alexander" and "Waters of Venice" for Victor in 1918, and some years later Baker played accordion solos for Edison and Emerson, usually interpolating vocal refrains. No doubt there were piano-accordion recordings by other artists, but these players are typical of the top-flight talent of the acoustic and early electric era.

However, among those just mentioned, Frosini, the Marconi Brothers, the Boudini Brothers and Joseph Peppino played the button keyboard instrument rather than the piano ac-

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

BACK POPULAR SHEET MUSIC to 1850. Ballads, Ragtime, everything. Catalog 15c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. o 124201

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, California. s6687

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 617 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. ja128402

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.

(Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

cordion. Mario Perry was a son of Peppino. Their real last name was Mentrasti. Mario Perry, to use his stage name, was the first accordionist to play on the radio at its birth in 1919, and two years later he became the first to join Paul Whiteman's Orchestra.

Before returning to Pietro's Victor activities, I should like to refer briefly to his records which appeared in English catalogs. A 1915 Regal list contains four double-faced Pietro records. Regal discs were made by the English Columbia company, so presumably the matrices of these records were obtained through a working agreement with the Columbia company in the United States, but most of the titles were never issued by American Columbia. That appears odd. Even odder is the fact that none of Guido Deiro's records were included, in spite of his having been an exclusive Columbia artist. Pietro's were G6714, the "Blue Danube" and "Luna" waltzes; G6730, "Donanwellen (Danube Waves) waltzes" and "Firefly Waltz"; G6770, "Blaze Away March" and "Tranquilla Overture"; and G7027, "Faust Waltz" and "Pagliacci Selections."

Another mystery is found in the 1926 catalog of Aco records issued in England by the Vocalion Company. There is a double-faced Pietro record, No. G15450, "Kiss of Spring" and "Valse Bluette." Since the inimitable Pietro was still under contract to Victor, I am puzzled over the source of this record.

Pietro himself says he can't account for this Aco record, which was also issued in the American Vocalion catalog. He never did any recording, he says, while abroad, nor was he a Vocalion artist. Perhaps, he speculates, the matrices were sold to the Vocalion company by either Victor or Columbia.

IX Continuing Pietro's Career

This review of Pietro's Victor recording career has now reached the period of the United States entry into the first World War. During those trying days, Pietro, as might be expected, was called on largely to play numbers with a military flavor. In November, 1917, he was represented by 18361, "American National Airs" and "Patriotic Airs of the Allies." In December, No. 18397 coupled "Good-bye, Broadway, Hello, France," and "Don't Throw Stones in the Well That Gives You Water" with "We're Going Over" and "The Old Gray Mare." There were no further Pietro records until July, 1918, when he played "War Ballad Medley" and "Eclipse Medley" on 18466. The A side contained "Just a Baby's Prayer at Twilight" and "Joan of Arc" and the B, "I May be Gone for a Long, Long Time" and "Sweet Emalina, My Gal." The war ended in November, but there was still an overseas flavor in the next Pietro record, issued in March, 1919. On one side of 18520 he played "Oui, Marie" and "I'm Always Chasing Rainbows," and on the other All-Star

Current Collectors' Recordings

By ALLEN G. DEBUS

Reinald Werrenrath and Charles Harrison Record Again!!

I had intended to continue my discussion of Maurice Chevalier's records this month, but I have just heard some brand new Lp discs by Reinald Werrenrath and Charles Harrison on the Gavotte label which I feel are important enough to be written about first.

The Werrenrath record was made in the Spring of 1953—less than four months before he died. Considering the fact that he had already suffered a stroke shortly before, and that he was 70 years old at the time, his voice was remarkable. There is little point in recalling his long career on records which was done so well by Jim Walsh for HOBBIES in 1948. However, I might mention that one of my most vivid recollections of the John Bieling Day party in Garden City in 1948 is of Dr. Werrenrath describing the conditions under which he had to record for Edison some forty years before. His red seal Victors were probably some of the most popular which that company ever released to the public. And now we have this final testimonial to his great voice.

Gavotte album LPG 104—Reinald Werrenrath Favorites:

Love Sends a Little Gift of Roses
Gypsy Love Song
Drink to me Only With Thine Eyes
Duna
The World is Waiting for the Sunrise
Smilin' Through
Rose in the Bud
The Lost Chord

It also might be worth while to mention that the noted actor, (and composer of the World is Waiting for the Sunrise) Gene Lockhart, has written a tribute to Reinald Werrenrath which is printed in the album cover.

The other Gavotte offering by Charles Harrison is equally impressive. Again I want to refer the readers to Jim Walsh's excellent biography of the artist whose career on records goes back to May 1911. This new record was made by Mr. Harrison just last May and after comparing his voice now with his electrical Edison Diamond Disc of "Sunny Boy" made in 1928, I was amazed to find that his voice today is nearly as fine as it was 26 years ago. Here too is a carefully considered selection of songs.

Gavotte album LPG 108 - Charles Harrison Sings

At Dawning
Because
For You Alone
Sunshine of Your Smile
Give me One Hour
Somewhere a Voice is Calling
My Wonderful One
Song of Songs

Unfortunately these excellent records are not available in your local record stores. Ed Manning has written me that they should be purchased directly by mail to George V. Thompson Inc., 2017 Main St., Niagara Falls, New York. The price is $4. each. Both Mrs. Werrenrath and Mr. Harrison profit from the sale of these records.

"EIGHT FAMOUS VICTOR ARTISTS"

Billy Murray has called attention to errors of identification in the photo of the Eight Famous Victor Artists, appearing in the July HOBBIES. The man on Billy's left is not Jess L. Ossman, "The Banjo King," but was an assistant to a well known legitimate stage director, Ira Hards. (Murray does not recall the pictured man's name and Hards is not shown.) The third man in the front row was a Victor dealer, whose name Murray does not remember. Ossman stands in front of Albert Campbell, behind Henry Burr. Other identifications in the cutlines are correct.

Trio gave out with "Sweet 'n' Pretty" and "I'm Waiting for You, Liza Jane."

From this point, lack of space makes it necessary to condense the discussion of Pietro's recording career. His records continued to be extremely popular and he was a top-notch attraction in Keith vaudeville. It was never my pleasure to see and hear him perform, but he frequently appeared at the Roanoke theatre in Roanoke, Virginia, and some of my Roanoke friends have told me he was an irresistibly attractive figure as he danced his way around the mings of Chicago recently acquired. The pieces at the museum portray the evolution of the Mochica Civilization, emphasizing particularly the early primitive phase of their art. According to Junius Bird, curator of South American Archaeology at the American Museum of Natural History in New York, the collection is one of the finest examples of Peruvian art outside of Peru. B. J. Wasserman of Buenos Aires formed his collection from 1920 to 1948, at which time he brought it to New York to be sold.

(Continued on page 33)

* * *

The National Park Service has opened a museum at the Appomattox Court House National Historical Park, Va. The museum which deals with the final retreat and surrender of the Virginia Army, occupies the first floor of the old Clover Hill Tavern. The exterior of the building has been restored to its 1865 appearance. The interior is also to be restored to its original appearance. The famous McLean House where Lee and Grant met, is open nearby as a historic house museum.

* * *

The Ohio State Museum, Columbus, O., opened an interesting exhibit of Zane Grey material on July 11. Grey was born in 1872 and was descendant of one of the founders of Zanesville. Although he was educated at the University of Pennsylvania for the dental profession, he practiced for only a short time and in thirty-five years turned out seventy four books which have been translated into many foreign languages. In addition to books and original manuscripts there are items which belonged to Grey, furniture, sporting equipment, and other items on display through the cooperation of Grey's widow who lives in California.

NEW ACQUISITIONS AT De YOUNG MUSEUM

The M. H. De Young Memorial Museum, San Francisco, Calif., announces the addition of two superb pieces of furniture, a commode and secretary, to the Roscoe and Margaret Oakes Collection. Both pieces were made the latter part of the 18th century by the French cabinetmaker, Jean Henri Riesener, for Queen Marie Antoinette. For the past hundred years they have been in the possession of one of New York's oldest and most prominent families.

The pieces are made of ebony faced with Japanese lacquer showing landscapes, plants and animals on gold background and are profusely mounted with gilt bronze appliques.

The early style of classicism, characteristic of the era of Louis XVI and his Queen Marie Antoinette, shows in the flat front, the straight lines of ormolu mouldings framing the panels, and certain motifs like acanthus leaves, rosettes and cornucopias, yet the gracefulness of Rococo is still preserved and the style is decidedly feminine. The most outstanding feature is the mountings or ormolu appliques. Heavy swags of various flowers enrich the front while delicate intertwining garlands of roses decorate the frieze on the top panels where the Queen's initials M.A. are shown in the center. The gilding of the bronze is partly mat, partly burnished thus creating the effect of light and shadow. Every detail, the minute treatment of flower petals and leaves, the turning and movement of flowers reveal the virtuosity of the artist. In fact the garlands almost have the delicacy of a piece of jewelry.

Jean Henri Riesener is claimed by the French as the greatest cabinetmaker of his epoch and he enjoyed the same fame as the painters and sculptors of his time.

Born in 1734 in Western Germany he entered as a young man the workshop of Jean Francois Oeben, Royal cabinetmaker in Paris, who is also represented in the Oakes Collection. In 1774 Riesener was made ebeniste ordinaire Du Mobilier De La Couronne and was especially favored by the new Queen. He created magnificent furniture especially for her chateau in Saint Cloud.

After the French Revolution most of the chateau's furniture was disposed of. Two pieces bearing the stamps of the Garde meuble de la Couronne and of Saint Cloud that were for a long time in the possession of the family of the duke of Hamilton are now in the Metropolitan Museum. They are closely related to the commode and the secretary in the de Young Museum so presumably the Queen was so delighted with these pieces of art that she commissioned Riesener to make two similar ones with slight corrections—the two de Young pieces. Thus the new Oakes acquisitions are outstanding not only for their exquisite craftsmanship and aesthetic beauty but also for their historic provenance.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 30)

stage. My brother Edward, who saw him on several occasions, once remarked to me: "Pietro had more life and energy than anybody else I've ever seen. He seemed to overflow with it!"

After electric recording was introduced in 1925, some of Pietro's acoustically made discs appeared in the Victor catalog for years afterward. The last to go was 18748, "Turkey in the Straw" and "Russian Rag," first listed in May, 1921, and still around in 1936. And until 1933 his versions of "Danube Waves," "The Return" and "Bel Giorni" stayed in the Columbia catalog.

It seems strange that when Victor first began re-making electrically its best selling old process records, it did not have Pietro do over some of his standard favorites. Instead, Mario Perry played eight numbers that had been intimately associated with the younger Deiro—"Beautiful Days," "Estudiantina," "Italian - Spanish Favorites," "Over the Waves," "Sharpshooters," "Sirens," "Verona" and "The Wedding of the Winds." Perhaps Pietro was out of the country at the time. He made occasional trips to Europe, during one of which he was honored by the Italian government for the contributions he had made to good music and the distinction he had conferred upon his native land by his great skill and popularity.

However, Pietro's familiar name was soon back in the catalog, with new recordings. His versions of "The Kiss Waltz" and "The Broadway Waltz" were listed on No. 21163 in the international list for March, 1928, and also appeared in the complete 1929 domestic catalog. This had been preceded in December, 1927, by another coupling in the international series, No. 80130, combining a polka, "Meridionale e Settebrionale" and "Dora—Mazurka." In October, 1928, No. 81457, "Tres Jolie—Waltz" and "La Petite Tonkinoise—One-Step" "made" both the international and domestic releases, as did a two-part "Medley of Italian Airs" on 81710 in December, 1929. After the Great Depression set in, about this time, the record business went to pieces for almost a decade. The "Broadway" and "Kiss" waltzes combination was the last Pietro record to be cut out of the catalog. It stayed around until a shortage of materials resulted in catalogs being reduced to a minimum around 1942.

Pietro's last recorded overture appears to have been 68719, "Sicilian Vespers" and "The Merry Wives of Windsor," issued probably in the mid-1920's.

Pietro was heard from again as a recording artist when Decca engaged him for a series of fine electrically recorded discs around 1936. They included:

1276—Ciriibiribin and O Sole Mio/La Spagnola and Cielito Lindo; 1277—Sharpshooters March/Pietro's Return; 1278—Dora Mazurka/Elvira Waltz; 1345—Tango of the Roses and Who'll Serenade You?/Giovinezza, Giovinezza and Faccetto Nero—March Medley; and 1668—Over the Waves/Funiculi, Funicula and Viva la Giga—Tarantella medley.

The Decca records, from the standpoint of superb playing and brilliant recording are, among the finest Pietro ever made.

(Continued on page 35)

WANTED

FIRE marks and insurance plates.—Whitlocks, New Haven, Ct. n3441

DENTAL and medical books and instruments.—Whitlocks, New Haven, Ct. n3061 impetus for a building. The Apalachicola Land Company gave appropriate land for a site.

A building fund campaign was launched and when a sufficient amount was raised the currently popular Greek architecture was chosen, and specifications for a structure of white pine to be constructed only with wooden pegs were mailed to New York City. Months later the building, cut in sections and pieces, unassembled arrived by boat at Apalachicola.

A year later, 1838, it was completed with organ and bell. On the high bell tower, forming a spire, was placed the gleaming white cross, like a beacon of faith beckoning to the hostile Indians, runaway slaves and pirates that inhabited the surrounding wilderness.

Local slaves attended the regular religious services in large numbers as it was one of the few churches in the South with a special gallery built for them. Church records show many slaves were baptized and became regular communicants.

The building was consecrated in 1841 by the Bishop of Tennessee. Soon after, the congregation was reduced by the yellow fever epidemic that spread to Apalachicola from nearby St. Joseph.

Sturdy and stalwart, the building survived wind and war, although windows and doors were "crushed in" by the violent gale of 1852. During the Civil War the building was closed after the bell had been melted into cannon and the carpets and cushions converted into blankets for the Confederate Army.

The Rector was sent inland to Marianna, Fla., taking the rare English silver communion service and which he hid in feather mattresses during the battle of Marianna. Today this antique silver is exhibited in the Church building, open to the public weekdays and Sunday.

Trinity Church has long reflected the trend of the times. One morning in 1901 townspeople were startled to see the facade of the building draped in black. The Greek columns were swathed in black cloth with festoons of it fluttering between them.

This baffling mystery was solved hours later when a merchant mentioned that the previous night he had opened his shop and sold his entire stock of black calico to certain citizens of English ancestry who had just learned of the death of Queen Victoria. Some church members opposed this tribute to a foreign monarch but the calico remained until after the Queen's funeral.

Trinity's historical importance was emphasized when the first monument honoring Dr. Gorrie for his invention of the artificial ice making machine was placed in the front yard of the Church in 1900. The yard was then called "Gorrie Square," but in 1951 it was changed to "Gorrie State Park" by an act of the Florida Legislature.

Another prominent member was the New England Doctor, Alvin Wentworth Chapman, who sang in the choir. After making his home in Apalachicola, he combined the practice of medicine with the study of Florida's flora and fauna, and today is known as "the eminent botanist" and author of the still used standard text, "Flora of the Southern United States."

Since construction the Church has been under the supervision of the Ladies' Auxiliary Guild, which continues the old New England practice of hand dipping the Eucharistic candles and other early customs. However, it has introduced modern inventions when ever practical but without detracting from the building's original style and motif.

The hand-pumped organ has been replaced by a streamlined pipe model. The kerosene lamps have been supplanted by electric lights strategically arranged to accent the magnificent stained glass windows with their indescribably beautiful color combinations. Quaint, old fashioned covers for the kneeling cushions are handmade by members of the Guild.

A more recent innovation is the appointment of a very young rector. He is the Reverend William Anderson, an energetic, handsome native of Jacksonville, Florida, who modestly calls himself "the green deacon." With his attractive wife, Martha, he is instituting many new, progressive measures and which is why many old timers affectionately murmur "Bill's at it again!"

Reverend Anderson began the nightly illumination of the cross on the steeple as a reminder that this Church is continuing its century old credo: "The strength of Trinity is in its power of faith and labors of its people."

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 33)

A Letter From Pietro Deiro

After vaudeville went into what now appears to be a permanent decline, Pietro set up the Pietro Deiro Accordion Headquarters at 46 Greenwich Avenue, New York, which has become known as "The Accordion Capital." As a long-time admirer of the great wizard of the piano-accordion, I wrote to him in the spring of 1951, inviting him to attend the next John Bieling Day for pioneer recording artists and telling him of the pleasure his recorded works have given me ever since my childhood. I received this reply, dated May 8, 1951:

Dear Mr. Walsh: Your very complimentary letter has been received and I must say that it is very flattering and nice to hear from people who remember the old days of vaudeville and records. At the moment I am still quite active in the accordion field and have ventured particularly into the publishing business for accordion. This has served to keep my name in front of the public somehow and ever so often I get a letter similar to yours which awakens old memories and brings back many happy days.

You can be assured that it is a pleasure to have my photograph forwarded you. I have personally autographed it and will have it mailed.

About the day on Long Island, I suggest that you let me know more about it a few weeks before the event takes place. I will try to make it if it is at all possible as I am sure that it will be a pleasant day.

I shall be looking forward to hearing from you.

Unfortunately, plans for the John Bieling Day, which was to have been held on September 10, fell through, and the parties, which gave so many pleasures to many recording artists and record collectors, have not been resumed. I have not since been in New York and so I have not yet achieved my long-time wish for meeting Mr. Deiro.

However, I hope I shall yet be able to do that. In the meantime, here's wishing him many more prosperous and happy years as the originator of his accordion headquarters and as the dean of piano-accordion players. With these good wishes to "The Daddy of the Piano-Accordion" go equally warm regards to his family. Pietro married Miss Bianca Vincenzi, and they have one son, Pietro Deiro, Jr., and a daughter Blanche Deiro. Pietro, Jr., is actively in charge of the business, which is primarily accordion music publishing with an edition of more than 1,000 publications, supplying the great majority of the accordion teachers and dealers throughout the country.

Let us keep on having grateful recollections, too, of that other fine artist, Pietro's brother, Guido. The Deiro Brothers, whose stage and recorded work has given pleasure to millions, are sure of a permanent place in the history of American music.

WORLD FAMOUS SLEEPY HOLLOW LAND

TWO AUTHENTICALLY RESTORED BIOGRAPHICAL SHRINES
SUNNYSIDE—"Little snugery" of Washington Irving, with most of his known possessions and, for comfort, the "Bip Van Winkle Lounge."

PHILIPSE CASTLE—With the Old Mill of Sleepy Hollow, ancient barn and barniana, smoke house, wipwatermolen, Dutch and herb gardens, slave cottage and, the NEW "Old Millers' Room." Heirloom antiques.

EDUCATIONAL AND GOOD FUN, TOO

Autos—US9 (restorations only 3 miles apart on historic King's Highway)

Train—NY Central direct to Sunnyside; PCR to Tarrytown, N. Y. and bus.

Served by famous Bingler Tours and others. Ask auto, gas or travel agencies.

trc

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Wizard of the Accordion

Pietro Frosini

By JIM WALSH

P. Frosini for 40 years was famous throughout much of the world as a concert and vaudeville performer, a composer and a recording and radio artist. However, aside from amateur and professional accordion players, there were few admirers of the virtuoso who knew what the P. in his name stood for.

On his Victor records Frosini's last name was prefixed by the initial letter. Edison discs called him simply Frosini and omitted the P., which stood for the same given name as that possessed by one of his great rivals, Pietro Deiro. During most of his career Deiro, who is still living and active, was known professionally as Pietro. Had Frosini followed his example and omitted his own family name there would have been a fine mix-up!

Pietro Frosini as he appeared when he first came to the United States.

But Pietro Frosini didn't. He was known almost entirely by his last name, as Deiro was by his first. So the two bearers of the name of Pietro (which means Peter in English) went their separate, distinct ways, winning deserved and lasting fame as masters of the piano-accordion. The life stories of Pietro Deiro and his brother, Guido, were considered in an earlier installment of this series. The career of Frosini may be summed up by reference to the ASCAP Biographical Dictionary of Composers, Authors and Publishers, edited by my friend, Daniel I. McNamara.

From the dictionary we learn that the composer-accordionist was born on August 9, 1885, and died at Woodside, N. Y., September 29, 1951. He became a member of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in 1942. Frosini received his education at the Municipal Conservatory of Fine Arts in Catani, Sicily, and studied composition and cornet with Francesco Frontini, before attending the Milan Conservatory of Music. Although he mastered the accordion at an early age, he was a cornet player for two and one-half years with the British Navy at Malta. Coming to the United States in 1905, he made his debut as an accordionist at Fresno, Calif. A vaudeville artist for many years, Frosini gave a command performance before King George V of England in 1911. His compositions include many transcriptions and original pieces for the accordion. Among the latter are "The Sun-Kissed Waltz," "The Accordion World March," "Overture in C Major," "Swedish Steel Mazurka," "Silver Moon Waltz," "Sicilian Shore," "Northern Skies" and "The Jolly Caballero."

The foregoing may be supplemented by the following, which appeared in The Edison Phonograph Monthly for December, 1916, several years after Frosini had established himself as a favorite in vaudeville and on records. However, as will be shown, he did not learn to play the accordion at the Milan Conservatory, but studied other instruments there.

To Americans, who generally are unfamiliar with the possibilities of the accordion, it may seem strange that instruction in the art of playing such an instrument should be given in such a world-renowned institution as the Conservatory of Milan. This is one of the most famous of all schools of music and it has produced some of the world's greatest musical artists, yet it was in this institution that P. Frosini, "wizard of the accordion," studied the art of playing his chosen instrument, and it was from here that he was graduated after he had mastered it. So it readily can be understood that the music which this artist draws from the accordion does not resemble in the least the weird and tuneless strains that many so-called accordion players produce.

Leaving Italy after completing his studies at Milan, Frosini came to this country, where his playing created a sensation in vaudeville circles. He has played in practically all of the high class theatres in the United States, having been given protracted engagements in many of the metropolitan playhouses. His success in America brought him foreign engagements and he was particularly successful in England where he appeared in the leading music halls of London and other larger cities. Frosini is not only a master of the accordion, but is a composer of note, and many of the pieces that he presents are his own compositions, composed especially for the accordion. He has made a number of selections for the Blue Amberol catalog and his rendition of "New York Blues," a melodious ragtime number that now is very popular, made for the January supplement, is a fine example of his art.

II FROSINI'S RECORDING CAREER BEGINS

Probably one of Frosini's first compositions to be issued in the United States was "The Chalice," copyrighted in 1908 by Maurice Shapiro, founder of the present-day music publishing firm of Shapiro & Bernstein & Company. The words to Frosini's music were by Edgar Selden, and were of a combined sentimental and pseudo-religious type, such as have not been unknown in popular ballads during recent years. The scene was "the mission gray near old Monterey." It was arranged for piano, not accordion.

Frosini's first record appears to have been Edison Amberol cylinder No. 103, issued in April, 1909. It was described as "a record by a new Edison artist, known on the stage as 'Frosini, Wizard of the Accordion.'" The selection played ('Wedding of the Winds') is a favorite with admirers of the better class of music. It is considered to be the best of John T. Hall's compositions and is well adapted for the accordion solo."

Frosini's next Edison appearance was in the August, 1909, list, with No. 192, "Poet and Peasant Overture." "Frosini," the supplement writer said, "is a wonder as a player of the accordion. The way in which he plays the 'Poet and Peasant Overture' for our record will cause many an individual to revise his or her opinion of the musical possibilities of the accordion."

In October, 1909, there was a listing of No. 223, "Seneca Waltz": "An accordion solo unaccompanied and one of Mr. Frosini's own compositions. It is played in concert style. It is no exaggeration to say that this artist has no rival on the vaudeville stage, on which he is always billed as 'Frosini, Wizard of the Accordion.'"

February, 1910, brought No. 347, (Continued on page 28)

Antique MUSIC BOXES

choice pieces for sale
Expert repairing—combs restored—cylinders re-planned—original factory method

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. Pelham, N. Y.
Originally established in Switzerland in 1825
Member and Co-Founder of MUSICAL BOX SOCIETY, International

For the Record Collector

AL. McREA, Sr.

Box 182, Westville, N. J.

I just discovered a new lot of little Wonder records. These were sold in the 5 & 10 and had no names marked on them. There are 2 Al Johnson and 1 Caruso on them I know of. My price is $.50 each. They play very well and the old timers will remember them. They are 5" in dia. Send for list.

LLOYD G. KELLEY
Successor to

MUSIC BOX COMPANY
P. O. Box 355

Hanover, Massachusetts

Christmas tunes for the 15 1/2" Regina music box at $2.50 each Still Night, Holy Night, O Santissima, Adagio Fideles, White Christmas, Jingle Bells, Noel, Hark, The Herald Angels Sing, Santa Claus is Coming to Town, Come Hither Ye Children, O Tannenbaum.

We manufacture 200 other tunes for the 15 1/2" Regina, tune list furnished on request.

We have for sale also many fine disc type music boxes ranging in size from 8" diameter discs to 27" diameter discs. We also have a large assortment of Swiss music boxes from one and 2 tone musical numbers to large table music boxes with extra cylinders playing as many as 72 tunes.

We also have a catalogue on new music boxes we manufacture such as our dancing dolls, dolls in picture frame and under domes, and our new and latest item is a six door musical cigarette box.

JIM WALSH WANTS TO BUY

Old phonograph record catalogs and supplements (mostly prior to 1915); back copies of phonograph publications and all sorts of reference material dealing with the history and development of sound recording that will provide background information for

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Please do not send me lists of records for sale. I am not interested in buying phonographs and records by mail and do not want "The Victor Book of the Opera." Do not submit material without being instructed by me. I will not pay for or return unsolicited items. If I do not reply I already have the material you offer. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. Address:

JIM WALSH
Box 446 Vinton, Va.

MUSICAL MUSEUM Deansboro, N. Y.

Visitors are invited to play our restored musical antiques.

OPERATED BY
THE OLD MUSIC STORE
(Please enclose stamp when writing)

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

OF
RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive free of charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

Single rarities and entire collections purchased for cash

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Room 1135, DuPont Bldg., Miami 32, Florida

Established 1938

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
the following labels:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH, DE LUXE & GRAND PRIZE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS, such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G. & T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.
- ★ Old record catalogs.

Persons offering material not specified above or seeking information, are requested to enclose a stamped envelope for reply.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY
50 Prospect Avenue
Valhalla, New York

WANTED

Coin operated pianos and other coin operated musical instruments. Also rolls for the above, operators' manuals and catalogs.

ED. ZELINSKY

11 Jordan Ave. San Francisco 18, Calif.

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout. Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 25)

Rudolphe Berger's "Amoureuse Waltz," with the comment: "Responding to the magic touch of Frosini, the accordion seems to develop a latent charm of tone quality that is absent when the instrument is in the hands of less skilful artists."

Meanwhile, Victor, which seldom let Edison keep a good artist to itself, likewise had begun making Frosini records. In January, 1910, the disc company also issued his version of "Amoureuse" on No. 16434, coupled with "The Swiss Shepherd," an ocarina solo by another gifted Italian, Mose Tapiero. By an error, Frosini's instrument was described not as a button-key board accordion but as a "concertina grand." Catalog Editor Sam Rous said: "A brilliant record of a favorite waltz played with much expression by a new Victor instrumentalist. Mr. Frosini is quite a remarkable concertina player and a whole orchestra in himself."

The second Victor record by Frosini, one of his own compositions, "Spring Flowers Waltz" (No. 16482) came out in June, coupled with a Pryor's Band rendition of the irresistible "Dill Pickles Rag," by Charles L. Johnson. In July, No. 16493 combined Frosini's interpretation of Delibes' "Naila Intermezzo," with a rather unsuitable companion, "Happy Go Lucky—Two-Step," again by Pryor's Band. Said the supplement commentator: "One of the catchy two-steps for which (J. Bodewalt) Lampe is noted, combined with the third Frosini record. Signor Frosini has given us this time a favorite bit from the popular Delibes ballet, which he plays with remarkable skill."

Just a month later the signor proved his versatility by demonstrating that, although a graduate of the Milan Conservatory, he had come to understand and appreciate American style ragtime. On No. 16501 he played his own "Operatic Rag," while a mandolin player, Roger Casini-Florenz, obliged on the A side with "Napoléon—Tarantella," written by somebody named Mezzacapo. "An interesting combination," said the annotator, "will be found here in Mr. Casini-Florenz's skilfully played mandolin number and the odd parody on operatic compositions which Mr. Frosini calls an 'operatic rag.'" Incidentally, by this time Victor had begun to term Frosini's instrument an "accordion grand."

December, 1910, marked Frosini's last appearance as a Victor artist on acoustic recordings. On No. 16829 he played his own "Echoes from Naples," while on the other side the Estudiantina Trio (don't ask me who the members were!) obliged with "Araby March," played on two mandolins and a bandurria—a kind of lute.

Many years later Frosini was to return to Victor's lists with a number of electric recordings made especially for international sale. These included 81222, issued in August, 1928, "Aida —Fox Trot" and "Silver Moon—Waltz"; and 81368, two waltzes, "Beautiful Heaven" and "Vision of Love" announced in November.

Frosini's accomplished rival, Pietro Deiro, also contributed to the 81,000 series, and they both appeared in another international series whose numbers began with V. In November, 1929, Frosini was represented by V-20, "Coquette—Polka" and "Serenata Primavera." He also made other records for "foreign" sale, of which I do not have the catalog listings. However, a further check of the 1930 Victor numerical catalog shows in the Italian section that No. V12047, listed in August, 1929, contained two Frosini solos, "Carmen—Fox-Trot" and "Fior d'oliva."

A few years later, Frosini became one of the first artists engaged by Decca when it began business in 1934. He contributed three electrically recorded double-faced discs to the Decca catalog: 210—"Carnival of Venice" and "Valse Chromatique"; 211—"Accordiomania" and "Hot Fingers"; and 1029—"Bubbles" and "Cordinella." In the 1930's he made at least one record for the short-lived Master label.

Incidentally, the "Naila Intermezzo," mentioned in a preceding paragraph, was soon reissued in a more appropriate coupling, under the number 16933, with "Entr' Acte Gavotte" (Gille), a xylophone solo by William H. Reitz, on the other side.

It is interesting to note that the majority of the selections which Frosini recorded on various labels were his own compositions. These included almost all of his electrically recorded Victors; three of the earlier Victors; most of the Edisons; his three Deccas, issued during the electric era, and a few others on off-brand labels. As his warm admirer, C. Hilding Bergquist, says: "This is significant, because usually the company tells the artist what to play—mostly the 'known' or 'popular' material. Frosini had a prolific gift for creating lovely melodies and harmonies, which apparently the companies recognized."

III FROSINI GOES TO ENGLAND

For about two years after Frosini's last old-style Victor record appeared, his name did not figure again in any American record company's monthly supplements. The reason no doubt was that the brilliant player of the "accordion grand" not only filled numerous vaudeville engagements during this period in the United States, but also crossed the Atlantic for a European engagement. While abroad, he made many recordings for firms operating in England, but does not seem to have played for Victor's British affiliate, H. M. V.

I have been turning through some old English record catalogs, mostly those issued by the smaller companies, in the hope of finding mentions of a few characteristic Frosini records, which I shall touch on here in spite of the fact that they have long been out of print and can be of only academic interest to the virtuoso's American admirers. The Zonophone lists of that period contain no accordion records, although there are a fairly large number of concertina performances by George King and Alexander Prince. (Use of "Prince" and "King" as the last names of the artists, both of whom played the English concertina, suggests that King was merely one of the versatile Alexander's noms de disque.)

On the other hand, the German-controlled Beka company offered three double-faced couplings by "Mr. Frosini"; 460, "An American Rag" and "An Operatic Rag"; 470, "Wedding of the Winds" and "Rigoletto Fantasia" and 520, "Amoureuse Valse" and "The Aristocratic Coon"—certainly an incongruous combination.

The May, 1914, catalog of Winner records issued by a Simon-pure English company, Edison Bell, included these by Frosini: 2077, "Poet and Peasant Overture"—parts 1 and 2; 2145, "The Aristocratic Coon" and "The Glow Worm—Intermezzo"; and a coupling of what must have been his two favorite numbers for recording, 2433, "Amoureuse Waltz" and "Wedding of the Winds."

Edison Bell also made a higher priced record, "Velvet Face," which was said to have almost no scratch. The 1913 Velvet face catalog contains these same six Frosini selections, but in slightly different couplings, and shows a picture of the player, looking young but small and rather frail. A descriptive note says: "Frosini, who has just concluded an engagement at the 'Empire,' Leicester Square, London has played for us some of his celebrated excerpts. This artiste is gifted with marvelous execution and his quick passages are truly wonderful." Both sides of record 1084 were taken up with the "Poet and Peasant"; "Glow Worm" and "Amoureuse" were on 1090, while 1098 contained "Wedding of the Winds" and "The Aristocratic Coon." "Poet and Peasant" stayed in the catalog until Edison Bell went out of business in the 1930's.

I suspect that "G. Ardit" who made "accordeon" solos for another German company, Coliseum, was really Frosini. Some of the titles at least suggest it: 207 "Operatic Selection" and "Amoureuse Waltz"; 163—"American Rag" and "Intermezzo, Two-Step"; and 140, "A Ragtime Gem" and "An Autumn Idyll."

Frosini probably played for some of the other English companies during his highly successful stay abroad. Years after he had returned to this country, the Gennett Company obtained some of his English matrices and issued them under its own label.

IV BACK TO EDISON

Frosini's next appearance in an American record company's catalog was when Edison listed "Wedding of the Winds" in July, 1913, on Blue Amberol cylinder no 1861. Then in October came that familiar "Amoureuse Waltz" as No. 2107. These, however, were only re-issues in "indestructible" form of his original wax Amberol recordings.

But the master accordionist, back in this country, began a new series of recordings in 1914 which were

(Continued on page 37)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 28)

well as Blue Amberols. In February, 1915, Edison listed his own composition, "Echoes From the Movies," as Blue Amberol No. 2531, with the artist's name given as P. J. Frosini. This must have been made shortly before the disastrous Edison factory fire of January, 1915, after which all new cylinder recordings were "dubbed" from Diamond Discs. (Contrary to the belief of some collectors, no Edison discs were made from cylinder masters.)

About the same time, undated Diamond Disc supplement No. 25 contained No. 50215, "Thro' the Park March," another Frosini composition, and "Echoes From the Movies." This was included ten years later in the booklet of "Music That Lives," a compilation of the 300 most popular Edison discs. The catalog description is interesting:

According to one musical writer and critic, (in the Encyclopedia Britannica,) "The Timbre of the accordion is coarse and devoid of beauty, although in the hands of a skillful performer the best instruments are not entirely without artistic merit." Truly a most grudging praise! However, this particular critic probably never heard Frosini play, for if he did he certainly would have to change his ideas as to the artistic merit of the accordion.

"The Wizard of the Accordion," P. J. Frosini has been called, and those fortunate enough to hear him play must certainly agree with the originator of the motto. This medley, that Mr. Frosini aptly calls "Echoes From the Movies," he arranged himself, for he is a composer and a very clever arranger as well as an "accordion virtuoso." The selection starts with a few strains from the familiar "Spring Song" of Mendelssohn. Then comes snatches of several classical and popular pieces all cleverly interwoven, bugle calls, patriotic selections, and the selection ends with the stirring strains of the "Wedding March."

In April, 1915, Frosini was represented by B. A. No. 2567, his own "Italian Fantasia," which the supplement said "comprises several characteristic Italian melodies, played with brilliant variations. This is without question one of the finest accordion records ever made." It also appeared as D. D. No. 50199, doubled with another Frosini composition, "Panama Exposition Overture." The later had been listed in March as B. A. 2537.

Without trying to describe all Frosini's Edison records in detail, it may be said that No. 51030, "Carnival of Venice—Variations," doubled with a cornet solo, "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," by Ernest Albert Couturier, made the best-seller list, as did 50454, coupling Frosini's "New York Blues (Rag Classical)" with Rudy Wiedoeft's version of "Saxophone Sobs."

The description of "New York Blues" is rather amusing:

Frosini is considered one of the best accordion players now before the public. His success in vaudeville throughout the United States has been, as they say, "terrific." This selection he wrote himself. He calls it a "classical rag." That seems

THE CHALICE

SONG

WRITTEN BY

EDGAR SELDEN

COMPOSED BY

PIETRO FROSINI

PRICE 60 CENTS

Published by
MAURICE SHAPIRO
436 Broadway & Thirty-Ninth St.
NEW YORK

Title page of one of Frosini's first compositions to be published in this country. (Reproduced by permission of Shapiro, Bernstein & Co., Inc.)

rather an anomaly, doesn't it? But it isn't. Look up the definition of the word classical and see if, with a little poetic license, you cannot fit it to this piece. It seems possible; certainly this rag is very different from most."

The description of a 1921 Frosini Diamond Disc, No. 50749, "Curro Cuchares March (The Bull Fighter)" and "Medley of Old-Time Tunes" gives still more conception of the keyboard wizard's remarkable versatility:

Many requests have come to us for a Re-Creation of this selection. Formerly, the composition was listed under the title of the "Italian Army March," probably because it was a favorite number of Italian military bands. The melody was written by Gerardo Metallo, and Mr. Frosini, the wizard of the accordion, takes particular pains to play the composition exactly as the composer wished. Mr. Frosini is well known to the American public as a vaudeville artist, but few of them are aware that he studied in the world renowned Conservatory of Milan, and is therefore, really a graduate artist of that classic institution.

Then, for a quick change of pace, consider the annotation of the reverse side:

This lively medley always makes a hit with Frosini's vaudeville audiences and will doubtless repeat its success with Edison owners. Several of the reels in the potpourri are Frosini's own. The older airs, woven together by the accordionist, are: "Sailor's Hornpipe," "Arkansas Traveler," "Annie Laurie," "Irish Washerwoman," "Pop Goes the Weasel," "Hail! Hail! the Gang's All Here," and "The Minstrel Boy to the War Has Gone." Needless to say the technique of Mr. Frosini is perfect.

Certainly, on the basis of this evidence it would be hard to prove that Frosini didn't have catholic musical tastes and sympathies!

"Curro Cuchares" was listed as Blue Amberol 4162 and "Old-Time Tunes" as 4129. Other Diamond Discs not hitherto mentioned, with the Blue Amberol numbers for the same selections in parentheses, are:

50694 (4167), "The Four Jacks March" with "The Ring and the Rose," harp-guitar solo by Kitty Berger; 50477 (3753), "I Hate to Lose You Medley," with "Hindustan—Fox-Trot," All Star Trio; 51397, (3127), "Sonata in C Major" with "Duo Concertant," clarinet duet by Anthony Giammatteo and Fred J. Brissett; 80432 (3082), "Stradella Overture" with Offertoire (Donjon), by Weyert A. Moor, flute; and 50872 (4113), "Valse Caprice"—No. 1, with "A Perfect Day," xylophone solo by Lou Chiha "Friscoe."

It will be seen that every Diamond Disc by Frosini was also issued in cylinder form, but some of his earlier cylinders were omitted from his disc list. In the early 1920's the accordionist made several records which were listed on low-price "off-brands" such as Oriole, Grey Gull, Radiex, Paramount, Puritan, and Pathe Actuelle. Apparently he made no effort to obtain a further Victor engagement in the pre-electric era after returning from Europe. This was probably because Victor had signed Pietro Deiro to an exclusive contract and was publicizing him lavishly as the world's greatest piano-accordion player—a claim that Columbia was also making for Pietro's older brother Guido. Neither Victor nor Columbia needed another star accordionist, but Frosini was useful to Edison as a rival to his fellow virtuosos.

(To be continued)

BILLY MURRAY IS DEAD

The September HOBBIES contained a note in which Billy Murray, most famous of pioneer recording artists, corrected an error in the cutlines of a photo of the Eight Famous Victor Artists that appeared in July. While the September issue was still on the press, "The Boss," as he was lovingly known to many of his friends and admirers, succumbed to a heart attack and died at the age of seventy-seven.

No effort will be made here to tell the life story of the one-time "Denver Nightingale," who was born in Philadelphia, Pa., May 25, 1877. A biographical sketch (rather inadequate by present-day standards) appeared in HOBBIES under "The Coney Island Crowd" heading during April, May and June, 1942. But I do feel that I should quote information concerning Billy's last hours and the funeral rites supplied by his dear friend and mine, James V. Martindale, of Brooklyn. On August 22, Jimmy wrote:

Dear Jim Buddy: Your sorrow at receiving the sad news of The Boss' demise was as deep as was mine in imparting it to you, I am sure.

A man and wife, friends of Maddy (Madeline Murray, Billy's wife—J.

(Continued on page 41)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Wizard of the Accordion

Pietro Frosini

(Continued from the October Issue)

By JIM WALSH

V Frosini, the Man

So much for Frosini, the recording artist. But what of Frosini, the man?

I am indebted to an enthusiastic accordion music specialist, C. Hilding Bergquist, of Minneapolis, Minn., for some intimate details concerning the accomplished musician. Mr. Bergquist, who was a friend as well as admirer of Frosini, has given me permission to quote from notes which he has sent to me at various times. Among other things, he reveals that Frosini's name really wasn't Frosini. The notes, somewhat rearranged, follow:

It's nice that you are writing to Frosini . . . but he is small and frail and often ill and may not be inclined to answer letters. But I hope his sister and brother, who are with him, will answer you, sending a photo and some material . . . He is unique and inimitable in his musicianship, and a genius, as you will agree if you have heard his masterworks on the Edison Blue Amberol cylinders and Diamond Discs. As a point of interest, his "Overture in C Major" was erroneously labeled "Sonata" on both cylinder and disc.

He has never been in robust health (but) still manages to commute every day to his New York WOR morning broadcast on the John Gambling program. He plays in a semi-classical quartet . . . His wife died in 1949. Although Frosini's first name was Pietro, he never used it, probably because the name of his friend and accordion contemporary was Pietro Delro.

Frosini's real last name is Giuffrida, but he never used it. In his early youth he had an operatic composer teaching him—Paolo Frontini—and when later beginning his own career he honored his teacher, whom he admired, by modifying the teacher's name and calling himself Frosini. He came to America in 1905. He is known now as the finest composer of accordion music . . . By the way, his right-hand keyboard has buttons (still favored in Europe), not piano keys. A small accordion used in an early photo I have of him was the one he used on his five Victor records and on a similar number of Edison Blue Amberols . . . Frosini's "Panama Exposition" is an overture, not a march.

VI Accordion Magazine Interview

More sidelights on the personality and career of the delicate but indomitable little musical genius were given in an interview published by The Accordion World in November, 1938, from which the following excerpts are quoted:

Recently we had occasion to drop in the Frosini home in Sunnyside, Long Island. Frosini, characteristically, was standing working over music at the special high-built desk in his studio-living room. However, he immediately stopped and welcomed us with true Italian hospitality . . . We expressed our pleasure to find him looking well.

"Yes," said the brilliant accordionist, in speaking of his health, "it is fortunate for me that I have never had to do any hard manual labor. I've earned my living from the time I was 16 as a musician."

"But you didn't begin as an accordionist," we interposed.

"Not professionally," Frosini admitted, "though I had learned a great deal about the instrument from my father before entering a musical conservatory at the age of 10. There the accordion was denied me, for at that time it did not have a high musical standing. I studied here for six years, taking up the cornet, piano, harmony, counterpoint and composition. My first professional job was first cornetist in the British Navy Band. In that capacity I toured the globe for four years. It so happened that my term expired while my ship was anchored in San Francisco Bay, California. I decided to stay, and go back to the accordion."

"It was a lucky day for America that you made that decision, Mr. Frosini," we exclaimed, "and of course it is well known accordion history that you were an immediate success in vaudeville. You toured the country, appearing at leading theaters for many years, did you not?"

"For nearly 30 years," said Frosini with evident satisfaction. "Then, in 1932, I retired from this in favor of the radio field."

"Anything else?" we queried.

"Well, you might say that I give all credit for being well enough to continue my career, to my wife, whose watchful care enables me to carry on." And Froz turned to bow gallantly to charming Mrs. Frosini.

Although it isn't mentioned here, while Frosini was playing cornet with the British Naval Band, he had an attack of malaria, which damaged his lip embouchure. He then returned to full-time accordion playing.

Sadly enough, the devoted Mrs. Frosini died two years before the passing of the husband of whom she took such good care. As Mr. Bergquist relates, he was then cared for by a brother and sister. My letter to Frosini brought no response, but knowing the precarious state of his health I hadn't really expected one.

VII Dan McNamara Recalls

Just as I had reached this point and was about to bring this brief study of Pietro Frosini to a close I received a letter from Dan McNamara, already mentioned as my friend who prepared the ASCAP Biographical Dictionary. And it fortunately happened that Dan, who had previously written me that he considered Frosini probably the greatest of accordionists, recalled in his letter an interesting happening in which he, Mr. and Mrs. Frosini were the "stars." Not only that but he enclosed a thumbnail biographical sketch of Frosini prepared by the accordionist himself on November 1, 1950, less than a year before his death. It is refreshingly free from false modesty, and I shall print it as a supplement to what I have written, although to some extent it duplicates information already given.

But first, Dan McNamara's reminiscences.

Dear Jim: I fear that you were magnifying beyond its just proportions my "heroism" re Mrs. Frosini. However, if you find the incident of sufficient interest to refer to it in your article, I shall . . . tell you just exactly what happened.

This took place years ago on the Sunday night during the Christmas—New Year holiday week. The fire was in the Kingsbury Hotel, Waterbury, Connecticut (I am sure this has gone the way of all flesh by now.) It was a five story wooden building only a couple of years old, and because of the reasonable rates and nice, new quarters it was popular with the theatrical profession. It was just a stone's throw from the theatrical section. The hotel was well filled. A road company of "The Merry Widow," Dockstader's Minstrels and the going and coming vaudeville shows (we booked them for a week) had filled the hotel about to capacity. We had no Sunday shows, but because Monday was a big day with the playing of our new bill I used to get to bed early on Sunday nights . . .

When I awoke about 11 p.m. I thought I was dreaming when I heard shouts of fire, etc. However, in a few seconds I was on my feet and made myself presentable enough to look out into the hall. The place was filled with smoke and there was a lot of running around. A stairway which went down the five stories was just outside my door and the elevator was quite a distance down the hall. As I got to the top of the stairs, I encountered a little man who was supporting an unconscious woman. If you remember Frosini you will recall that he was a tiny fellow, probably not much more than five feet tall, and his wife was of about the same stature. I did not know them (they had just come into the hotel a little while before the fire.) Not knowing the extent of the fire, we thought best to take advantage of the stairway, so between the two of us we got Mrs. Frosini down to the ground floor. By that time the excitement had somewhat subsided, for it had been determined that all the fire was confined to a burning mattress, which was attributed to carelessness of a cigarette smoker. It was only a short time before all

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By MOSORIAK & HECKERT

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

$5.00 Postpaid — Insured

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

the excitement was over and the Frosini returned unscarred to bed.

I do not claim to be an authority, but I have always believed that the great accordionists in the heyday of vaudeville were Frosini and the Deiros. You will find a fairly complete reference to Frosini in the ASCAP Biographical Dictionary. Deiro never became a member of ASCAP. The Waterbury theater in which Frosini was was the Jacques', one of the earlier units to be included in the later important vaudeville chain of the late S. Z. Poll, whose theatrical interests in New England now are included in the chain known as the Loew-Poll circuit. . . . My own connection with the Poll circuit was reasonably brief. I left newspaper work to become manager of the Jacques' theater, which had vaudeville and some stock. I went from Waterbury to New Haven to be the general press representative for Poll at his headquarters there and not too long after returned to newspaper business. I am now in my 18th year with ASCAP, currently director of public relations.

If you care to refer to Mr. Frosini's creative work, you might be interested to know that his most performed works are "Skippin' Along" and "Silver Moon Waltz."

VIII Frosini's Autobiography

And now the year-by-year notes prepared by Frosini himself. These reveal that the ASCAP dictionary somewhat shortened the name of his birthplace which was in Sicily rather than Italy proper. I am not sure what Frosini meant by saying he made the first "commercial Victor record" in 1908. Perhaps he meant the first Victor record played on his type of accordion. At any rate, the late John Kimmel had made accordion records before him, but on an old-type instrument. And Frosini's records probably were made in 1909 rather than 1908:

Biography of PIETRO FROSINI, residing at 47-36 46th street, Woodside, Long Island. 1885—born August 9 in Mascalucia province of Catania, Sicily. 1887—parents, poor farmers, went to Catania to live. 1888—blinded by the measles. Sight was restored but remained defective.

1889—began to play on toy accordion. 1891—kidnapped by a fanatic "lover of children," returned home after six months.

1893—began playing on father's chromatic accordion. In a short space of time I mastered this instrument and played operatic selections as well as overtures and

MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina 15 1/4", 20 3/4", 27", 32", Criterion 20 3/4", Mira 6 3/4", 9 1/4", 15 1/2", 18 1/2"; Monarch 15 1/4"; New Century 18 1/2"; Orphenon 15 1/4"; Polyphon 24 1/2"; Stella 14", 17 1/4"; Imperial Symphonion 13 1/2"; Thorons 4 1/2". State size wanted. Lists.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, New Jersey. d3867

FOR SALE—TWO SWISS music boxes, one with drum and bells.—Marg Paape, 602 East Broadway, Winona, Minn. n1441

FOR SALE: Reginalphone music box complete with large selection 21 inch metal discs. Make offer.—R. W. Mouser, Winter Haven, Fla. n3023

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS: Latest hits and old favorites. Send for free list. Player material, parts, service.—Durrell Armstrong, 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. d122741

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Transcriptions, Sunday Serenade programs, Air-shots, armed forces recordings, etc. by "Sammy Kaye," also transcriptions, Air-shots armed forces recordings etc. by "Ink Spots."—Paul Scriven, 129 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. d3084

RECORDS FOR SALE

RARE VOCAL RECORDS: Treasured performances by the greatest artists available at reasonable prices. Galski Renaud, Sembrich, Bonci, Tetrassini, etc. Write for interesting free lists. All inquiries promptly answered.—George Pluck, Waterloo Village, Grass Lake, Michigan. ja3065

ALL IMPORTED vocal operatic records. Free list on request. Many G & Ts, Odeons, Fonotipias, Zonophones, Pathes, etc.—Collectors' Haven, 1131 Bergen St., Brooklyn 16, N. Y. ja3004

RARE OLD VOCAL OPERATIC SINGERS: Will send sales list comprised of Caruso, Battistini, Boninsegna, Martinelli, McCormack, Patti, Plancon, Rethberg, Tetrassini, others; old records catalogs, supplements, books on opera singers. Please enclose 3 cent stamp. Curiosity seekers and information hunters, don't bother to write as you won't get any lists.—Marvin Smisssman, 5361 Ridge Ave., St. Louis 12, Mo. ja34431

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 44 Church St., Norwich, Conn. d3084

DISPOSING of my private classical collection. Many rarities, Adams, De Lucia, Patti, Nordica, etc. Send wants, no lists sent.—Ronald Slaughter, 424 9th St., Santa Monica, California. d3614

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. my124661

EDISON, PATHE, VICTOR, COLUMBIA. Send us your wants. Discs only. Catalogs bought and sold.—C. Haines, Box 1442, Reading, Pa. n3023

Auction Sales: Rare and cut-out vocal (G. & T., Zonophone, Polydor) and instrumental records. Free lists.—Arthur May, 85 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn 26, N. Y. mh120042

THOUSANDS of rare collectors' items on hand. Send me your wants on any type of 78 RPM records. New ones in daily.—Box 182, Westville, N. J. f124661

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: Collectors' items to just good "listening." Large, constantly changing stock. See for yourself! Write, or visit. We buy collections.—Record Collector's Service, 530 East 88th St., New York 23, N. Y. n68801

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs.—Ted's Second Hand Store, 1123 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia 23, Pa. n3633

CYLINDER RECORDS FOR SALE.—Also, several Edison and Columbia Cylinder Phonographs. Send stamp for list or any special wants.—Pollards, 4109 Soquel Drive, Santa Cruz, California. d3426

THOUSANDS of used records, all varieties, send wants.—Stanley Brile, 3914 Van Buren, Culver City, Calif. d3652

HUNDREDS OF IMPORTED cutout vocals, rare Golden Age operatics—G&T, Fonotipia, etc., hard to get Music Hall, musical comedy and personality records, unusual band and orchestral items, all may be found on our free mailing lists. Write today—Ross, Court & Co., (Canada), 121 Simcoe Street, Toronto, Ont. n3867

WANTED: Edison cylinder record 7438 "Mary Was A House Maid."—M. Raschelle, 6 Colon St., Apt. 21, Brighton, Mass. ja3403

LARGE LIBRARY of Classical Records 78s: Symphonies, Concertos for all instruments, Piano and Violin Music, Vocal and Operatic Sets and Singles, over 16,000 records most of which are imported. Will sacrifice on account of moving.—M. J. Epstein, 242 Lexington Ave., New York 16, N. Y. n1063

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 617 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. ja128402

MELODEONS FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED melodeons and organs. Repair service. Reasonable prices.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. d3882

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, catalogs, horns, reproducers, records, parts, bought, sold, exchanged.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. n6215

WANTED TO BUY: Edison Concert, Columbia Grand and other Cylinder Phonographs, horns, reproducers, catalogs, records. Describe fully and price prepaid.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. f6238

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Edison, Victor and Columbia Phonographs. Hundreds of Cylinder and Disc Records, many rare, hard to find numbers. Send dime for either two or four minute cylinder, or Disc record list. All three lists for 25c.—Coppertop's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N.Y. d3886

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

Coin operated pianos and other coin operated musical devices wanted. Top prices paid. Music rolls, catalogues and instruction books for above also purchased. Write B. Shirar, 1450 Van Ness Avenue, San Francisco, Calif. d3297

ANY MUSICAL ANTIQUE sold or repaired. Automatic pianos, melodeons, music boxes, roller organs, phonographs, reed organs and pipe organs.—Old Music Store, Deansboro, N. Y. d6008

SWISS music movement, finest make, assorted tunes, ask for leaflet.—Jules Wolff, 38 Murray Street, New York, N. Y. f6445

WILL PAY CASH for cylinder phonographs, records, reproducers, parts, catalogs, literature and music boxes. Please describe and price.—Write Pollard, 4109 Soquel Drive, Santa Cruz, Calif. d3234

FOR SALE: 20 Criterion tune discs 20 1/2". Also Amberola cabinet style.—Marg Paape, 602 East Bdw. Winona, Minn. n1251

PAPER ROLLS wanted for Wilcox & White "Angelus Orchestral" player organ. Also want Mills Violano Virtuoso rolls and automatic piano rolls.—Larry Givens, R. D. #1, Wexford, Penna. d3006 children's nursery tunes. 1895—since my parents did not have the means to give me the proper education to advance my extraordinary musical talents, sent me to the Municipal Conservatory of Fine Arts. At the age of ten I entered this conservatory. Since I am left-handed I could not play any wind or string instruments, therefore I learned to play cornet. The accordion was prohibited in the Conservatory.

1898—I became a pupil of Maestro Francesco Paolo Frontini. I distinguished myself as composer and cornet player and won many awards, medals and citations. 1902—I transferred to the famous Milan Conservatory of Music; however, I accepted a job as cornet player with the British Navy, stationed on Malta, serving with the Navy for 2½ years.

1905—I was brought to America by a vaudeville agent who, upon hearing me play "The Poet and Peasant Overture" on the accordion, appointed himself my manager. I was a big hit and was credited with civilizing the accordion. My salary reached new proportions when I finally hit New York, where I played the Keith-Orpheum circuit.

1908—I made the first commercial Victor record. 1911—went to London for six weeks engagement at the Empire. 1913—I was getting lonely for my family and sent for them. We made New York our home. 1914—as war broke out (I was rejected for physical disability) I entertained the boys in camps and hospitals.

1920—I married Miss Alfride Larsen in Philadelphia. 1924—we bought a home in Beechhurst, Long Island. 1925—my health began to fail, and soon had to retire from traveling.

1932—I began to teach the accordion. I found this to be uninteresting. I got a job with John Gambling on WOR and composed accordion works in my spare time. I submitted several of these compositions to the Alfred Music Company. They had the foresight and the courage to publish my first serious accordion works. (This company now publishes the bulk of my compositions.)

1940—I bought a new home in Sunnyside, Long Island, which is still my residence. I have contributed to the accordion literature the most complete library in the business. The biggest and most well-known composition is "The Jolly Caballero," which is acclaimed the world over as the most outstanding composition for the piano-accordion. 1942—I joined ASCAP.

1940—On June 13, 1949, I lost my beautiful wife. This tragedy left a deep wound in my heart. And though time will never heal this wound I shall try to keep my chin up. And with the help of God I hope that my creative vein keeps flowing and will continue to compose good music.

Mrs. Frosini was of Danish descent and had been in show business.

And so, with a "gallant bow" like that he had made in happier days to the wife whose memory he cherished after her death, let us say hail and farewell to Pietro Frosini, who himself will be remembered with admiration and affection as long as his compositions and records are heard. A little man of great talents, he was a fine example of the old saying that "good things come in small packages."

MORE ABOUT FROSINI'S RECORDINGS

After the preceding article was completed, Hilding Bergquist submitted additional information concerning Frosini's recordings and compositions which he asked me to include to make the biographical sketch as nearly complete as possible. Rather than rewrite the article for the sake of making the many necessary insertions, I am adding Bergquist's remarks as an appendix to the biographical sketch:

Frosini never played a piano-accordion, but some photos show his instrument with imitation piano keys alongside the rows of buttons which he always played on. The white piano keys actually were in performance the third row of buttons. Button-keyboard accordionists like Frosini often later adopted such a piano keyboard appearance as a concession to the growing popularity of normal piano keyboard accordions in this country. However, I don't believe Frosini adopted this keyboard appearance before the 1930's.

You seem to have listed most of Frosini's records . . . but I think I'll list the few other records by Frosini of which I know, which I hope you'll include . . . so as to make his discography absolutely complete:

VICTOR—V-32, "Fragrant Flowers"—Waltz"/ "Dizzy Accordion—Fox-Trot"; V-57, "Come, My Love—Waltz"/ "Florette"—Waltz; V-12123, "A Malva Rose—emmez 'O Grano"—Waltz/ "O Silenzio—One Step"; V-12142, "Pensieri Alegri (Happy Thoughts)—Waltz/ "Mazurka Italiana"; V-12242, "Mazurka Amabile"/ "Lettera 'e Suldato Medley"; V-12306, "Love Smiles"—Tango/ "Thoughts of Love"—Waltz; V-12404, "Cielo Sereno—Waltz"/ "Visione D'Amore"—Waltz (this is the same as "Beautiful Heaven" and "Vision of Love" on V-125 and 81368); V-12598-A and 25-7075-A, "Angelica—Mazurka" (I don't know the title of the reverse side but presumably it should be played by Frosini); 24605, "Frosini's Symphonic March"/ "La Mariposita".

The following are miscellaneous titles by Frosini on "offbrand" labels, issued earlier:

GENNETT—4670, "Amoureuse—Waltz" (probably from Edison Bell matrix), backed with "Belphegor March," played on the concertina by Alexander Prince; RADIE—4006, "Stradella Overture"/ "Medley of Old Favorite Airs"; ORIOLE—154, "Stradella Overture"; 169—"Medley of Old Favorite Airs"; PATHE 20672, "Rag in D Minor"/ "On to Paragon—March" (same titles on Actuelle 020672); PARAMOUNT—20031, "Down in China Town"—Fox—"I'm Always Falling in Love With the Other Fellow's Girl"—Medley Fox-Trot; Trot/ "Just Like a Gypsy" (introducing these Paramount titles also appear on Puritan 11031). Somewhere in the middle 1930's Frosini also made MASTER MA-130, "Winx"/ "Gauchos on Parade".

And in the early 1940's, I believe, he made, with a trio, under his name:

HARMONIA—H-2036, "Bel Fiore"—Tarantella/ "Baciarmi Sempre"—Mazurka; H-2037, "Sogna de Madre"—Waltz/ "Ritorna l'Allegria"—Polka; H-2038, "Napoli in Festa"—Mazurka/ "Bel Viso"—Polka; and H-2039, "Sogno di Gioventù"—Mazurka/ "Carezze—Waltz."

I have also (Bergquist adds) found and heard the foregoing Pathe Actuelle titles issued on catalog No. 02115, but mislabeled "I Pattinatori" and "Valzer Espana," as by Fisarmonica Duetto—meaning, in Italian, "accordion duet."

The guitar-banjo accompanist he had on electric Victor, was Dan Maffei. I also have a vague recollection of seeing listed in a 1930 Victor supplement his issue of "L'Aetna"—Polka. Perhaps it was withdrawn early, as I've found no further data on it.

Besides "The Chalice," Frosini, in his earlier career, also wrote two other songs, "Just Because" (with lyrics by Stevens), published by Huntzinger, and "The Rose and the Butterfly," "Just Because" was recorded by Earl Fuller's New York Orchestra in 1921 on Edison disc 50824, and also on Olympia 15116; while the Van Eps Quartet recorded it at it was issued on Cardinal 2043 and on Medallion 8318. I have no data whether "The Rose and the Butterfly" or "The Chalice" were recorded.

CURRENT COLLECTORS' RECORDINGS

BILLY MURRAY'S LAST RECORDS

By ALLEN G. DEBUS

My friend Bryant Burke was the first to write me the sad news that Billy Murray had died on August 16th. Although I only met him once, I cannot help but feel that his passing is a personal loss. I think that most collectors of old popular recordings will feel the same. As for myself I know that I would never have started collecting had it not been for my love of Billy Murray's comic songs.

There is no need to go over all of Billy Murray's career in this column. In 1942 Jim Walsh tackled this job for HOBBIES in three articles. However, I feel that a short discussion of his last records made from 1940-1943 would be of interest even though today they can only be obtained through used record dealers.

As you know, Billy Murray's style of singing lost popularity rapidly in the late 1920s. After his Victor contract expired in 1928 only a few comedy numbers were made by him and most of these were duets with Walter Scanlan. In my opinion the greatest of these is Victor 22040 "Oh Baby What a Night" which is backed with "Katie Keep Your Feet on the Ground" by Murray and Aileen Stanley. Incidentally this disc is also memorable as being the last Victor record ever released by the great comedian. Murray and Scanlan continued to record for many of the smaller concerns and I have duets by them on the Brunswick, Crown, and Domino labels. However, more common than these are the vast number of "vocal refrains" by Murray who must have sung choruses of popular songs for most of the bands who recorded in the late twenties and the very early thirties. But with the collapse of the recording industry Billy Murray ceased to record.

Ten years later the industry had changed and was riding the wave of an ever increasing prosperity which had not been dreamed of during the depression. RCA signed the veteran comedian on its 35 cent Bluebird label to sing "It's the Same Old Shillelagh" with Harry's Tavern Band. Although listed on the label merely as a vocal refrain, it was in effect a true Murray solo. The record sold very well and Bluebird began to issue a series of Murray records. However, the remaining records were all listed by Billy Murray accompanied by Harry's Tavern Band.

(Continued on page 56)

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Record "Through the Years" by Nelson Eddy.—Mrs. T. R. Turner, 1831, E. 31st Place, Tulsa, Okla. n1541

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. (Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

More About the History of The Phonograph

By JIM WALSH

DISC MACHINES OF THE EIGHTIES

Preceding articles in this series on the early history of the phonograph have dealt almost entirely with Edison's cylinder instrument. For the sake of fairness, let's turn to the disc instrument invented by Emile Berliner and see what it was like nearly sixty years ago. "A. L.," writing in the Talking Machine News for January 15, 1906, said:

The disc machine in its early form, sold in the later eighties, was regarded merely as a fairly interesting toy. . . . Even in its early form there were a number of persons who exhibited it at a charge, generally of one penny per record, hearing tubes being employed. . . . After a fairly good run the use of hearing tubes for talking machines rapidly waned, and the use of the horn became common. This was a consequence of the progress of the record in the direction of loudness.

The majority of these machines and records hailed from Germany. These were retailed, with one unimportant exception, at the uniform price of two guineas, including six records. . . . The discs or records were five inches in diameter, and the hearing tubes one-eighth inch bore. The trumpet (made of cardboard) was of little use, the hearing tubes (always fixed direct to the speaker) being indispensable in order to at all appreciate the record.

After a time a larger machine . . . was heralded, but the larger size and rather better get-up was the total compensation for increased price. The records were the same—and the results not one whit better. . . . An attachment was also sold as an extra, called the "gramophone globe attachment." It may be looked upon as the incipient idea of a sound-box, but though lauded as an apparatus to increase the sound, it utterly failed in that object—indeed, it rather diminished the sound. In structure it consisted of a hollow metal globe, with projections on which to fix the listening tubes. The sounds were conveyed from the diaphragm to the globe, and from the latter to the listeners. The diaphragm was of vulcanite, about the thirty-second of an inch in thickness.

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By MOSORIAK & HECKERT

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

$5.00 Postpaid — Insured

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

Of records the English selections were small in number but those in German were numerous. There was also a good list of selections in French, Spanish, Italian and Russian. The English records were mainly nursery rhymes, such as "Tom, Tom, the Piper's Son," "Little Jack Horner," "Sing a Song of Sixpence," etc. Of the quality of the records, well, it is better to be silent on that subject. But there were two exceptions, these being good records, and about the only saleable — they had quite a good run. These were "The Lord's Prayer" and "Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star." They were really splendid money-earners and many an exhibitor's eyes twinkled as the pennies rolled in. "The Lord's Prayer" always retained premier place for quality of reproduction. One person the writer has in mind made a good weekly return from this record alone. He possessed a good presence and loud voice, a seedy frock coat, and a well-polished tall hat. Armed with these and the "Lord's Prayer" record, he took up a stand in the public dancing room, and day after day during the "season," shouted at intervals, "Come and hear General Booth recite the Lord's prayer to five thousand people in Melbourne." An excellent harvest resulted.

Needles at this period cost "so much each," and to use one per selection would have been deemed willful extravagance—they saw very different use, the more so as they had to be re-sharpened by the user, a slow and monotonous operation. The records were sold at from one shilling to one shilling sixpence each. The material was vulcanite and occasionally records could be purchased made of zinc. As is well known, a disc plate scratched by frequent contact with the steel needle gives off a disagreeable grating sound, but the proportion of such results was less observable in the early form of plate. The machines themselves were operated by hand.

Sir William Preece Introduces the Phonograph

By skipping back and forth between the United States and England, this article has begun to acquire a trans-Atlantic flavor. Now we'll visit Great Britain again, to consider the following account given to Tit-Bits in 1904 by Sir William Preece, who introduced the phonograph in Great Britain:

"It was, I believe, the result of a conversation I had at Menlo Park in 1877 with Mr. Edison on the theory of the telephone that led him to discover the phonograph. With characteristic kindness, Mr. Edison sent me one of the first instruments he made, and I showed it and explained it to the members of the Royal Society who were assembled at one of the meetings in 1878. In order to demonstrate how it would talk back, I spoke into it.

"I said, 'I am the phonograph. I am a very funny fellow. I can talk. I can laugh. I can sing.' Then I talked, laughed and sang into the machine. When the reproducer was put on to give back the record, everything came out clearly and loudly, but with that Punch-like effect peculiar to the early phonographs.

"Immediately in front of me at the meeting were two very distinguished dignitaries of the Church, whose names I do not remember at the moment. When the phonograph finished speaking one of these gentlemen turned to the other, and in loud voice exclaimed, 'What a disgraceful thing it is that the Royal Society should encourage these ventriloquists!'

First Needle Manufacturer

The W. H. Bagshaw Company, established in Lowell, Mass., in 1870, maintained it was the first firm to manufacture steel needles for playing disc records and for many years remained the largest needle manufacturer.

The first wooden needle, the B. & H. Fibre, was invented in 1907 by a Chicago business man, Fred D. Hall, who wanted to preserve his large collection of high class records. Hall sold his rights to the needle in 1910 to the Victor Talking Machine Company. Today the steel needle is practically obsolete and the fibre, thanks to the growing popularity of records playing at 33 and 45 revolutions a minute and the gradual decline of the standard 78 speed, is becoming so. Neither the steel nor the wooden needle is suited to playing slow speed records, and their eventual disappearance seems inevitable.

Edison's Harp Experiments

Stories dealing with Mr. Edison's plodding, patient pursuit of tonal perfection are almost innumerable. The New Yorker of August 9, 1952, contained an interview with Melville Clark, a native of Syracuse, New York, who is the inventor of a concert harp made of glass, and has a harp factory in Syracuse.

According to the New Yorker: "Mr. Clark worked 50 years on the glass harp before perfecting it. Thomas A. Edison gave him the idea. 'I played my harp for him at his laboratory . . . one day,' he said, 'and he declared wistfully that he'd captured every instrument accurately on his phonograph cylinders except the harp. All other instruments have a point from which the sound emanates, but a harp is like a floodlight. While I played my harp, he got down on his knees and bit it here and there to see where the vibration came from. It came from the five sound holes behind the shell. 'We'll have to build a booth to get it,' Tom announced. So he built a booth of rock maple and put me inside it and stuck a recording horn through a little hole, and I played my harp. Oh, he was delighted with the cylinder! Later, he built a booth of plate glass, for he used to say that glass is the greatest sound reflector in the world. That's what prompted me to build a glass harp."

Apparently, Mr. Clark's experimental recording was never issued.

Poems Honoring Inventor Edison

Grateful purchasers of Mr. Edison's phonograph in the early 1900's frequently strove to express their appreciation in verse, and some of their effusions were published in the New Phonogram. Most of it deserved to rank among the world's worst poetry, but occasionally there was something which was reasonably good, as amateur poetry goes. Without making invidious comparisons, this article may well draw near its end with two poetic contributions. The first, by John Montague of Aberdeen, Maryland, and entitled "The Phonograph," appeared in July, 1907:

I heard a phonograph today, and all ma heart went out
To greet its liltin' melodies, an' join the merry shout;
I laughed with Billy Golden, Arthur
Collins an' the rest,
An' sat in speechless wonder at its jocund song an' jest.
The brass band played, an' there I jigged, an' kept time with ma foot;
There's nary danger lingerin' of gettin' in a rut
Of sad-eyed melancholy. Oh! the blues are far away
When you sit a-listenin' cozy when the phonograph does play.

You may talk about your organ, your upright, square, or grand;
I allow their music's fetchin', but in all this good broad land
There's nothin' in the music line comes near the phonograph
To make you wicker with delight, and raise a hearty laugh.
Its music is so varied, perhaps the hours drag slow,
You can call up Mr. Ossman to play his old banjo;
Or maybe you're a-droopin', then
Collins is the boy
To send your heart a-jumpin' an' steep your soul with joy . . .

God bless you, Mr. Edison! You've filled the world with song;
I'm but a humble member of this big world's mighty throng;
But my soul goes out to greet you,
an' I'm feeling proud to say That I've lived to hear about you an'
your phonograph today.
Across God's sweet green meadows its melodies ring out
An' millions listen to its strains, their troubles put to rout.
An' I, with all those millions, bless you each time I laugh,
For givin' us this wondrous thing,
your glorious phonograph.

At about the same period, Miss Ellie Wemyss of Parkside, South Australia received a cylinder record which her brother, who was living in Chicago, had made of his own voice. Mis Wemyss was so thrilled at hearing her brother's living tones that she wrote a long poem of more than average merit which she sent to the inventor. Here are some representative stanzas:

A voice from far across the sea!
We hear each word and tone!
'Tis not a mere machine—'tis he!
Himself—his voice—his own!

Oh, Wonder-worker, Wizard great!
World-helper! It would be,
You knew, a gift to world and State—
'Tis now a gift to me!

For now we hear—I hear—a voice
From that far sister-land.
And at the sound our hearts rejoice—
It seems so near at hand!

Here in the room with us he seems;
He knows his voice is heard;
And clear beyond our wildest dreams
His every tone and word! . . .

And so we send our thanks to you
From our far Continent;
With grateful love, a tribute due,
Such men are well content. . . .

God cherish that great life of thine!
God guard and bless it still,
That you may give more gifts divine,
And all His work fulfill!

I wonder if that cherished cylinder of the voice of Ellie Wemyss's brother is still unbroken?

Ultimate Tribute

But perhaps the ultimate tribute paid to Mr. Edison was contained in a letter written June 4, 1920, by Clifton E. Merrill of Brewer, Maine, and published in the Edison Amberola Monthly of the following September under the well chosen heading, "Here is a Rhapsody!" It seems doubtful that praise could be more lavish than this:

Thomas Edison, Esquire,
Orange, New Jersey.

Dear Sir:

Before your clear-seeing, all observing eyes grow dim; before the deep and regular steadfast beating of your mighty heart has forever ceased; before ye pass on and rest with the mighty dead and belong to the ages; I must breathe one fleeting word of GRATITUDE. I have, during seven long and happy years, owned an "Amberola" Edison Phonograph — a first class, bang-up, $200 machine of wine-red mahogany with diamond point. Once that machine, your marvelous, paramount invention, had saved my reason — once it saved me from despair — just now it has cheered and comforted my little six-year-old daughter, who is slowly recovering from a severe attack of measles and pneumonia. When we brought her downstairs, her first request was for "music," and she got it, a hundred fold. Sweet and low, divine, ethereal ravishing the inmost soul of harmony, "like the brooks, like the birds, like the wind in the leaves." She would lie on her little couch of pain and with parted lips and bated breath listen to Grand Master Thomas Edison's incomparable, unparalleled melodies. And slowly the lovely color would rise in the wan little cheek—so faint and mute she could not speak — verily, Sir Thomas! "Thou art the master of all music; the sweetest of all singers; the master of magician." Ah! thou inventor paramount! With deep gulps of gratitude from CLIFTON E. MERRILL.

Current Collectors Recordings

THE RECORDS OF GEORGE M. COHAN

By ALLEN G. DEBUS

In 1911 Victor released the following seven purple label discs by George M. Cohan:

60042 Life's a Funny Proposition,
After All

60043 You Won't Do Any Business
If You Haven't Got a Band

60044 I'm Mighty Glad I'm Living,
That's All

60045 I Want to Hear a Yankee
Doodle Tune

60049 Hey There! May There

60052 Small Town Gal

70039 P. S. Mr. Johnson Sends Regards

Although the May, 1912 Victor catalog affirms that "there has been a very large demand for these reproductions of the voice and mannerisms of the popular author-comedian," they are not too easy to run across today. I am still looking for a copy of 60049 myself. Nevertheless the scarcity of his records is due probably not because of the number of discs that are available, but to the great demand for them by the collectors themselves. Because of this I have seen dealers sometimes charge exorbitant prices for these records. On the other hand, the only dealer I know of who has had most of them for sale in the last year or two is Mr. Reichman of Record Collectors' Service who advertises regularly in HOBBIES. He has recently had five of the seven in his lists and they were nearly all in mint condition. His prices varied from $3.50 to $6.00 which is certainly within reason considering the present demand for them. However, the collector must realize that the price of the same record may vary in price considerably even with the same dealer since the dealer often must pay different amounts for the same item. Furthermore, the price will vary considerably with condition. In any case the collector should keep in mind that 60042 should always be listed as the cheapest Cohan disc since it was available down to the early days of electrical recording. I know of one Chicago collector who has found seven Cohan records, six of which are 60042.

George M. Cohan never recorded any of the patriotic numbers for which he is chiefly remembered today but the numbers like "Yankee Doodle Boy," "You're a Grand Old

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

George H. O'Connor

By JIM WALSH

The day was Saturday, August 7, 1943, and the time about 9 in the morning. I had come to Roanoke, Va., a few months before as a reporter and feature writer for the World News. At the moment I was on my way to Hotel Roanoke to get a "story" about the annual meeting of the Virginia State Bar Association.

As I walked, I glanced at a copy of the program which "Smitty," my city editor, had handed me, and suddenly my attention was caught by the statement that a Washington attorney, George H. O'Connor, would entertain at that night's banquet session.

I stopped for an instant. George H. O'Connor! Where had I heard that name before? Then it occurred to me—could this be the same George O'Connor who had made many popular Columbia records from 1915 to 1918? A fine singer of the once popular "coon songs" in the style made classical by such great performers as Arthur Collins, Bob Roberts and Eddie Morton (his style especially resembled Morton's), he had long been one of my prime favorites. Then I recalled, almost word for word, a paragraph in the Columbia record supplement for January, 1918:

"George H. O'Connor is a lawyer—you must take our word for that—one of the best known humorists and singers in Washington and, above all, a lover of Dixie. Our coupling shows it!" (The "coupling" consisted of "Down South Everybody's Happy" and "Down Where the Sweet Potatoes Grow," in the latter of which he had the assistance of the Peerless Quartet, calling itself for the occasion the Columbia Quartet).

Something else occurred to me as I stood stockstill, digesting this unexpected bit of good luck. George O'Connor was an entertainer to whom the abused word "fabulous" might be applied. The ragtime specialist and "coon shouter" was said to have been the favorite White House entertainer of every President from McKinley through Franklin D. Roosevelt. No big-time social event in the Capitol was complete without O'Connor. Probably you can imagine that my feet accelerated their tempo and I felt exultant at the possibility of meeting the legendary George as I resumed my pilgrimage to the hotel.

My friend, the switchboard operator, smiled at me as I entered, and told me she believed Mr. O'Connor was in his room. I put in a call, explained who I was and what I wanted, and was told by a voice that had become familiar to me through dozens of recordings to "come right on up."

II. Meeting George O'Connor

When I opened the door, I found myself facing a short, stout, gray-haired, elderly man. My first impression was that he looked tired, but his face lighted with a genial smile as we shook hands and I said that I was particularly glad of the chance to interview him because I had so long admired and enjoyed his records. He chuckled gleefully when I added: "But I have one complaint to make. It's awfully hard to find good second-hand copies of your records. Their former owners have nearly always prayed them to pieces!" This truthful compliment set up such a warm glow of friendship that within a few minutes we were "George" and "Jim" to each other.

The serious business of interviewing then got under way. George, who was 68, told me he first realized his abilities as a humorist and singer of comic songs while attending Georgetown University. He gave me a surprise by adding that while he was in college he made brown wax cylinders for the old Columbia Phonograph Company, before Columbia moved its headquarters in 1897 from Washington to New York. Like his better known contemporary of the '90's, Len Spencer, he sang into a row of six or eight phonographs perched on top of a piano, and received a few cents for each accepted record. George couldn't remember whether he sang under his own name or used an "alias," but I have never seen him listed in any Columbia cylinder catalog. He probably was one of the performers called on to make records for special occasions, but who was not considered a "professional" and whose output was not catalogued. Another surprise was O'Connor's statement that he helped Emile Berliner with the German inventor's early experiments in turning out disc records, but none of his efforts were issued under the Berliner label. However, many years later he did, as I shall explain, make two Victor records under unusual circumstances.

Looking at the roly-poly comedian with the twinkling blue eyes that no longer appeared tired, it was hard to realize he was not only an entertainer but was also a prominent member of the Washington bar and president of the District Title Insurance Company. Later that day I was told by one of his friends Col. Christopher B. Garnett: "George is not only a darn good comedian, he's also a darn good lawyer and business man"—an undeniably true statement.

Naturally, I asked George how he happened to resume making records for Columbia in 1915, and I received another surprise when he said his Columbia contract was the result of "propaganda" by President Woodrow Wilson's daughter, Margaret Woodrow Wilson. In those days Miss Wilson had a prominence as a concert soprano akin to that Margaret Truman more recently has enjoyed. She heard O'Connor sing at White House receptions and insisted that the Columbia Company, to which she was under contract, should make some O'Connor records. He proved to have a splendid "recording voice" and his discs were big sellers from the start.

George told me he thought his first record, "The Mississippi Barbecue," was his best, but was under the mistaken impression that it was never issued. I expressed a preference for "They May Call You Hawaiian On Broadway," to which he had written the words and his accompanist the late "Matt" Horn, an irresistible, rollicking tune. "Of course," I qualified my admiration by saying, "the song wouldn't do nowadays for radio use or any type of public performance. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People would be down on you—and who could blame them?" (I had reason to remember those words a few years later).

"Well," George returned thoughtfully, "it just goes to show you how times change. I have always been a friend of the colored people, and I had no intention when I wrote 'They May Call You Hawaiian' of ridiculing the Negroes as a race or reflecting on them. I was only poking good-natured fun at a character who put on airs to which he wasn't entitled, and he could just as well have been a member of any other nationality or race except that I specialized in Negro dialect. There won't be any colored people at the banquet, so I'm going to sing that song tonight without fear of offending anyone. You remember how the chorus goes, don't you?"

And then I had the honor of joining George O'Connor in singing the refrain of his own composition about "Mose Walker, a high-yellow nigger," who got a job playing in a Hawaiian band but was always detected by old friends, who shouted: "They may call you Hawaiian on Broadway, but you're just a plain nigger to me!"

The refrain goes:

*Jes' because you pick a ukelele an' say 'wicky' now an' then,
An' wear a what-you-call-it
'round yo' neck,
you ain't foolin' yo' ol' frien.,
You may comb your hair with cocoa butter 'til it's shiny as can be—
They may call you Hawaiian on Broadway,
but you're jes' a plain nigger to me!*

Although these words would have been considered innocuous 40 years ago in the great days of dialect comedy when there seems to have been more good-natured give and take among races and creeds than there is today, they obviously would be offensive nowadays to sensitive Negroes who have developed an ever increasing pride of race. However, I accepted George O'Connor's word when he said he had never had any idea of hurting anyone's feelings by his dialect work. He was, I was sure, too gentle and kindly to want to hurt anyone.

Al Jolson, another distinguished native of Washington was mentioned, and George quoted a Columbia official as telling him that Jolson was paid only $25 for his first Columbia record. This was a statement I have never been able to accept, and I think George's memory was playing him tricks, because Jolson had first been an exclusive Victor artist and it didn't stand to reason that, in 1913, when he had already become a big name, he would quit Victor to sign up exclusively with Columbia for a mere $25 a record.

I said something about George not having made duets with other artists and he remarked that the only recording in which he had "outside help" was his rendition of an old Harry Von Tilzer number, "Down Where the Sweet Potatoes Grow" which, as I have said, he made with the assistance of the Peerless Quartet.

"We had an awful time making that record," George said. "Took us nearly all day. Every time we'd think we were all set something went wrong. But that was a fine bunch of singers I was with. Let's see, what was the name of the leader of that quartet—the fellow who made more records than anybody else—big fat fellow—?"

"Henry Burr," I chimed in.

"Oh yes, that's right—Burr. Real name was McClaskey, wasn't it?"

"Yes, Harry McClaskey."

"Sure. And then there was little Albert Campbell, the top tenor; a tall, skinny, bald-headed fellow, John Meyer, as the bass, and another fat boy, Arthur Collins, the 'Preacher and the Bear' man, for the baritone. Well, as I said, everything went wrong. Burr and Meyer and Collins got mad and started cussing. One time when we all had to duck down below the horn so the sound of the orchestra playing mid-way of the record could get through, Meyer and Collins bumped their heads together and then there was some real language. Of course we had to start all over. Only fellow that didn't lose his temper was little Al. He laughed and took the whole thing as a joke!"

George mentioned that he'd very much like to find the sheet music of an old Irish comic song, "Dolan's Poker Party," and I told him I might be able to get it for him from my friend Frank Crumit, who had made a Victor record of the song. I wrote to Frank about it and he promised to see what he could do, but alas! poor Frank died exactly a month from the day I met George and never got around to helping out.

III. Favorite Songs of Presidents

I asked George about the personal characteristics and favorite songs of the Presidents he had known. He said it had been so long ago he couldn't remember any of William McKinley's favorites, but added: "My most popular number in those days was a coon song, 'Lam', 'Lam', 'Lam', that came out in 1900." I told him I had a clipping from an old copy of the Washington Times-Herald, in which Dick Mansfield, a traffic officer who combined police work with cartooning, had drawn a caricature of him singing "Lam', 'Lam', 'Lam'" to Matt Horn's accompaniment.

Neither did O'Connor recall any of Theodore Roosevelt's pet tunes, but he laughed joyously when William Howard Taft was mentioned.

"You know," George said, "in 1912 the Republican party was hopelessly split. Taft was renominated, but Roosevelt had formed the Progressive party, which meant that the Democratic nominee, Woodrow Wilson, was a shoo-in to win. Taft realized that as well as anybody else, and he proved that he knew he was licked by sending for me to come to the White House.

"George," he said, "I'm on good terms with the people who make Victrolas and Victor records, because I've installed a 'Victrola corner' here in the White House, and they've given it wide publicity. So I want you to go down to Camden and make two Victor records specially for me. They'll be glad to record them when you tell them they're for President Taft."

"What are the songs, Mr. President?" I asked, and Taft's fat sides shook as if he would explode when he said:

"They're two of your favorite coon songs. One is 'Tain't No Disgrace to Run When You're Skeered' and the other is 'If He Comes In, I'm Goin' Out!'"

So O'Connor went to Camden and made the two records, whose titles reflected Taft's certainty that he would be defeated in the November election. Only half a dozen copies of each were pressed. George said he still had his, but they were cracked. He had no idea whether Taft's personal copies had survived. And that was his only experience as a Victor recording artist.

Continuing our talk of the Presidents, George said Wilson was especially fond of an Italian dialect song, "My Cousin Caruso," written in 1909 by Edward Madden and Gus Edwards. He recalled Harding as a "genial, good-natured fellow," who seemed to have no outstanding musical preferences. Perhaps Calvin Coolidge's New England appreciation of thrift and frugality was responsible for his preferring a hilarious 1916 Irving Berlin hit, "Cohen Owes Me 97 Dollars," which told of an aged Jewish merchant instructing his son to collect from all their creditors so the old gentleman could "die mit a smile upon my face." After the money was collected, papa got well because "when business is so good, it's no time for a business man to die." It seems that dialect numbers were as popular with Presidents as with the public at large.

Hoover, O'Connor said, had a strong sense of humor that the generality of people didn't suspect, but during his years as chief executive he was so harassed by the depression that he seldom smiled and almost never took part in any social functions. "He put in the longest hours and was the hardest working President we've ever had. I didn't have any idea he would live through his term," George said. Happily, Mr. Hoover did live, and today has the nation's esteem and affection at the age of 80.

IV. FDR Liked "Saloon."

Franklin D. Roosevelt was described by O'Connor as "one of the boys" and "a hail-fellow well-met," who liked to get together with his cronies for a roaring and perhaps ribald good time. I mentioned the popular belief that "Home On The Range" was Roosevelt's favorite song, but George laughed again as he said it was the song that FDR hated more than any other. A White House assistant, Marvin McIntyre, had been fond of singing the number as a member of an amateur quartet and he impishly started the rumor that it was Roosevelt's favorite so he'd have a chance to sing it at entertainments attended by the President. Poor FDR was obliged to writhe through innumerable renditions of that pathetic ballad while his hosts thought they were delighting his ears with his favorite song.

O'Connor quoted Mr. Roosevelt as saying: "George, you know I'm fond of you and like to hear you sing, but if you ever sound off with that blanket-blanked 'Home On The Range' in my presence, I'll kill you!"

"Then what is Roosevelt's favorite song?" I inquired (FDR was alive at that time), and George replied:

"It's one that was written in 1921 by George Whiting and Ernest R. Ball. Ernie Ball—we used to call him 'The Silent Swede'—specialized in ballads like 'When Irish Eyes Are Smiling' and 'Mother Machree', and maybe that's the reason why he disguised his name on 'Saloon' as Roland E. Llab. It's a song praising the glories of the old-fashioned saloon that was supposed to have been killed by prohibition, and Roosevelt likes to join me in singing it. I brought down the house when I sang it at the White House Correspondents' annual dinner in 1933, with FDR attending. "Incidentally," George added proudly, "I'm the only honorary member of the White House Correspondents' Association."

For my benefit he sang "Saloon," the chorus of which will be printed later in this article.

"That's funny," I said thoughtfully, "but it's odd, too, that the President thinks so much of that song. Of course he advocated prohibition repeal in his 1932 campaign, but he was represented to be personally a total abstainer and he pledged that the saloon should never return—though of course it has."

George laughed jovially, "That 'total abstainer' stuff and pledge not to let the saloon return was just a gag," he said, "to get the vote of the temperance element. FDR probably pours more hard liquor down his hatch than any other man in the White House since Grant."

"Does he have a keen sense of humor?" I asked, and George replied: "In his own way his sense of humor is very strong, but it has its own rules and regulations and restrictions. The President likes to kid his cronies, but they mustn't kid him in return. He gives them names like 'Tommy the Cork' and 'Sammy the Rose' but it would be just too bad if one of them spoke of him to his face as, say, 'Frankie the Roose.' He's got a strong sense of his own dignity and when there's kidding to be done he's the one to do it. As far as he is concerned, joking is strictly a one-way street with him working the street."

In spite of this rather acid criticism, I nevertheless got the impression, though George didn't say so outright, that Roosevelt was his favorite of all the Presidents he had known, with the possible exception of Taft.

When I left George O'Connor after a long and, to me, most enjoyable meeting, he urged me to come to the banquet session that night and hear him sing "They May Call You Hawaiian On Broadway." Unfortunately, something came up to keep me from going, but although we never met again we didn't lose track of each other.

(To be continued).

PIANO ROLLS

WANTED: PIANO ROLLS for Seeburg style "G" & "H" piano-orchestras, Cremona-Orchestra style "M" and Coinola style "O". Also Peerless-orchestra style "O" and Peerless 44-note endless rolls. —B. Shirar, 1450 Van Ness Ave. San Francisco 9, Calif. mh3468

MUSIC WANTED

WANTED: Phonograph Record Catalogs, Literature, prior to 1927. Silver-tone and Cecilian Upright Phonographs. Old Player Piano Rolls. State Price and Condition. No Bids.—D. Miller, Box 392, Long Beach, California. f3084

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

COMPLETE back volumes. Gramophone '42 - '54; Gramophone Shop Record Supplement, '40 - '53; American Record Guide, '40 - '54; New Records, others, best offer.—P. O. Box 887, Chicago 90, Ill. ja1002

WANTED: Old Model Disc or Cylinder Phonographs with outside horns. Old small disc or cylinder records, phonograph catalogs, reproducers, horns, parts, etc. Send stamp for our Wanted-for sale list.—A. Nugent, Jr., 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. mh3403

SWISS music movement, finest make, assorted tunes, ask for leaflet.—Jules Wolff, 38 Murray Street, New York, N. Y. f6446

ANTIQUE MECHANICAL birdcage three birds, excellent condition.—Mrs. Martin McGowan, 831 Maple, Downers Grove, Ill. Phone 657 ja1631

WILL PAY CASH for Cylinder Phonographs and Records, Also Horn type Phonographs and anything pertaining to early phonographs. Write.—Pollard, 4109 Sequel Dr. Santa Cruz, Calif. mh3614

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Radio Transcriptions, Airshots, V-Discs, Armed forces radio service recordings, all kinds of recordings, etc. by "Sammy Kaye," "Guy Lombardo," "Ink Spots," "Blue Barron" & "Art Kassel."—Paul Scriven, 129 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. mh3065

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Edison Concert, Columbia Grand and other Cylinder Phonographs, horns, reproducers, catalogs, records. Describe fully and price prepaid.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. f6238

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. ja128402

MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina 15½", 20¾", 27", 32"; Criterion 20¾"; Mira 6¾", 9¾", 15½", 18½"; Monarch 15½"; New Century 18½"; Orphenon 18½"; Polyphon 24½"; Stella 14", 17½"; Imperial Symphonion 13½"; Thorens 4½". State size wanted. Lists.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, New Jersey. d3867

SWISS MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE Need repair. Write for picture and description.—B. Shirar, 1450 Van Ness Ave., San Francisco 9, Calif. mh3272

RECORDS FOR SALE

RARE VOCAL RECORDS: Treasured performances by the greatest artists available at reasonable prices. Gadske Renaud, Sembrich, Bonci, Tetrassini, etc. Write for interesting free lists. All inquiries promptly answered.—George Pluck, Waterloo Village, Grass Lake, Michigan. ja3066

ALL IMPORTED vocal operatic records. Free list on request. Many G & T's, Odeons, Fonotopias, Zonophones, Pathes, etc.—Collectors' Haven, 1131 Bergen St., Brooklyn 16, N. Y. ja3004

RARE OLD VOCAL OPERATIC SINGERS: Will send sales list comprised of Caruso, Battistini, Boninsegna, Martinelli, McCormack, Patti, Plancon, Rethberg, Tetrassini, others; old records catalogs, supplements, books on opera singers. Please enclose 3 cent stamp. Curiosity seekers and information hunters, don't bother to write as you won't get any lists.—Marvin Smisssman, 5361 Ridge Ave., St. Louis 12, Mo. ja34431

RECORD Rare classic vocals, collect-or items. Send your wants.—Record & Hobby Shop, J. Jurgel, 4136 W. North Ave., Chicago 39, Ill. mh3403

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: Collector's items to just good listening. Operatic, historical, and personality discs featured. Your wants located, if possible. Collections bought.—Record Collectors Service, 530 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. je66501

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. my124661

FOR SALE: Records, Collectors Items Opera, Theatricals, Ballads, Popular Jazz Speeches of Famous Men and Women. Special wants are requested. Free lists.—Cath. V. O'Brien, P. O. Box 278, Rich-boro, Pa. d126581

CYLINDER RECORDS for sale, large stock to select from, only records that are in good condition are offered for sale. Cylinder Phonographs and Horn type disc Phonographs for sale. Also parts, horns, reproducers, recorders, and catalogs. Send stamp for lists.—Pollards, 4109 Sequel Dr., Santa Cruz, Calif. mh3257

Auction Sales: Rare and cut-out vocal (G. & T., Zonophone, Polydor) and instrumental records. Free lists.—Arthur May, 85 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn 26, N. Y. mh120042

THOUSANDS of rare collectors' items on hand. Send me your wants on any type of 78 RPM records. New ones in daily.—Box 182, Westville, N. J. f124661

100 COLUMBIA and Edison cylinder records available. List sent on request.—Kilburn Arnold, Rossford, Ohio. f3042

WANT Manual Sequence Albums? Opera, symphony, concerto. Also singles. (78s). Private collection. Reasonable. Free list.—3055 West 17th, Wichita, Kansas. f3023

HUNDREDS of imported cutout vocals, rare Golden Age operatics—G&T, Fonotopia, etc., hard to get Music Hall, musical comedy and personality records, unusual band and orchestral items, all may be found on our free mailing lists. Write today.—Ross, Court & Co. (Canada), 121 Simcoe Street, Toronto, Ont. f3867

WANTED: Edison cylinder record 7438 "Mary Was A House Maid."—M. Raschelle, 6 Colon St., Apt. 21, Brighton, Mass. ja3408

EDISON, PATHE, VICTOR, COLUMBIA. Send us your wants. Discs only. Catalogs bought and sold.—C. Haines, Box 1442, Reading, Pa. ja3023

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

George H. O'Connor

(Continued from the January Issue)

By JIM WALSH

Letters From O'Connor

Soon after George O'Connor returned to Washington I wrote to him, primarily to send him a clipping of my interview which had appeared in the Roanoke World-News on the afternoon of the day we met. On August 11, 1943, he wrote to me on blue stationery containing the names of the District, Lawyers and Washington Title Insurance Companies, all at 1413 Eye Street, Northwest:

Dear Jim: I appreciate your write-up of me . . . and am still wondering how you did it with so little to go on. I am departing tomorrow morning for Gloucester, Mass., and on my return in a couple of weeks I'll dig up a photo for your collection of "Wax Workers." Very best regards.

On August 16, George wrote:

Dear Jim: your nice letter reached me as I was leaving for this place (Gloucester) and after I had written to you. Our letters crossed. I am fortunate to be out of Washington and the heat and am enjoying the cool breezes here. Best regards.

Getting the promised photograph turned out to be a more complicated matter than I had expected. On September 24, I again heard from George saying:

Dear Jim: I have not forgotten about the picture, but I am going to have some new ones made at the first opportunity. Things have been a bit rushed with me—unusually so—but I'll get around to it next week.

I note what you say about Frank Crumit and I am sorry that he passed along. Will talk over the Saturday Evening Post thing some time soon. Please forgive this hurried scrawl, as my secretaries (three) have joined up with Uncle Sam.

The reference to the Saturday Evening Post was in reply to my suggestion that George would be a good subject for a Post article and I'd like to try writing one about him. Unfortunately, the idea never came to anything, since I didn't get around to visiting Washington and talking with him, to obtain more information.

The next letter I find is dated December 20, 1943. George wrote:

Dear Jim: I have not forgotten my promise to send you a photo of myself, but have been delayed in securing one up-to-date. Due to a lot of things, cold, of family and self, it was but just a few days ago that I drifted into Harris and Ewing's and sat for a new series. I hope they are good, and you are down as the recipient of one—if that be not an affliction. I was altogether out of representatives of myself, and time flew by.

I duly received a large, handsome photo from George, and wrote to thank him. On January 18, 1944, he replied:

Dear Jim: It was my intention to write a note to accompany the photo and then the second edition of the flu struck me, and I had to return to my home for some days . . . where I still am. I hope to get into circulation again by tomorrow or next day. Am glad to know that you are pleased with the picture, as my wife objects to it because I did not have my hair combed.

It will be a great pleasure to foregather with you on the occasion of your trip to Washington, and I would be greatly pleased to have you "pump" me for an article for the Saturday Evening Post . . . I feel that you could do a good job of it . . . Looking forward to seeing you here, with fond anticipation of pleasure and with best regards.

Although I am sure I received other letters from George O'Connor, the foregoing is the last on which I have been able to place my hands. A few weeks before starting this article I moved from the house in which I had lived for eleven years to another address, and my record collection, my letter files, my books and everything else I own have since been in hopeless confusion. So, because of the prevailing chaos, the foregoing samples must suffice.

VI "Who's Who" Sketch

A few things that I have previously omitted now occur to me. Shortly after meeting Mr. O'Connor, I looked up his biographical sketch in "Who's Who in America" and discovered that his full name was George Henry O'Connor. He was born in Washington, the son of a U. S. Army captain, Patrick Edward O'Connor, and of Ellen Mary McCarthy O'Connor. He studied in St. John's Academy at Alexandria, Va., from 1888 to 1891, received his L. L. B. degree from the National University Law School in 1894, and his L. L. M. in 1895. During the latter year he was a special student at Georgetown University from which he received an honorary A. M. degree in 1915.

On January 20, 1905, O'Connor married Blanche Higgins. They had two children, Helen Louise and George H. O'Connor, Jr. The "White House Entertainer" was admitted to the District of Columbia Bar in 1895 and to the Bar of the U. S. Supreme Court in 1918. Who's Who said O'Connor had been president of the Washington Title Insurance Company since January 6, 1941. He had served on many civic committees, including presidential inauguration and Community Chest groups, and had been a delegate to the National Chamber of Commerce. O'Connor was a trustee of the Catholic Charities of Washington, St. Vincent's and the Home Group Hospital. He was a member of the American Bar Association of the District of Columbia, the American Title Association, the White House Correspondents Association, the Washington Board of Trade, the Knights of Columbus and the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick. He belonged to the Alfalfa, National Press, University, Lawyers, Rotary, Calvert, Wellwood County and the Charles-town, Md., Yacht Clubs. His home was at 3313 Cleveland Avenue, Washington, and he was listed as a former contributor to the Washington Daily News. This is a list of distinctions unequalled by any other recording artist I have written about, except Albert Spalding.

In one of his letters George enclosed a clipping of an article which had appeared in The Catholic Review for Oct. 8, 1943. The Review had reprinted it from The Directors' Digest, apparently a title insurance publication. The heading was "George O'Connor Makes Presidents Laugh," and the article itself follows:

George O'Connor might have been an Eddie Cantor or an Al Jolson if he hadn't been so successful in business. As it is, he has probably lifted laughs from almost as many highest-ups as have these song-and-comedy kings. His amateur entertaining also helps him relax from his chief responsibility—the managing of a group of leading title insurance companies in Washington, D. C.

He is on the Board of Directors of the National Permanent Building Association, a $12,000,000 institution, and that takes thinking, too. So to get his mind off business sometimes he has kept right on singing at banquets and social affairs at Washington in that throaty baritone which first made Grover Cleveland a devotee of his when he sang "The Bowery" from a Washington High School stage.

By the time George was ready to finish his undergraduate work at Georgetown University, he had a somewhat wider-than-campus reputation as a glee club minstrel star, so two weeks after McKinley's inauguration, he sang at the Gridiron Club dinner in honor of the new president.

A long string of White House occupants, both Roosevelts, Taft, Wilson, Hoover, and Coolidge, have found his brand of minstrel singing a perpetual relaxer. At the insistence of Miss Margaret Wilson, herself a singer, he made phonograph records of "Mississippi Barbecue" and "I Guess I'll Soon Be Back in Dixie-land" and although the listeners missed seeing the chunky, little rosy cheeked man whose voice they heard, their ears did grasp the eternal, indefinable quality which brings on a smile or a laugh.

The Liberty Loan rally at which he sang in Philadelphia during World War I brought $780,000 in bond sales, and that was tops for the times. That evening was the climax of a tour he had made of the army cantonments in the company of Mme. Schumann-Heink and his accompanist, on his amateur performances, the late Matt Horne.

A minstrel career which has been carried on from a thousand banquet tables has always included the District of Columbia Savings and Loan League parties. He is so well known in Washington for his avocation that it was a surprise to thousands of his devotees to find out the other day what he does for a living when it was announced that he was the new president of the District, the Lawyers, and the Washington Title Insurance Companies.

VII George O'Connor's Death
Then came the sad news of George O'Connor's death on September 28, 1946. I first learned of my friend's passing from a Roanoke woman who was an intimate of the O'Connor family. A day or two afterwards she gave me a clipping from The Washington Post containing a biographical sketch by Edward T. Folliard that was so admirably written and included so much detail I have not previously given that I have decided to reprint it in its entirety. To save a couple of hours of typing I shall not copy it but will ask the HOBBIES linotype operator to reset the "George H. O'Connor, District's Beloved Troubadour, Dies," article, in "six-point indent".

(To be Continued)

PIANO ROLLS

WANTED: PIANO ROLLS for Seeburg style "G" & "H" piano-orchestras, Cremona-Orchestrale style "M" and Coinola style "O". Also Peerless-orchestra style "O" and Peerless 44-note endless rolls. —B. Shirar, 1450 Van Ness Ave. San Francisco 9, Calif. mh3468

PIANOS FOR SALE

DUO ART, Steck 6 ft. grand, circa 1928, $350.00.—T. P. Grattelo, 1523 W. Stover St., Freeport, Illinois f1251

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. ja128402

CURRENT COLLECTORS' RECORDINGS

By ALLEN G. DEBUS

Eddie Cantor

Few, if any, of the great show business comedians have recorded for as many companies as Eddie Cantor has. An excellent summary of his recording career has already been written by Jim Walsh (Variety-December 23, 1953). From 1917 to date a steady stream of his records has been offered to the public, and with the filming of his life story a fine long playing record was released. But more about that later.

First let's quickly review his earlier records. Cantor first waxed his hit songs from the "Ziegfield Folies" of 1917 for both Victor and Aeolian-Vocalion. The same songs ("That's the Kind of a Baby for Me," and "The Modern Maiden's Prayer") were recorded for both, and the Victor is fairly common today. However, the early Aeolian-Vocalions were needle cut hill and dale records and most of these are quite scarce today.

By 1919 Cantor was recording both for Emerson and Pathe, and for any collector who specializes in comic songs these are a "must." He sang many great numbers for these companies such as "I Never Knew I Had a Wonderful Wife Until the Town Went Drv." "I Used to Call Her Baby (But Now She's A Mother to Me,)" and "Give Me the Sultan's Harem." They may be a little dated today, but they are still funny. I also have a Regal record by him from this period.

In 1922 he switched to Columbia with songs like "How Ya Gonna Keep Your Mind on Dancing," "I Love Me," and "Charley My Boy." According to Jim Walsh he was with Columbia until 1925 and made a few electrically recorded discs for them, but the last Columbia I have by him made at this time is his acoustic 1924 record of "We're Back Together Again" on 397-D. In any case, he stayed away from recording from about 1925 to 1928 when he went back to Victor for a year or two to sing "I Faw Down and Go Boom," "If I Give Up the Saxaphone (Will You Come

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: Phonograph Record Catalogs, Literature, prior to 1927. Silver-tone and Cecilian Upright Phonographs. Old Player Piano Rolls. State Price and Condition. No Bids.—D. Miller, Box 392, Long Beach, California. f3084

BUY, SELL or trade mechanical pianos, Hurdys Gurdys, Calliopes, Band Organs, Rolls, Write—R. C. Lambert, Monticello, Iowa. d120001

WANTED: Old Model Disc or Cylinder Phonographs with outside horns. Old small disc or cylinder records, phonograph catalogs, reproducers, horns, parts, etc. Send stamp for our Wanted-for sale list.—A. Nugent, Jr., 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. mh3408

SWISS music movement, finest make, assorted tunes, ask for leaflet.—Jules Wolff, 88 Murray Street, New York, N. Y. f6445

WILL PAY CASH for Cylinder Phonographs and Records. Also Horn type Phonographs and anything pertaining to early phonographs. Write—Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr. Santa Cruz, Calif. mh3614

NORWEGIAN HARDANGER violin made by John Elefson Steinkjondahlen, Bo. Telemark, Norway in 1819. Recently put in A-1 condition by noted violin maker. Also old table model sewing machine with shuttle, hand crank and claw feet, German make, brought here in 1889. Write—Box 81, Thief River Falls, Minnesota. ap32511

FOR SALE: Music Box, very fine condition, 3 - 14" cylinders. Original list of 30 tunes and instruction papers, $125.00. Wall Map: State of Connecticut, 1859, 4x6" showing all houses, churches, stores etc., $50.00.—Herman Jacot, Weaver St., Greenwich, Conn. f1213

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Edison, Victor and Columbia Phonographs. Hundreds of Cylinder and Disc Records, many rare, hard to find numbers. Send dime for either two or four minute cylinder, or Disc record list. All three lists for 25c.—Copenroll's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. ap3656

MUSIC BOXES

SWISS MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE Need repair. Write for picture and description.—B. Shirar, 1450 Van Ness Ave., San Francisco 9, Calif. mh3272

CYLINDER TYPE Music Box plays 8 pieces automatically, in good condition. Bargain $150.00.—Stillmanks Watch Shop, 423 Walter S. E. Albuquerque, New Mex. ap3633

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Edison Concert, Columbia Grand and other Cylinder Phonographs, horns, reproducers, catalogs, records. Describe fully and price prepaid.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. f6238

GEORGE H. O'CONNOR

(Continued from the Feb. Issue)

By JIM WALSH

Continuing last month's discussion of the life of George H. O'Connor, we quote from the Washington, D.C., Post article which gave a biographic sketch of the life of the beloved singer.

"The voice of Washington's beloved troubadour is stilled.

"George H. O'Connor, a chunky, gay-hearted little man of 72, whose songs over a half century had brought delight to nine American Presidents and to legions of others, died yesterday at 20 minutes after midnight.

"He was almost beyond doubt the most popular man in Washington. Though he had passed the Biblical span of three score and ten, the news of his death had a stunning effect.

"His repertoire of songs had hardly changed since the gay 90's of McKinley's time; somehow, he hadn't seemed to change much either. Hence, the shock produced by his passing.

"This feeling about O'Connor's agelessness was summed up in a note written to him by the late Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"The occasion was a White House Correspondents Association Banquet in 1939. The President, along with others, had relaxed and grown

MELODEONS FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED melodeons and organs. Repair service. Reasonable prices.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. my3882

DOUBLE KEYBOARD rosewood melodeon; also single keyboard, ebonized case. Both instruments completely restored. Will accept offers. These must be sold as we are moving.—C-sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Michigan. my3215

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

WANTED: Grand roller organ, Regina 27-inch steel disc music box.—Oscar Furnberg, R. #1, Fargo, N. Dak. my3272

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. f128402

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Edison, Victor and Columbia Phonographs. Hundreds of Cylinder and Disc Records, many rare, hard to find numbers. Send dime for either two or four minute cylinder, or Disc record list. All three lists for 25c.—Coppernoll's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. ap3656

COLLECTORS ITEM: Edison phonograph - 50 years old. Cylinder wax records, open to offer.—Musarra 40-01 Queens Blvd., Long Island City 4, New York. my3255

SHEET MUSIC

8 DIFFERENT PIECES of Sheet Music before 1870 for $1.25.—Tatum's Antique Shop, 1008 Brookstown, Winston Salem, N. C. mh1402

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

BUY, SELL or trade mechanical pianos, Hurdys Gurdys, Calliopes, Band Organs, Rolls, Write—R. C. Lambert, Monticello, Iowa. d120001

WANTED: Old Model Disc or Cylinder Phonographs with outside horns. Old small disc or cylinder records, phonograph catalogs, reproducers, horns, parts, etc. Send stamp for our Wanted-for sale list.—A. Nugent, Jr., 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. mh3408

WILL PAY CASH for Cylinder Phonographs and Records, Also Horn type Phonographs and anything pertaining to early phonographs. Write.—Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr. Santa Cruz, Calif. mh3614

NORWEGIAN HARDANGER violin made by John Eieson Steinkjondahlen. Bo, Telemark, Norway in 1819. Recently put in A-1 condition by noted violin maker. Also old table model sewing machine with shuttle, hand crank and claw feet, German make, brought here in 1889. Write—Box 81, Thief River Falls, Minnesota. ap32511

WANTED: Hand roller organs, such as concert, Chautauqua, Clarion, etc., music boxes, old phonos,—coin operated preferred. Private collector.—Neumann Miller, 436 W. Colorado Blvd., Glendale 4, Calif. my3844

FOR SALE: 100 four minute cylinder records $30.00. What do you need in Edison cylinder phonographs? —Karr Museum, Stanberry, Missouri. mh1061

WANTED: Old phonographs, upright and table models. Phonograph Record Catalogues, Literature, before 1927. Old popular piano rolls. State price and condition. No bids.—D. Miller, Box 392, Long Beach, Calif. je3084

MUSIC BOXES

SWISS MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE Need repair. Write for picture and description.—B. Shirar, 1450 Van Ness Ave., San Francisco 9, Calif. mh3272

CYLINDER TYPE Music Box plays 8 pieces automatically, in good condition. Bargain $150.00.—Stillmanka Watch Shop, 423 Walter S. E. Albuquerque, New Mex. ap3633

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Radio Transcriptions, Airshots, V-Discs, Armed forces radio service recordings, all kinds of recordings, etc. by "Sammy Kaye," "Guy Lombardo," "Ink Spots," "Blue Barron" & "Art Kassel."—Paul Scriven, 129 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. mh3065

WANTED: Vocal Record of Song "Every Race Has a Flag But the Coon."—Clifford R. Dew, 5148 Charles St., Maple Heights, Ohio. ap3253

RECORDS FOR SALE

RECORD Rare classic vocals, collect- or items. Send your wants.—Record & Hobby Shop, J. Jurgel, 4136 W. North Ave., Chicago 39, Ill. mh3403

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: Collector's items to just good listening. Operatic, historical, and personality discs featured. Your wants located, if possible. Collections bought.—Record Collectors Service, 530 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. je66501

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. my124661

FOR SALE: Records, Collectors Items Opera, Theatricals, Ballads, Popular Jazz Speeches of Famous Men and Women. Special wants are requested. Free lists.—Cath. V. O'Brien, P. O. Box 278, Richboro, Pa. d128581

CYLINDER RECORDS for sale, large stock to select from, only records that are in good condition are offered for sale. Cylinder Phonographs and Horn type disc Phonographs for sale. Also parts, horns, reproducers, recorders, and catalogs. Send stamp for lists.—Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Santa Cruz, Calif. mh3257

Auction Sales: Rare and cut-out vocal (G. & T., Zonophone, Polydor) and instrumental records. Free lists.—Arthur May, 85 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn 26, N. Y. mh120042

THOUSANDS of rare collectors' items on hand. Send me your wants on any type of 78 RPM records. New ones in daily.—Box 182, Westville, N. J. my3614

FIFTY YEARS of recording: All your favorites on all labels - Monarch, Zonophone, Columbia. Etc. Send for free "Pops" lists.—Gertrude Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. my3696

HUNDREDS of imported outout vocals, rare Golden Age operatics—G&T, Fonotipia, etc., hard to get Music Hall, musical comedy and personality records, unusual band and orchestral items, all may be found on our free mailing lists. Write today—Ross, Court & Co., (Canada), 121 Elmcoo Street, Toronto, Ont. my3867

EDISON, COLUMBIA cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 44 Church St., Norwich, Conn. mh3084

RARE Operatic vocal records; send for free mail auction lists.—Robert J. Nathan, 5480 Broadway, New York 63, N. Y. my3084

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs. — Ted's Second Hand Store, 1128 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia 23, Pa. ap3623

THOUSANDS of used records, all varieties, send wants.—Stanley Brille, 8914 Van Buren, Culver City, Calif. ap3652

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought. — E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122511

FREE SALE LISTS of collectors records at realistic prices. Many fine operatic and concert vocals from 50c up. Write.—Jack Whistance, Hurley, New York. mh1882

RECORDS: Early recordings by Gadski, Galli-Curci, Destinn, Melba, Schallapin, Farrar, Landouzy, Lauder, Scotti Muzio, Tetrazzini, Schumann-Heink, Sobinoff and many others. Write.—N. Mann, 100 San Buena Ventura, San Francisco, Calif. mh1652

EDISON, PATHE, VICTOR, COL- umbia. Send us your wants. Discs only. Catalogs bought and sold.—C. Haines, Box 1442, Reading, Pa. my3023

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. (Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

George H. O'Connor as he appeared near the end of his life.

mellow as the red-faced little man on the stage went through his medley — 'You Ain't No Relation of Mine,' 'My Gal's A High-Born Lady,' 'Little Tommy Murphy,' and the fabulous 'Saloon.'

Mr. Roosevelt scribbled a note on his place card, and told a waiter to take it to O'Connor. It read:

"Dear George:

"Like special vintage wine, you improve with age. More years to you. FDR."

"A great outpouring is expected for the funeral of Mr. O'Connor. The services will be held at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning in St. Matthew's Cathedral. The Rev. Father Joseph Moran, pastor of St. Thomas the Apostle Church, of which O'Connor was a communicant, will say the low mass. Burial will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

"Honorary pallbearers, as announced late yesterday, include the following:

"Commissioner John Russell Young, Commissioner Guy Mason, Ben McKelway, Charles P. Light, Thomas W. Brahaney, Joseph H. Himes, Eugene Meyer, Sidney Taliaferro, Mark Lansburgh, E. H. Johansen, Robert V. Fleming, Corcoran Thom, Henry Spencer, Dr. James Mitchell, James E. Colliflower, John Reilly, Dr. Edward Larkin, Earl Godwin, M. F. Calnan, Clifford K. Berryman, William E. Leahy.

"Carter Barron, White House Secretary William D. Hassett, Harold Crooks, Jesse H. Jones, Leslie Biffle, Martin McNamara, Stephen Early, Joseph P. Tumulty, Edward Curran, John G. Bell, George W. Stetson, Robert E. Buckley, James McD. Shea and John H. Stadler.

"Among organizations to be represented at the funeral are the White House Correspondents Association, the National Press Club, the Rotary Club, the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, the Lawyers' Club, the District of Columbia Bar Association, the Knights of Columbus and the Alfalfa Club.

"These organizations tell the story of a many-sided George O'Connor. 'He was best known — in fact, famous — as a troubadour, a blithe spirit who made Presidents and others among the mighty tap their feet and sway with his melodies.

"But he was also a distinguished lawyer-business man, president of the District Lawyers and Washington Title Insurance Co's.

"He likewise was a deeply religious man, who once a year spent a few days of meditation at Manresa, the Jesuit retreat house on the Severn, near Annapolis.

"O'Connor made his last appearance as an entertainer at a dinner in honor of Chief Justice Fred Vinson at the Mayflower Wednesday night.

"On Friday night, before his death, he left home in his role of public-spirited citizen. He attended a meeting of the board of trustees of Group Hospitalization, Inc., in the Metropolitan Club. He did not reach his home at 3313 Cleveland ave. nw. until after midnight.

"He was talking to his wife, Mrs. Blanche Higgins O'Connor, when he sank back into a chair in the bedroom and lapsed into unconsciousness. Mrs. O'Connor called Dr. Charles W. Ordman, 3300 Cathedral ave., who found that he had died of a heart attack.

"Besides Mrs. O'Connor, he leaves a son, George H. O'Connor, Jr., a Navy officer in the war, now a student at Georgetown University law school; a daughter, Helen Louise O'Connor, and a brother, Dr. Charles E. O'Connor.

"Gene Buck, who helped the late Flo Ziegfeld stage his celebrated Follies, and who has been coming to Washington for 35 years, was one of George O'Connor's warmest admirers.

"Buck, a director and founder of ASCAP, had this to say about him last night.

"He had a great talent as a singer of cons. He was a genuine amateur, as Bobby Jones was an amateur in the field of golf. No singer ever lived who put more sincerity into his singing or who had a greater sense of humor.

"He was a great personality as well as a singer. I never knew of a man who gave so much of himself."

"George Henry O'Connor was born August 20, 1874, in a house on Fourth st. nw., facing Judiciary Square. He was the son of Capt. Patrick E. O'Connor, USA, and Ellen McCarthy O'Connor. He attended St. John's Academy in Alexandria, National University Law School, and Georgetown University as a special student.

"As a child of 6, George was sent to a dancing school conducted by a Professor Sheldon of Tenth and F sts. The professor used to put on Gilbert and Sullivan operettas, and it was in one of these, 'The Pirates of Penzance,' that little George made his debut.

"As he grew older he worked and went to school at the same time. He probably owed his rise in the business and professional world to the fact that he literally danced his first job away. This was a book-keeping job at Woodward & Lothrop.

"George, still in short pants, couldn't reach the high desk to do his work, and he got a box to stand on. One day Samuel W. Woodward came in to find George doing a clog dance on the box and fired him.

"Thereafter, George got a job as messenger with the District Title Insurance Co., and started a Horatio Alger climb that continued until he was top man.

"Old files of The Washington Post show that O'Connor was a favorite singer when he was 20 years of age. He was then appearing with the Columbia Athletic Club Minstrels and a little later was to join the Georgetown University Glee Club.

"This period — the 90's — was the heyday of the blackface minstrels, when Lew Dockstader, and Primrose and West were touring the land.

"O'Connor often appeared as an endman. He remained essentially a minstrel all his life. From the standpoint of technique, he never left the ragtime era. Nevertheless he could enchant youngsters brought up on jazz and swing as well as the old-timers.

"The Post of March 23, 1897, carried a page-one spread about a Gridiron Club dinner at which President McKinley was the guest of honor. According to the story, solos were sung by 'Mr. A. J. Stoffer and Mr. George H. O'Connor, the Hazelton piano being used. George sang 'My Gal Is a High Born Lady' and 'Mammy's Little Alabama Coon.'

"Teddy Roosevelt liked George's song about 'Tommy Murphy,' which concerned an Irish soldier who lost a leg in battle, but was determined to get back and strut before his sweetheart.

"Taft was fond of 'It Ain't No Disgrace to Run When You're Scared.' After his defeat in 1912, Taft laughed uproariously when George sang 'If He Goes Out, I'm Going Out.'

"Not long after Woodrow Wilson took office, he heard George sing 'My Cousin Caruse.' He put his arm around George and thanked him, and later a swarm of job hunters descended on George to ask that he put in a boost for them with W. W.

"Harding also was an O'Connor fan, and so was Coolidge.

"It was in the Coolidge-Hoover period that George, appearing at White House Correspondents' banquets, sang his "Saloon," a haunting, mournful tune that was both an elegy of days gone by and a prayer for their return. With the late Matt Horne plunking the keys, George would sing.

Saloon, saloon, saloon,
It runs through my mind like a tune.
I don't like cafes and I hate cabarets,
But just mention saloon and my cares fade away.
For it brings back a fond recollection
Of a little old low-ceiling room
With a bar and a rail,
And a dime and a pall,
Saloon, saloon, saloon.

"Sir Willmott Lewis, the correspondent of the London Times, wrote a new version of Saloon after the eighteenth amendment was repealed, but George was never able to use it. His audiences liked the old one, and it became the custom for all hands—including Mr. Roosevelt and then President Truman—to join in with a crescendo of melody that rattled the chandeliers.

"George O'Connor could have made a fortune on the stage; almost everybody agreed on that, including the professionals. In this connection, there were two memorable anecdotes.

"Al Jolson and O'Connor, both natives of Washington, entertained at an Alfalfa Club banquet. Jolson, a toast on Broadway, sang his mammy songs and then gave way to George.

"Will Rogers turned to Gene Buck and said:

"Gene, I don't know but what the better boy stayed home."

"Back in T.R.'s time, George went to New York to sing at a dinner in honor of the President. Later he visited the Lambs Club. Wilton Lackaye, a famous actor and native of Washington, introduced him to George M. Cohan and James T. Powers, saying:

"You fellows think you're good, but here's a man who plays New York as a one-night stand."

"Many years after George attended Georgetown University he appeared at a smoker on the Hilltop. An old grad listened to him sing song after song and heard the crowd yell for more. Finally, getting a chance, the old gentleman went over to George and said:

"For goodness sake, young man, aren't you ever going to graduate?"

"George O'Connor's life seemed to prove that a man who sings just for the fun of it, and sings for the lowly as well as the mighty, never grows old."

Glancing over this article, I read the list of pallbearers and wondered if the Henry Spencer who served as one was the brother of the first famous phonograph artist, Leonard Garfield Spencer. Both Len and Henry Spencer were natives of Washington, and I only recently learned that Henry, who occasionally did some recording, was living in Washington when George O'Connor died.

VIII. Unfortunate Radio Experience

And now I come to a personal reference which involves my only unpleasant association with George H. O'Connor—one that was not at all his fault, since he was dead when it occurred. I mention this incident chiefly to show how hasty action and unintended thoughtlessness may sometimes mar a well-meant undertaking.

Almost as soon as I learned of George's death, I decided to present a George O'Connor Memorial Program on my Walsh's Wax Works program, at that time heard from radio station WDBJ in Roanoke. The program was to include several O'Connor records together with comment by me on the comedian's life, personality and achievements.

Being busy with other things, I gathered the records up almost at the last minute. Because I remembered "They May Call You Hawaiian on Broadway" as the most amusing of the lot, I included it, forgetting it contained lines which were merely intended to be funny when they were written many years before, but which Negro listeners of more recent years would find grossly offensive.

The program went well until I put on "They May Call You Hawaiian," but as soon as the first line, "Mose Walker was a high-yellow nigger from down in Dixieland" was heard, I realized what I had done. My program had always been popular among Negro listeners, and a lot of them were tuned in that day. Hardly had that offensive line been heard when the phone began ringing. Then, as soon as the last line of the refrain, "They may call you Hawaiian on Broadway, but you're just a plain nigger to me!" went on the air it seemed that every colored man or woman in Roanoke was calling to complain.

I felt badly upset, but did what I could to right matters by explaining I had picked the record out hurriedly without recalling that it contained remarks which, though intended good-naturedly, might be interpreted as slurs on the Negro race. I apologized for any hurt feelings I might have caused and said I was deeply sorry—as I certainly was. The happening was particularly unfortunate since I had a reputation among the colored people of being one of their staunch Roanoke friends. A couple of weeks later I tried to make further amends by playing a program composed entirely of music by Negro artists, and whatever ill will may have resulted from my thoughtlessness soon died away. In late years I have played, at their request, records of many of the "coon" songs, replete with such words as "nigger" and "shine," for some of my cultured Negro friends, and they have found them uproariously amusing. (I hasten to add they were played in private—not on the air.) I was pleased when one fine young fellow thoughtfully said: "I enjoy those records because they are funny, and I know well enough there are such colored people. They are not any more a reflection on me as a person than Maggie and Jiggs are a slur on all the Irish. I don't think a little friendly kidding among the races does anybody any harm."

There's much to be said for that point of view. But, though they were not so intended, the words of "They May Call You Hawaiian," could easily be taken as sneering instead of kidding, and I have never ceased to be sorry that I didn't take a bit more time to assemble the records for my George O'Connor Memorial Program. Had I not been so hasty in my choosing I should not have done an injustice to the memory of one of the kindest and most lovable of men—one in whose nature there was not a shred of malice toward any race or creed.

IX George O'Connor's Records

George O'Connor's first Columbia record, No. A1669, combining "Mississippi Barbecue" and "The Alabama Jamboree," appeared in the March, 1915, supplement. On the same page his fellow Washingtonian, Al Jolson was represented with two of his Winter Garden hits, "Sister Susie's Sewing Shirts for Soldiers" and "When the Grown Up Ladies Act Like Babies." Here is the comment of Editor George Clarence Jell on the initial O'Connor offering:

In Mr. O'Connor we have another Columbia "find" and a valuable one. Though this is his first record it is evident that he is a real singer of the American "coon song," and in his infusion of the characteristic unctious, vociferation and abandon into his rendering of this class of music he has few peers. It is certain that if it is well done no line of popular song work is more pleasing to the public than this, and the present record may be ordered with the assurance that it is out of the ordinary in quality. Two of the most effective of current coon song successes have been made use of to introduce this new artist.

(It will be remembered George told me he considered "Mississippi Barbecue" his best record, but was under the impression it was never issued).

In April, George was back with A1693, "At The Mississippi Cabaret," coupled with a Harry Von Tilzer song, "Roaming Around," sung by Arthur Fields. A month later he had a coupling of "Everybody Rag With Me" and "On My Way To New Orleans," the latter composed by Harry Von Tilzer's brother, Al. The number was A1706.

There were no more O'Connor records until August, 1915, when he sang a popular song, rather out of his usual style, "Hop a Jitney With Me," which was combined on A1768 with another Arthur Fields rendition of a Harry Von Tilzer number, "In Matewan." (I have never heard this record and I wonder how many HOBBIES readers could remember the words and music of "In Matewan." I must ask my friend, Sophie Salpeter, manager of the present-day Harry Von Tilzer Music Publishing Co., to send me a copy of the sheet music for my collection of musical oddities).

In October, George was back on A1805 with an Italian dialect comedy song, "Scaddle de Mooch," which I remember telling him I liked but which he didn't seem to think was especially good. The other side was Byron Gay's hilarious automobile "nut song," "Gasoline Gus And His Jitney Bus."

Harry Von Tilzer songs were really making the Columbia lists in those days. In January, 1916, on A1870, O'Connor sang a Von Tilzer number, "I'm Homesick," doubled with "Out Of a City Of Six Million People (Why Did You Pick On Me?)" sung by the late Marguerite Farrell, who for some reason changed it to "pick out me."

The most genuinely typical O'Connor nor record that had so far appeared was offered in February, on A1901, when he sang "I Guess I'll Soon Be Back In Dixieland," combined with the ludicrous "These Feet Of Mine," written by his accompanist, J. Martin (Matt) Horn. In March, George had another corking coupling, A19, an old George M. Cohan number, "P. S. Mr. Johnson Sends Best Regards," (the "Best" didn't appear in the title of the song as Cohan recorded it for Victor) and "Loading Up The Mandy Lee," written by Stanley Murphy and my dear friend, Henry I. Marshall, who is still actively composing songs and making guest appearances on the stage and in TV. The supplement description is interesting:

The character singing of George H. O'Connor has made a hilarious hit at his every appearance. George M. Cohan is responsible for the words of Mr. Johnson's "P. S." and the other George is responsible for a most laugh - provoking interpretation. "Loading Up The Mandy Lee" is a regular "coon shouter" of a song. In listening to O'Connor's lively singing, you can picture the shuffling, shouting crowd of cotton pickers on the Mississippi boat dock and even join in the chorus, if the spirit moves.

In the true O'Connor vein and a song that would have ideally suited Bert Williams was "I'm Gone," which appeared on A1980 in June, doubled with an early Walter Donaldson hit, "Oh Joe, With Your Fiddle And Bow, You Stole My Heart Away." It's interesting to note that "I'm Gone" was the brain child of S. H. Dudley, but don't jump to the conclusion that this Dudley was the Hayden Quartet baritone who was also for years the Victor catalog editor. There were two S. H. Dudleys, one of whom was a Negro show man who had a string of theaters in the Piedmont area of Virginia, and it was he who wrote the blackface dialect number, "I'm Gone."

George sang another Walter Donaldson ditty, "Come On To Nashville, Tennessee," for the July supplement. It was coupled on A2008, with one of the most amusing records Collins and Harlan ever made, James Brockman's "The Kid Is Clever," a satirical treatment of a rustic smart Aleck.

The most lastingly popular of all the O'Connor records—one that stayed in the Columbia catalog until 1928—appeared in October. It was A2064, "The Nigger Blues," an irresistible catchy bit of nonsense whose title would keep it from being recorded nowadays. This popular specimen of the blues was written by Leroy "Lasses" White, who struck me when I once called on him in his hotel room in Johnson City, Tenn., as being perhaps the most serious looking middle-aged man I had ever seen. He was also a sick man, which may have accounted for his depressed appearance. For the first time, an Al Jolson solo appeared on the back of an O'Connor record. It was "I'm Saving Up The Means To Get To New Orleans." After this, Jolson-O'Connor couplings were frequent—possibly because Columbia was said to be paying Jolson $8,000 a side (in spite of his not being a good seller when compared to Billy Murray, Henry Burr, Will Oakland, Collins and Harlan, Ada Jones and many other professional phonograph singers) and it may have been thought good economy to put a song by a less expensive artist on the other side of the Jolson waxings.

In November, on A2080, O'Connor sang a "coon song," which he and Matt Horn had written, "You Ain't No Relation Of Mine," combined with "Now He's Got A Beautiful Girl," a Ted Snyder opus, recorded by Jolson.

The January, 1917, Columbia list included O'Connor's version of "Oh! Southern City (Send Us Some Beautiful Girls)" combined on A2127, with "How Could Washington Be A Married Man And Never Tell A Lie," by M. J. O'Connell, who recorded this comic selection for virtually every American phonograph company. The same supplement also contained one of the greatest O'Connor successes, "I Ain't Prepared For That," with Al Jolson on the other side No. A-2124, singing a catchy Irving Berlin song, "Someone May Be There While I'm Gone." Concerning the O'Connor side the supplement said:

We offer no comparisons, but challenge anyone to maintain his habitual calm while George O'Connor sings the great "preparedness" lament of 'Rastus Brown. The three choruses of this song will unquestionably prove one of the humorous hits of our entire catalog.

In fact, this record made such a hit that it was specially reissued in February, 1918.

O'Connor's February, 1917, record ranked well among the most popular he ever made. It was the slightly unrefined but unfailingly amusing and still popular "Pray For The Lights To Go Out," backed (on A2143), by a popular hit, "They're Wearing 'Em Higher In Hawaii," by Morton Harvey, who will be further heard of in HOBBIES one of these days.

In April, on A2184, George had another catchy "coon song," "Misery," doubled with Irving Kaufman singing an Irving Berlin song that proved a failure, "That Goody Melody." A month later O'Connor (whom Columbia always called a tenor, although some listeners considered him a baritone) sang "She's Dixie All The Time," with a Sam Ash solo on the other side, of A2210, "Wonderful Girl, Good Night"—another Harry Von Tilzer composition. In the same list on A2211, he sang "Ephraim's Jazbo Band," one of the first songs about "jass," as it was then called, while Arthur Fields occupied the other side with "Everybody Loves A 'Jass' Band."

The September supplement brought two more O'Connor offerings—neither among his more outstanding catalog contributions. A2293 combined his "Ain't You Coming Back To Dixieland?" with "If You Had The World And Its Gold," sung by a vaudeville tenor, Jim Doherty, then almost unknown to record buyers, but who a few years later became a popular exclusive Edison star. I would nominate A2294 as the most obscure of all O'Connor recordings—a patriotic number, "Sons Of America," backed with "Three Cheers For The Army And Navy," sung by Edgar Stoddard and the Broadway Quartet. This was a disguise for Andrea Sarto and the Columbia Stellar Quartet.

The November O'Connor record was numbered A2364. He sang "Sailin' Away On The Henry Clay," written by the great popular composer, Egbert Van Alstyne, while the reverse side was taken up by the sweet-voiced tenor, "Mike" O'Connell, with "You Never Can Be Too Sure About The Girls."

January, 1918, brought the already mentioned A2411, "Down South Everybody's Happy" and "Down Where The Sweet Potatoes Grow," while the February list contained my pick (in spite of its painful associations) of all O'Connor discs, A2441, "They May Call You Hawaiian On Broadway," coupled with a great Collins and Harlan performance of the side-splitting "Cannibal King."

It will be observed that few of the later O'Connor records had him singing on both sides, but he occupied the two faces of A2481, issued in April. The songs were the still famous "I Ain't Got Nobody" and "Everybody's Crazy 'Bout The Dog-gone Blues, But I'm Happy."

The last George O'Connor record Columbia ever issued was A2507, which came out in May, 1918, and combined "Jazzin' The Cotton Town Blues" and "There's Always Something Doin' Down In Dixie."

If I should be asked why O'Connor records "lost out" after the middle of 1918, I would guess that it was partly because winning World War I had become such a grim business that the type of song the veteran comedian sang was considered inappropriate. Too, the record companies were being required by the government to use some of their plant space for war purposes, and the monthly record lists were reduced in size. The "coon song," more over, had gradually been losing popularity, and it is worthy of note that Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan, after a fabulously successful singing partnership of 16 years, never made a Victor or Columbia record in the years following 1918, although their superb comedy was still issued by Edison and some of the smaller companies.

To sum up, George O'Connor happened to be a past-master of an art form that was becoming outmoded. But his loss of popularity on records didn't affect the status as the "favorite White House entertainer" which he enjoyed until his death. Today, eight years after the banker-lawyer comedian's passing, there are many collectors who would like nothing better than to have a full set of George O'Connor's discs—including of course, beyond all others, those special Victor versions of "Tain't No Disgrace To Run When You're Skeered" and "If He Comes In I'm Goin' Out." It would be nice to know the masters are still in existence, but it's almost certain they are not. And it seems equally unlikely that anybody will ever find any of the brown wax Columbia cylinders he made in the nineties.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

JOTTINGS

From Old Record Catalogs and Phonograph Publications

By JIM WALSH

Some readers say they especially enjoy articles in which I quote from old record catalogs or early publications dealing with the phonograph. This is intended for those readers, as a change from the "straight" biographical sketches.

The veteran banjo virtuoso, Fred Van Eps, tells me that the first record catalog in booklet form issued by any talking machine concern was the 36-page one published in 1894 by the United States Phonograph Company of 87-91 Orange Street, Newark, New Jersey. The North American Phonograph Company had issued four-page lists of cylinders recorded by Edison in 1890, but the folders hardly attained to the dignity of a catalog.

There were some oddities about United States' initial production. For one thing, the records weren't numbered. The catalog announced "We Do Not Handle Duplicate Records," and further asserted: "All records listed in this catalog are original records unequalled for brilliancy, clearness and general excellence." On page four appears a form letter headed "To Our Customers":

"In ordering, state clearly whether you desire records for horn or slot purposes, or way-tubes.

"In addition to the records listed in this catalog, we can also furnish an endless variety of vocal, instrumental and miscellaneous records, of which no catalog can be made. We will gladly accept orders for such records, making selection according to our judgment. . . .

"Price: All records, except Quartets and Minstrel First Parts, $1.00 each; Quartet and Minstrels, $1.25 each. (The higher cost no doubt was because records involving several artists cost more to make by the "round".) . . . If you want to buy a phonograph or supplies of any kind, it will pay you to write us. V. H. Emerson, Manager."

V. H. Emerson was the Victor Emerson who became a Columbia recording expert when the United States Phonograph Company went out of business around 1897. Virtually all the U.S. artists went with him to Columbia, where Emerson stayed until 1916 when he founded his own record company. Incidentally, the cylinders produced by the United States Company were known as "standard New Jersey records."

A valuable feature of the 1894 catalog is the series of good photographs of the handful of artists who had by then won a reputation as record makers. Under a picture of Dan W. Quinn, looking youthful with his spiky hair brushed straight back, we read:

Mr. Quinn has achieved prominence quicker than any other artist who devotes his time to professional Phonographic work, chiefly because he always speaks his words plainly, makes a specialty of the latest songs, and sings without straining his voice. We recommend his records for single-tube, way-tube, or horn use.

This meant that Quinn's records were considered equally well adapted to being heard through one pair of ear-tubes, several pairs or through an external horn. There were 49 unnumbered titles, of which "Daisy Bell," "Farewell, Daisy Bell," "Kelly's Bicycle Song," "Do, Do, My Huckleberry, Do," "The Cat Came Back" and "The Girl That Broke the Man That Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo" are typical.

Under the photo of George J. Gaskin, "The Irish Thrush," we read:

Gaskin is too widely known to require much mention. He stands unrivalled in his class. Every record is loud and ringing in tone, each word and syllable distinct, as if Mr. Gaskin were in the room with his audience. For horn use no vocals compare with these in loudness. They may be heard in the remotest corner of a great theater if horn is attached to the Phonograph, yet are not unpleasantly loud when heard through the tubes.

Mr. Gaskin had some good sellers to his credit, including "Sweet Marie," "The Fatal Wedding," "Two Little Girls in Blue" and "O, Promise Me." There were 43 titles in all.

Next we come to Len Spencer:

Mr. Spencer has a sympathetic, well-cultivated voice, which he uses with good taste and unusual skill. Being also possessed of considerable ability as a comedian, he renders the best of the comic songs in a manner both humorous and original. No one does these things quite as Spencer does. . . . During the past year his vocal powers have been taxed to the utmost to meet the great demand for his songs, and it has been difficult to procure them.

Among Spencer's 24 cylinders it is interesting to notice "Turkey in de Straw," later associated exclusively with Billy Golden.

Now J. W. Myers, complete with walrus mustache:

Mr. Myers is a popular baritone, has a sweet voice, and our latest records from him show much improvement in practice before the Phonograph that they easily rank with the best made. We have heard few better vocal records than are contained in the following list. . . . Words distinct at all times, even when spoken the most rapidly.

Myers' list ran to 40 records, including "The Bowery Grenadiers," "The Land League Band," "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," "Nellie and May, Sisters Were They" and "Two Little Girls in Blue."

Page 14 is devoted to George W. Johnson "in his two great specialties":

Up to date, over 25,000 records of these two songs have been made by this artist, and the orders for them seem to increase instead of diminish. Mr. Johnson's laugh is simply irresistible. Whole audiences are convulsed by simply hearing these songs reproduced. No exhibition box is complete without these two records.

"As old-timers have probably guessed, Johnson's "specialties" were his "Laughing Song" and "Whistling Coon."

All the artists so far mentioned are familiar to collectors specializing in records of the 1890's and 1900's. But now we come to one of whom I know nothing. He is Charles A. Asbury, and his nine records of the "coon" variety were made with banjo accompaniment:

Mr. Asbury's work is full of ginger, and is always pleasing, his songs being rendered in the good old plantation negro style. His execution on the banjo is simply marvelous.

On page 16 is an item that will bring a half-sad smile to the face of friends of the late John Bieling. Here we have "Selections by the Manhansett Quartet," of which Mr. Bieling was first tenor, as was related in a HOBBIES article in July, 1942. Other members were George Gaskin, second tenor; Joe Riley, baritone, and Jim Cherry or Walter Snow, bass:

The Manhansetts were probably the first quartet to sing to the Phonograph, and still the demand for their work continues. Their pleasing melodies have been listened to by thousands of delighted hearers. These are the only satisfactory quartet records before the public. All very loud and brilliant.

The nine Manhansett titles included the time-honored "Cornfield Medley"!

Minstrel records were by Spencer, Williams and Quinn. Two of these are still familiar names, but Billy Williams (not to be confused with the later English music hall comedian or the present-day Negro crooner) is completely forgotten:

These gentlemen have together produced a most decided novelty in their new minstrel records. Spencer & Quinn are well known to all users of the Phonograph. . . . They are ably assisted by Mr. Billy Williams, the aged-negro delineator and comedian, as well as by Geo. W. Johnson in his inimitable laughing specialty.

Each record contains a complete minstrel first part, embracing overture with bones and tambourine accompaniment, several jokes and witty sayings, interspersed with laughter and applause by the audience, and finishing either with some comic negro song or story by Spencer, or a pathetic song by Quinn or Williams. Wherever reproduced these records have made an instantaneous hit. They have been arranged in a series of six records . . .

Coming next to the instrumental section, we find "Selections by Issler's Orchestra," and the note: "This organization, under the direction of Mr. Edward Issler, is composed of prominent soloists and musicians, such as Schweinfest, Dana, and others. . . . No musical records made by any individual or organization have as large or as general a sale as the cylinders by Issler's Orchestra. . . . Long use does not dim the record, the cylinders being deeply engraved for hard wear." There were 72 of them.

Next, humorous talking records which, as might be expected, were made by the greatly gifted Russell Hunting:

These records have met with an enormous sale, owing to their originality and mirth provoking qualities. They give universal satisfaction and are without doubt the best talking records on the market.

Hunting was represented by 11 of his famous "Casey" character sketches.

There were five cylinders by Voss' First Regiment Band; eight by Holding's Military Band; and 18 by Gilmore's Band. For instrumental solos, the buyers of New Jersey cylinders could take their choice of 11 cornet renditions by David B. Dana, ten piccolo offerings by George Schweinfest, and seven clarinet solos by William Tuson. And that was the extent of the United States Company's recorded repertoire.

Now let's move up a couple of years to 1896, when Russell Hunting, the "Casey" monologist, became editor of a talking machine trade paper, The Phonoscope. During a visit to the Congressional Library in Washington, D. C., I made some notes from this publication which Hunting edited until he went to England in 1899.

The November 1896 issue, contained a photo and biographical sketch of Len Spencer, who always managed to look something like Beethoven. The article said that Len was under exclusive contract to the U. S. Phonograph Company "at a fat salary," and also mentioned that when Issler's Orchestra played "descriptive specialties," the ingenious Mr. Spencer manipulated the castanets, clogs and tambourines. He and a noted comedian, John P. Hogan, were then appearing in vaudeville in a sketch, "Our Sunny Southern Home."

The same issue contained an advertisement of the Chicago Talking Machine Company, 107-9 Madison Street, Chicago, which for 30 days only was offering 50,000 cylinder records at $5 a dozen. Artists included: Quinn, Gaskin, Golden, Herbert Holcombe, Edward M. Favor, and others. The ad. said: "Dan W. Quinn has been here again, making another 10,000 records."

Russell Hunting had his own business at 45 Clinton Place, New York, and advertised his series of "Casey" and "Hiram Wilkins" records. He said he had had more than six years experience manufacturing his own cylinders, with over 50,000 already made, and added: "Certain unprincipled individuals and organizations are duplicating my work, thereby deceiving the public and furnishing a record about one-third as loud as the original."

There was a mention of a cylinder by Mrs. Ulysses S. Grant and her children being played for the Chinese statesman, Li Hung Chang; also an advertisement of "the latest model Gramophone" and a statement that at least five thousand cylinder records were being used in the McKinley-Bryan presidential campaign. One of the latest popular songs was "Mary Black From Hackensack," by Lew Dockstader.

Someone had reported George Gaskin was dead but The Phonoscope said he was still living and devoting about one-third of his time to recording. He had been singing for the Chicago Talking Machine Company while under exclusive contract to Leeds and Walcott, and had been in trouble about this but had cleared it up.

J. W. Myers was operating his own company, the Globe Phonograph Record Company, making his own records, which he sold for $1 each. He claimed the largest repertoire of any American singer. (I have a dubbing of his Globe record of "The Man in the Moon is a Lady." Just as Myers finishes singing, someone yells "You're a liar!")

Editor Hunting jokingly remarked there was no funnier sight on earth than 200-pound Len Spencer singing the pathetic sob-song, "Wait, Mr. Postman, Wait!" and grimacing in disgust as he sang.

The issue for January-February, 1897, mentioned that Yvette Guilbert, while traveling in the United States, sent records to her mother, describing her trip. Russell Hunting was managing the Universal Phonograph Company, and offering "high class original records" by Quinn, Allen May, Hunting, Gaskin, Lottie Gilson, the Diamond Quartet and Speneer. Another ad. said Berliner discs were "an indestructible record made of hard rubber."

In March it was announced that the irrepressible George Gaskin, a native of Belfast, was going to pay a visit to his native North Ireland, saying he felt the urge to spend some of his phonograph profits. There was a mention of Thomas A. Edison's taking a phonograph to the office of the Scientific American in December, 1877, and playing a record that said: "Good morning. How do you do? How do you like the phonograph?"

The record lists for March, 1897, were arranged by artists but without any indication of the recording company. They included Myers, Hunting, Columbia Orchestra, Diamond and Curry (banjo duettists), the Aeolian Trio, Quinn, Myers, Spencer, Sousa's Band, Charles P. Lowe (xylophone), Yvette Guilbert (singing "I Wants Yer, Ma Honey," in both French and English versions), Issler's Orchestra, Schweinfest, Gaskin, Vess L. Ossman (banjo), Paine (whoever that may have been), Pete Le Maire, G. W. John, Signor Fregoli, Sarah Bernhardt ("Passage dans Izeil" and Victor Hugo's "Un Pende Musique"), Madame Regane ("Passage dans 'Divorcon'"), D. Wormser (a zither player who popped up in a record lists for many years afterwards), and J. T. Kelly, comedian known on the stage as "The Rolling Mill Man." Both Lottie Gilson and Len Spencer recorded "You're Not the Only Pebble on the Beach."

Berliner Gramophone artists for the month were Quinn, Gaskin, Stephen Clement (banjo), Golden, Maurice Farkoa, Maud Foster, Holcombe, Myers and George Graham, who gave a recitation, "What is the Gramophone?" A lot of people who listened to the Gramophone's rasping, grindstone-like reproduction probably would have been glad to record an answer!

In April 1897, the break-up of the U. S. Company became apparent. George Schweinfest, who had been playing with Issler's Orchestra, had moved on to Columbia, J. J. Fisher was announced as a new Eastern recording baritone.

The May issue contained an anecdote about a piano falling on Len Spencer in the Columbia studio. Len decided to move the piano, elevated on a platform about four feet above the floor, and what followed probably was classical: "The piano objected and unceremoniously flopped over on Leonard, using him as the filling of a sandwich with floor and piano sides. I am glad to say that with the exception of a few external bumps, Leonard is 'up and around,' feeling as well as ever."

The truly great Mr. Spencer advertised that he was no longer identified with the U. S. Phonograph Company but was now exclusive to Columbia.

In July, a phonograph exhibitor from Portland, Oregon, wrote a letter asking George Gaskin to sing two verses "and sometimes a refrain" on each cylinder, "and the phonograph men all over the country will rise up and call you blessed." The editor suggested that Gaskin, in turning out his own private records, might get better results if he didn't confine himself to using light colored blanks. There were mentions of duets by Spencer and Roger Harding.

In the combined August-September issue, editor Hunting roughly observed: "If you come to New York to see the sights don't fail to see the expression on Len's face when he shifts from 'A Hot Time in the Old Town' to 'Goosey, Goosey Gander.'" Gaskin was in his native Belfast, singing popular songs with great success, and Roger Harding was specializing in making cylinders for children—"Who Killed Cock Robin?" "Little Red Riding Hood," etc., and was reported very successful in this pioneer anticipation of the present-day "kidisks." Gaskin's return from Ireland was announced in October.

Another combined issue was that of (Continued on page 45)

This name had been suggested to him by a friend who greatly admired Scott's "Lady of the Lake". Why did he escape from that life which seemingly had him branded? He had taught himself, with the help of a kind-hearted white woman, to read and write, and he recognized his capabilities. The world must know! Soon it began to get this knowledge. Somewhere, somehow, with money earned by blacking boots, he had bought his first book, "The Columbian Orator".

And here is coupled on the next link, encircling the date 1841 and labeled Nantucket, Mass. At this town in August of that year, he made an extempore speech which led to his being appointed an agent of the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society. Throughout the New England and Middle States he delivered many speeches against slavery. A few years later he published an autobiography, and started at Rochester "Frederick Douglas' Paper", a weekly abolition newspaper.

The succeeding link shows 1863 and encircling this "1864-'65 Mass. Regiment." He was among those who advocated the hiring of negro troops by the United States government. Whether he, himself, served in this regiment the writer has been unable to learn.

The next recorded link chapter is "1872, Elector at Large". This was not his first political office, for the previous year he had been Secretary of the Commission to Santo Domingo.

Then, "1877 U.S. Marshall for District of Columbia" is seen in the next part of his life story.

The succeeding link states, "1889-91 U.S. Minister to Haiti". If space permitted there could be an extended chain, for his life, in reality, was a continuous list of opportunities turned into achievements.

The final link, which forms the crown of the spoon is a broken link stating "1895, Died, Washington". His name in full is on the crown of the reverse side, where the stem corresponds to the links just described (only that here they are not labeled, but are entwined with a floral design which ends in a wreath at the crown).

Back to the bowl we go for a final look at the portrait. If there is an "art to read the mind's construction in the face", we see in this face serenity and integrity. We see the firm-set lines of determination, but we see the softer, deeper expression of understanding and sympathy. We see the penetrating eyes that fathom a world beyond that into which the unkind hand of Fate had placed him.

yond the Gates of Paradise," L9460; and "The Prince of Peace," L9461.

The fortunate possessor of these extremely rare records comments: "The announcement is done by a female voice of clear and rich but somewhat childish timbre. The voice of Miss Mann is exceedingly rich and well handled, as is evident even on these ancients. The discs reproduce, I should judge, as well as they ever did. Piano accompaniments, very simple, but competent." In all probability the announcements were made by Miss Mann herself, and the "childish" quality comes from playing the records at the present-day 78 speed, instead of the 70 or so at which they were recorded.

As far as I know, none of Estella Mann's solo cylinders have turned up. But Allen Debus, a Glenview, Illinois collector, recently sent me a dubbing of an Edison cylinder of "The Flowers that Bloom in the Spring," by the Lyric Trio, consisting of Miss Mann, John Havens and William F. Hooley. At this writing Mr. Kishpaugh is planning to have dubbings made of the Zon-o-phones to send to Miss Mann's brother, William J. Mann of Evansville, Indiana.

The February issue also mentioned that Edison was opening a New York office, and the editor commented it was to be hoped this would mean an end to the inventor's poor business methods, which had made it necessary to "go past a wilderness of meat markets and similar places in West Orange before you could find where to buy a phonograph and some records." The selling methods of Edison's phonograph division continued to be criticized for the 30 years that it remained in business.

In March it was announced that Harding had been ill but had recovered. (He died in 1901). There was also a mention of a "quartet provided by one voice." Leon F. Douglas of Chicago was making recordings of the voice of "Silas Leachman, 'the 24th Ward Politician,' who was described as the fortunate possessor of a voice ranging from bass to first tenor, 'and he has made a number of quartet records. The singer puts on the cylinder first whatever part he finds easiest for him to sing, then sings second, third and fourth parts.'" Leachman was the precursor of Patti Paige and other "moderns" who dub in more than one voice on a record.

Photos of famous artists who made Bettini cylinders were shown on pages 10 and 11 of the June 1898 issue. They included Miss Lizzie B. Raymond; Miss Dora Valesca Becker; the mysterious "Lady X" (photographed with her back turned); Miss Gertrude Silva; Mlle. Lora; Henri Marteau; Emilio de Gogorza; Yvette Guilbert; Signor Campanari; Signor Alberto de Bassoni; Miss Marie Engle; Hans Kronold, the famous 'cellist'; Signor Tomaso Salvini; Mme. (Rosa) Chalia; Sarah Bernhardt; Signor L. Fregoli; Mme. Clementine de Vere Sapio; Signor Dante Del Papa; Mlle. L. de Brelor; Pol Plancon; Mme. Torriani; Mme. Bejane; Mme. Strakosch, and Mme. F. Saville—the latter apparently the light opera singer, Florence Saville. There was also a

(Continued on page 56)

SILVER FOR SALE

Sterling Souvenir Spoons $1.50 ea. up. tax inc. Assortment sent on approval. State seal spoons, $2. Foreign and enamel spoons, $2.50 to $10.00—Schwarz, 1806 Chestnut St., Philadelphia 3, Penna. d120882

ENGLISH TOAST RACK By R. & S. Hennell, c. 1804. Correspondence solicited.—Frederick T. Widmer, Jeweler, 31 West Street, Boston, Mass. (Est. 1844) LIBerty 2-3917 jly124431

FLATWARE: For active, inactive, and obsolete patterns in sterling silver, write us your needs. Prompt replies. We also have on hand a fine assortment of sterling, Sheffield, and silver plated silverware.—Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia 3, Pa. my120652

STERLING SOUVENIR SPOONS, $1.50 each, tax incl. Foreign & enamel spoons, $2.50 to $10 each, tax incl. We ship on approval.—Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia 3, Penn. my126581

EISENHOWER SOUVENIR SPOON. Sterling-Enamel. Presidents campaign portrait in the bowl and U.S. Flag on handle beautifully done in colors on enamel. $5.50 only. postage prepaid.—Albert H. Oechsle, Dept. H. 1., Jefferson City, Mo. au60211

ANTIQUE SHEFFIELD Condiment Set. Contains 7 matching fine cut bottles. Stand has rococo border, and is footed. Circa 1830. 9 1/4" diameter, 8" high $90.00.—Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia 3, Pa. ap1652

SIX diff. enamelled Spanish Provinces shield spoons $9 pp. Free premium souvenir spoon with order. Bank Draft to—E. Serrano-Mesa, Plaza Marina Espanola 6, Madrid, Spain. my3234

COLLECTING TEASPOONS? Our 7 best known Presidents in full size Original Rogers Silverplated Teaspoons. Example: Lincoln spoon has his modeled bust, raised letters show he was the 16th Pres., years in office - 1861 - to 1865, and his full name. In the bowl is part of his Gettysburg Address. The others made the same - a raised picture associated with each Pres. in the bowl. Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, Grant, Theo. and Franklin D. Roosevelt. $1.00 each ppd. Available only from Don Parker Silversmithing, Cheshire 8, Conn. my34531

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 29)

November-December, 1897. There was an ad. of the Norcross Phonograph Company, I. W. ("Ike") Norcross, Jr., manager, in the New Zealand Building at Broadway and 37th Street, New York. The Excelsior Phonograph Company had bought Roger Harding's plant at 18 East 22nd Street and retained him as general manager.

The February 1898 number, contained a long write-up of Estella Louise Mann, who was operating her own Lyric Phonograph Company, but this has already been quoted in an article about Miss Mann. Incidentally, the Rev. Harlan B. Kishpaugh, of Cornwallville, New York, has found five solo records by this almost legendary soprano. They surely must rank among the rarest records in the world.

Mr. Kishpaugh's records, however, are not cylinders but nine-inch Zon-o-phone discs, probably made in 1900. He has listed the numbers and titles of four, but says the fifth has been temporarily mislaid. The four are "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," No. L9223; "Rock of Ages," L9224; "Be-

MISCELLANEOUS

GOLD AND SILVER indicators. Sold on money back guarantee. Small, can be carried in your pocket. Price $30. For information write.—P. O. Box 51, Plant City, Florida. s6238

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 45)

large photo of of G. Bettini and a larger one of his private office in the Bettini Phonograph Laboratory, New York, showing the walls covered with photographs of artists. It's still something of a puzzle why so few Bettini cylinders are found. And what has become of all those pictures?

In July, the Excelsior and Musical Phonograph Company advertised records by the Excelsior Quartet (probably the Haydn in disguise); S. Holland Dudley, "the King Supreme of Record Makers"; Harding's negro songs; William F. Hooley, "the famous basso, whose records are the best in volume of any that have ever been made"; and Cal Stewart's Yankee dialect stories. This issue contained a poem by Stewart, "My Old Yaller Almanac Hangin' on the Kitchen Wall." The same number had an article on a genial gentleman, Fred-eric W. Hager, who is still living and will eventually be the subject of a Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists series. Meanwhile, I'll quote the following brief sketch, which accompanied a photo of Fred wearing a mustache:

Frederic W. Hager, the popular young bandmaster of Hager's American Military Band of New York City, was born in Susquehanna county, Pa., in 1874, and ever since he was eight years of age has played the violin. He studied under Prof. F. Hermann for several years, after which he received a term of free scholarship at the National Conservatory of America. He then studied with Carl Heuser, a prominent violinist of New York City for three years. Mr. Hager has the distinction of being the youngest bandmaster of merit in New York City, having procured a contract to furnish a band for a public park when he was but 21 years of age. This is now in its third year and promises to be very successful. Mr. Hager has recently gone into the phonograph field and is at present engaged by Messrs. Harms, Kaiser and Hagen, and the large sale of his band and violin records prove that he will be in great demand this season. Among the musicians in his phonograph and park band are: A. Bade, cornetist, Messrs. Nickell, Reiter, Mygrant and the justly renowned cornet virtuoso, John Hazel.

In July 1898, it was revealed that Len Spencer's brother, Harry, had invented for Columbia a new device for recording the female voice, which was a tough baby in those days to catch accurately. Records of "Snow Baby" from Sousa's opera, "The Bride Elect," and "On the Banks of the Wabash," both sung by Minnie Emmett, were described as "loud, clear and distinct and free from blast or screech." Steve Porter, already well known as a recording comedian was referred to as a member of the Ocean Yacht Club of Staten Island. He had his own yacht, the Chiquita, 42 feet long and with a 14-foot beam.

Pages 12 and 13 of the July issue showed "the galaxy of talent" making Columbia records: Spencer, Gas-kin, Quinn, Porter, Fisher, Johnson, William F. Denny (a native of Boston, well known in vaudeville), George P. Watson, Miss Minnie S. Emmett (from church choir and opera to talking machine), Golden, Hunting, Myers, Lowe, Sousa's Grand Concert Band, Monsieur B. Begue, Wormser, Frederick Hylands (rag-time pianist and composer) and Ossman. The article said Lowe had been making xylophone records for nine years and Ossman banjo solos equally long. Of Ossman it added: "When he was 12 he got music out of a banjo made from a peck measure. He studied under a violinist and had his first professional engagement at the age of 15. After winning the championship of the Hudson River (note by J. W.—probably by playing on the ferry boats), he settled in New York in 1878." This no doubt should be 1888, as Sylvester Louis Ossman was only ten years of age in 1878.

George Schweinfest, the ad. continued, learned to play the violin at the age of six. He had been a member of the Red Hussar Band. Cal Stewart was another Columbia artist: Tom Clark was director of the Columbia Orchestra; and Roger Harding had been long associated with Strakosch and Hess' English Opera Company, for which he was choir master, and with the Nellie McHenry Company.

That was as far as I had time to copy from The Phonoscope. The next time I'm in Washington I'll visit the Library of Congress again and try to complete the job.

DOLLOLOGY

(Continued from page 38)

riocities, from all over the world, the rarest, the tiniest, the most diminutive dwarf imaginable—Tom Thumb, 11 years old and only 25 inches high, just arrived from England!!!

Barnum's clever publicity, with the cooperation of the newspapers, brought 3,000 people the very first night of Charlie's entrance into the theatrical world. After that fame and fortune came to both, for, to add to his charm, Charlie became a perfect little imitator and never failed to bring down the house with his songs and dances.

In all the key cities along the Atlantic Coast wherever the big and the little men appeared, money rolled into their coffers. Tom's huge success encouraged Barnum to look for even broader fields. He decided to take Tom to England "to see the Queen" and made the departure a gala occasion. Ten thousand people gathered at the wharf to see them off. "Yes," said Barnum to the eager crowd, "I am obeying the orders of Her Majesty, the Queen, to bring Tom home to England." Later on he found out that it was not so easy to gain admission to the court of England and he was almost in despair long before the cherished moment arrived and they actually were ushered into the presence of the Queen.

It was on the Yorkshire, "fastest, finest packet afloat" in 1844, that Tom learned his favorite song "Life on the Ocean Wave" from an admiring crew. It took nineteen days to cross, quite an achievement in those days.

How the midget captured the hearts of the crowned heads of Europe and repeated his success in America and later toured the world with his wife is charmingly told in "Barnum Presents General Tom Thumb" by Alice Curtis Desmond.

The highlight of Tom's career was his marriage to a little lady his own size, Lavinia Warren, February 10, 1863. It probably was the biggest wedding "little old New York" ever saw, attended by such celebrities as President Lincoln and his cabinet, governors, congressmen, senators, army generals and a host of friends and admirers. Lavinia's wedding gown of tulle and satin, presented by Barnum, cost $50 a yard. Presents were showered upon them. Two thousand pieces of an eighty-pound wedding cake were distributed to friends. Lavinia kept her piece for forty-three years, long after Tommie had been gathered to his forebears. His earthly existence ended on July 15, 1883, in his forty-sixth year, and he was buried with great ceremony at Mountain Grove Cemetery, a cemetery that Barnum had helped to create, in Bridgeport, Conn. There one may see on top of a high monument the small likeness of Tom Thumb, little in stature but big in heart and brain. A glimpse of his character may be seen in a note which he wrote when he was but nine years old: "I adore my Creator and know that He is good to us all. He has given me a small body, but I believe he has not contracted my heart, nor brain, nor soul." Few people now living were among the ten thousand who attended his funeral, but he has become an American legend that never will die.

For information on Charles Sherwood Stratton I am indebted to Alice Curtis Desmond's book, "Barnum Presents General Tom Thumb." Published by MacMillan Co., New York, 1954.

***

The Dollmakers Guild is holding a Popularity Contest at the Henry Whitfield House in Guilford, Conn., from July 1st to Labor Day.

ANTIQUE AUCTION SALE

Sat., Apr. 16, 10 AM (CDT)

Armory - Goshen, Indiana

Colored Glass, China, Lamps,

Furniture, Lustre, Brass,

Copper, Primitives, Etc.

Write for complete Sale Bill

JOE KRAMER & SON

703 Emerson St. Goshen, Ind.

Not Responsible for Accidents

app

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Ed Smalle

Part 1

By OLIVER R. GRAHAM
"Guest Conductor" for JIM WALSH.

A NOTE FROM JIM WALSH.

In the thirteen years I have been writing Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists, this is the first time I have used an article by anyone other than myself. However, Oliver Graham has done such an excellent job of interviewing his friend and neighbor, Ed Smalle, and recording the comedian's colorful life story, that I am glad to present the material as he wrote it, with occasional slight changes and comments of my own. This article has Mr. Smalle's approval, and he says he thinks Oliver Graham has done a "fine and dandy" job—an opinion in which I concur.

A few months from now I expect to present the work of another "guest conductor." Tony Altamirano, a young record collector living in Montebello, California, is preparing a biography of his intimate friends, the famous Duncan Sisters, Rosetta and Vivian, which I am sure I shall have pleasure in presenting to you and which you will enjoy reading.

"Just because I could sing 'do do deo,' play the piano a little and make funny noises, my wife, our two children and I had two trips to Europe. What do you think of that?"

With these words Ed Smalle began to discuss his career in the recording, music and radio industries. "Do-do-deo" certainly paid off in a big way, for Ed made records for nearly every company of the acoustic and early electric recording eras as a vocalist in his own right, one of a duet team, as a member of a group or as an accompanist. Later, he rose to prominence as an arranger and teacher.

Edwin James Smalle (pronounced SMALLEY, but no "y", please), is the youngest of a family of five children. Son of James and Mary Smalle, Ed was born November 3, 1887, at Eustis Street, near Dudley, Roxbury, Mass. His father, a building contractor, was the only member of the family to show any traces of musical ability—and his activities were confined to a jew's harp.

However, there was to be music in the family, for when the Smalles moved to Maplewood, Mass., Ed was a boy soprano in the church choir. This was around 1900, and Ed, now about 13 years of age, began to study piano. At the prevailing rate of 35 cents per lesson, his piano teacher, Miss Mary Conway, surely earned her pay, for Ed recalls:

"Many's the time I'd say 'Mama, look at the others playing outside. How about - -' and she'd reply: 'There's nothing to stop you—AFTER you've finished your lesson!'"

So the games with the boys, and the turtles, small snakes and toads that Ed collected had to wait. But the effects weren't serious, for he learned to be a good hand in a football game—until a collision with an opposing team member caused a large cut near an eye. The cut required several stitches to close, whereupon football lost favor.

The music lessons continued for three years. By that time Ed was playing well enough to accompany one of his brothers who liked to sing popular songs. This was when Ed decided to hum along too, then to harmonize and find little musical obligations. Local clubs heard of their talent and engaged them to sing and play.

In 1902 Ed graduated from grammar school and, after a few months of high school, decided to go to work. His eldest brother was a buyer for a shoe firm, and Ed thought he'd like to learn the business. However, the music implanted by Miss Conway was beginning to bud, and Ed's musical education was continuing—from the school of hard experience, featuring observation and the questioning of teachers and musicians. Ed's favorite lunch time hang-out was the Old South Music store on Washington Street in Boston, where Joe McCarthy (who later wrote the musical score for "Rio Rita") was demonstrating songs. One day the regular pianist didn't appear, and Ed stepped in. Mr. McCarthy offered him a salary of $7 per week—an increase of $4, with the added inducement of shorter hours, when compared with the shoe clerk position. Later, McCarthy went to New York City, and Ed was out of the music business—at least temporarily.

II Ed Marries and Goes to New York.

His First Record

On September 28, 1908, in a church in Providence, R. I., Ed took for his wife Maude Ruddick of Medford, Mass. This union was blessed with two children, Edwin Jr., and Gertrude, now Mrs. Gertrude Wallace. The happy family was living in Boston when

LO! Mr. McCarthy returned, very enthusiastic about New York City. He offered Ed a job paying $26 a week if he would go there. So quite in the manner of the story book heroes of Horatio Alger Jr., the famous author of boys' stories who was born in Revere, Mass., only a few miles from Ed's birthplace, the Smalles went to New York to seek their fortune. One day in 1914 Ed and his family left by boat for the big town. Ed says:

"We arrived one dark, gloomy day and landed in lower New York City. It was in the fish market district and the street cleaners hadn't been around. You know what first impressions are. We lived in New York 27 years, and it took us the first ten years to get to like it!"

Ed's first job was teaching in Harry Von Tilzer's music publishing studios. Here he met and taught the new Von Tilzer songs to stage and recording artists, among them Al Jolson, Fanny Brice, Eddie Cantor, Fred Astaire and his sister Adele (who later married an English nobleman), the Duncan Sisters, Collins and Har-

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

BUY, SELL or trade mechanical pianos, Hurdys Gurdys, Calliopes, Band Organs, Rolls, Write—R. C. Lambert, Monticello, Iowa. d120001

WANTED: Old Model Disc or Cylinder Phonographs with outside horns. Old small disc or cylinder records, phonograph catalogs, reproducers, horns, parts, etc. Send stamp for our Wanted-for sale list.—A. Nugent, Jr., 12 North Third, Richmond, Va. je3296

WILL PAY CASH for Cylinder Phonographs and Records, Also Horn type Phonographs and anything pertaining to early phonographs. Write.—Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr. Santa Cruz, Calif. je3614

WANTED: Hand roller organs, such as concert, Chautauqua, Clarion, etc., music boxes, old phonos, coin operated preferred. Private collector.—Neumann Miller, 436 W. Colorado Blvd., Glendale 4, Calif. my3844

WANTED: Old phonographs, upright and table models. Phonograph Record Catalogues, Literature, before 1927. Old popular piano rolls. State price and condition. No bids.—D. Miller, Box 392, Long Beach, Calif. je3084

EDISON PHONO (Cylinder) 90 records, small organ. Dolls, Souv. Spoons, Fans, Hat pins, calendars, costumes. Post cards for sale. Lists 10c.—Florence Nelson, 1613 Buys, Rt. 2, Muskegon, Mich. je3004

FREE LIST of Catalogs, opera, and record oddities.—C. Haines, Box 1442, Reading, Pa. je3422

ARMSTRONG Player Piano Co. has bellows cloth, tubing, leather. New 88 note rolls, $1.00.—22 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. ap126111

FOR SALE: Electric coin operated "Electrotone" with keyboard. Reasonable.—Mrs. Isabelle Sardelli, 3720 6th St., Goodview, Winona, Minn. my1441

VIOLINS

VIOLIN, John Bapt. Schweitzer, Germany, 1813. Repaired in London, 1909, no hair in bow. American Art Guitar, three in one, American Music Co., Kansas City, Mo., Sheet Music Lesson. Both $45., each. Both pieces fine condition.—Jim Thompson, Texas Indian Museum, Waelder, Texas. my3886 lan, Henry Burr, Harry Macdonough, Ada Jones, Len Spencer, Vernon Dalhart, Gerald Macy, Dick Robertson, June Havoc, Van and Schenk, John Charles Thomas and Billy Murray. They liked to come to the studio, for Ed played piano in any key to suit the artist, and could hum the harmony.

One day in 1919 Billy Murray came to the studio to learn Harry Von Tilzer's "I Aint'en Got'en No Time to Have the Blues," and Ed sang along with him. Billy said: "I like that—and if I like it, Mr. Edison should like it!" Thereupon the two of them rehearsed a bit, and went to the Edison studio at 79 Fifth Avenue to make a trial recording. There they found a room with a piano in one corner, and in the opposite corner was a sheet of burlap with a hole ripped in it. Protruding from this hole was a horn, hung face high. Ed had to strike a note on the piano to get the proper key, and run to join Billy in the opposite corner, after which they sang unaccompanied, cheek to cheek, into the horn. In less than five minutes after the test recording was heard, they were told to report the following day for recording with full orchestration.

This represented the opening door for Ed's recording career. Besides Edison, Ed made records for Victor, Columbia, Brunswick, Domino, Cameo, Emerson, Okeh and other recording companies, in the capacity of arranger-accompanist and vocalist.

Note by Jim Walsh.—I interrupt Oliver Graham's narrative to say that although this duet, the only one Ed ever made with Billy Murray for Edison, no doubt was his first recording experience, he and Billy also sang "I Aint'en Got'en No Time To Have The Blues" for at least two other companies, Victor and Pathé, and the Victor record was issued before the Edison. The Victor, No. 18593, came out in September, 1919, coupled with "Take Me to the Land of Jazz," sung by the late Marion Harris. The supplement writer said: "Something absolutely new! You never before heard anything like 'I Aint'en Got'en No Time to Have the Blues,' by Andrew B. Sterling and Harry Von Tilzer. It is an 'eccentric' humorous number in which certain jazz effects have crept into both music and words—the sudden halting of the rhythm, the quaint rhyming, the quality of style peculiar to Billy Murray and his new teammate, Ed Smalle."

The Edison record, No. 50572, issued in October, had "I'm Not Jealous (But I Just Don't Like It)," sung by Billy Murray and Rachel Grant (Gladys Rice) on the other side. It also was dubbed on Blue Amberol Cylinder 3799. On the Pathé (22124) Billy and Ed sang two duets, "I Aint'en—" and "Oh, How She Can Sing." The Edison was the best of the three, having better recording and containing the complete song. Murray and Smalle also made "Oh, How She Can Sing" for Emerson and sang "Open Up, the Golden Gates to Dixieland," on an Aeolian-Vocalion vertical cut record. All their duet numbers were Von Tilzer songs).

The free-lance duets of Murray and Smalle extended over only a short time, for Billy became an exclusive Victor artist in 1920. In October that year their second Victor duet, "The Dardanella Blues," appeared and from that time all Murray-Smalle duets were on Victor records. Meanwhile, Ed continued to sing for any company that had the price and made both solos and duet renditions with a number of artists, more especially Vernon Dalhart in the late acoustic era and with Johnny Marvin (on Victors) after the electric process was introduced. In June, 1921, he made his debut on the Columbia list under the slightly high-faluting name of Edwin Smalle. The record, A3394, contained "Mary and John" and "Nobody's Rose." The supplement said: "Edwin Smalle, new Columbia tenor, shows on his first Columbia record just what real song hits are.")

III Origin of The Revelers.

In 1925 a quartet known as the Shannon Four was making records for Victor and other companies. When organized in 1917 the foursome consisted of Charles Hart, first tenor; Harvey Hindermeyer, second tenor; Elliott Shaw, baritone, and Wilfred Glenn (the organizer), bass. Hindermeyer was succeeded by Lewis James a year later, and in 1924 Hart dropped out, to study operatic singing in Germany. His place was taken by Franklin Baur. Previously, Ed Smalle had made arrangements for the Quixy Four, a vaudeville quartet, and Ed die King of the Victor Company heard them and liked Ed's humming and vocal tricks. The result was that late in 1925 the quartet became a quintet with Smalle as arranger and accompanist, and the name was changed to The Revelers, although the quartet continued to sing as the Shannons when recording "standard" numbers. Their initial record, the first of the jazz vocal type, was issued by Victor in November, 1925. It was 19775, "Collegiate" and "I'm Gonna Charleston Back to Charleston."

James E. Richardson, the Victor supplement writer, said:

"Ever hear high-speed dance records by a vocal male quintet? Maybe; we'll wager though, you never heard any like these two. 'Collegiate' is sung in a version unfamiliar to some of you—but we should like to hear the average player rattle a banjo as fast as these five artists vocalize. You can dance in quick time if your feet and your wits are nimble enough, or you can dance sedately in half time. Most of us listen amazed; for the only accompaniment to these voices is the piano. It is easy enough to think at moments that a whole orchestra is booming and clanging behind. These records almost form a new class of music—we might call it jazz-display choral singing."

Talk happiness. The world is sad enough without your woes.

—Orison Swett Marden

The first Revelers record was rather weakly recorded and was only moderately successful, but the second, announced in February, 1926, was a sensation. That was the month in which Victor discontinued its large monthly supplement and began to issue a four-page folder. The front page was devoted to a cartoon of five Negroes singing and playing, with the cutline, "Ask To Hear Dinah." A footnote said, "'Dinah,' is a jewel of close harmony by the Revelers. For sheer beauty, harmony and realism, no record in its class can be compared with it." The number was 19796 and the other side was "Oh, Miss Hannah." This disc launched The Revelers on a fabulously successful career.

In spite of The Revelers' success, keeping a first tenor was a hard job. After Baur left, Charles Harrison, Frank Luther and Frank Parker all sang in the organization, but not for a great length of time. Around 1927, when the time came again to find a new top tenor, the Revelers heard of a saxophone player, then appearing in the Roxy Theater, who was said to have a good voice. James Melton was the find this time. Incidentally, although the name of The Revelers appeared only on Victor records, the group performed for Columbia as the Singing Sophomores and for Brunswick as The Merry-makers.

IV Adventures Abroad

A man in a London hospital heard the recording of "Dinah" and, being a showman, knew a good thing when he heard it. He made arrangements, and soon the group, including Ed, his wife and family, embarked for England and an engagement at the Prince's Cafe on Piccadilly and at the Palladium. On the way over, an incident occurred that shows well Ed Smalle's good nature and kindness:

It seems a special performance for the benefit of the Seamen's Fund is held each trip while at sea. The Revelers were asked to perform, but one of the members was a bit out of sorts and not in the mood to entertain. Things looked gloomy, and as evening approached fog set in to make matters worse. When entertainment time came 'round, Ed Smalle was at the piano giving a performance of his own, with the ship's fog horn for company. Ed had found the horn was timed to blow every so often, so his own numbers were timed to the horn. When it sounded the performance halted and the guests applauded.

While the group was playing at the Prince's Cafe in London, the present Duke of Windsor (then the Prince of Wales) and his brother Prince Albert, and Princess Elizabeth, who were then the Duke and Duchess of York, heard the act. It wasn't long before Ed and the rest of the group were called on to give what amounted to a command performance at the Palace of St. James. Ed was at the Prince of Wales' right hand during the reception, and Fred Astaire's sister, Adele, was at the left. During

(Continued on page 28)

"Who Played Poker with Pocahontas When John Smith Went Away." One that sounds equally as good, but which I have not heard is "I Sent My Wife to the Thousand Isles" on A2021.

Occasionally there have been songs which the major companies have assigned to their highest priced talent. Perhaps the classic example of this is the "Argentines, the Portuguese, and the Greeks," which was recorded for Pathe by Jack Norworth, for Columbia by Nora Bayes, for Emerson by Eddie Cantor, and for Victor by the Duncan Sisters. A similar happening occurred with the fine ballad "A Broken Doll." Jolson did a beautiful job with this for Columbia. Another ex-Dockstader star, the great Manuel Romain recorded it for Edison, and Nora Bayes recorded it for Victor. These three readings of the same number are so good that I think collectors should strive to find a place for all of them in their collections.

Although the aforementioned Columbia supplement suggests that each Jolson record was a big seller, this is not necessarily true. Columbia sales figures are not available, but many of Jolson's pre-World War I waxings are rather uncommon. A1356 is very rare and very few of the other early numbers seem to have sold in large quantities. I am inclined to agree with Jim Walsh that Columbia backed Jolson's sides with other artists starting in 1916 to boost sales of this very expensive singer. And yet this argument hardly holds true a few years later. From the number of records turned in to Salvation Army stores and other outlets I am sure that Jolson must have been one of Columbia's biggest attractions in the 1918-22 period. Even today, when the Jolson interest is so strong, his records from these years often lie around for weeks with no one picking them up. When Gertrude Heyman and Al McRea (HOBBIES advertisers) list Jolson items at fifty cents they almost always are Columbia records of post World War I vintage.

All things considered, many of Jolson's most important sides come from his association with Columbia. When he left that company the competition with radio was already beginning to cut deeply into record sales and Columbia was already in bad financial straits. It appears that his 1923 releases are much more uncommon than those of a year or two earlier. In any case he switched to Brunswick in 1924 and he made a wise move, for it is known that Brunswick was the only record company to show profit in that year. Next month I shall discuss these records.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 26)

the evening, the Prince sat on the bench with Ed and sang Cole Porter songs. Then he played the drums while Ed manipulated the piano. Ed was told then that the Prince didn't want to become King of England. In his words: "Those were some of the finest people I've ever met. You know, it takes a truly nice person to make a truly BIG person."

While in London the group also played at the Palladium, the Silver Slipper night club and at the Bath Club. Ed had the distinction of being the first American to broadcast a radio program beamed at the United States. This was on July 4, 1927, and was a 15-minute stint for N.B.C. During the visit to England, the group made many recordings for Victor's English affiliate, His-Master's Voice. Ed also made several solo records.

From London, Ed and his family flew to Paris. "Boy, was I airsick!" Ed recalls. "The only happy passenger was a gentleman who was equipped with a bottle. He was feeling fine—but he made the rest of us much worse. Gene Austin, his wife and his pet bear had already flown to Paris, and when we arrived it was November 2, Mrs. Austin's birthday. I hadn't recovered from the trip, but of course it was necessary that we celebrate the happy event, so we went out, anyway. After midnight, it was no longer Mrs. Austin's birthday, but by then it was November 3, my own birthday, and so the celebration continued. We saw Paris all night, had a hearty breakfast, and when we finally turned in at 7 a.m., I never felt better." During their stay on the Continent, Ed and his folks visited many places. "I liked Switzerland best," Ed reports, "but you had to pay attention to your daily program of activities. It would be quite warm in the valley, but if you went far into the mountains, overcoats were in order."

On returning to England, the act was again engaged at the Prince's Cafe. Ed was much pleased one night to receive a program on the margin of which was written: "So glad to see you again—even better than before." It was signed by Albert and Elizabeth, who later became King and Queen of England. Ed met several other American show folk, including Nora Bayes and Lew Leslie, as well as the French sensation, Maurice Chevalier. Today's Queen of England was a baby then, being wheeled outside Marlborough House in a carriage.

—O—

The Emperor Theophilus, who died in 842, was a great builder and lover of the arts. He once had skillful mechanics construct a gold tree over his throne and on the branches were numerous birds which were made to sing by clock-work while two gold lions at the foot of the tree joined in with roars.

Stewart Chickering Pianoforte

Mahogany and rosewood inlaid in good condition. Made at Boston, Mass. c. 1823

Write for further information

MRS. MARY E. BOYLE

14 Orchard Terrace

Leominster,

Massachusetts

FOR SALE:

myp

"A FRIEND INDEED"

That's what your collector friends will call you when they receive the gift card from us informing them that you have subscribed for HOBBIES in their name.

Each issue they receive will remind them of your friendship, because HOBBIES is a practical gift that will give them more pleasure in collecting.

Fill out the blank below and mail it with your remittance of $3.50 to HOBBIES, 1006 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago 5, Illinois.

Please send a gift subscription to:

Name .....

Address .....

My name and address is: .....

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Ed Smalle

(Continued from the May Issue)

Part 2

By OLIVER R. GRAHAM

"Guest Conductor" for JIM WALSH.

V Ed Goes Into Radio

When Ed returned to the United States, he found that radio was in the process of taking over the record business. Although he kept on making "platters," the record business was in a deep recession and radio was growing by leaps and bounds. The tenor-comedian had made records with many artists, with the Revelers' Victor version of "Dinah" being the most popular. It became apparent that the old adage, "If you can't beat 'em, join 'em" was good advice. "Deke" Aylesworth, then president of the National Broadcasting Company, heard Ed and his group and signed them for radio.

At that time, NBC had two networks—WEAF, the Red, and WJZ, the Blue. Both were at 711 Fifth Avenue, New York City, on the same floor of the same building. Ed used to do a program for Forhan's Toothpaste with Vaughn De Leath, "the first lady of radio," then step across the hall and do another for Champion Spark Plugs with Gus Haenschen and his orchestra. His friends used to wonder how he moved from station to station so quickly.

It wasn't long before Ed was swamped with radio commitments, all on major networks. On CBS he was with Phil Baker seven years (Ed Smalle's Seven G's). He did programs for Eveready Batteries, Pure Oil, Dodge Motor Cars, Silvertown Tires, Sam Lanin's Ipana Troubadours (with Dick Robertson), Whelan Drug Stores, Lucky Strike, the Roxyaires and Castoria and, with his Fur Trappers, for I. J. Fox. Besides this, he made musical arrangements for Paull-Pioneer Music, Robbins Music and others, and did records, radio and personal appearances with "Jerry" Macy, Vernon Dalhart, the Leaders Trio and the Eton Boys. It certainly kept him on the go.

In November, 1933, Variety said: "Ed Smalle's Leaders handle pops and the familiar classics in extraordinary manner, backing it up with novelty instrumental simulations that sound uncannily like the real thing. The group featured Dick Ballou, Ed Ellinson, Glen Cross, with Smalle at the piano." A little later the New York American commented: "The Leaders, NBC trio, are now making arrangements which will allow them to make a tour of all the key vaudeville cities of the South."

From the New York Post of December 16th we learn that "Ed Smalle's Leaders Trio has been signed to make a series of recordings for broadcast purposes in England, Ireland, Australia and Canada." The December 23 New York American reported: "Ed Smalle's Vagabond Glee Club has been renewed for 13 additional weeks on CBS' 7-Star Review, with Jane Froman and Erno Rapee's Orchestra." On the same day the Mirror reported, "The Leaders have been signed for a local program on Station WTIC, Hartford." Ed and his group were with Ted Lewis and his Old Gold Concert at this time, and they also joined the Travelers Hours from WTIC.

In January, 1934, the Leaders made a group of recordings for the English Recording Company, called "Americana, 1900-1934." This featured famous American songs such as "Sweet Adeline" and "Down By The Old Mill Stream." This pace continued through 1935 — programs, arrangements, vocalists, appearances, accompaniments, records and benefits. Here is a letter of thanks to Ed, dated November 22, 1935:

"Dear Mr. Smalle: As chairman of the New York Committee of the Will Rogers Memorial Fund, I want you to know how much we appreciate your cooperation with us in our broadcast of Thursday evening, November 21st. The 7 G voices were the highlight of the program and we have had no end of fine comment on the unusual and beautiful numbers they gave. Mr. Berger has told me of your fine spirit in offering this talent, and I want you to know that I personally appreciate your cooperation with him. Yours very truly, H. E. Talbott, Chairman, NYC Committee."

Also during 1935, the Frim Sisters, an Ed Smalle "find," were signed by Lucky Strike, and Ed and his group were in the film, "Radio Nuts," directed by Johnny Walker. In 1936, Ed and his choral group replaced the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra on a series of programs sponsored by a group of bankers and the CBS network. Ferde Grofe directed the 30-piece orchestra. And Ed became a poet as witness the following written July 20, 1936:

ROMANCE, 1936

Show me that life
Can surely mean
More than a deadly
Gray routine.

Break down the boredom,
Smash the bars,
Show me the pathway
To the stars.

And when the game
Becomes a bore,
Show me, young lady
Any door.

Ed and his company made several short films for Warner Brothers, with June Allyson and Betty Hutton, and at the year's end, 1936, were busy doing the vocal sound tracks for a Warner short musical feature with the Prier Sisters and David Mendoza's Orchestra.

The New York World Telegram of Saturday, January 30, 1937, tells us; "The Revelers return to old prominence. After a lapse of four polls the Revelers have climbed back into first place in the editors' estimation. The quintet won the first of these polls and hovered between second and fourth for the next four. The Revelers now have undisputed possession of first place in the editors' estimation." Nick Kenny headlined on Friday, January 31, 1936: "Ed Smalle is Talk of Radio Row."

VI End of Big Time Career

On and on . . . and then . . . New York throat. Overwork and tension found their prey; Ed was ill. He went to his summer home in Charleston, Rhode Island, to rest. Each time he tried to return to New York his affliction grew worse. "Finally," Ed says, "I had to give up. I cut all relations as cleanly as possible in the city and retired to Charleston, I thought, to die. For two years I was in bed. Medicines, doctors, specialists . . . and the money saved over the years was gone." So in 1940, Ed turned to Westerly, Rhode Island, rather than risk his health in New York again, and began teaching piano and other musical instruments.

A photo of Ed Smalle, taken during his visit to England

The results of Ed's efforts may best be found in an item from the Westerly Sun of March 26, 1946:

"Local music lovers today are still extolling the debut last Sunday of Andy DeRocco's Orchestra, a teen-age outfit that surprised and pleased nearly 200 dancers at the Calabrese Hall with their renditions of popular numbers. Although they have played at the weekly YMCA dances and at a number of weddings and parties, the Sunday appearance was their official public debut and the youngsters took it right in stride. Their well planned numbers had the throng hugging the bandstand continuously. In fact, on several occasions it had to be forced back to allow room for dancing as the interested spectators crowded onto the floor to watch the youngsters move through the numbers.

"The orchestra was organized three months ago by Ed Smalle, who has all the boys for pupils, and since then they have progressed rapidly. Smalle, who remains in the background, handling all the details, plays the piano and gives the youngsters the poise and confidence essential to a top notch band.

"Perhaps the most outstanding feature of the new group, aside from the fact that they all exhibit skill in their work, is their ages. The oldest member of the outfit, first trumpeter Arthur Guarino, is 17, while the leader, Andy DeRocco, saxophonist and clarinet virtuoso, composer and music arranger, is 16. In the rhythm section young Ronnie Gardiner, 13 years old, beats out the drums. . . . Rapidly building a musical library to meet the demands of the dancing public, the young organization features a specialty, an original composition by DeRocco called 'The Squirrel Hunters' Ball.' This is a snappy jive number that is becoming increasingly popular wherever the youngsters appear. The nine piece orchestra includes four saxophones, three trumpets, a piano, and drums. The group does not specialize in hot numbers alone, but arranges its evening's work to satisfy all dancers."

Since the foregoing "story" was written, Ed has had many new students and made many new friends. When the Westerly radio station, WERI, went on the air in 1947, Ed was on hand with a program of fun and songs each day at noon, and he still does programs from time to time.

Ed and Mrs. Smalle now live at 94 High Street, Westerly. Ed is very active with his teaching and various musical activities. Mrs. Smalle is a hook-rug enthusiast, and some of her creations prove her to be an artist of high degree.

When I asked Ed for some anecdotes of his recording career, he told me: "I lost my big scrapbook, and all I have is a few items that I put together at a later date. Of course, many things happened that are amusing when I look back, although they weren't so funny at the time. I recall Vernon Dalhart, my wife and I were making a tour through the South, and we were traveling by car. Mrs. Dalhart, who died a couple of years ago (Dalhart died September 15, 1948), was with us and she was, shall we say, on the plump side. One day, on entering the car, her foot went right through the floor boards—what a time we had! Another time I was over at Victor with the Revelers, and the recording manager, Eddie King, sent word that Paul Whiteman, recording in another studio, wanted a fellow who could sing with an English accent. The song was 'Every Street is Canal Street in Venice.' This was my first, and LAST, vocal chorus with the Whiteman Orchestra. I really don't see how they had the nerve to release it, it was that terrible. (Note by Jim Walsh—I cannot find that this record ever was issued). And at another Revelers session, on a Gershwin tune, I sang the tenor part (Jimmy Melton was ill that day), and I never heard anyone make a comment, so it must have been O. K."

VII Ed Smalle's Recordings.

It is impossible to make a complete compilation of records by Ed Smalle, for there are too many recording companies involved, too many groups and too many selections. However, in the 1928 Columbia catalog, the following electric recordings are listed:

No. 506D, "Oh Lovey, Be Mine"/Roll 'Em, Girls"; 579D "My Bundle of Love"/"Gimme a Little Kiss, Will Ya, Huh?"; 661D, "The Pump Song"/Kalinka"; 711D, "Whadda Ya Say We Get Together?"/"Cross Your Heart" (duets with Vaughn De Leath); and 686D, "Meet Me in Old Philly. Billy"/"Out in the New Mown Hay" (duets with Jerry Macy).

It is possible to give a complete list of Ed's Victor duets with the late Billy Murray, who died in August, 1954. The pair's duet association lasted for six years, their first record being issued in September, 1929, and the last in October, 1935. Only their final offering, "Dear Old Backyard Days" and "It's Just That Feeling for Home," was electrically recorded. Billy and Ed's partnership ended about the time Ed became active in the Revelers' varied undertakings. In 1927 Murray had lost so much of his popularity that Victor didn't renew his contract, and Johnny Marvin, then a rising young star, became the duet associate of both Ed Smalle and Aileen Stanley, with whom Billy had previously sung.

Here is the complete Victor Murray-Smalle list:

18593, I Ain'ten Got'en No Time to Have the Blues/Take Me to the Land of Jazz (Marion Harris); 18688, Dardanella Blues/Swanee (Peerless Quartet); 18704, I've Got the A-B-C-D Blues/Sally Green, the Village Vamp (Murray); 18810, Humpty, Dumpty/In the Old Town Hall (Murray); 18830, Ten Little Fingers and Ten Little Toes/When Francis Dances With Me (the last duet by Ada Jones and Billy Murray); 18918, Kicky-Koo/Sleepy Little Village Where the Dixie Cotton Grows; 18959, Yankee Doodle Blues/Childhood Days (American Quartet); 18982, Homesick/(You Tell Her—I Stutter (Murray); 19006, Toot, Toot, Tootsie, Goodbye/Carolina in the Morning (American Quartet); 19095, That Old Gang of Mine/Hi Le, Hi Lo; 19144, My Sweetie Went Away/I'm a Lonesome Cry Baby (Aileen Stanley); 19188, Oh! How She Lied to Me/What Do You Do Sunday, Mary? (American Quartet); 19240, Chili Bom Bom/Happy and Go Lucky in My Old Kentucky Home; 19293, What Does the Pussy Cat Mean When She Says Meow? (with animal imitations by Steve Porter)/Home in Pasadena; 19442, 'Way Out West in Kansas/Go 'Long, Mule (Vernon Dalhart); 19516, Choo-Choo/I Want to See My Tennessee; 19640, I Don't Want to Get Married/Titina (Murray); and 19748, Dear Old Back Yard Days/It's Just That Feeling for Home.

(Continued on page 26)

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. f128402

WANTED: Copy International Day School Singer by Jas. R. Murry & Wm. H. Pontius. Pub. by John Church Co. Cincinnati, Ohio. Used in Mansfield, Ohio in 1880's.—Ruth A. Ballard, 1326 South Stanislaus St., Stockton 6, Calif. je1692

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Edison, Victor and Columbia Phonographs. Hundreds of Cylinder and Disc Records, many rare, hard to find numbers. Send dime for either two or four minute cylinder, or Disc record list. All three lists for 25c.—Copernohl's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. jly3276

PHONOGRAPHS, Reproducers, records. Learn values. For $1.00 I will send you 23 pictures of valuable phonographs and amounts paid for phonographs, parts. Collector of One of the World's Largest Private Collections of Antique Phonographs.—Miller's, 1017 Westgate Road, Bay, Ohio. jlv3046

MUSIC BOXES

BIRD BOXES and cages with mechanical singing birds, whistling carved figures, and 60 different models of music boxes for jewelry or cigarettes. Unusual Christmas articles for sale. Repairs.—Sponholz, 770 Madison Ave., New York 21, N. Y. au3066

RESTORED MELODEON

Solid rosewood throughout. Nameplate inscribed Geo. A. Prince & Co., Buffalo, N. Y. $120.00 crated.

Write

H. R. RHODE

3533 N. Temple, Indianapolis, Indiana
jep

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 24)

Billy and Ed also sang the refrain in No. 19421, "It Ain't Gonna Rain No More," by the International Novelty Orchestra, combined with "The Hayseed Rag," by the Dizzy Trio. And it may be of interest as an antiquarian to note that Compton Mackenzie, the novelist who edits the English record publication, The Gramophone, in an 1924 issue pronounced "My Sweetie Went Away" to be the best comic record of the past six months. In England, the HMV company coupled it with "I've Got the 'Yes, We Have No Bananas' Blues," by Belle Baker.

As has been mentioned before many Smalle records were made for Brunswick, Domino, Cameo, Emerson, Edison and other companies as well as for Victor and Columbia, and with many groups. A great many of these records are still pleasing due to the skill and artistry shown in the arrangements. This is especially true of the Revelers' group singing.

At this point I'll include a couple of notes from Jim Walsh. Jim says that Ed made duets for Brunswick with one of the original "Radio Franks," Frank Bessinger; with Gerald Macy (Macy and Smalle called themselves "The Radio Aces"); Dick Robertson and one of the most charming of recording comediennesses, Esther Walker. On Victor he sang with Billy Murray, Johnny Marvin and Vaughn De Leath, and he and Robertson assisted Gene Austin in Austin's record of "Wedding Bells Are Breaking Up That Old Gang of Mine." An odd combination was Smalle and his Revelers associate, baritone Elliott Shaw, singing the refrain in the Victor record of "Song of Hawaii," by the Hilo Hawaiian Orchestra. As has already been said, Ed also did duets with Vaughn De Leath for Columbia, and he and Vernon Dalhart sang together for Edison, Okeh and other companies.

And Jim says he has an especially personal interest in a duet Ed made with the late Billy Jones for Okeh. A year or so ago Jim wrote a Variety article about songs inspired by automobiles. He received a letter phrased in terms of mock-heartbroken protest from Sadie Salpeter, manager of the Harry Von Tilzer Music Publishing Company, asking why he hadn't included a 1921 song, words by the late Billy Curtis and music by Von Tilzer, called "The Scandal of Little Lizzie Ford." Jim replied that he had never heard of that song and doubted it had ever been recorded. A few days later he received a box of records from Gertrude Heyman, the Brooklyn dealer in fine quality second-hand records, and was intrigued to find an Okeh sung by Jones and Smalle, with one word, "Scandal!" as the title. When he noticed that the song was credited to Billy Curtis, Jim's eager suspicions were aroused, and surely enough the number turned out to be "The Scandal of Little Lizzie Ford," of which Jim had thought no record had been made. It's a fine comic song but he's still wondering why the title was so stringently shortened and why Harry Von Tilzer wasn't credited on the label with writing the music!

VIII Summing Up.

In closing, perhaps it will be well to forward the message that Ed sent to modern male voice ensembles in 1936, for it is as true now as then, and is pertinent in the light of current interest in group singing:

"Decide upon one fellow to be your director. . . . Let him make decisions and be responsible for your group. If you do this and all work together, your progress will be much faster and happier. Practice difficult phrases repeatedly until they seem easy for you. Use the piano for learning your parts and sing without it as soon as possible in order to train your independence and blend. . . . Sing with your easiest tone and your voice will stay in tune and not tire quickly. If you will always try to be happy and friendly with each other and will sing for the love of singing, you will create a sincerity and enthusiasm for your work that will thrill your audience."

Ed has followed his own advice in his recordings and in his current work and every-day life. He is indeed a happy and friendly man. Seek out, listen to and enjoy some of his many recordings. They are a very worth while addition to any collection.

RECORDS FOR SALE

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: Collector's items to just good listening. Operatic, historical, and personality discs featured. Your wants located, if possible. Collections bought.—Record Collectors Service, 530 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. je66501

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. my120061

RECORD COLLECTORS: Never before so much for so little, as a member of the only world wide, non-profit records collectors' club. Free details. Write Mrs. Ruby Collings, Sec., International Record Collectors Society, Inc., 1227 North Jackson Avenue, Fresno, Calif. je3046

FOR SALE: Records, Collectors Items Opera, Theatricals, Ballads, Popular Jazz Speeches of Famous Men and Women. Special wants are requested. Free lists.—Cath. V. O'Brien, P. O. Box 278, Richboro, Pa. d126581

CYLINDER RECORDS for sale, large stock to select from, only records that are in good condition are offered for sale. Cylinder Phonographs and Horn type disc Phonographs for sale. Also parts, horns, reproducers, recorders, and catalogs. Send stamp for lists.—Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Santa Cruz, Calif. je3257

Auction Sales: Rare and cut-out vocal (G. & T., Zonophone, Polydor) and instrumental records. Free lists.—Arthur May, 85 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn 26, N. Y. mh120042

THOUSANDS of rare collectors' items on hand. Send me your wants on any type of 78 RPM records. New ones in daily.—Box 182, Westville, N. J. au3614

FIFTY YEARS of recording: All your favorites on all labels - Monarch, Zonophone, Columbia, Etc. Send for free "Pops" lists.—Gertrude Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. au3696

WE SPEAK WITH AUTHORITY— We have lived through the rise and fall, and rise again, of the phonograph industry. From a peak of $50 million at the beginning of first world war; down to near extinction in the early 1920's; to now when it is enjoying levels of hundreds of millions. What has withstood the test of time with its depressions and uncertainties, yet held its uncompromising position? YES, the value and collecting interest of the rare old records of the great singers of the past since 1896. Those God-made recorded voices today are still matchless, notwithstanding their crude old method of recording, and which at best recorded only about 50% of their greatness. These records stand like "THE ROCK OF GIBRALTER," a challenge to all for all time. Even the most brilliant recorded voices of today, with all the aid given by modern scientific equipment, fall short of comparison. Such recordings are not the absolute authentic voices of the singers themselves, but ones embellished to suit the commercial fancy. Prove it to yourself, by playing the recordings, and then hear the singer in person.

The price-cuts of record manufacturers of today, will never effect the price and value of rare old vintage records, some of which are worth their weight in gold. Their values will keep on augmenting with time.

We have these appetizing morsels of recorded gems, each with its individual rarity of flavor and brilliance, so magnetic to the ears and eyes. We welcome your friendship and patronage.—Record Treasures, 740 E. 183rd St., New York 57, N. Y. jly30614

VERY LARGE COLLECTION of classical records. Hundreds of rarities mostly foreign and also domestic prewar issues. No reasonable offer refused. Must move to country. Lack of space forces reduction. No lists available.—M. J. Epstein, 242 Lexington Ave., New York 16, N. Y. je1615

EDISON, COLUMBIA cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 44 Church St., Norwich, Conn. je3084

RARE Operatic vocal records; send for free mail auction lists.—Robert J. Nathan, 5480 Broadway, New York 63, N. Y. au3084

FOR SALE: Operatic vocal records. Stamp for list.—J. Smith, 2804 Oak St., Jacksonville, Fla. jly3652

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs.—Ted's Second Hand Store, 1128 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia 23, Pa. au3633

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122511

FREE Al Jolson catalog. Arg. - Box 341 - Cooper Station - New York City. mh12046

FREE Bing Crosby catalog. Arg. - Box 341 - Cooper Station - New York City. mh12046

DISPOSING AT BARGAIN PRICES, collection of 5000 Rare old records, Opera stars of the golden age, Early jazz, and popular, Catalogues and Books - 7" Berliner, 7" Columbia records $1.00 each. No lists, please send wants.—Pollards 4109 Soquel Dr., Santa Cruz, Calif. je3656

RECORD Rare classic vocals, collector items. Send your wants.—Record & Hobby Shop, J. Jurgel, 4136 W. North Ave., Chicago, 39, Ill. je3253

COLLECTORS TIRED of run-of-the-mill lists, send for free list of Unusual vocal operatic records. Golden age, Prewar electrical, G&T's, Fonotopias, Zonophones, Pathes Hill & Dale, Etc.—Collector's Haven, 1131 Bergen Street, Brooklyn 16, New York jly3215

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Silas F. Leachman

By JIM WALSH

I hope HOBBIES readers will not weary of my recurring examples of the way in which chance or coincidence aid my quests for information about the pioneer recording artists after more ordinary research methods have failed.

A good example of the potent effects of chance may be found in my experience tracking down details of the life and career of the late Silas F. Leachman, once known as "The King of Coon Shouters." Leachman was one of the earliest recording artists. Sixty years ago he was near the peak of his popularity. Ten years later his career had ended, and he became a shadowy figure about whom almost nothing was known. For more than twenty years I tried unsuccessfully to acquire more than a smattering of knowledge about him. Then, a few months ago, a "feature story" published in the sports section of the Rounoke, Va., World-News led to the facts I sought and made it possible to write this article.

I am constantly aware of an element of romance in the research which I must do to compile my HOBBIES material, and I am so much engrossed—almost obsessed—with the desire to compose an adequate biographical sketch of every pioneer recording artist that I hope eventually to find time to write a "back log" of articles that will be published far into the future, perhaps even for many years after my death. Just now I am investigating promising "leads" that may result in a biography of Columbia's stellar baritone of 50 years ago, the mysterious George Alexander. Perhaps some day I shall even be able to tell the stories of such forgotten, forgotten old-timers as Minnie Emmett, Marguerite Newton, Mina Hickman, A. D. Madeira, John Terrell, Franklyn Wallace and the better remembered German yodler (believed to have been Marguerite Newton's husband), George P. Watson. My research cuts deeply into my time and takes much of my income, but I love it.

II Preliminary Search

Although I have been collecting information about recording artists since I was six or seven years of age, I had never heard of Silas Leachman until I read a reminiscent article by a noted record collector and music critic, the late Henry S. Gerstle. Describing the pleasure his family received from its first phonograph, Gerstle wrote in the October, 1927, issue of the long gone Phonograph Monthly Review:

"We had a lot of fun out of Arthur Collins singing 'Mr. Dooley,' Silas Leachman ('the King of Coon Singers'), the sweet-voiced Harry Macdonough, Billy Murray in a dialect song, Corinne Morgan singing 'Toyland,' Cal Stewart as 'Uncle Josh,' and the inimitable Hayden Quartet in their vaudeville specialties. And we really got a kick out of some of the records of Sousa's and Pryor's Bands."

All the names in that paragraph were familiar to me except Leachman's. Gerstle's mention of "the King of Coon Singers" mystified me and whetted my desire for more information. The next time I saw Leachman's name was when I bought some old bound volumes of the English Talking Machine News. In this issue for October, 1905, I read a letter from Linzey A. Willcox of Newcastle-on-Tyne, perhaps the leading phonograph enthusiast of his day. (I wonder if he is still living at an advanced age). Mr. Willcox wrote:

"A little while ago I mentioned . . . that I had a record collection comprising records from a very early date to the present day gold moulded ones. Among the former I have a record which, I believe, I am not wrong in saying is a Columbia. The announcement on it is as follows: 'I'll

FAMOUS RECORDS OF THE PAST

2060 First Ave., New York 29, N. Y.

JACK L. CAIDIN

Re-issues and re-recordings of rare and unusual phonograph records.

Operatic; Theatrical; Political; Instrumental

The finest in quality and true reproduction.

Ten inch long playing records ea. $3.98 Tax Paid.

Shipping charges collect.

First three releases ready soon.

Send for bulletins.

my65c

Antique

MUSIC BOXES

Choice Swiss & Disc boxes for sale - from the smallest (1½") to the largest 9" Expert repairing & rebuilding - original factory methods and materials, all guaranteed.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. Pelham 8-1506 Pelham, N. Y.

(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825.) tfo

Marry the Man I Love,' sung by Silas Leachman of Chicago.

"I understand that this gentleman used to live all alone in a hut on the railway side not far from Chicago, and that the Columbia Phonograph Company supplied him with blanks to make records for them and that he used to sing and play his own accompaniments. I believe that musically his records were not a success, but for clearness of words they 'took on' tremendously. The record I have is clearness itself as regards the words, but the accompaniment, although evidently a piano, might easily be mistaken for a banjo. Mr. Leachman also used to make records of this last-named instrument, but I have never come across any of them.

"My record was given me by a friend who had it in his possession for ten years, and the man who gave it to him had had it a considerable time previously, I believe about two years . . . I should almost think that the record . . . is one of the oldest wax records in existence; if not, I should like to hear of an older. . ."

Mention of "I'll Marry the Man I Love" probably being a Columbia record caused me to write to my dear friend, the late Frank Dorian, for years assistant to the president of the Columbia Company. Mr. Dorian who had been associated with Columbia from its early days in Washington, was a man of great good nature and bore patiently all the inquiries I showered upon him. But he knew little of Leachman.

"Silas Leachman," Frank Dorian wrote, "was a local Chicago singer whose records were quite popular for a few years. He was not much of a musician, but he had an agreeable voice and a pleasing way of singing." (Note the similarity of the Dorian and Willcox appraisal of Leachman's musical abilities).

In another letter, Mr. Dorian said he didn't think Leachman recorded for Columbia or Edison, but confined his cylinder making to "brown waxes," which the Talking Machine Company of Chicago marketed during the

LLOYD G. KELLEY
Successor to

MUSIC BOX COMPANY
P. O. Box 355

Hanover, Massachusetts

Christmas tunes for the 15 1/4" Regina music box at $2.50 each Still Night, Holy Night, O Santissima, Adoro Fideles, White Christmas, Jingle Bells, Noel, Hark, The Herald Angels Sing, Santa Claus is Coming to Town, Come Hither Ye Children, O Tannenbaum.

We manufacture 200 other tunes for the 15 1/4" Regina, tune list furnished on request.

We have for sale also many fine disc type music boxes ranging in size from 8" diameter discs to 27" diameter discs. We also have a large assortment of Swiss music boxes from one and 2 tune musical numbers to large table music boxes with extra cylinders playing as many as 72 tunes.

We also have a catalogue on how music boxes we manufacture such as our dancing dolls, dolls in picture frame and under domes and our new and latest item is a six door musical cigarette box.

JIM WALSH WANTS TO BUY

Old phonograph record catalogs and supplements (mostly prior to 1915); back copies of phonograph publications and all sorts of reference material dealing with the history and development of sound recording that will provide background information for Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Please do not send me lists of records for sale. I am not interested in buying phonographs and records by mail and do not want "The Victor Book of the Opera." Do not submit material without being instructed by me. I will not pay for or return unsolicited items. If I do not reply I already have the material you offer. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. Address:

JIM WALSH
Box 446 Vinton, Va. tfr

MUSICAL MUSEUM Deansboro, N. Y.

Visitors are invited to play our restored musical antiques.

OPERATED BY
THE OLD MUSIC STORE
(Please enclose stamp when writing) tfr

MONTHLY RECORD SALES

OF

RARE AND OBSOLETE VOCAL RECORDINGS by great artists of the past can be bought at YOUR OWN PRICE at our Mail Auctions. All bidders receive free of charge the selling price of each lot after the sale. Write for lists.

Single rarities and entire collections purchased for cash

DIXIE RECORD CLUB

Room F135, DuPont Bldg., Miami 32, Florida

Established 1933

tfr

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION

RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G. & T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIAUTE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla, New York tfr

WANTED

Coin operated pianos and other coin operated musical instruments. Also rolls for the above, operators' manuals and catalogs.

ED. ZELINSKY

11 Jordan Ave. San Francisco 18, Calif.

jltp

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. Works cleaned and polished, squeaks eliminated, broken tips and teeth replaced in combs, cases refinished, parts in stock and made to order.

Choice music boxes of all types for sale including machines playing up to 60 selections. Others have dancing dolls, organs, drums, bells and castanets, etc. Every item offered rebuilt like new throughout.

Rare bird boxes in enamel, gold, silver, tortoise shell, etc.

Music box organ bellows, and bellows from bird boxes, and bird in cage pieces rebuilt like new. Birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

1890's. I wrote to the late F. K. Babson, one of the Babson Brothers who founded and operated the Talking Machine Company, and he told me that Leachman was still living in Chicago. (This was in the 1930's). However, Fred Babson didn't give the comedian's address, and I didn't write to Leachman as I now wish I had done.

Mr. Babson lent me a copy of the Talking Machine Company's 1899 phonograph and record catalog, issued at the time when Leachman was most popular as a recording artist. The catalog contained a photo of Silas, who had curly hair and walrus-type mustache, and quoted his testimonial to the Polyphone, a cylinder instrument with two horns and twin reproducers:

"The Polyphone will do away with all machines made in the past, because it actually reproduces music, which other talking machines fail to do."

III Silas Leachman's Cylinders

The Babson Brothers' catalog also contained a list of more than 100 cylinders made by Leachman, under the heading: "Silas Leachman, the Record King. We handle Silas Leachman's entire output of records. His records bought elsewhere are duplicates. We claim his records are louder, clearer and more musical than any records on the market. Every record guaranteed to give you satisfaction or money refunded."

FOR SALE

Massive Coinola Orchestration

— Plays 8 instruments —

Also have other coin operated machines. Write.

MARG PAAPE
602 E. Broadway
Winona, Minnesota

The Leachman records were sold for 75 cents each - "no discount." All other records (which the Talking Machine Company bought from the Edison, Columbia and New Jersey companies, but without identifying the source in its catalog) were 50 cents each or $5 a dozen. In the cause of historical interest, I shall copy here the 1899 list of Leachman cylinders, although it's likely that only a comparatively few of these fragile, low-volumed brown wax productions still exist. (However, Allen G. Debus of Waukegan, Ill., has several, of which he has kindly sent me long-play dubbings.) The number is first given, then the title. The remarks in parenthesis are the catalog comments on the records:

053. Arrah, Go On (Irish); 063. "All Coons Look Alike to Me" (the new rag time); 074. Ambolena Snow (a great coon marching song); 0108. At the Cost of a Woman's Heart; 035. Better Than Gold (Chas. K. Harris); 09. Big Fat Coon (funniest of all); 082. Burning of Smith at Paris, Texas; 0104. Battle Cry of Freedom; 0106. Break the News to Mother; 0107. Bred in Old Kentucky; 038. Church Across the Way (with church bells); 080. Coal Black Lady; 0101. Colored Volunteers; 01. Dora Dean (great darky song); 016. Drill, Ye Terriers. Drill (with drill); 026. Deacon Went Away; 033. Down in Poverty Row; 042. Dad's the Engineer; 073. Elsie From Chelsea; 079. Every Nigger Had a Lady But Me (latest).

0110. Enjoy Yourself; 0117. Eli Green's Cakewalk; 095. Get Your Money's Worth; 06. Hear Dem Bells (with chimes); 014. He Leads the Colored Band (with drill); 021. Honey, Does You Love Your Man?; 028. Henrietta, Have You Met Her?; 051. Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight (the rage); 0111. He Certainly Was Good To Me; 0112. He's Up Against the Real Thing Now; 0118. Hannah Thomson Is My Baby's Name; 0119. How Would You Like to be the Ice Man?; 04. I'll Be True to My Honey Boy (with clog, negro hymn and sermon, makes everyone laugh); 07. I Wish They Would Do It Now; 045. It's Not the Same Old Smile; 050. I Don't Love Nobody (negro melody); 060. I'm Happy Since My Baby Came to Town; 067. Isabelle (a girl who is one of the boys).

077. I Love Her in the Same Old Way (latest); 085. I Don't Care if You Never Come Back; 087. I'll Marry the Man I Love; 0109. I Want My Lulu; 0120. If That's the Case I Want to Join the Army; 0121. I've Got Him Dead; 0122. I Love Her Just the Same; 0123. If They Only Fought With Razors in the War; 0124. I Ain't Done Dealing in Coal; 0125. If You Go This Will Bring You Back; 053. Just Behind the Times (Chas. K. Harris); 0127. Johnnie Took the One I Wanted; 019. Keep Dem Gates Wide Open; 012. Little Alabama Coon (with baby crying); 075. Lucky Jim (mock ballad); 041. My Best Girl's a New Yorker; 048. Mother Was a Lady; 056. Mother Is in the Baggage Coach Ahead.

061. My Girl is a High-Born Lady (a hot one); 064. My Black Venus; 078. Maybe Mary Didn't See New York (and maybe she did); 097. Mama's Pumpkin Colored Coon; 0128. Mr. Johnson, Don't Get Gay; 0129. Miss Maria Johnson; 05. Negro Hymn and Sermon; 076. O! Mr. Johnson, Turn Me Loose (a hot coon song); 081. Organ-Grinder's Serenade; 089. On the Banks of the Wabash; 0130. Oh, Ebenezer; 015. Pat Malone Forgot That He Was Dead; 031. Put Me Off at Buffalo (greatest of all); 034. Paradise Valley; 030. Rabbit Hash (great darky hit); 081. Rock of Ages; 010. Standing on the Corner (a dandy); 013. Strange Coons; 017. Streets of Cairo (with tom-tom); 024. She Always Dressed in Black.

062. Sweet Rosie O'Grady; 0103. Just Before the Battle, Mother; 0126.

Just One Girl; 092. Shall We Gather at the River?; 0114. She is More to be Pitied Than Censured; 0115. Stars and Stripes Forever; 0131. She Was Right; 0132. Sister Flossy's Bright Red Hair; 02. The New Bully (hottest darky song ever heard); 070. Take Back Your Gold (very popular); 071. The Little Lost Child; 088. The Wedding of the Chinese and the Coon; 098. Take Your Clothes and Go; 099. The Heroes Who Sank With the Maine; 059. There'll Come a Time (a hit); 0133. Take Back Your Coal; 011. Whoa, Dar, Mule (laughing with funny sayings).

018. Whistling Coon; 023. What Could the Poor Girl Do?; 049. Widow's Plea for Her Son; 069. Whisper Your Mother's Name (a late one); 083. Warmest Baby in the Bunch; 093. Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight?; 094. What Shall the Harvest Be?; 0100. We Are Ready; 0102. Warmest Member in the Land; 0106. When Johnny Comes Marching Home; 0113. What Did Dewey Do to Them?; 0116. Wench With a Rag-time Walk; 0134. You've Met All Comers But You Haven't Met Me, and 0135. You'll Get All That's Coming to You.

I imagine you have detected that the foregoing list contains the title of the Leachman record, "I'll Wed the Man I Love," which Linzey Willcox had owned. Apparently, Mr. Willcox was in error as to this having been a Columbia, although it seems odd that a "roller" made in Chicago should have found its way to Willcox's home town in England—a case of carrying cylinders, rather than coals, to Newcastle. Perhaps Leachman had recorded for Columbia before he became exclusive to the Talking Machine Company, but since he made his home in Chicago and Columbia's headquarters was in Washington, that appears unlikely.

It has just occurred to me to look up the publication date of "I'll Marry the Man I Love," and I find that Willcox considerably overestimated the age of his record. The song, written by Monroe H. Rosenfeld, wasn't issued as sheet music by Joseph W. Stern until 1897. Willcox wrote in 1905, so his record could have been eight years old at most. And this indicates that it was one of the series which Leachman made for the Chicago firm.

An outstanding characteristic of this list is Leachman's versatility. Although he was chiefly known as a comedian, we find him here singing old standard songs, "the new rag-time," "coon" songs, sentimental ballads, patriotic ditties of the Civil and Spanish-American wars and even, in "The Burning of Smith at Paris, Texas," (who was Smith and why was he burned?) the type of topical pseudo-hill billy composition that Vernon Dalhart was to make enormously popular on records a generation later. Perhaps he was not a trained musician, but Silas Leachman was at least a versatile singer.

Worthy of note, too, is the fact that although many of the songs Silas sang are forgotten. Others are remembered and some are still heard. And "Drill, Ye Terriers" should be "Tarriers."

IV. Leachman Sixty Years Ago

After receiving Mr. Babson's letter and catalog, my progress in learning more about Silas Leachman was discouragingly slow. Even as recently as the autumn of 1951 when I was in Chicago, I still was far from the point of writing this article. Only one family of Leachmans was listed in the city directory. When I telephoned the woman who answered seemed confused and gave the impression she had never heard of Silas. A letter to the Chicago Tribune later brought the information that there was nothing in its files concerning the comedian's life and death.

But a real "break" occurred when Harold Farnsworth of New Haven, Vt., came across an article about Leachman while reading an old copy of the Scientific American dated April 27, 1895, and in the thoughtful fashion I have found to be characteristic of Mr. Farnsworth copied it for me. The Vermont record collector didn't know I wanted to write about Leachman, but thought an account of the recording procedures of sixty years ago would interest me. It did, and I have pleasure in reproducing the article from Harold Farnsworth's notes:

A PHONOGRAPH VOICE . . .

Away out in the extreme northwestern part of the city (of Chicago), near the Milwaukee Railroad tracks, Silas Leachman puts in four or five hours every day singing at the top of his lungs, though not a soul is in hearing but his wife. When he gets tired of singing he varies the proceedings by preaching a Negro sermon or gives an imitation of an Irish wake, and altogether conducts himself in a way that would lead the neighbors to consider him a fit subject for a lunatic asylum if there were any neighbors, but there are not.

This is the reason Mr. Leachman chose the lonely spot for his residence. No one ever goes there to hear him sing, and yet he is getting rich at it. He earns something over $50 every day, though he never sees one of his auditors.

Mr. Leachman sings for phonographs, and as he has a monopoly of the business in the West, he continues to keep busy, and has even been heard to express a wish that he were twins. He has better protection in his monopoly than a copyright or an injunction or unlimited legal talent could afford. Nature gave him the peculiar qualities that enable him to reproduce his voice perfectly on the wax cylinders. Hundreds of people have attempted to break in on his profitable monopoly, but the results of their efforts put an effectual stop to their attempts. And so Mr. Leachman goes on enjoying the monopoly and reaping the profits thereof.

There are four other men in the East that also do work for the phonograph, but while they have to have a man to play the piano while they sing, another to make the announcement, another to change the cylinders, and a fourth to keep the machines in order, Mr. Leachman is the entire show in himself. Furthermore, he can give an unlimited number of impersonations while the other four men are limited to a few specialties each. Mr. Leachman is a natural mimic and therein lies the secret of his success. He sings ballads, Negro melodies and Irish, Dutch and Chinese dialect songs. He plays his own accompaniment on the piano and takes care of the machines. He prepares three

(Continued on page 58)

WANTED: All types of mechanical coin-operated musical instruments. Also, mechanical shows. Give full particulars first letter.—Walbox Distributing Co., 3909 Main, Dallas, Texas s3483

MUSIC BOXES

BIRD BOXES and cages with mechanical singing birds, whistling carved figures, and 60 different models of music boxes for jewelry or cigarettes. Unusual Christmas articles for sale. Repairs.—Sponholz, 770 Madison Ave., New York 21, N. Y. au3065

STELLA MUSIC BOX discs, 14", twelve assorted for $15. No lists.—James Riley, 44 Church Street, Norwich, Conn. s3654

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina 15½", 20¾", 27", 32"; Criterion 20½"; Mira 6¾", 9¼", 15½", 18½"; Monarch 15½"; New Century 18½"; Orphenion 16½"; Polyphon 24½"; Stella 14" 17¼"; Imperial Symphonion 13½"; Thorens 4½". State size wanted. Lists.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, New Jersey. s3867

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

EDISON, Columbia, Berliner, Victor, Standard phonographs, Diamond Disc, 7 inch cylinder records, horns, reproducers, catalogs, parts, collectors items. Bought, sold, exchanged. Stamp for detailed information.—A. Nugent, Jr., 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. d62511

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Radio Transcriptions, Airshots, V-Discs, Armed forces radio service recordings, all kinds of recordings, etc., by "Sammy Kaye," "Guy Lombardo," "Ink Spots," "Blue Barron" & "Art Kassel."—Paul Scriven 129 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. jly3065

WANTED: Radio transcriptions, airshots, armed forces radio service recordings, recordings of all kinds by "Sammy Kaye," "Guy Lombardo," "Blue Barron," "Art Kassel," "The Ink Spots."—Paul Scriven, 129 Vienna, Niles, Ohio. jly3694

WANTED: JOLSON MATERIAL.—Dick Bonesteel, 1409 McGilvra Boulevard, Seattle, Washington. je12046

WANTED: Vocal Record of Song "Every Race Has a Flag But the Coon."—Clifford R. Dew, 5148 Charles St., Maple Heights, Ohio. au3253

RECORDS FOR SALE

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: Collector's items to just good listening. Operatic, historical, and personality discs featured. Your wants located, if possible. Collections bought.—Record Collectors Service, 530 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. je66501

FOR SALE: Records, Collectors Items Opera, Theatricals, Ballads, Popular Jazz Speeches of Famous Men and Women. Special wants are requested. Free lists.—Cath. V. O'Brien, P. O. Box 278, Richboro, Pa. d126581

RECORD COLLECTORS: Never before so much for so little, as a member of the only world wide, non-profit records collectors' club. Free details. Write Mrs. Ruby Collings, Sec., International Discophiles, Incorporated, 1227 North Jackson Avenue, Fresno, Calif. s3215

CYLINDER RECORDS for sale, large stock to select from, only records that are in good condition are offered for sale. Cylinder Phonographs and Horn type disc Phonographs for sale. Also parts, horns, reproducers, recorders, and catalogs. Send stamp for lists.—Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Santa Cruz, Calif. s3257

Auction Sales: Rare and cut-out vocal (G. & T., Zonophone, Polydor) and instrumental records. Free lists.—Arthur May, 85 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn 26, N. Y. mh120042

THOUSANDS of rare collectors' items on hand. Send me your wants on any type of 78 RPM records. New ones in daily.—Box 182, Westville, N. J. au3614

FIFTY YEARS of recording: All your favorites on all labels - Monarch, Zonophone, Columbia, Etc. Send for free "Pops" lists.—Gertrude Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. au3696

EDISON, COLUMBIA cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 44 Church St., Norwich, Conn. s3084

ENTIRE COLLECTION—Three thousand and Edison Discs plus fifteen hundred duplicates, twenty Edison Long Plays all in original covers as new condition. 150 Red Seal Victors, 300 classical Victors - Record Player to play 12 Edison Discs automatically with electric Pick-Up. One William & Mary Edison console with Edison L. P. reproducer and L. P. gear, plus Edison Reproducers, Motors, catalogs, parts, etc. To highest bidder over $1,000. F. O. B. Storeroom shelves.—C. Haines, Box 1442, Reading, Pa. s30021

OPERA, Popular, cylinders, discs, vertical, lateral records. Lets hear your wants. Old catalogs wanted.—George Meiser, 506 West Douglass, Reading, Pa. s3633

THOUSANDS of Used Records, All varieties. Send wants.—Henry Kurtz, 3912 Van Buren, Culver City, Calif. s3652

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: Collectors items to just good "listening" Operatic, historical & personality discs sold. "Wants" located. We buy collections.—Record Collectors Service (c/o D. Reichman) 530 E. 88 St., New York 28, New York s3826

I HAVE A LARGE LOT of Edison Cylinder records in good condition. Price $7.00 per hundred. Also Edison Disc records $5.00 per hundred. Orders promptly filled. Shipped F. O. B. Woburn, Mass. No. C. O. D.'s Write—J. J. Keating Trading Post, Grape Street, Woburn, Massachusetts. s3276

(Continued on next page)

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

BUY, SELL or trade mechanical pianos, Hurdys Gurdys, Calliopes, Band Organs, Rolls, Write—R. C. Lambert, Monticello, Iowa. d120001

WILL PAY CASH for Cylinder Phonographs and Records, Also Horn type Phonographs and anything pertaining to early phonographs. Write.—Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr. Santa Cruz, Calif. s3614

WANTED: Hand roller organs, such as concert, Chautauqua, Clarion, etc., music boxes, old phonos, coin operated preferred. Private collector.—Neumann Miller, 436 W. Colorado Blvd., Glendale 4, Calif. au3844

ARMSTRONG Player Piano Co. has bellows cloth, tubing, leather. New 88 note rolls, $1.00.—22 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. ap126111

COINOLA Coin-operated Piano; has Flutes, Mandolin and 88-note Piano with Keyboard. This Orchestration completely rebuilt, changed to .25c play, and refinished beautiful Cactus Green. Plays and works like new $500.00 or best offer above includes 7 rolls.—J. A. Collins, 2120 Grace St., Dubuque, Iowa. jly1673

WANTED: Edison, Columbia Cylinder Phonograph Reproducers. Best prices paid.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. d6084

ON TIME

(Continued from page 33)

edge, his confidence in his judgment and his financial resources. In this fascinating pastime, one must grow from a small beginning to the high point of his desires. To my knowledge, there is no other safe way to travel.

When building up a collection, it is perhaps best if there are no preconceived ideas as to what the collection is to eventually become. If one moves along slowly and carefully, the natural interest will manifest itself in time. In my early days as a collector, I very often found myself straying far from the beaten path. In time, everything came out clearly and, from that time on, I have not been tempted to leave the straight highway. When I finally found out what I really wanted and where I was going, it was not too difficult to clear out the undesirables and the misfits and to bring the situation into focus. If you have bought carefully, you will not need to face a loss of any consequence in the weeding out process.

If I were to start all over again now as a clock collector. I am sure that I would follow along much the same lines as I did a long time ago. The first items in my collection were kitchen clocks of the 1870 to 1910 vintage. They were purchased at negligible prices. One of them, representing an investment of fifty cents, gave me my first opportunity to try my hand at repairs and restoration. I learned more from that one operation than from any single source since that time in all the years that I have been a collector. I learned then that if you can understand one clock mechanism, you can master them all. Putting that one clock into operating condition gave to me a feeling of confidence that I have never lost.

It was a simple transition from the kitchen clock to those a little better and a little better, to the point where I can confidently restrict my interest to clocks and watches that are of real antique interest and which are valued accordingly. In all of this process I have never had to charge off any sizeable amount of money to experience. In building a collection, one trades and occasionally buys and sells in such a manner that everyone gets what they want and no one is penalized in the process. The whole thing is enjoyable and instructive and, from a financial standpoint, is relatively painless.

I have not recently stressed the therapeutic value of a hobby. The fact remains, however, that a hobby, no matter what it is, will do more than medicine to counteract the effects of the stress and strain of modern living for most people.

The clocks and watches illustrated are types of interest for an average collector.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 25)

"records," as the wax cylinders are called, at one time. To do this three phonographs are placed near the piano with the horns at one side pointing away from the keyboard at an angle of 45 degrees. The horns have to be placed very carefully, for a fifth of an inch makes a great difference in the tone the cylinders will reproduce.

When the horns have been adjusted exactly right, Mr. Leachman seats himself at the piano and, turning his head away over his right shoulder, begins to sing as loud as he can, and that is pretty loud, for he is a man of powerful physique, and he has been practicing loud singing for four years. He has been doing this work until his throat has become calloused so that he no longer becomes exhausted after singing a short time. As soon as he has finished one song he slips off the wax cylinders, puts on three fresh ones without leaving his seat, and goes right on singing until a passing train compels him to stop for a short time.

In the four years he has been in the business he has made nearly 250,000 records. So great is the demand for them that he cannot fill his orders. It is such exceedingly hard work that he cannot sing more than four hours a day. He gets 35 cents for every cylinder he prepares. He has a repertoire of 420 pieces and his work is put on the market under a score of names. He has a remarkable memory, and after once hearing a song cannot only repeat the words and music correctly, but he can imitate excellently the voice and expression of the singer.

This article, which I consider one of the most interesting I have ever read about the early days of the phonograph, was reprinted in the Scientific American from the Chicago Tribune. It would be interesting to know who the "four men in the East" were. At a guess they were Len Spencer, Russell Hunting, George J. Gaskin and Dan W. Quinn, but none of these was limited in repertoire to "a few specialties." And, the truth is, there were many more than four successful record makers in the middle '90's. It is fairly obvious that Linzey Willcox had read this article and got from it the impression that Leachman lived "all alone in a hut on the railroad side not far from Chicago." It is likewise fairly clear that Leachman was recording for the Babson Brothers instead of for Columbia, and they were paying him 35 cents for the records they sold for 75 cents.

Mr. Farnsworth also copied three brief items from even older issues of the Scientific American. They have no direct association with Silas Leachman, but since they are of great antiquarian interest and I shall probably never have a better chance of quoting them, I shall reprint them now. The first is from the January 12, 1889, issue:

CURIOSITIES OF THE PHONOGRAPH . . . Subscribers to whom are rented machines can have left at their door every morning the waxy tablets known as phonograms, which can be wrapped about a cylinder and used in the phonograph. On these tablets will be impressed from the clear voice of a good talker a condensation of the best news of the day, which the subscribers can have talked back at them as they sit at their breakfast tables.

Who ever before heard of this fore-runner of the radio and tv newscast? It seems that "record" had not come into general use in 1889 as the name of the cylinder on which sound was indented. It was still a "phonogram."

On February 2, 1889, "L. O. B." wrote:

I have read a great many pieces on the new phonograph, but there is one question I cannot find an answer to, and would like to have you tell me. Will the new phonograph chronicle anything said in the room, whether the person has mouth to mouthpiece or not? Could one be in a courtroom and chronicle all said by witnesses, or in a hall where a singer or speaker was and receive song or speech?

Answer: The phonograph does not record sounds well, except such as are spoken into its mouthpiece.

"L. O. B." must have had visions of a 1955 model tape recorder. Much the same type of question was asked by "B. O. L." (the initials are those of "L. O. B." reversed, and it was probably the same person) in the April 13, 1889, number:

When the phonograph is talking can it be heard all over the room by the entire audience if the voice talked into it was loud enough, or must a person have ear to receiver in order to hear anything? Can only one hear at a time?

Answer: An ear tube is required. If several are provided, as many persons can listen as there are tubes. It cannot be heard all over the room.

However, by the time Leachman was making his records, an external horn had been devised as a supplement to the ear tubes which were still in use.

We now leave the Scientific American and move up almost a decade to March, 1898, when an intriguing item having to do with Leachman's versatility appeared in The Phonoscope. I suspect I have quoted this in another HOBBIES article, but it is brief and worth reading again:

"Silas Leachman, the 24th ward politician, is the fortunate possessor of a voice ranging from bass to first tenor, and he has made a number of quartet records in Chicago. The singer puts on the cylinder first whatever part is easiest from the song, sings the second part, then third and fourth."

(To be continued)

Your Local Museum and Library are worthy of your whole-hearted support and encouragement

Check and double check and if they have not yet subscribed to HOBBIES, a gift subscription would make an ideal remembrance of the season.

Keep in mind that HOBBIES already has a large circulation among this group, so please check first.

HOBBIES
1006 S. Michigan, Chicago

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Silas F. Leachman

Part Two

By JIM WALSH

V. Leachman as a Victor Artist

Somehow around the turn of the century, litigation or moral suasion forced the Babson Brothers out of the record making business, and their star singer, Silas Leachman, became one of the first performers to record for the infant Victor Talking Machine Company. I imagine he had previously sung for Victor's predecessor, Berliner, but have no evidence that he did. Since Victor had no Chicago recording studios, Leachman must have made special trips to Camden, and he probably sang enough numbers on each trip to make the long journey worth taking. However, his big money days as a recording artist were obviously over, since at the fees prevailing in those days ($100 each was considered "exorbitant" for Caruso's first discs!), he could not earn as much by singing for permanent masters as in the days when he made cylinders over and over for 35c each.

The February, 1902, catalog of Victor (7-inch) and Monarch (10-inch) single-faced records listed Silas Leachman as an exclusive Victor artist. All of page 27 and half of 28 was taken up with a discussion and description of the Chicago comedian's productions. Under the heading of "SILAS LEACHMAN, Negro Songs," the supplement writer (could it have been Sam Rous?) said:

Mr. Leachman's new records are superior in every way to those he has previously made for us. Could they have any better recommendation? You can't make a mistake in ordering all of them, but we wish to call special attention to 1132, "Truscalina Brown," with chimes, and 1131, "Every Nigger Has a Lady But Me," in both Victor and Monarch sizes.

New records have been made of Mr. Leachman's old list, and we want you to hear the new "Don't You Hear Dem Bells," with Chimes, and "Whoa Dar, Mule." The Laboratory Dog became interested and tried to help Leachman move the mule, adding greatly to the realistic effect.

Close your eyes and listen and you can see it all. The old nigger and his colored lady in the sleigh, with the dog barking excited encouragement at the driver's efforts to start the balky mule.

It is worth noting, as evidence of Leachman's popularity in those antediluvian days, that all his records were obtainable in both 7 and 10-inch sizes.

Following is the list of Leachman's 1902 Victors and Monarchs. Those prefixed with an asterisk were still available when the August 31, 1904, record catalog was issued. Lack of a "star" indicates the disc had joined the pathetic ranks of "cut-outs":

*788, A Big Fat Coon; *794, A Negro Hymn and Sermon; *1124, Ain't Dat a Shame?; *802, Coon, Coon, Coon; *1134, Casey's Wedding Night; *803, Don't You Hear dem Bells? (with chimes—a great record); *1122, Don't Forget to Write Me Every Day; *1131, Every Nigger Has a Lady But Me; 1121, Good Morning, Carrie; *1123, Go 'Way Back and Sit Down; 796, I Ain't Got No Happy Home to Leave; 790, I Couldn't Stand to See My Baby Lose; *795, I Don't Care if I Never Wake Up; 798, I Need The Money; *1133, 14 THE TALKING MACHINE CO.

Polyphone Testimonials.

We have received several hundred unsolicited testimonials in the last three months regarding the merits of the Polyphone. We consider the following testimonials especially strong, as they were given by the oldest and best record makers in the business. Their judgement unquestionably proves the superiority of the Polyphone over all other Talking Machines.

The Polyphone will do away with all machines made in the past because it actually reproduces music which other talking machines fail to do.

Silas F. Leachman

Leaf from the Talking Machine Co. publication wherein Silas Leachman is featured.

I'll Have to Telegraph Another Baby; 793, I'm Living Easy; 789, I've Got Money Locked Up in the Vault; 792 Just Because She Made Dem Goo-Goo Eyes; 806, Lam', Lam', Lam'; 797, Maybe Mary Didn't See New York; 799 Mr. Johnson, Turn Me Loose; 800, Mr. Johnson, Don't Get Gay; *1130, My Old Savannah Home; 1125, My Girl From Dixie; *1127, My Little Zulu Babe (Williams and Walker hit); *1123, My Lady Hottentot; 1135, My Maid From Hindostan; *1129, Quit That Tickling Me (laughing song); *804, Turkey in de Straw; 1126, The Fortune Telling Man; *1132, Truscalina Brown (with chimes a companion to 803, Don't You Hear Dem Bells?); *801, Whoa, Dar, Mule (you can almost see the old mule kick the sleigh.)

The 1904 Victor catalog contained several Leachman records made after the 1902 list was issued. They are:

1894, All Goin' Out and Nothin' Comin' In; 1857, Ambolena Snow; 1458, Bill Bailey, Won't You Please Come Home?; 1460, I Wish They'd Do It Now; 1459, Johnnie Took the One I Wanted; 1893, The Old Log Cabin in the Lane; and 1858, Tobie, I Kind'o Likes You.

All the foregoing records begin with spoken announcements by Leachman. In some he calls himself "little" or "li'l old Silas Leachman," but, as we shall see later, that reference to his diminutive size was just Silas' own private joke. Most of the discs feature a boisterous type of "coon shouting" that has now disappeared as a characteristic of American popular music.

With the issuance of his 1902-03 records, Silas Leachman's career as a professional phonograph singer ended. To have remained successful he would have had to move to the East, where Victor, Columbia, Edison and the other leading record makers were, and he apparently preferred to stay in Chicago. Perhaps the Phono-

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, California. d6407

MELODEONS FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL Restored melodeons. Expert repair service. Reasonable prices. Also buy.—C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. c3882

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: Victor Set M-235, singles 1699 (Thibaud), 4541/3 (Ugarte Sonata), 10-1026/8 (Turina Sonata), 10-1240/1 (Ital. Concerto), 6510 (Heifetz), 7650/1 (Haydn "Lark"), 9107 (Hambourg); vocals: 1118, 1241, 6554 (Cortis), 1401 (Ruffo), 1627, 7771 (Fleta), 9694 (Folgar), 1594 (McCormack), 6891 (de Maro), 6892 (Mojica), 7656 (Melchior), 6536 (Jeritza), 1144, 1167 (Galli-Curci), 1540, 7584 (Schumann-Heink), Col. 89234 (Lazaro). Also Mengelberg rehearsals. Have records for exchange or will pay cash. LCDR T. L. Clear BOQ D-1, U. S. Naval Station, Newport, R. I. au1429

WANTED: JOLSON MATERIAL.—Dick Bonesteel, 1409 McGilvra Boulevard, Seattle, Washington. je12046

WANTED: Vocal Record of Song "Every Race Has a Flag But the Coon."—Clifford R. Dew, 5148 Charles St., Maple Heights, Ohio. au3253

scope's joking reference to his being "a 24th ward politician" is an indication that he quit record making to take a Chicago political job. At any rate "J. W. B." of Beaver Meadow, Pa., asked in Edison's New Phonogram for June, 1905: What has become of Silas Leachman? The old wax records I have of this artist were made for the Chicago Talking Machine Company and are very fine." The reply was: "Silas Leachman is out of the record business and we understand that he is now in Chicago."

But although "Li'l Silas'" active recording career was over, some of his records stayed in the Victor catalog a few years longer. By January, 1908, however, only three were left—

WANTED: Radio Transcriptions, Airshots, Armed Forces radio recordings, recordings of all kinds by "Sammy Kaye," "Guy Lombardo," "Bill Kenny," "Ink Spots," "Blue Barron," "Ted Lewis."—Paul Scriven, 129 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. o3694

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

BUY, SELL or trade mechanical pianos, Hurdys Gurdys, Calliopes, Band Organs, Rolls, Write—R. C. Lambert, Monticello, Iowa. d120001

WILL PAY CASH for Cylinder Phonographs and Records, Also Horn type Phonographs and anything pertaining to early phonographs. Write.—Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr. Santa Cruz, Calif. s3614

WANTED: Hand roller organs, such as concert, Chautauqua, Clarion, etc., music boxes, old phonos,—coin operated preferred. Private collector.—Neumann Miller, 436 W. Colorado Blvd., Glendale 4, Calif. au3844

ARMSTRONG Player Piano Co. has bellows cloth, tubing, leather. New 88 note rolls, $1.00.—22 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. ap126111

WANTED: Edison, Columbia Cylinder Phonograph Reproducers. Best prices paid.—Nugent, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. d6084

WANTED: All types of mechanical coin-operated musical instruments. Also, mechanical shows. Give full particulars first letter.—Walbox Distributing Co., 3909 Main, Dallas, Texas s3483

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

EDISON, Columbia, Berliner, Victor, Standard phonographs, Diamond Disc, 7 inch cylinder records, horns, reproducers, catalogs, parts, collectors items. Bought, sold, exchanged. Stamp for detailed information.—A. Nugent, Jr., 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. d62511

FOR SALE: 1 Busy Bee Record Player with 16 cylinder type records, about 60 years old, in good condition. Record player measures 7"x7"x4½", horn 14" long. For further information, contact Mrs. Erwin Kind, 213 E. Washington Avenue, Tomahawk, Wisconsin. au1443

VICTOR Disc Phonograph with extra large horn, rare, $25.00; A few Edison Cylinder Phonographs left, Morning Glory horn, $25.00; There will be no more, 250 Cylinder Blue Amberole records, $25 per 100.—Karr Museum, Stanberry, Mo. jly1882

RECORDS FOR SALE

THOUSANDS of Used Records, All varieties. Send wants.—Henry Kurtz, 3912 Van Buren, Culver City, Calif. s3652

See Old Music Box Ads on page 29

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: Collector's items to just good listening. Operatic, historical, and personality discs featured. Your wants located, if possible. Collections bought.—Record Collectors Service, 530 East 88th St., New York 28, N. Y. je66501

FOR SALE: Records, Collectors Items Opera, Theatricals, Ballads, Popular Jazz Speeches of Famous Men and Women. Special wants are requested. Free lists.—Cath. V. O'Brien, P. O. Box 278, Richboro, Pa. d126581

RECORD COLLECTORS: Never before so much for so little, as a member of the only world wide, non-profit records collectors' club Free details Write Mrs. Ruby Collings, Sec., International Discophiles, Incorporated, 1227 North Jackson Avenue, Fresno, Calif. s3215

CYLINDER RECORDS for sale, large stock to select from, only records that are in good condition are offered for sale. Cylinder Phonographs and Horn type Disc Phonographs for sale. Also parts, horns, reproducers, recorders, and catalogs. Send stamp for lists.—Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Santa Cruz, Calif. s3257

Auction Sales: Rare and cut-out vocal (G. & T., Zonophone, Polydor) and instrumental records. Free lists.—Arthur May, 85 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn 26, N. Y. mh120042

THOUSANDS of rare collectors' items on hand. Send me your wants on any type of 78 RPM records. New ones in daily.—Box 182, Westville, N. J. au3614

FIFTY YEARS of recording: All your favorites on all labels - Monarch, Zonophone, Columbia, Etc. Send for free "Pops" lists.—Gertrude Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. au3696

EDISON, COLUMBIA cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 44 Church St., Norwich, Conn. s3084

ENTIRE COLLECTION—Three thousand and Edison Discs plus fifteen hundred duplicates, twenty Edison Long Plays all in original covers as new condition. 150 Red Seal Victors, 300 classical Victors - Record Player to play 12 Edison Discs automatically with electric Pick-Up. One William & Mary Edison console with Edison L. P. reproducer and L. P. gear, plus Edison Reproducers, Motors, catalogues, parts, etc. To highest bidder over $1,000. F. O. B. Storeroom shelves.—C. Haines, Box 1442, Reading, Pa. s30021

OPERA, Popular, cylinders, discs, vertical, lateral records. Lets hear your wants. Old catalogs wanted.—George Meiser, 606 West Douglass, Reading, Pa. s3633

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: Collectors items to just good "listening" Operatic, historical & personality discs sold. "Wants" located. We buy collections.—Record Collectors Service (c/o D. Reichman) 530 E. 88 St., New York 28, New York s3225

I HAVE A LARGE LOT of Edison Cylinder records in good condition. Price $7.00 per hundred. Also Edison Disc records $5.00 per hundred. Orders promptly filled. Shipped F. O. B. Woburn, Mass. No. C. O. D.'s Write—J. J. Keating Trading Post, Grape Street, Woburn, Massachusetts. s3276

RARE VOCAL RECORDS - Monthly mail auctions & special lists at set prices. Offering only items in good playing condition, domestic & imported. We know you will be pleased with your purchases. Free lists.—Georg Pluck, Waterloo Village, Grass Lake, Mich. o3046

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. je120061

(Continued on next page)

(Continued from preceding page)

RARE Operatic vocal records; send for free mail auction lists.—Robert J. Nathan, 5480 Broadway, New York 63, N. Y. au3084

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs.—Ted's Second Hand Store, 1128 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia 23, Pa. au3633

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—B. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122611

FREE Al Jolson catalog. Arg.—Box 341—Cooper Station—New York City. mhl2046

FREE Bing Crosby catalog. Arg.—Box 341—Cooper Station—New York City. mhl2046

COLLECTORS TIRED of run-of-the-mill lists, send for free list of Unusual vocal operatic records. Golden age, Pre-war electrical, G&T's, Fonotopias, Zonophones, Pathes Hill & Dale, Etc.—Collector's Haven, 1131 Bergen Street, Brooklyn 16, New York. o3046

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 517 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. f128402

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Edison, Victor and Columbia Phonographs. Hundreds of Cylinder and Disc Records, many rare, hard to find numbers. Send dime for either two or four minute cylinder, or Disc record list. All three lists for 25c.—Copenrol's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. o3276

PHONOGRAPHS, Reproducers, records. Learn values. For $1.00 I will send you 23 pictures of valuable phonographs and amounts paid for phonographs, parts. Collector of One of the World's Largest Private Collections of Antique Phonographs.—Miller's, 1017 Westgate Road, Troy, Ohio. o3046

SHEET MUSIC

LARGE SELECTION of Sheet Music and Folios. Send want list.—Box 932, La Grande, Oregon. au3432

BACK POPULAR Sheet Music to 1850. Catalog 15c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. ap12238

MUSIC WANTED

WANTED: Anything. Everything by Al Jolson, Cylinders, catalogs, playbills, programs, personality records.—Larry F. Kiner, P. O. Box 25208, Los Angeles 25, California. au3633

PLAYER PIANO

PLAYER PIANO FOR SALE. Box 405, Madison, Nebr. o3291

"The Curious History of Music Boxes"

By MOSORIAK & HECKERT

INCLUDING A CHAPTER ON

THE CARE AND REPAIR OF MUSIC BOXES

$5.00 Postpaid — Insured

HOBBIES BOOK DEPT.

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

"All Goin' Out," "Quit That Tickling" and "Turkey in de Straw." The first-named was discontinued in February. Then on June 1, a letter was sent to dealers giving a list of records which would be withdrawn from sale August 1, 1908. The letter explained that "the majority of these records are good sellers, and comparable with any records in the catalog, they being retired simply to make room for the new monthly records." "Quit" and "Turkey" were included in the out-out list and the name of Silas Leachman disappeared from the Victor record catalog, never to reappear.

VI Dr. George Leachman

The information you have been reading almost constitutes a biography of Silas Leachman. Almost, but not quite. It leaves unanswered such questions as when and where he was born and the time and place of his death. This article would still be unwritten had not my old crony, Coincidence, who sometimes seems to turn her back but in the long run never fails me, come to my aid.

In the Roanoke World-News for August 18, 1954, I saw a sports story about Dr. George C. Leachman, a 78-year-old medical practitioner who had been physician to the Louisville Colonels baseball team of the American Association for more than half a century. The unusual family name caught my attention and, knowing that Silas was a native of Kentucky, I wondered if the doctor could be a relative or would in any event have some information concerning the almost mythical record maker. I wrote to Dr. Leachman and, since the "feature story" said he was an inveterate enemy of liquor and tobacco I mentioned that I have never tasted either.

And I received a gratifying answer. On September 8, Dr. Leachman wrote:

My dear Mr. Walsh:—Please accept my sincere apology for this delayed response to your letter of August 19, 1954. I am delighted to know how much you appreciated the humble efforts of the boy from Kentucky and I am sure were he here today he would be very happy to read your complimentary letter. For this, I am certain, he happened to be my oldest brother.

For a number of years, prior to his singing for the Victor Phonograph Co., he had been a minstrel, a minstrel in which he sang and played the piano. He was a hale and hearty 260 pound man, well met and made friends readily.

Regret very much I am unable to give you the exact date of his death. The best I can recall was 19 years ago. During the time that he was singing for the Phonograph Co., he sang under two other names as well as his own. Silas was 76 years old at the time of his death, having suffered some heart condition. At his request he was cremated in Chicago.

Regarding the article that appeared in the Roanoke World-News relative to my association as physician to Louisville Baseball Club, it may interest you to know that I have been surgeon to this Club for 53 years in which course of time I have met some fine men, some from this side of the tracks, some from the other side and both played the game with equal vigor, earnestness and determination.

We have never met, but I want you to know it's a real pleasure receiving a letter from one so interested in the Minstrel and Songster, my brother. If I can help you in any way by furnishing any further information I am yours to command.

I replied almost immediately and asked Dr. Leachman several other questions, such as what the F. in the middle of his brothers's name represented and what were the other names under which Silas sang for Victor. (And how I'd like to know that "score of names" he used, according to the Chicago Tribune, in making his cylinders of the '90's!) At the moment I have not had a second letter from the busy physician, but I shall submit this article for his approval and if he provides additional information I shall use it as a supplement.

Meanwhile, Dr. Leachman's recollection that Silas had been dead some 19 years gave enough of a clue for me to ask the Chicago Bureau of Vital Statistics to search for the genial "little" 260-pound comedian's death certificate. The search was successful and a copy of the long wanted document was sent to me by the County Clerk, Richard J. Daley. (Now Mayor of the City of Chicago).

The certificate reveals that Silas F. Leachman lived at 3715 Concord Place. His wife's name was Amelia. I assume that she too has died in the last 19 years. Leachman was born August 20, 1859, so was 76 years, eight months and five days old at his death on April 28, 1936. For eight years he had been a clerk in the personnel department of the Chicago police department. What he did for the quarter of a century between the end of his recording career and the beginning of his police work isn't indicated. He was born in Louisville, the son of two native Kentuckians—William and Lettie Field Leachman.

Silas Leachman was buried in Montrose Cemetery, Chicago, April 30. He had been under medical treatment by Dr. J. H. Moran since April 19 for arterial hypertension and a form of heart disease.

Those are the important facts revealed by the death certificate. And so at last, after more than 20 years of off-and-on investigation, I have been able, thanks to some fortunate coincidences, to fulfill that long standing desire to tell something of the life story of Silas Leachman, a gifted pioneer of the phonograph whose diversified talents entitle him to permanent and affectionate remembrance.

This article has been approved by Dr. George Leachman who gives the following additional information:

"The F. in Silas' name represents the name Field (Silas Field Leachman). He had two sisters and six brothers. My sister and myself are still living. I don't recall the minstrel troupes and don't recall the other names he sang under; however, there were two. His wife is dead. He was a blue-eyed blonde and weighed about 260 pounds. I greatly appreciate your interest in my brother and regret that I am unable to be of more help. Hope to have the pleasure of

(Continued on page 77)

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 77)

meeting you in the near future. Kindest regards and best wishes."

In closing this biographical sketch, it occurs to me that Dr. Leachman himself is such an outstanding personality that his achievements deserve to be chronicled with those of his brother. I therefore reprint the following United Press article written by Richard Coleman, which appeared on August 18, 1954, in newspapers throughout the nation:

"Dr. George Leachman is convinced baseball players play just as hard today as they did in the old days when 'all the players were Irish.'"

"He should know. He has been team physician for the Louisville Colonels of the American Association 52 straight seasons, probably the longest stretch of service of any baseball doctor. He is 77.

"The little, white-haired man leaned back in the swivel chair in his office today and recalled:

"They played awfully hard in the old days. I fixed many a bloody nose and loosened jawbone. The boys have finger blisters and sore arms nowadays.

"Most of the players were Irish 50 years ago. Those boys were tough because they lived hard lives. A lot of them were blacksmith's helpers, hard working men. Today, a lot of the players are college boys. But, I honestly think they play just as hard today."

"Dr. Leachman watches almost every home game the Colonels play, although sometimes he can only watch an inning or two from his seat behind home plate. He handles just the surgical chores for the club, and occasionally operates on major leaguers as well.

"The pink-faced little man likes to visit the dugouts and the dressing rooms. It's there he has a chance to offer advice to both the veterans and rookies.

"I try to talk to young players, especially the pitchers," Dr. Leachman said. "I ask them if they expect to make baseball a career. Most of them are good listeners—I've never raised my voice to a ball player.

"I tell the young pitchers they've got to take care of their legs as well as their arms. I tell the young ones they shouldn't play basketball or football during the off-season. A lot of injuries—mean injuries—happen then.

"There are three rules I tell them they must observe if they want to be really good. First, don't drink whiskey. Alcohol affects the vision and reflexes. Don't drink beer—it slows up your legs. Third, don't smoke. It affects your wind.

"The doctor thinks the beanball ought to be outlawed. His voice is a little sharp when he talks about it.

"It's one thing to throw close to a batter to keep him from digging in," he said. "But, when they throw a beanball at you they're trying to put you out of business. That's not good baseball. If a pitcher has to go that far, he ought to quit."

"His worst baseball injury came when Merito Acosta, a popular Cuban outfielder, was beaned here in 1927. Acosta was close to death for three days, but lived, although the "The doctor called Ty Cobb the greatest player he's seen."

RICHARD H. & VIRGINIA A. WOOD

4 Hillside Rd. Md.

RARITIES IN HISTORICAL CHINA—GLASS AND CHINA CUP PLATES—LACY BOWLS—COLORED LAMPS, VASES & STICKS—SANDWICH SALTS—FLASKS & BLOWN GLASS—CANARY YELLOW MUGS—PRIMITIVE PAINTINGS.

Write your wants or our Glass or China Lists are available at 25 cents each.

tfc

WANTED

(Price or will offer)

Important paperweights, rare mechanical banks, cup plates, bottles, early dolls or heads, prints, rare glass, historical china, etc.

Complete Collections, Estates purchased.

by mail or shop.

J. E. NEVIL — 234 E. 4th St. Ohio

Cincinnati

tfc

McKEARINS ANTIQUES

Hoosick Falls, N. Y.

Fine American Blown, Lacy and Pattern Glass

Historical Flasks, Choice Irish, English and Continental Glass.

Fine English Porcelain and Earthen Ware. Exquisite French Paper

Weights. Selections sent on approval

Please send Bank or Commercial reference

Illustrated 30 page Price List $1.00

Postpaid Price List Historical Bottles and

Flasks $1.50 Book TWO HUNDRED YEARS OF

AMERICAN BLOWN GLASS $10.00

Book AMERICAN GLASS $6.95 tfc

BARGAINS
Announcing the complete closing out of stock—because I am moving to Hanover, New Hampshire A. B. K. tfc

MABEL S. DOWNING

R. D. No. 2 — Lancaster, Pa.

3 mi. West of Lancaster, Rt. 30, Lincoln Hwy. Historical and fine china, furniture, Pattern glass, dolls, prints, homespun Linens, Early kitchen utensils, cup plates, lamps, old trivets, cut glass, etc. tfc

HIGH MEADOW

Antiques

Quakertown, New Jersey

Deep emerald green glass crest	$ 7.00
14. German Majolica hanging plate	4.00
5 Matching Opalescent Vaseline Ruffle shades, each	5.00
6 KPM plates, 6 1/2", dec. gold & peach, lot	$3.00
Round ruby glass tray	4.50
Round Cranberry glass tray	6.00
Blue Invert. Thpt. bottle, no stopper	4.50
White Bristol oil lamp	15.00
Royal Doulton, 3 pc. set, teapot, creamer, open sugar, rich dec., set	20.00
Transportation extra.	Auc

ANGLO - AMERICAN CHINA

Part I - American Views, Gaudy Dutch, Spatter, etc.

Flexible cover $3.00

Hard cover 4.50

Part I - English and Other Views

Hard cover only 5.00

SAM LAIDACKER

Box 362 Bristol, Pa. Auc

"GOBLIN" or "BLUE BOOK"
1947 edition	$5.00
"GOBLIN II" or "RED BOOK"
1947 edition	$5.00
"OPAQUE GLASS BOOK"
1947 edition	$5.00
All Prepaid	tfc

S. T. MILLARD

548 West Ivy, Glendale 4, Calif.

BOOKS 1 & 2—200 PATTERNS OF HAVILAND CHINA

A MUST IN BUYING OR SELLING OLD HAVILAND

EACH BOOK, $3 Postpaid — BOOK I & II TOGETHER, $5.50 Postpaid

Order now from author: ARLENE SCHLEIGER - 6854 Minne Lusa Blvd., Omaha, Nebr. tfc

LITTLE OLDE CHINA SHOPPE

Mrs. Hayden Moore
Highway 71 Phone 4145
Alma, Ark.

Helping to match the older and obsolete patterns of French Haviland. Send sample or use Mrs. A. Schleiger's number for identification. Complete services and large stock of most popular in open stock.

n54c

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

By JIM WALSH

"The Duncan Sisters"

By ANTONIO (TONY) ALTAMIRANO

("Guest conductor" for Jim Walsh)

"THE DUNCAN SISTERS"!!! Magic words in the theatre of today and yesterday!!!

When Jim Walsh wrote me saying, "Tony' since you know the Duncan Sisters so well, why not write me an article on them for my column," I was thrilled.—And so—to use a little which the "Duncs" made internationally famous—I would like to do some very pleasant "Rememb'ring."

My friendship with "The Duncan Sisters" began in January, 1936, in the picturesque little California town of Covina. My teacher, the late beloved diva, Madame Ellen Beach Yaw (well-known as "Lark Ellen"), invited me to an audition for a special show that the famed Duncan Sisters were giving in honor of Madam Yaw in appreciation for the inspiration she had been to them and the interest she had taken in them when they were children.

Having auditioned, I was then introduced to the Duncan Sisters, Rosetta and Vivian, and was greatly impressed with their beauty and extreme graciousness! I had known no greater honor than when they told me that they would like to have me join their special show for "Lark Ellen."

The next few days of rehearsals only enhanced my first impression of the beauty and graciousness of these two really great artists, and the harmony in working together during these few days was the beginning of a friendship that was to last throughout the years.

True to their theatrical record on this memorable night, the Duncan Sisters played to a packed house and, needless to say, kept the audience in gales of laughter throughout their entire performance.

To further enhance the eventfulness of this great evening when "Lark Ellen" was introduced, she walked onto the stage together with a tall, elderly lady, dressed in black from head to foot. Upon introduction, we were all thrilled to learn that this stately lady was the beloved composer, Carrie Jacobs Bond! (Years later Mme. Yaw presented me with a recording of Mrs. Bond speaking and playing one of her own compositions. I still have that recording.)

The Duncan Sisters asked Mrs.

Bond if she would be kind enough to sit at the piano and play a number for the audience. To mix laughter with sweet memories, Rosetta immediately asked her, "Mrs. Bond would you happen to know one of my favorite songs? If you know it, I would love to hear "The End of a Perfect Day."

The "Duncs" then asked "Lark Ellen" if she would do a number. Then more fun began! Madame Yaw, being not only a great singer but a most clever actress, gave an impersonation of Rosetta, when she was a little girl studying with her. To add to the laughter and applause of Madame Yaw's "rendition," Rosetta quipped, "Ladies and Gentlemen, 'The March of Time'!"

The cleverness, the timing, the repartee of the Duncan Sisters is an element beyond explanation, but a theatrical "student" could learn more than money could buy just by observing the keen artistry of these two great entertainers.

Let me here present to you an extract from the unpublished manuscript of the memoirs of Ellen Beach Yaw entitled "Flight of the Lark" and let Madame Yaw tell you in her own words about "The Duncan Sisters."

"Young talent has always deeply interested me. One day during a call, in company with my sister-in-law, Nettie, at the King's Daughters' Day Nursery, a home for children at Manhattan Beach, a Los Angeles suburb, we found the juveniles up in the attic playing theatre and costumed in the matron's old dresses. Nettie's mother, Mrs. Emma L. Jay, by the way, was one of the founders of this Home. Nettie and I sat in a dark corner and watched the little ones with interest. The talent of one little girl in particular held my attention and inquiring her name was told she was Rosetta Duncan. Rosetta was the prime leader; practically 'the whole show.' At the end of the act I asked the precocious child if she would like to learn to sing and told her I would teach her, but not until she had finished grammar school.

"Little Rosetta was quite enthusiastic over my offer, and about a year later on the very day after she graduated, a little girl just as plump as a partridge came running up the path to my home near Covina, all out of breath, ready to begin work with me. Never had I met a more delightfully natural child, so I said to her: 'Rosetta, if you remain just as you are you will be a great success on the stage.' She has since reminded me of that prophetic remark, declaring it is the secret of her success in the theatre.

"I taught Rosetta every summer during my vacation at home. She came out in the morning and remained all day wandering about the garden and orange grove, seldom speaking—just dreaming. Once when I gave a benefit concert for the Lark Ellen Home for Boys in the sunken garden at my sister Anna's home in Covina, Rosetta sang, and a lady who was present asked her to appear at a party she was giving the following week. Rosetta was paid five dollars for that engagement, which I believe was the first money she had ever earned.

"Some time after this when I learned Rosetta's sister, Vivian, one year her junior, often sang duets with the former, I gave her singing lessons also; in addition I taught the two girls acting. It was, not very long before the Duncan Sisters were widely heralded for their great 'hits' in America and Europe. Their greatest success to date was scored in the musical comedy 'Topsy and Eva' with the song hits 'Rememb'ring' and 'I Never Had a Mammy' composed by Rosetta and Vivian who write many of their own songs used by them on the stage. They are exceptionally clever and original young women."

This was about 1914. That is, when Ellen Beach Yaw discovered them. The girls always remembered Mme. Yaw with their great generosity and many was the time when they presented "Lark Ellen" with checks of large sums when they were at the height of their fame and success, as a little gesture of their sincere appreciation for the inspiration "Lark Ellen" had given them in their first struggles for recognition.

Since this is not a chronological biography of them, they were born in Los Angeles, Calif., at the turn of the present century. They were the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Duncan and, in addition to Rosetta and Vivian, there is another sister, the eldest, Evelyn Duncan (now Mrs. Stewart S. McClelland) and two brothers, Harold and Alex Duncan. Their mother died in childbirth and Mr. Duncan sent his motherless little ones to the King's Daughters Day Nursery. They were educated in the Los Angeles Public Schools. I read of Mr. Duncan's passing on at the age of 84, in December, 1945, while I was visiting in Canada. I later recall Evelyn telling me, that at the funeral, Madame Yaw sang "Abide With Me" and how beautiful her voice sounded.

It may not be known in general—but the famed Duncan Sisters consisted of three beautiful, wholesome American girls, yes, all three of them, blonde as they could be! The eldest sister, Evelyn, had her day in the theatre too. About 1915, she was with Rosetta and Vivian in a trio called "The Duncan Sisters Trio" and they toured the Western States together.

Evelyn left the trio to become the dramatic member of the family. She appeared in stock companies from San Francisco to New York, and was a featured player with Marie Doro on Broadway in "Lilies of the Field," Selwyn's "Fair and Warmer" and in many silent motion pictures, such as playing opposite Cyril Maude in the Morosco, production of "Peer Gynt."

Rosetta and Vivian gained their early theatrical experience in "The Kiddies Revue" with Gus Edwards and they were well-known in vaudeville, prior to their appearance at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, New York, in May, 1917. In October, 1917, they appeared in Shubert's "Doing Our Bit" at the Winter Garden Theatre. Then at the Globe, in May, 1919, in Dillingham's "She's a Good Fellow," Raymond Hitchcock's "Hitchey Koo" and in October, 1922, in "Tip Top" with Fred Stone.

They made their first appearance in London at the Gaiety Theatre in De Courville's "Pins and Needles" on June 1, 1921. They reappeared in London, at the Adelphi, in 1928, in Buchanan's "Clowns in Clover." They also appeared in many leading London variety theatres.

Their greatest success, "Topsy and Eva," was originally produced on July 9, 1923, at the Alcazar Theatre, in San Francisco. I believe this theatre is now named "The United Nations Theatre" and is for motion pictures only. This unique musical comedy was taken from Harriet Beecher Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin." I recall Rosetta telling me, how she went to the public library and, reading the book, started work on it for their production. Later on, Catherine C. Cushing, wrote the play as suggested by "Uncle Tom's Cabin" for their theatrical production. Mrs. Cushing had written the screen scenario for Mary Pickford's film, "Pollyanna."

In June, 1924, they appeared in "Topsy and Eva" at the Selwyn Theatre, in Chicago. They broke all box office records drawing more than a million dollars a year!

Rosetta and Vivian Duncan as "Topsy" and "Eva" in their production of that name. This photograph was made from a colored cardboard cut-out used by Victor record dealers for window displays in 1925.

At the Gaiety Theatre, in London, in October, 1928, they also appeared in "Topsy and Eva." It was during this engagement, Rosetta told me, that she was not only homesick, but also too ill to play the role of "Topsy." Hearing of her illness, a young lady came to see Rosetta and at her bedside told her that she would be delighted to "stand in" for Rosetta during her illness and since she had seen the show so many times was certain that she already knew the part. Rosetta and Vivian heard the young lady read the part and put her into the show until Rosetta could return to the stage. The "stand in" Topsy during Rosetta's illness was none other than (the then unknown) Grace Fields!

In November, 1931, at the El Capitan Theatre in Hollywood, they also appeared in "Topsy and Eva" and in December, 1933, appeared in a revised version of the show at the Apollo Theatre, in Chicago.

They toured the British Isles in 1937 and 1938 and broke all box office records in the Music Halls where they appeared.

In 1942, they again toured in a revised version of "Topsy and Eva." I saw them in this version in November, 1942, at the old Music Box Theatre, in Hollywood. This place is now the Fox Guild Theatre. How well I recall my back-stage visit with them. The walls of their dressing room were covered with telegrams of good wishes from Mae Murray, Eddie Cantor and other great names of show business.

Rosetta never married. Vivian married Nils Asther, star of such motion pictures as: "Her Cardboard Lover," with Marion Davies; "The Cossacks," with John Gilbert and Renee Adoree, "Sorrel and Son," with Anna Q. Nilsson; "The Single Standard," with Greta Garbo; "Loves of an Actress," with Pola Negri, etc. A daughter, Evelyn, was born to them. Vivian and Nils were later divorced. A few years ago, Vivian married for the second time. This time, a businessman of San Francisco, Frank Herman.

On June 16, 1927, at the world-famous Egyptian Theatre on Hollywood boulevard, their silent motion picture version of "Topsy and Eva" had its world premiere. The audience consisted of all the great ones of the motion picture industry at that time. The late Sid Grauman, had staged one of his great prologues and the Duncans, were in top form on opening night. They appeared at this theatre for some time in the prologue. In addition, to the motion picture people in attendance, including Madame Ellen Beach Yaw, many civic and cultured celebrities were present.

Occasionally, even today, the film is shown in theatres in and around Hollywood. I first saw this film back in 1949, when Evelyn telephoned me, to tell me that it was being shown in a Hollywood theatre. Naturally, I was most anxious to see it. The surprise of the evening of that showing, was that the silent film star, Mae Murray, whom I had seen years ago on the stage, made an appearance and spoke of her great friendship and love for the Duncan Sisters. Evelyn also appeared on the stage that evening and told some things about the production of the picture. The film had three directors, including Del Lord and D. W. Griffith. She recalled how Griffith referred to Rosetta as "The Female Charlie Chaplin of the Screen" in tribute to her great ability as a comedienne. The picture was originally produced by John Considine and released through United Artists.

A present-day pose of Vivian and Rosetta Duncan
(Continued from page 27)

A few months ago, a print of "Top-sy and Eva" was shown at a party, at the home of Vivian Duncan and it was indeed a real pleasure to see and hear Vivian play the piano and talk to her audience all through the screening of the film.

In 1929-30, they made their only
(Continued on next page)

RECORD COLLECTORS: Never before so much for so little, as a member of the only world wide, non-profit records collectors' club Free details Write Mrs. Ruby Collings, Sec., International Discophiles, Incorporated, 1227 North Jackson Avenue, Fresno, Calif. s3215

CYLINDER RECORDS for sale, large stock to select from, only records that are in good condition are offered for sale. Cylinder Phonographs and Horn type disc Phonographs for sale. Also parts, horns, reproducers, recorders, and catalogs. Send stamp for lists.—Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Santa Cruz, Calif. s3257

Auction Sales: Rare and cut-out vocal (G. & T., Zonophone, Polydori and instrumental records. Free lists.—Arthur May, 85 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn 26, N. Y. mh120042

THOUSANDS of rare collectors' items on hand. Send me your wants on any type of 78 RPM records. New ones in daily.—Box 182, Westville, N. J. n3614

FIFTY YEARS of recording: All your favorites on all labels - Monarch, Zonophone, Columbia, Etc. Send for free "Pops" lists.—Gertrude Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York n3696

EDISON, COLUMBIA cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 44 Church St., Norwich, Conn. s3084

ENTIRE COLLECTION—Three thousand and Edison Discs plus fifteen hundred duplicates, twenty Edison Long Plays all in original covers as new condition. 150 Red Seal Victors, 300 classical Victors - Record Player to play 12 Edison Discs automatically with electric Pick-Up. One William & Mary Edison console with Edison L. P. reproducer and L. P. gear, plus Edison Reproducers, Motors, catalogues, parts, etc. To highest bidder over $1,000. F. O. B. Storeroom shelves.—C. Haines, Box 1442, Reading, Pa. s30021

OPERA, Popular, cylinders, discs, vertical, lateral records. Lets hear your wants. Old catalogs wanted.—George Meiser, 506 West Douglass, Reading, Pa. s3633

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: Collectors items to just good "listening" Operatic, historical & personality discs sold. "Wants" located. We buy collections.—Record Collectors Service (c/o D. Reichman) 530 E. 88 St., New York 28, New York s3826

HUNDREDS of imported cutout vocals rare Golden Age operatics - G & T, Fonotopia, etc., Music Hall, Musical Comedy and Personality records, military band, orchestral and instrumental items, imported long-plays including ROCOCO RECORDS, all may be found on our free mailing lists. Write—Ross, Court & Co., 121 Simcoe Street, Toronto, Ont. s1004

RARE VOCAL RECORDS - Monthly mail auctions & special lists at set prices. Offering only items in good playing condition, domestic & imported. We know you will be pleased with your purchases. Free lists.—Georg Pluck, Waterloo Village, Grass Lake, Mich. o3046

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. je120061

RARE Operatic vocal records; send for free mail auction lists.—Robert J. Nathan, 5480 Broadway, New York 63, N. Y. n3084

THREE instrumental melodious music records from India $5.—Motiwala Third Bhoiwada 38H. Bombay 2, India. n3042

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought. — E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 8, New Jersey. o122511

FREE Al Jolson catalog. Arg. - Box 341 - Cooper Station - New York City. mh12046

FREE Bing Crosby catalog. Arg. - Box 841 - Cooper Station - New York City. mh12048

COLLECTORS TIRED of run-of-the-mill lists, send for free list of Unusual vocal operatic records. Golden age, Pre-war electrical, G&T's, Fonotopias, Zonophones, Pathes Hill & Dale, Etc.—Collector's Haven, 1131 Bergen Street, Brooklyn 16, New York. o3046

SONG BOOKS WANTED

WANT TO BUY: Old hillbilly song books by such artists as Harry "Mac" McClintock, Fiddlin' John Carson and Moonshine Kate, Bradley Kincaid, etc.—Royal Carney, 617 San Mateo Dr., San Mateo, Calif. f128402

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Edison, Victor and Columbia Phonographs. Hundreds of Cylinder and Disc Records, many rare, hard to find numbers. Send dime for either two or four minute cylinder, or Disc record list. All three lists for 25c.—Coppertoll's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. o3276

PHONOGRAPHS, Reproducers, records. Learn values. For $1.00 I will send you 23 pictures of valuable phonographs and amounts paid for phonographs, parts. Collector of One of the World's Largest Private Collections of Antique Phonographs.—Miller's, 1017 Westgate Road, Troy, Ohio. o3046

RARE VIOLINS

GENUINE DUFFERPRUGAR Violin, Cryptogram checked violins in Europe same maker. Good condition. Real museum piece. Priced right. No dealers.—Cliff Adams, Rosharon, Brazoria County, Texas. n3006

PIANO RECORDS

MUSIC CABINET filled with piano records, lot includes cabinet for $12.—Mary Jordan, 2046 E. 73rd St., Chicago, Ill. s1441

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR Sheet Music to 1850. Catalog 15c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. ap12238

PLAYER PIANO

PLAYER PIANO FOR SALE.—Box 405, Madison, Nebr. o3291

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, California. d6407

OLD SHEET MUSIC, 25c up. 10c for list.—Grace Groves, 1721 E. Broadway, Long Beach 2, Calif. s1061

MELODEONS FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL Restored melodeons. Expert repair service. Reasonable prices. Also buy.—C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 415 S. Diamond, Grand Rapids, Mich. o3882

talking film, "It's a Great Life" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios. It was directed by the late Sam Wood. Two selections were recorded by Victor from this film, with them. See my Discography for this information.

This cannot be classed as even being a "thumb nail" sketch of these two fabulous, beloved ladies of the theatre. Their life, their stage, their experiences have been so full that it is an impossibility for me, as a layman writer, to relate even the greatest highlights of their famous careers. I feel that I have been among the most fortunate to have heard them tell in person of their good times and battles—the Actors Equity strike of 1919—their experiences with Mrs. Vanderbilt, seven kings and the Prince of Wales while touring Europe—the stories about how they wrote and introduced so many songs—their stories, their lives can only be summed up in one word, Greatness!

I can only wholeheartedly agree with a statement once made about my sweet friends, "The Duncan Sisters have made deposits worth millions in the bank of hearts, a bank that never goes bankrupt and pays off in love, loyalty and true friendship."

Now, for the many, many songs that the Duncan Sisters have either composed or made famous. Here are but a few:

"Bye Bye, Blackbird," "Mary Lou," "Then I'll Be Happy," "Moonlight and Roses," "In the Little Red Schoolhouse," "Avalon," "Carolina in the Morning," "Chicago," "Ukelele Lady," "Let the Rest of the World Go By," "I'm Following You," "I'm Happy When I'm With You," "Side By Side," "Doodle Dee Doo," "Sweet Onion Time in Bermuda," "The Gay Caballero," by Frank Crumit and Lou Klein, and "Bell Bottom Trousers."

And the following song "hits" from "Topsy and Eva": "Rememb'ring," "Do Re Mi" (The Music Lesson), "Um-Um-Da-Da," "Just in Love With You," "I Never Had a Mammy," "High Brow Colored Lady," "Moon Am Shinin'," "The Land of Long Ago," "Sighing," "We'll Dance Thro' Life Together," "Under Love's Moon," etc.

Rosetta and Vivian are not the only composers in this fabulous Duncan Family. Their brother, Harold Duncan, now a prominent tennis pro of the East Coast is also a member of ASCAP and has composed several song "hits" which the Duncan Sisters have helped to popularize. "God Is Love" and "Blow Blow Winds of the Sea," are the latest published selections. Several other of his songs have been recorded by RCA-Victor.

The Duncan Sisters were great stars of stage, screen, radio, recordings, the early ear-phone radio, nightclubs and NOW television. I consider them the greatest real sister-team of the theatre. I am happy to say that the years have not dimmed the magic of their personalities.

Here follows my complete Discography on them.

"THE DUNCAN SISTERS"

Discography by Antonio ("Tony") Altamirano.

HIS MASTER'S VOICE RECORDINGS: London, England.

Number	Title	Date Recorded
B 1419	Oh, Sing-A-Loo	10-20-22
	The Argentine, Portuguese, and the Greeks	10-20-22
C 1093	The Bull Frog Patrol	10-20-22
	The Music Lesson	10-20-22
B 2309	Happy Go Lucky	1-15-26
	Kinky Kids Parade	1-15-26
	(Titles for B 2309, were recorded in America, by Victor).
B 2915	The Music Lesson	12-27-28
	The Argentines; the Portuguese, and the Greeks	12-27-28
UNPUBLISHED TITLES FOR H.M.V.:
	At Sundown	12-13-27
	Breezing Along With The Breeze	12-13-27
COLUMBIA RECORDINGS: Recorded in London, for English Columbia.
Number 5182	The Prune Song	(?) 1928
	The Bullfrog Patrol	(-) 1928
COLUMBIA RECORDINGS: Recorded in New York City, U.S.A.
No. 15745-D	Dusty Roads (Master Number W-151949)	19-26-31
COLUMBIA UNPUBLISHED: (Released in 1932)
	Hard Luck Mama	10-26-31

Miss Rosetta Duncan told me that in 1919, they recorded one title for Columbia, which was never published. All three sisters, Evelyn, Rosetta and Vivian, were certainly surprised when I told them that they had recorded for Columbia both in Europe and America! They had never heard of such recordings! They remembered the title of "The Prune Song" but they all thought it had been recorded in London, by H. M. V.!!! Unfortunately ALL masters of the H. M. V.'s and Columbias have been destroyed. Years ago, I do recall that a collector had a copy of "The Prune Song" on Columbia, in England. Investigation has revealed that Columbia Record No. 15745-D, was coupled with "It's All In The Game" recorded by Celia and Ann Sawyer. . . "The Sawyer Sisters."

VICTOR UNPUBLISHED RECORDINGS:

Masters destroyed. Courtesy of Mr. E. C. Forman of RCA-Victor Company.

Number	Title	Date Recorded
	Some Day Soon	2-16-26 and 1-2-30
	Oh, How I Love My Boatman	9-13-27
	Some Day You'll Say "OK"	9-16-27
	Yep, Long About June	9-16-27

VICTOR RECORDINGS:

Recorded in various Victor studios in the U.S.A.

Number	Title	Date Recorded
19050	Baby Sister Blues	3-14-23
	The Music Lesson	3-14-23
19113	The Argentines, the Portuguese and the Greeks	3-19-23
	Stick In The Mud	3-19-23
19206	Rememb'ring from "TOPSY AND EVA"	11-19-23
	I Never Had A Mammy from "TOPSY AND EVA"	11-19-23
19311	Aunt Susie's Picnic	4-4-24
	Um-um-da-da	4-4-24
19527	Bull Frog Patrol	4-4-24
	Tom Boy Blues	4-4-24
35751	In Sweet Onion Time) (Only 12" record recorded)	11-10-24
	Vocalizing	11-10-24
19527	Cross Word Puzzles	11-14-24
	Mean Cicero Blue	11-14-24
19987	Happy Go Lucky	2-16-26
	Kinky Kids' Parade	2-16-26
21226	Lickens	2-16-26
	Black and Blue Blues	9-12-27
20963	Dawning	9-16-27
	Baby Feet Go Pitter Patter	9-16-27
22345	It Must Be An Old Spanish Custom	1-3-30
	I Got A Code In My Doze	1-3-30
22269	I'm Following You	1-4-30
	Hoosier Hop	1-4-30

(The last two selections are from their M-G-M film, "It's A Great Life" The first seven Victor recordings here listed, are of the old acoustical method of recording.

PARLOPHONE RECORDINGS:

Recorded in London, in August and September 1937. These recordings were listed in the Parlophone Supplementary Catalogue of November 1937, to October 1938. Masters destroyed!

Number	Title
F 1156	Ti-Pi Tin
	Adam and Eve
F 1191	In A Little Dutch Kindergarten
	Loch Lomand in Swing Time
F 1215	Daniel In The Lions' Den
	Sweet Onion Time In Bermuda

DUNCAN DISC COMPANY RECORDINGS
These recordings were recorded in San Francisco, in 1947, with Phil Bovero and his A.B.C. Orchestra

TITLES

Rememb'ring, from "Topsy And Eva"
I Never Had A Mammy, from "Topsy And Eva"
White Christmas
Jingle Bells

UNPUBLISHED DUNCAN DISC COMPANY RECORDINGS

Also: recorded in San Francisco, in 1947, with Phil Bovero and his A.B.C. Orchestra.
Boogie Woogie Lullaby
It's Somebody's Birthday Today
I'm Following You
Welcome Stranger

VITAPHONE RECORDINGS:

She Fell Down On Her Cadenza
Why Do I Sit On My Patio?
(Continued on page 33)

F. L. BALL

COLLECT - BUY - SELL - EXCHANGE

High Grade Banks and Toys for Collectors

Mechanical Penny Banks - Still Banks
Cap Pistols - Bell Toys - Engines & Trains
Fire Apparatus - Circus Items - Cannons
Old Tin and Iron Toys of Every Description

Largest stock of old Banks
and Toys in United States.

Correspondence Invited

45 Fresh Pond Lane,
Cambridge 38, Massachusetts

OLD TOY MECHANICAL BANKS

"Since 1936"

Your Question, Please?

M. E. MILLER
29 Lincrest Street
Hicksville, New York

$100 and up paid for many kinds of mechanical banks.
List of prices I pay for 235
different banks only 25c.

E. L. ROMNEY
Box 291

Bluffton, Indiana

MECHANICAL BANKS

Repaired, buy, sell, trade; parts furnished, coin traps for all banks. Will buy broken banks and parts.

V. D. HOWE

395 W. Utica St., Buffalo 22, N. Y.

WANTED

Registering banks
and

Old mechanical penny banks
Send description and price wanted.

C. R. HOWELL

Plentywood Farm Bensenville, Ill.

CLASSIFIED AD RATES
8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.

(Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

We are accepting orders for
REPAIR SERVICE

on

MECHANICAL
BANKS AND TOYS
We Also Buy Old Banks

GEORG E W. BAUER

P. O. Box 145

Pottstown, Pa.

MECHANICAL ANTIQUES
WANTED

PLEASE NOTE my mechanical bank display ad in this section, listing various wants.—F. H. Griffith, Harris Pump & Supply Co., Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfx

OLD TOY TRAINS WANTED: Mechanical, electric, trolley cars, old catalogs. Send description to Bill Krames. 139 Windsor Road, Yardley, Pa. O3023

WANTED: Catalogs showing threshing machines and steam traction engines.—Vic Wintermantel, Bellevue, Pa. d6614

OLD ELECTRICAL DEVICES wanted Sal Ammoniac wet cell batteries, motors, fans, dynamos, switches, receptacles, light bulbs, fuses, books, and any other items used in the early days of electricity, 1879 to 1910. Mail me your list and I will quote on same.—George N. DeLaplaine, P. O. Box 861, New Brunswick, New Jersey. o64681

WANTED MECHANICAL Penny banks any condition. Please quote price in first letter.—Daniel Cutini, 121 Roma Ave., Buffalo, New York. o6046

I WILL PAY top cash prices for your Mechanical Banks. Mail description and cash price wanted to:—The Bank Man, 430 Minnehaha Ave., Clermont, Florida. f6008

Please mention HOBBIES when
replying to advertisements

MECHANICAL BANKS & TOY PISTOLSEspecially Want:MECHANICAL BANKS:

- TURTLE (Sticks head out)
- BOW-ERY BANK
- PRESTO (Mouse on roof)
- CAMERA BANK (Picture pops up)
- JONAH & WHALE (Jonah emerges from Whale)
- DING DONG BELL (Tin mechanical)
- BOWLING ALLEY BANK
- RED RIDING HOOD
- FOOTBALL (Colored man kicks ball)
- SCHLEY BOTTLING UP CERVERA
- MONKEY & PARROT (Tin)
- PRESTO
- JAPANESE BALL TOSSEY (Tin, wind-up)
- BULL & BEAR BANK
- COASTING BANK
- MUSICAL SAVING BANK (You pay—I play)
- CLOWN ON BAR (Tin figure)
- BIRD ON ROOF
- PREACHER IN THE PULPIT
- TARGET
- WINNER SAVING
- JUMBO
- ELEPHANT BABY (Opens X O'clock)
- RIVAL
- NATIONAL

PISTOLS:

- CAMERA
- MOON FACE
- TURTLE
- SAILING SHIP
- TWO DOGS ON BENCH
- OSCAR WILDE BOMB
- DEVIL'S HEAD BOMB

Also want Cast Iron horse drawn carriages, animated bell ringing pull toys, old toy automobiles and old catalogs showing banks and toy pistols.

F. H. GRIFFITH
HARRIS PUMP & SUPPLY CO.
Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfx

I will pay top prices for
MECHANICAL BANKS

Damaged Banks if rare will be accepted.

HARRY G. MILLER, Collector
1418 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo. ttc

"Check List of Antique
MECHANICAL BANKS and Their Wholesale Prices"

This new booklet will enable you to appraise a single bank or an entire collection! How to buy banks and where to find them. The beginner can buy and sell banks with confidence. Fakes exposed! Prices reduced!

POSTPAID—$1.00
SAYBROOK ANTIQUES
430 Minnehaha Ave., — Clermont, Florida ttc

OLD MECHANICAL BANKSBy INA HAYWARD BELLOWES

Price $2.50

THE ONLY BOOK OF ITS KIND, designed for the antiques dealer and the collector. Descriptions and evaluations make this a valuable edition.

Order your copy from
LIGHTNER PUBLISHING CORP.

1006 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Illinois

THE DUNCAN SISTERS

(Continued from page 30)

And many others! But unfortunately, all masters have been destroyed. These Vitaphone recordings were for the early "talkies" of 1928-29.

A most interesting comparison is their 1923 and 1947 recordings from their greatest success, "Topsy And Eva."

In my collection of recordings of all of the great ones of the past, I have most of "The Duncan Sisters" recordings. At this time, (1955) I need two of the parlophones: Numbers F 1156 and F 1191. Of the H.M.V.'s I must have numbers: B 1419, C 1093, B 2309 and B 2915. But I certainly would pay the price if someone had for sale both of their Columbias! So, please, do let me know! I have several private recordings of them that were never recorded for public sale.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

By JIM WALSH

LEWIS JAMES

REVISED AND APPROVED

By Lewis James

This article is dedicated to one of the most enthusiastic Lewis James admirers, Robert Burwell, of Wellsville, Mo.

I have received the following letter from Mr. James:

"Dear Jim: Thanks for writing the story, which I have checked . . . I believe it's essentially accurate. . . .

"I made about 3,000 records—1,200 to 1,500 of them solos—all types from 'Songs for Little People' nursery rhymes, popular ballads, concert songs and sacred songs to oratorio songs by Handel and Bach.

"The Shannon Quartet made the first live broadcast from the New York district. Actually we sang from the Westinghouse factory at Newark. The station later was known as WJZ (New York). That was in October, 1921. The Revelers were the first to have an NBC contract when the network started in 1926.

"Many people are interested in church singing. I was soloist in several well known New York churches, my last being the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church at 55th street.

"Hope to see you soon. Best wishes.
Lewis James."

I appreciate Lewis James' interest in this biographical sketch and trust it will please his myriad admirers.
Jim Walsh

A visit to Chicago in the autumn of 1951 has enriched my memory with vivid recollections. One of the most sudden and severe snow storms I have experienced occurred while I was making the rounds of Salvation Army stores, looking for old records, with Frank Gloodt, a Chicago collector who specializes in Billy Murray discs. By contrast with the cold and unfriendly behavior of that storm, I like to think of the warmly genial welcome I received when I went to radio station WGN in the Chicago Tribune building and enjoyed a two-hour "get-together" with one of the most popular of former recording tenors, Lewis James.

It was a delightful experience, finding myself in the "Tribune Tower" at 441 North Michigan Avenue and being greeted by a dapper brown-eyed gentleman of middle height whom I recognized instantly from his photographs which appeared for so many years in record catalogs and monthly supplements. A typical example of these photographs appears in Roland Gelatt's new book, "The Fabulous Phonograph," in which James is shown making a Victor record with his associates of the Crescent Trio—Charles Hart (wrongly identified as Charles Harrison) and Elliott Shaw. That cordial greeting made me feel immediately at ease, while I was still reflecting that Lewis James looks much the same today as at the height of his singing career. He still wears the trim mustache that was something of a trademark in the days when his records were played in millions of homes, and, although his brown hair has grayed, he is unmistakably the man who made his share of phonograph history.

LEWIS JAMES,
Program Director for WGN, Chicago

Before we parted, the tenor told some of his associates I was "the fellow who knows more about me than I know about myself." That was a humorous exaggeration. I was equipped with a considerable advance store of information concerning Lewis James, but he told me a great many other things I didn't know. I was sorry to see he had trouble getting up and down and had to grip the edge of his desk before he could stand. He said he had been suffering for two and a half years from arthritis which was destroying the cartilage in his knees. The arthritis makes it difficult for him to write and, he said, plays its part in keeping him from acknowledging the letters which he still receives, and appreciates, from record collectors. When I recently asked if his condition has improved, he gallantly replied: "I'm getting quite expert on crutches."

II Some Biographical Data

I was of course familiar with Lewis James' long and successful recording career, not only as a tenor soloist but as a duet partner of many other noted singers and as a member of the Crescent Trio, the Shannon Four and the Revelers. In my reference file is a copy of the Edison Amberola Monthly for August, 1920. It has an excellent photo of James on the front cover. The accompanying article reads:

"The Navy may have lost a famous Admiral, or at least a Captain, when Lewis James was persuaded to forego his appointment to Annapolis in order to study music. . . . It was while studying engineering at the University of Michigan that he received his offer to become a member of Uncle Sam's Navy, but listening to the advice of the Director of Music at the College, he devoted himself to vocal study which has so well equipped him for concert, oratorio and Amberola work. He has developed under capable American teachers and stands out as a good example of our methods of instruction.

"His decision to devote himself to the art of singing came rather strangely. He is still remembered at college for his quarter and half-mile running—he held the State college records—and for his baseball . . . prowess. No one had associated him with music until the Glee Club held a concert at the University, where James gave a remarkable performance.

"This was really his debut. The advice of the music faculty and his friends was fortunately followed, and his tenor voice so well recorded on the Amberola has carried him to success."

Then there was the biographical sketch that used to appear in the yearly Victor record catalogs:

"Lewis James is of American birth and American experience. He has won his way to the front rank of popular singers by both intelligence and natural gifts. He has been, in the past, a church singer and a concert artist both. He has a fine voice, excellent enunciation, a healthy view of life, a keen sense of humor, and, what frequently goes with these things, a gift of expression which can meet with hearty response wherever it goes. He has made many fine records for us, and they have brought him into the public favor they deserve. He sings with great feeling and in the most simple of styles both the joy and the tragedy of being."

And in a 1929 issue of the Roanoke Times, I discovered the following thumb-nail sketch of the Revelers, who sang in Roanoke, Virginia, when their popularity on records and radio was at its zenith:

"The Revelers . . . consist of four singers and a pianist: Lewis James, James Melton, Elliott Shaw, Wilfred Glenn and Frank Black. Each member is a soloist in his own right, each a distinct personality, each an American born artist—a unique personnel and one of which this country can boast. Although this is their first American concert tour—they have made unusually successful appearances in England, Germany, France, Switzerland, Austria, and Holland—everyone in the United States knows the Revelers through their phonograph and radio fame. Either under their own name or as the Shannon Four on Victor records, as the Merry-makers on Brunswick, and the Singing Sophomores on Columbia releases, or on the air . . . they have become a household word in America. The so-called 'music public' has also heard them individually, as assisting soloists with orchestras or in recital.

The article went on to say that James had sung in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, and Wilfred Glenn was a favorite soloist with the Boston Handel and Haydn Society. It should have mentioned that James sang the Verdi "Requiem" with the Philadelphia Orchestra, and also sang in such favorite oratorios as "The Messiah" and "Elijah."

III Lewis James' Own Story

Such printed matter gave me a backlog of information. But there was still a good deal more I wanted to know about Lewis James, and he graciously "filled me in" during that enjoyable chat which I had a guilty feeling was taking up too much of his time. He observed me stealing frequent furtive glances at the clock and gently admonished me about being so concerned with the time, saying his duties as a WGN production manager were not so pressing that afternoon that I needed to hurry away.

The tenor was born in Dexter, Mich., a small town near Detroit, on July 29, 1892. He attended the State Normal School and the University of Michigan, where as the Amberola Monthly said, he made a name for himself in athletics. Although he did well at baseball and track, he was too slightly built to star at football. He married the former Miss Jeanette Wallace, of Detroit. They have a daughter, Janet, who is Mrs. Orion M. Arnold of Western Springs, Ill. Mrs. James is an enthusiastic collector of antiques, and I had the pleasure of presenting her husband with tickets for HOBBIERS' 26th Annual Antiques Exposition and Collectors' Fair, then in progress at the Conrad Hilton Hotel.

Lewis said he got his start as a recording artist with the help of the famous basso, Frank Croxton, who was, at one time or other, the bass singer of the Frank Croxton Mixed Quartet, the Columbia Stellar and Peerless male quartets, and the American Singers. He thought his first Columbia records were made in 1914 or 1915, but I haven't been able to trace any prior to December, 1916. For most of the first two years of his Columbia career, James' records appeared under the pseudonym of Robert Lewis. The first disc, No. 2108, combined "I Know I Got More Than My Share," by Lewis, with Vernon Dalhart's first record for Columbia (and probably for any other company), "Just a Word of Sympathy." The brief description said: "Vernon Dalhart, a former member of the Century Opera Company, makes his initial bow with Robert Lewis, a singer from the West of decided merit."

In 1918, James began a free-lance career. He had a joint contract with Victor, Columbia, Edison and Pathé which left him free to sing also for the smaller companies. He was engaged by nearly every American record company during 1919 and the earlier 1920's. The tenor made many solo records for Edison, but never did any "tone test" work. Undoubtedly, his demonstrating the musical merits of the New Edison wouldn't have been popular with the other companies sharing his contract.

James told me that, as far as he could recall, Robert Lewis was the only assumed name he used, aside from Harold Harvey a nom de disque which appeared on the labels of some of the records he made for "His Master's Voice" in Montreal. I recalled, however, that he was dubbed "Robert Bruce" on a number of Pathés, and Bruce Wallace on some Victors and Okeh's. He was also called "Uncle Lewis" on a series of seven-inch records for children. He was surprised when I told him the Shannon Four was usually the Lyric Male Quartet on Edison Diamond Discs and Blue Amberol cylinders. As the Lyric, the quartet sang in support of such Edison stars as Frieda Hempel, Maggie Teyte, Marie Rappold, Virginia Rea and Anna Case. He commented sadly that "'Virginia Rea—poor girl!—died of a broken heart after an unhappy marriage and the break-up of her singing career." At another time, thinking of how many of his recording associates had died, the tenor said reflectively: "Before many years, we old-timers who are still around will just be museum pieces!" His comments on the artists with whom he had worked were uniformly kind and friendly and he appeared genuinely shocked when I mentioned a few who had fallen on evil days. I have never met any famous man with a more modest, unassuming personality than Lewis James, nor one with a more complete absence of affectation.

I asked Lewis how it happened that the Shannon Four, of which he became a member in 1918, chose that name. He said it was because John McCormack and other famous singers had made Irish ballads so popular the quartet decided to specialize in them—hence, Shannon from Ireland's River Shannon. After five years or so as the Shannon Four it was decided to change the last word to Quartet, because—as James expressed it—"we thought Shannon Four sounded too much like a vaudeville outfit."

This photo of the The Revelers, sent to Jim Walsh by Elliott Shaw, shows the group in Paris and was taken in 1928 during one of the ensemble's triumphal European tours. Left to right: Lewis James, second tenor; Frank Banta, pianist; Wilfred Glenn, basso and manager; Elliott Shaw, baritone; and James Melton, first tenor.

I said I had suspected the title came from an amalgamation of the names of its members, and pointed out that Shannon begins with the first three letters of Elliott Shaw's patronymic. It also contains the first two letters of Charles Hart's last name, ends with the "double n" in the family name of Wilfred Glenn, and includes the first two letters of Harvey Hindermeyer's first name. Lewis looked astonished and said he had never before given a thought to those odd combinations, but he could assure me the Shannon Four didn't derive its distinctive designation from scrambling up the names of its four original members.

He also hadn't known that the Shannon Four was usually disguised on Pathé records as the Acme Male Quartet, and that the Crescent Trio was turned into the Apollo Trio. Names of the quartet members were frequently disguised. Hart and Shaw were often called Charles Cinway and Frank Sterling. In fact, Pathé took more liberties with artists' names than any other company.

In view of previous experiences with favorite pioneer recording artists, I suppose I shouldn't have been surprised to learn Lewis James doesn't or didn't, own even one copy of his records, but I couldn't help being a bit taken aback. I have always felt that if I had been a popular singer I would have kept at least half a dozen of each of my records, for posterity's sake, in a fireproof vault. But since James made thousands the storage problem would have been more, no doubt, than he would care to undertake.

Referring to his statement that the Shannon Four had intended to specialize in Irish songs, I amused the tenor by telling him that the Gramophone, England's leading record magazine, once referred to him as an Irish tenor and praised his "pleasant Irish accent." He told me something I hadn't known—that he sometimes sang the lead in the Columbia Stellar Quartet when Reed Miller was out of New York, filling concert and oratorio engagements or was otherwise unavailable. He spoke affectionately of the late Billy Murray and recalled that the Revelers sang in support of Billy on a radio program which featured the erstwhile "Denver Nightingale" in the spring of 1927. He chuckled over Billy's notorious free-handedness with money when Murray was the top recording comedian.

Mention of the Eight Famous Victor Artists, of whom Billy Murray was a member, of course brought up thoughts of the Eight's manager, Henry Burr, known in his later years as "The Dean of Ballad Singers." James expressed admiration for Burr's ability as a singer. Talking of a trip to England and France taken by the Revelers in 1928, James gave me a laugh by describing how Frank Banta, who had been pianist for the Eight Victor Artists, used to baffle hotel clerks by assuming a thick "Cohen-on-the-telephone" accent, redolent of the New York East Side, and imperiously demanding mail for Monroe Silver. Silver, like Banta, was a member of the Eight for years, and he spoke in real life exactly as he did on his records. The temptation to pretend to be "Mike" Silver and to demand in his name mail from harassed English and French men behind the hotel desk was more than the impish Frank could resist.

When we spoke of the Shannon Four, Lewis said Charles Hart (who at this writing is appearing in a Broadway theatrical production, "Witness for the Prosecution") could always be reached through the Lambs Club in New York. Elliott Shaw, he said, had "saved his money" and was living in retirement in Sharon, Connecticut. Wilfred Glenn was still active in concert work and had revived the Revelers, but with only himself remaining from the original troupe. Phil Duey, who succeeded Shaw as the ensemble's baritone after Elliott had a long illness, was described as a "studious chap." He had taken a doctorate degree at Columbia University and was teaching at the University of Michigan. We laughed at the difficulty the quartet had in keeping a first tenor after Charles Hart left it in 1924 to study opera singing in Germany. He was succeeded, generally for fairly brief periods, by Franklyn Baur, Charles Harrison, Frank Parker, Robert Simmons, James Melton, and perhaps others.

Lewis said he didn't realize, until he went abroad with the Revelers, how a popular recording artist was a well loved, almost a legendary figure, in millions of homes throughout the world. I told him that my brother Chad, now a professor at Beloit College in Wisconsin, once remarked of the pioneer recording artists: "I suppose they were just folks trying to make an honest living, but to me they will always be the most glamorous of all people." Lewis laughed and said the recording artists hadn't thought of themselves in that exalted light. "But the reception we got abroad," he remarked, "was really an eye-opener." He recalled circumstances of the Revelers giving command performances for members of the British Royal Family, as was related a few months ago in the HOBBIES article about Ed Smalle.

Lewis said he detested jazz, but liked the choral arrangements used by the Revelers. These were sometimes called "jazz choral effects," but he didn't consider them jazz. I learned he came to Chicago in 1940 when his health became impaired and he had to give up singing. He had since been with WGN and said he was "very happy" in his production work.

When I left the distinguished tenor it was with the feeling that I had experienced one of the most pleasant meetings I have known in my long career of interviewing and "writing up" recording artists. A few hours later I received another agreeable reception from the equally famous "Red-Headed Music Maker," Wendell Hall, whose records of "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'" swept the nation late in 1923.

IV Lewis James Records

Lewis James is one of those artists whose recorded achievements are so vast it would be impossible to chronicle them in less than a book-length biography. However, I shall trace briefly his recording career and give some idea of the kinds of records he made. From December, 1916, until early in 1918, he seems to have been exclusive to Columbia. In January, 1917, a new male quartet was introduced with "Robert Lewis" as the lead singer. The Columbia supplement writer said:

"Introducing the Knickerbocker Quartet! A new specialty quartet—destined to become one of the most popular singers of popular music in Columbia Catalogs—makes its initial bow in the current list. Our Recording Department has spent great efforts developing the Knickerbocker vocal ensemble and special attention is requested from our patrons to the happy results. The Knickerbocker counts its members: George Eldred, first tenor; Robert Lewis, second tenor; William Morgan, baritone; and Glenn Howard, bass. All these gentlemen are musicians of real merit and have individually sung with marked success before the public for a number of years." The quartet's first record, A2129, "Songs of Yesterday," was combined with "Everybody Loves an Irish Song," by M. J. O'Connell and the Knickerbockers. Records by the Knickerbocker Quartet continued to appear for another year.

"Robert Lewis" stuck around through most of 1918 (by the way, Columbia photos showed him smooth shaven instead of with the later familiar mustache), but "mystery man" Lewis disappeared from the lists forever in November, 1918, when Record No. A2618, "My Little Gypsy Wanda," was announced as sung by Lewis James, doubled with "Roses of Picardy," by Charles Harrison. Lewis James remained a familiar name in Columbia supplements for the next decade.

The tenor's first Victor appearance was in May, 1918, when, on No. 18441, he sang "All Aboard for Home, Sweet Home," with the assistance of the Shannon Four. (This must have been made just at the time he succeeded Harvey Hindermeyer as the Shannon's second tenor.) His first name was misspelled as "Louis." (Columbia also was occasionally guilty of that slip). The other side was "Send Me a Curl," sung by the still active Geoffrey O'Hara.

James' first Edison Diamond Disc, issued in the fall of 1919, was a beautiful rendition, with mixed chorus assistance, of "Dreamy Alabama," coupled with "Carolina Sunshine," an equally lovely number by Vernon Dalhart. His initial Pathé appears to have been 20193, "Sometime You'll Remember," with Isabelle Cannon singing on the reverse side, "I'll Sing Thee Songs of Araby."

As a soloist, Lewis James was called on, like other popular tenors, (Continued on page 39)

F. L. BALL

COLLECT - BUY - SELL - EXCHANGE

High Grade Banks and Toys for Collectors

Mechanical Penny Banks - Still Banks
Cap Pistols - Bell Toys - Engines & Trains
Fire Apparatus - Circus Items - Cannons
Old Tin and Iron Toys of Every Description

Largest stock of old Banks
and Toys in United States.

Correspondence Invited

45 Fresh Pond Lane,
Cambridge 38, Massachusetts

$100 and up paid for many kinds of mechanical banks.
List of prices I pay for 235
different banks only 25c.

E. L. ROMEY
Box 291
Bluffton, Indiana

We are accepting orders for
REPAIR SERVICE
on
MECHANICAL
BANKS and TOYS
We Also Buy Old Banks

GEORGE W. BAUER
P. O. Box 145
Pottstown, Pa.

MECHANICAL BANKS & TOY PISTOLS

Especially Want:

MECHANICAL BANKS:

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| • TURTLE(Sticks head out)                        | • JAPANESE BALLTOSSER(Tin, wind-up)  |
| • BOW-ERY BANK                                       | • BULL &amp; BEARBANK                    |
| • PRESTO(Mouse on roof)                          | • COASTING BANK                              |
| • CAMERA BANK(Picturo pops up)                   | • MUSICAL SAVINGBANK(You pay—I play) |
| • JONAH &amp; WHALE(Jonah emergesfrom whale) | • CLOWN ON BAR(Tin figure)               |
| • BOWLING ALLEYBANK                              | • BIRD ON ROOFPULPIT                     |
| • RED RIDING HOOD                                    | • PREACHER IN THEPULPIT                  |
| • FOOTBALL(Colored man kicksball)            | • WINNER SAVINGJUMBO                     |
| • SCHLEY BOTTLINGUP CERVERA                      | • ELEPHANT BABY(Opens X O'clock)         |
| • MONKEY& PARROT(Tin)                        | • RYVAL                                      |
| • PRESTO(Penny changes toquarter)            | • NATIONAL                                   |
|   | • AMERICAN BANK(Sewing Machine)          |

PISTOLS:

- |                               |                       |
|-------------------------------|-----------------------|
| • CAMERA               | • OSCAR WILDE  |
| • MOON FACE            | • BOMB         |
| • TURTLE               | • DEVIL'S HEAD |
| • SAILING SHIP         | • BOMB         |
| • TWO DOGS ONBENCH |                       |

Also want Cast Iron horse drawn carriages, animated bell ringing pull toys, old toy automobiles and old catalogs showing banks and toy pistols.

F. H. GRIFFITH
HARRIS PUMP & SUPPLY CO.
Pittsburgh 3, Pa.

LEWIS JAMES

(Continued from page 32)

to sing a wide range of music that included classic, semi-classic and standard concert numbers at one extreme, and the banal, trivial "sob ballad" at the other. Typical of the "tripe" he perforce recorded are "The Pal That I Loved Stole the Gal That I Loved," "The Ten Commandments of Love," "You Can't Be a Good Little Fellow and Still Be a Good Little Girl," "Just a Girl That Men Forget," "It's a Man Every Time, It's a Man," and "If You Like Me Like I Like You." Perhaps the depths of banality were plumbed in "My Kid," which contains the immortal lines: "He comes down stairs in his little white nightie and says his prayers to God Almighty . . . there's no kid like my kid."

James re-made a good many standard songs and hymns which had been originally recorded for Victor by pioneer singers who included Harry Macdonough and Frederic C. Freemantel. The Shannon Quartet also re-made some Hayden Quartet offerings. Another tenor who was called on for "re-makes" was William Robyn. James told me "Wee Willie's" name should be pronounced Roe-bine, instead of Robin, as most record collectors have always called it.

An especially fine James record is the Edison of "Duna." Another Edison, which, both sides considered, may be the finest semi-classic record he ever made, couples Ernest R. Ball's setting of Paul Lawrence Dunbar's poem, "Who knows?" with the equally beautiful "Look Down, Dear Eyes." But when I mentioned this fine record to Lewis he couldn't remember making it. My opinion is that he was always great in the charming ballads of Ernest Ball. Those recorded for Edison included "Little Crumbs of Happiness," "Down the Trail to Home, Sweet Home" and "Ten Thousand Years From Now."

During his career James recorded with many singers. His first duet partner was "George Wilson," who also sang as James Harrod, but was better known as Colin O'More. Then came Charles Harrison; Charles Hart (he probably sang more duets with Hart than with anyone else); Elliott Shaw; Helen Clark; Harold Wiley (a Brooklyn church singer baritone, who died a few years ago, with whom he sang for Pathé); Vernon Archibald; Marcia Freer; Olive Kline (disguised as "Alice Green"); Sam Ash; "Edna Brown" (another name for Elsie Baker); Franklyn Baur; Claire Brookhurst; Della Baker; Helen Davis (Mrs. Victor Young); Elizabeth Spencer; Gladys Rice; Betsy Lane Shepherd; and, on one Columbia record, a singer listed as May Meredith. He doesn't remember this soprano, but she may have been Helen Clark. In one of his Victor records he had the backing of the Peerless Quartet (Albert Campbell, Henry Burr, John Meyer and Frank Croxton), and as a member of the Shannon Four and Crescent Trio he sang in support of Wendell Hall, Harry C. Browne and Vernon Dalhart, besides artists already mentioned. I may have overlooked others. From the standpoint of both quantity and quality Lewis James has had a remarkable phonograph career.

I have such pleasant memories of my 1951 visit to Chicago that I am thinking of spending another few days there when I take my next vacation. If I do I shall make a point of dropping around at the Tribune Tower and seeing Lewis James. From our one meeting I am sure he makes friends easily and keeps them permanently. I know his HOBBIES admirers will join me in wishing him restored health and many years of congenial activity.

MECHANICAL ANTIQUES WANTED

PLEASE NOTE my mechanical bank display ad in this section, listing various wants.—F. H. Griffith, Harris Pump & Supply Co., Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfx

OLD TOY TRAINS WANTED: Mechanical, electric, trolley cars, old catalogs. Send description to Bill Krames, 139 Windsor Road, Yardley, Pa. O3023

WANTED: Catalogs showing threshing machines and steam traction engines.—Vic Wintermantel, Bellevue, Pa. d6614

OLD ELECTRICAL DEVICES wanted Sal Ammoniac wet cell batteries, motors, fans, dynamos, switches, receptacles, light bulbs, fuses, books, and any other items used in the early days of electricity, 1879 to 1910. Mail me your list and I will quote on same.—George N. DeLaplane, P. O. Box 861, New Brunswick, New Jersey. o64661

WANTED MECHANICAL Penny banks any condition. Please quote price in first letter.—Daniel Cutliff, 121 Roma Ave., Buffalo, New York. o6046

I WILL PAY top cash prices for your Mechanical Banks. Mail description and cash price wanted to:—The Bank Man, 430 Minnehaha Ave., Clermont, Florida. f6008

FOR SALE

HANDBOOK Old American Toys. 500 pictures, $3.58.—Dr. Kowal, 1846 Cullerton, Chicago. d3291

A MUSICAL BOX DESK

An unusual Swiss musical box which recently stirred the collecting delight of Mrs. Ruth Bornand, Pelham, New York, is in the shape of a parlor or church organ, though it is actually a musical box desk. It was made by Nicole Frere.

It has an engraved silver name plate and silver inkwells. It also has engraved spring barrels, two sectional comb, and ten cylinders which play eight selections. Inside the lid is a silver engraved program card.

In the 18th and 19th centuries Swiss farmers, and later watchmakers, produced fine music boxes. The latter installed mechanisms in umbrella handles, walking sticks, steins, pistols, dolls and similar items.

Famous people have collected musical boxes, including Napoleon. Not long ago Bing Crosby bought a fine old mahogany box with an ebony trim.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

By JIM WALSH

Ruby and Morton Harvey in their stage days

The First Singer Who Made a "Blues" Record MORTON HARVEY

As regular readers of this department have become aware, I frequently remark that I never cease to wonder at the obliging manner in which coincidence, fate, Providence or some other inscrutable factor in human affairs arranges things so that I eventually get the information I need about formerly popular recording artists. Sometimes the help comes in unexpected ways.

A couple of years ago, a New York man asked me if I could give him the address of Morton Harvey. It seemed the gentleman was an ardent pacifist who collected songs opposing war, and he wanted to write and ask Harvey where he could get a copy of the Victor record of "I Didn't Raise My Boy to be a Soldier" which was issued back in 1915. I replied, telling the inquirer I had been trying for years to find out something about Morton Harvey, but had learned nothing and had no idea whether the singer was still with us. I also said he should be able to get a good copy of the record from Gertrude Heyman, Al McRea or some of the other regular HOBBIES advertisers. He wrote me a little later that Mrs. Heyman had supplied him with a "mint pressing."

Then, in July, 1954, I received a letter from Charles Lindsley, a disc jockey at KYA, San Francisco. After assuring me that he was "one of your most avid fans," Chuck made my eyes protrude by going on:

I wonder if you've entertained the thought of doing an article on the old-time disc artist, Morton Harvey. He's hale and hearty, 68, and lives just 35 miles south of San Francisco. You may of course have his address, but just in case you haven't here 'tis: Morton Harvey, P. O. Box 66, Los Gatos, California. He was recently a guest on my competitor's radio program, "Dusty Records." I missed this, but was told that he was very genial and felt quite at home before the "mike" as he had been on radio in the early days.

Mr. Harvey related one amusing anecdote about his old "recording horn days." This was in regard to a session at the Edison studios. The critical Thomas Alva was in attendance with his favorite dog and, as the story goes, if the canine walked out during the artist's vocal efforts the record in question wasn't issued. Thus, Mr. Harvey says, what he considers one of his best songs was never released.

I understand that Morton Harvey recorded under many aliases, including "Gene Rogers." . . . I understand also that if you send him any of his old records he will send you a recent photograph of himself with a personal message on it. I saw this particular photo and it reveals a rather dapper fellow with a flashy mustache and a roguish look in his eye.

Morton Harvey also said that he was about the first artist to record the "blues", referring to his discing of "The Memphis Blues", but said that there are no jazz aspects to the platter because the musicians were from the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. My favorite record of his is "I Want to Go Back to Michigan", I'll . . . be looking for a series of articles on the Happiness Boys, Billy Jones and Ernie Hare.

II. I HEAR FROM MORTON HARVEY

I was elated at receiving this interesting letter and wrote to Morton Harvey that same day, telling him how glad I was to learn he was still here and thriving. My letter mentioned some of my recollections of his recording career, as well as the fact that my brother Edward had seen him appear years ago in a vaudeville sketch with Jimmy Alman as his partner.

The erstwhile vaudeville and recording comedian whom I was soon thinking of as an old friend didn't lose much time in replying. Under date of July 21 he wrote:

Friend Jim: Don't shake the envelope. Your photo will be along later. We are bizzyazell. We make young ones out of old ones. Photos, that is. We do everything, and only Mrs. and Me. The Craftsmen got swamped out by photography. We do color and copying and restorations.

That's an interesting little sheet you enclosed with Billy Murray's pix in it. Where does he live now? He made the discovery or really 'dug me up' when I was with Al Field's Minstrels in 1912 or '13. We were in Jersey and he told me to look him up when our season closed, and I did. I went into show biz with "The Time, the Place and the Girl" road show out of Chicago. Born in Omaha the year of the big snow, 1886. Father and mother were away the day I came along. I was visiting Mother's sister. (Read that again.)

Yes I was in vaudeville with Jimmy Alman and where he is I'll never know. I tried to reach him and then we came out here. We still do some of the old act Betty and I did as Mort and Betty Harvey. . . I find I must run a few pix of me and some of Betty and me. She was one of the Nunn-Bush program singers, introduced by Bill Hayes of Amos and Andy's first hit radio fame. . .

"Gene Rogers" is my only other wax name. I had 18 releases one month for Emerson records. Where are these old platters, or saucers, available if anywhere? I am trading a personally autographed photo for any of my old records. More later. In haste, MORTON HARVEY.

III. A NEWSPAPER INTERVIEW

The foregoing letter calls for a few remarks. It was written on stationery containing Morton Harvey's name, followed by the initials A. R. P. S., and by an insignia showing he is a member of the Photographers' Association of America. According to the letterhead, Morton and his wife, Betty, make copies and restorations of old and new photographs. They also make photostats and color portraits, in addition to doing ordinary picture taking work.

It's also worthy of note that the singer, whom Victor called a tenor but all other companies for whom he recorded described as a baritone, was "discovered" by Billy Murray. Several prominent recording artists — Ada Jones, Walter Van Brunt and Ed Smalle among them — owe their start in the recording profession to encouragement and help given by the big-hearted Billy. I was glad to write Morton that Billy was living in Freeport, N. Y., and seemed in reasonably good health, but only a month later I had the sad task of letting him know his old friend had died of a heart attack while preparing to witness a production of Guy Lombardo's "Arabian Nights" spectacle at Jones Beach.

Morton sent me a photostat of a feature story about him in the San Jose Mercury-News for Sunday, January 23, 1949. The article, "Presenting Harvey, Former Thespian," was written by Carol Greening. I'll quote the parts that should be of most interest to HOBBIES readers:

LOS GATOS, January 22—"But what will you say about me when you introduce my act?" inquired Madame Nazimova of Morton Harvey, behind scenes at the 85th St. Theater in New York.

"I will say 'I now present a lady and an artist who needs no introduction!'" Harvey replied with a flourish.

"Artist I will try to be, but not a lady!" said the great dramatic actress emphatically.

This is but one tale stored away in the treasure house of memories that belongs to Morton Harvey and his wife Betty. . . They trod the boards for many happy years in vaudeville circuits throughout the country, making friends with such greats as Fred Allen, Jack Benny and Mary Livingstone, and Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy.

Harvey, a genial gentleman who has never lost his knack for a deadpan quip, came from a non-theatrical family in Omaha, Nebraska. His grandfather had brought over the first Aberdeen Angus cattle to this country, had founded the town of Harvey, Ill., and looked askance at his grandson's singing ability.

But Morton used to slip away and see a family who encouraged his ambitions, and finally when Phil Schwartz told him to go to Chicago to try out for a road show of "The Time, the Place and the Girl", he didn't say no. He became part of the chorus, secretly understudied every male part of the cast, and finally got a chance to play the organ grinder. (Note by J. W. Morton says he was living in Chicago at this time and Schwartz was with the Chicago office of the Jerome Remick music firm.)

After the show disbanded in 1913 he joined Al Field's minstrels. In New York, Alfred Solman heard him sing and introduced him to Billy Murray, a phonograph singer. An audition was arranged for Harvey and he began to make Victor, Edison and Columbia records.

This led to his first outstanding achievement—the job of making the first vocal blues record—"Memphis Blues"—for a major company. "The members of the Philharmonic Orchestra who did the instrumental work had quite a time adjusting themselves to the music," Harvey reminisces.

One day Harvey saw Enrico Caruso making 11 records in one day at the Victor plant in Camden, N. J.—with retails, about 50 arias were sung in all. The next day Caruso got a pan-ping from the critics for being in poor voice at a "Pagliacci" performance at the Metropolitan, Harvey says.

During these years of making recordings and working in vaudeville all over the country, Harvey met Lou Holtz, among other stars. Holtz and Joe Howard and Harvey were all staying at the Palace Hotel in San Francisco. Howard and Harvey took to each other immediately because Harvey remembered all the words and music to every one of Howard's songs—even some Howard had forgotten he wrote. Harvey and Howard even collaborated on a song—to find that it actually was the same melody as one Howard had written many years before. Fred Allen, Al Jolson, Jim and Molly Jordan (Fibber McGee and Molly), Eddie Foy—all were either stars or working their way up via the vaudeville route when Harvey knew them. But the person he liked best on and off stage was his "partner's partner," (Betty) whom he met in Greensburg, Pa., in 1925.

IV. MORTON HARVEY'S "CONFESSION"

A short time after I received Morton Harvey's first letter, he sent me his "confession"—a batch of hastily jotted pencil notes set down to give me information for this article. From this I learned his father was Charles A. Harvey of Chicago and his mother, Elizabeth M. Plummer of Connecticut. HOBBIES' Mark Twain expert, Cyril Clemens, will probably be interested to learn that Harvey's parents were married in the girlhood home of

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX COMPANY
P. O. Box 355

Hanover, Massachusetts

Christmas tunes for the 15 1/4" Regina music box at $2.50 each Still Night, Holy Night, O Santissima, Adagio Fideles, White Christmas, Jingle Bells, Noel, Hark, The Herald Angels Sing, Santa Claus is Coming to Town, Come Hither Ye Children, O Tannenbaum.

We manufacture 200 other tunes for the 15 1/4" Regina, tune list furnished on request.

We have for sale also many fine disc type music boxes ranging in size from 8" diameter discs to 27" diameter discs. We also have a large assortment of Swiss music boxes from one and 2 tone musical numbers to large table music boxes with extra cylinders playing as many as 72 tunes.

We also have a catalogue on new music boxes we manufacture such as our dancing dolls, dolls in picture frame and under domes, and our new and latest item is a six door musical cigarette box. ttc

JIM WALSH WANTS TO BUY

Old phonograph record catalogs and supplements (mostly prior to 1915); back copies of phonograph publications and all sorts of reference material dealing with the history and development of sound recording that will provide background information for Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Please do not send me lists of records for sale. I am not interested in buying phonographs and records by mail and do not want "The Victor Book of the Opera." Do not submit material without being instructed by me. I will not pay for or return unsolicited items. If I do not reply I already have the material you offer. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. Address:

JIM WALSH

Box 476

Vinton, Va.

tfx

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

Harriet Beecher Stowe in Hartford, across the street from where Mark Twain lived. The three Plummer girls, Harvey says, were "Mark's pets," and the humorist attended Elizabeth's wedding.

"Grandfather Harvey," Morton wrote, "was T. W. Harvey of Chicago, lumber man and importer of the first Aberdeen Angus cattle to America . . . I came along in the '80's, but the panic of '89 wiped Dad out of a lush luxury business - the Omaha Mantle and Tile Company, with offices at 1514 Farnum street.

"We moved to the new town of Harvey in time to see from our windmill the Cold Storage Building fire at the World's Columbian Exposition in 1893. Finally, to school in Chicago, and mother's sisters wanted me to go to school in the East to relieve pressure at home — three other children and a marvelous stepmother. Dad without a job. I always sang boy soprano and a quick switch to bass in the Illinois glee club, a male quartet in Lyceum. I also did readings and was one of the Bell Ringers. By this time I was back from school in the East. They wanted me to become a preacher, but I wanted show business.

"Then Riverview Park and White City opened in Chicago and I became a high class saloon canary until Phil Schwarz gave me a card to Hamilton Coleman, who was producing 'The Time, The Place and the Girl'. He signed me as a tenor, so off we went to Chicago, on a coast-to-coast season and my first Orange Blossoms. No wedding bells — just olfactory blossoms.

"Summer came, and the moving pictures in legit houses with slides and singer. The following season, Al Jolson was doing a whistling specialty in Lew Dockstader's Minstrels. The show played Decatur, Illinois, so our 'flicker show' laid off, but Tom Ronan, manager of the Opera House, said 'You should hear my singer.' So they did, after the show — Jolson, Dockstader, the company and me. Eddie Cupero was the minstrel orchestra director, and he asked me what ballads I knew. I didn't even know what a ballad was, so I handed him my music. Eddie picked out 'Till the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold,' and I sang it. Dockstader and Jolson walked down the aisle toward me at the piano and asked, 'How much money would you have to have to join the troupe?' I said, 'Do you think $25.00 would be too much?'

"Lew turned to Al and said, 'What the h-l do you suppose is the matter with the kid?' I was to have taken the place of Will H. Thompson (famous as a phonograph singer in the early days of recording). He was getting $125.00, but when he heard me Will changed his mind about quitting.

"Montgomery, the Motion Picture Man' heard about me and sent for me to come to Jacksonville. Then I played his picture theatres and in Memphis I was signed up by Al Field's Minstrels. We played in New Jersey, but went to New York to hear some new songs at one of the publishers'. Billy Murray heard me and took me to the phonograph companies. That's how my recording career started.

"I played vaudeville with an old-fashioned 'audience act,' then went to the Manhattan Trio, and then it was King and Harvey for several years. The act had been Stepp, Mehlinger and King—the first rathskeller act out of the Tonopah, Nevada, gold rush days.

"Alman and Harvey was the first talking and singing act I did. I gained much experience in stagecraft with Jimmy. We split because he didn't like the dressing room in Watertown, New York, so I went on that afternoon and did a 'single,' which I was doing when I met Betty. I played 'round' once or twice as 'the Rolling Stone,' a fairly successful singing and talking monolog, then it was Betty and I from then on. We met in Greensburg, Pa. She had been with Ralph Dunbar acts (singing) and was one of the Nunn-Bush Singers on radio. She also was featured in 'Robin Hood' in the Jessie Bartlett Davis role for Dunbar, coast to coast tour. I needed Betty in those days when I didn't have her. She has been an inspiration and a guiding light to me since the first day we met. It was Thanksgiving Day and I have never ceased to give thanks for that day.

"We came west on a Pantages tour when Jolson was making his first talkie, and after two Christmas days in New Amsterdam we felt that the talkies would kill vaudeville, so we got out. I had been interested in photography. I carried a camera (8x10) and did portraits of Mae West when Harry Richman was her pianist at Shea's, Buffalo, Vera Gordon, and many others. We played Chicago, and C. L. Carrell, who was far ahead of his day, was trying to sell transcriptions to radio stations. He had four one-lung portables (100 watts), with one just allowed to anchor at Ponca City, Oklahoma. So Betty and I were sent down to manage it and to build up good will.

"We were there 14 years and came out here to do some work for the soldiers after Pearl Harbor. Not photography, but setting them right on the idea of their place in God's universe and how to think in combat, etc. Then the War Manpower Commission needed some instructors for the job training of supervisors in war plants, so they sent for me at Camp Roberts, where I had been doing some preliminary work so well that I became a normal instructor on job relations in the San Francisco area.

"Came D Day and that training was doomed, so they gave me charge of personnel at an Army hospital until it closed. The day it closed I saw a

(Continued on page 41)

MUSIC BOX DISCS

MIRA music box discs, 18½" $3. 15½" $2.50; 12" $1.50; 9¼" $1.; 6-13/16" $0.75. Plus postage and insurance. Send for lists. No Reginas. —Squires, 2328 Channing, Berkeley, California. n1633

CURRENT COLLECTORS' RECORDINGS

By ALLEN G. DEBUS

LIBBY HOLMAN:

Like Harry Richman, Libby Holman is best remembered to collectors for her work with Brunswick in the late 1920s. She is one of the unforgettable torch song stylists of that period, and Decca has recently reissued two of her finest sides.

Decca 9-11060 (45 rpm) Love for Sale/Moanin' Low (also available on 78 rpm and 33⅓ rpm).

In 1942 Decca released an album by her which was not kept in the catalog very long. For the next ten years she made no records that I know of. But in the December 16, 1953 issue of Variety, a short news item mentioned that Libby Holman had waxed two new Lp albums for a new recording firm called MB Records.

One record was titled "Libby Holman Sings", and the other "Libby Holman's Blues Classics". Her accompanist for these numbers was Gerald Cooke. However, I have never seen these two records for sale in Chicago or environs. Do any of the readers have copies?

RUTH ETTING:

Whenever Hollywood grinds out a film biography of some show business personality the record collectors of that personality almost invari-

MUSIC BOXES

BIRD BOXES and cages with mechanical singing birds, whistling carved figures, and 60 different models of music boxes for jewelry or cigarettes. Unusual Christmas articles for sale. Repairs.—Sponholz, 770 Madison Ave., New York 21, N. Y. n3065

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina 15½", 20¾", 27", 32", Criterion 20½", Mira 6¾", 9¼", 18½", Monarch 15½", New Century 18½", Orphenion 16¼", Polyphon 24½", Stella 14" 17¼", Imperial Symphonion 13½", Thorens 4½". State size wanted. Lists.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, New Jersey. d3367

MUSIC BOX: 6 tunes, three Chinese figures strike bells, very old, $60.—R. D. McWilliams, 1027 Eighth St., Las Vegas, New Mexico. n1061

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

BUY, SELL or trade mechanical pianos, Hurdys Gurdys, Calliopes, Band Organs, Rolls, Write—R. C. Lambert, Monticello, Iowa. d120001

has a souvenir bell made of brass from the Battleship Maine. And a prize ring gong which is attached to a square of wood placed just over her kitchen door.

Animal bells, beside those for dogs and cats, include the common cow bells, goat bells, horse bells, and turkey bells, familiar to many of our pioneering forefathers. There are also camel bells from the Near East, elephant bells from India, and water buffalo bells and sacred bullock bells from the Far East.

Of her school teachers' bells, Mrs. Cole said, "Many of them have remarkably fine tones, as do some of the harness bells. Harness bells always remind me of the days when the towns and cities of Maine were full of their winter music.

"The fun of collecting," Mrs. Cole went on, "is to find out all you can about each item. I read everything I can get my hands on about bells. If possible, I clip the article. So far I have run across relatively few books on bells, but I try to acquire any available.

"I make out a card with a drawing of each bell and list all the data I have," Mrs. Cole continued. "I would not be satisfied to have a collection about which I knew little or nothing."

Then Mrs. Cole added with a charming smile, "You know, I think bells are most appealing to collect because they are the only things I know of that are fun to dust. They 'talk back' and you get a different tone from each one."

MORTON HARVEY

(Continued from page 38)

studio for sale in Los Gatos, and here we have been since 1946. We still sing and write songs and have lots of fun and lots of friends. Business is good, and Betty has a few voice and piano pupils, so we move on."

(To be continued)

ADDITION TO MURRAY— SMALLE DUET LIST

W. M. Allinon of Saylesville, R. I., calls attention to the fact that one record was omitted in the list of duets by Billy Murray and Ed Smalle, published in the recent Ed Smalle series by Oliver R. Graham.

The missing record is Victor 19039, with Murray and Smalle singing "No One Loves You Any Better Than Your M-A-Double M-Y," on one side, and Aileen Stanley on the B side with "Don't Think You'll Be Missed."

The lessons of paternalism ought to be unlearned and the better lesson taught, that while the people should patriotically and cheerfully support their government, its functions do not include the support of the people.

Inaugural Address, March 1893

—Grover Cleveland

CURRENT COLLECTORS' RECORDINGS

(Continued from page 38)

ably have cause to rejoice. The recent recordings of Al Jolson, Helen Kane, Blossom Seeley, Benny Fields, Eddie Cantor, Joe Howard and many others have all been linked to biographical motion pictures — either their life stories or the life stories of other personalities with whom their performances played a vital role.

No exception to the rule is the current "Love Me or Leave Me" in which Doris Day plays the role of Ruth Etting whose stormy private life is the theme of the picture and there is little point in outlining it here. Her professional career began in Chicago in the mid twenties where she became an immediate success and was quickly signed to a Columbia contract.

Her first record for this label was a vocal chorus on the Art Kahn dance record of "Hello Baby" (716-D), recorded in 1926. The following year she moved to New York where she starred in one hit show after another. "The Ziegfeld Follies of 1927" were followed by "The Ziegfeld Follies of 1928", Ziegfeld's "Whoopee" with Eddie Cantor, "The Ziegfeld Follies of 1929", "Simple Simon" with Ed Wynn in 1930, and "The Ziegfeld Follies of 1931". From there she went to Hollywood, appeared on radio and in night clubs, and starred with Eddie Cantor once again in "Roman Scandals".

She was without doubt one of Columbia's most popular vocalists in the late twenties. With the release of her film biography this company has seen fit to reissue some of the finest recordings she made for them.

In this splendid long playing album may be found Ruth Etting's superb version of "Shine on Harvest Moon" which she revived in the 1931 "Follies". Others that come to my mind as among the best of her releases are "Mean to Me", "At Sundown", "Love Me or Leave Me", "Sam the Old Accordion Man", "It All Depends on You", and "Ten Cents a Dance". I think the album is worth its price for these seven titles alone, but besides these, there are five others which many will think are equally good. The recording from the old masters is superbly done and I can recommend this album wholeheartedly.

Columbia album ML 5050 — The

BELLS FOR SALE

NEW BELLS - Bell metal Call Bell or Saigne Legier pattern Cow Bell, $2.00 each. Write for list. — Stonecrest Antiques, Route 2, East Hampton, Conn. (Location Marlborough) ja3614

FARM BELLS complete $15.00. Dealers discounts lots 6 or more. — Patrick's, Box 215, Marion, Ohio. ap6084

Travel Search For Bells

By A. C. Meyer — $2.50

A story about the Meyers personal search for bells, a down-to-earth summary of a fascinating hobby

Published by

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING CORPORATION

1006 So. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill. 60604

Original Recordings of Ruth Etting:
Shine On Harvest Moon
Mean to Me

Shaking the Blues Away
Out in the Cold Again
I'll Never Be the Same

At Sundown
Love Me or Leave Me
Nevertheless

Sam, The Old Accordion Man
It All Depends on You Take Me in Your Arms
Ten Cents a Dance

If I had any complaint at all, it would be that they left out one of my Ruth Etting favorites, "I'm Good for Nothing but Love", (Columbia 2505-D). I am not an expert on the Etting recordings. Her only common ones are those she waxed for Columbia between 1926-1931. However, she also recorded for other companies here and I have one Perfect and one Oriole record by her.

The earliest Decca catalogs also list a few numbers. In England she became a favorite very shortly and, judging from the notices in The Gramophone, most of her American releases must have been made available in that country. Her last English Columbia release seems to have been DB 571 "There Ought to be a Moonlight Saving Time", which is mentioned in the September 1931 issue.

The following months show that her Columbia contract was over, for in October she had a Decca release, in November, a Winner record, and in December an Imperial disc. For those of you who would like to see a complete Etting discography, I urge you strongly to send for a copy of the Fall issue of the International Discophile, in which this material has been promised.

CIGAR STORE FIGURES IN AMERICAN FOLK ART

By W. PORTER WARE
& A. W. PENDERGAST

PRICE $2.50

78 pages, 48 plates

Once these proud chiefs guarded shops along early Main Street through good weather and bad, lending a virile tone to the atmosphere.

Published by

The Lightner Publishing
Corporation
1006 S. Michigan
Chicago 5, Ill.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

By JIM WALSH

The First Singer Who Made a "Blues" Record MORTON HARVEY

(Continued from the November issue)

V Excerpts From Other Letters

In the same envelope that contained his "confession," Morton sent me a letter which he neglected to date, from which I shall select some items of interest:

Friend Jim: I haven't been forgetting you. How can I? More people are writing me that they heard from you about me. The funny part about it is they come from everywhere. They all say that they are enjoying, and have been enjoying, my little and big records.

I printed some pix this a. m. and will try to make some notes to give you an outline. We are closed today, as every Monday, and expected to be at the beach in time for lunch. It is coming up one o'clock. The lunch is packed and we haven't left yet.

I have in my files a letter . . . from Thomas P. Westendorf, who wrote "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen," saying he was enjoying the "Michigan" record of Irving Berlin's song (sung by me) many times each day . . . I can't tell how I sound now, but I'll bet in two or three weeks I could cut a couple of honeys on platters.

Later—I am back from a day at the beach. Didn't even get out of the car. Beach too dirty. Dogs, kids and picnic litter.

I am sure you and I could write a book. I have a good memory and an abundance of material . . . I have a list including Belle Baker, Pat Rooney, Eugene O'Brien, Sophie Tucker, Frank Van Hooten, Van and Schenk, Fred Allen and Fred Ardath of the Country Store—a wonder of show business, five to seven companies playing all circuits and the Winter Garden. Six people, top salary, $35, bringing in from $750 up for years. My partner, Jimmy Alman, was partner in this venture with Ardath. So many laughs and such accurate timing no one ever heard the lines until one day at rehearsal, Fred and Jimmy heard the lines and walked out on their own golden egg. The show went on.

I am enclosing two self-portraits of myself. The light one would make a good reproduction for you . . . Kindest regards and sorry for the delay, but the first day in August we had 12 sittings in the studio and the next day six, and there are only two of us and the dog. Still they come, and we work long hours, besides the other things we do. Betty is organist and I am an officer in Eastern Star, and I was chaplain of the Elks last year plus some other activities, so we go from about 6:30 a. m. until 11 at night. Right now I have been printing pix since 7:30 a. m., and Betty is just finishing a piano lesson, which she gives two or three mornings a week before the photo department opens at 10 a. m.

Morton wrote me another letter on Monday, August 30, after I had told him of Billy Murray's sudden death.

Saturday night I called Station KFRG in San Francisco and told Don Davis, disc jockey, about Billy Murray. I suggested he announce it and play a disc by Billy, which he did on "Old Dusty Records," his program.

Arthur Clough I don't remember, because I came right out of the sticks to Broadway, one music publisher, back to the minstrel show to finish the season, and into New York and the experience of vaude, records, want and plenty, marriage and divorce, but never a police blotter. Don't know how I missed it.

I too lived in Freeport when the Long Island and Good Hearted Thespian Society—LIGHTS—was organized with Leo Carillo as the head man—called the Angel, not president or master.

Here are a couple of things that might be of interest. On one recording at Camden for Victor I was smoking my pet pipe during a "break." The call came for resuming the work. I knocked the ashes out of the pipe on the outside ledge of the window sill and scraped the pipe with my knife. One of the musicians said, "You shouldn't do that!" I replied that the ashes were cold—no fire hazard. He said:

"Harry Lauder has much more money than either of us will ever have. He never throws out ashes. He smokes 'em again!"

On another recording date in the same place we had quite a session trying to get a good cutting of, I think it was, "The Memphis Blues." There was no "dressing a run" of a recording after a master record had been played back. We must sing until the playback sounded O.K., and then make a master just like it. I tried my darndest. We were on the last measure of the last line of the chorus. I was sustaining the note for the ending, when "B-O-O-O-O!" the 12 o'clock whistle at the neighboring Campbell's Soup plant boomed in through the open windows. The orchestra heard it and went into a most discordant finale. The director said, "Wait five minutes, and re-cut!" The re-cut was the final. Incidentally, although the orchestra that accompanied me in "The Memphis Blues" was composed of symphonic players, it wasn't their fault that they didn't get a "blues" quality into the record. The "Blues" style of singing and playing, which became so familiar later, was just about to be born. Even the dance records of "The Memphis Blues" made during that period were played as straight one-steps. However, there were a few good old-fashioned "trombone smears" in the orchestral effects of my "Memphis Blues" record.

At Emerson's office one day I was hearing the coming month's releases when up popped "Old Black Joe" by a tenor. I said, "That should be done by a bass or baritone." I nodded to the pianist, he played it. I sang it, so we went back to record it immediately. That's why a tenor had me to back him up—Henry Burr, on "My Old Kentucky Home," Emerson 773. I don't know why Victor called me a tenor. None of the others did. "Shoeboot's Serenade" I don't recall, but it was probably a Negro parody on the Schubert's Serenade melody.

There was a story that Thomas Alva Edison couldn't hear anything, but he and Mrs. Edison and a dog listened to every release. If the dog walked out of the room (the story went) the record was discarded. I worked all one morning on a recording of "Look in Her Eyes," which on the Victor was made by George MacFarlane. When it failed to be released on Edison I asked about it and was told, "The dog must have walked out on you." (This song was issued on an Edison record by another baritone, Vernon Archibald. —J. W.) There was no official note of rejection, and I didn't care much, because Edison paid off immediately after the record was cut.

VI Morton Harvey's Records

I'm sure all the readers of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists have enjoyed the genial comedian-photographer's reminiscences of his colorful career. We may pass now to a brief discussion of his records.

Morton Harvey's first Victor records were issued in December, 1914, with no fanfare. For several years, beginning in July, 1913, Victor didn't give individual descriptions of its popular records, but listed them on one page under some such heading as "Song Hits of the Month." One of Harvey's first was 17650, "I Want to Go Back to Michigan," (the Irving Berlin song so much enjoyed by Thomas P. Westendorf) coupled with "At the Mississippi Cabaret," by the American Quartet. The other was 17649, "At the Ball, That's All," the reverse side of which was perhaps the first song to be written about the fox trot, which has now been a standard dance step for 40 years. It was "Do the Funny Fox Trot," sung by Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan.

In January, 1915, came perhaps the biggest seller of Harvey's entire list, No. 17657, W. C. Handy's immortal "Memphis Blues," doubled with "The Mississippi Barbecue," by Collins and Harlan. (First a "Mississippi Cabaret," then a "Barbecue") Recording this number gave Morton Harvey the distinction of being the first singer to make a record of a blues song. It was not, however, the first blues record. In October, 1914, the Victor Military band had played a one-step version of "The Memphis Blues," and Prince's Band had made a 12-inch Columbia in the same style. Harvey's nevertheless was the first vocal blues record. It didn't meet with a wholly favorable reception in the South, where some listeners resented our friend Morton's pronounced Mid-Western accent and insisted the song should have been sung by someone who sounded more like a Negro. The critics, however, overlooked the fact that the lyrics, by George A. Norton, described the sensations of a visitor to the South, rather than a native—a visitor who heard "The Memphis Blues" played by Handy's Band. Regardless of conservative Southern sentiment, the record was a whopping seller.

A series of "shots" taken by Morton Harvey of himself

In March, 1915, Morton was represented by the song, "I Didn't Raise My Boy to be a Soldier," which was so ardently craved by the pacifist New York gentlemen. The number was 17716, and the coupling was a denunciation of war by Irving Berlin, "Stay Down Here Where You Belong," in which the devil forbade his son to visit the earth, where (because of World War One) the sun said, there was more hell than in Satan's own domains. This was another big selling record, but it was cut out of the Victor catalog when the United States got into the war.

During 1915, Harvey made several Edison records of which two were issued both as Diamond Discs and Blue Amberol cylinders. Both were sung with the assistance of mixed choruses. Diamond Disc 80220 coupled "There's a Bungalow in Dixieland" with "Back to the Carolina You Love," by Owen J. McCormack. Its cylinder number was 2557. D. D. No. 80226 combined my choice of all the Morton Harvey records, "In the Hills of Old Kentucky," with "I Didn't Raise My Boy to be a Soldier," sung by Helen Clark and Chorus. (Obviously, this record also was swept out of the catalog when the war fever raged). The Blue Amberol number of "In the Hills" was 2623. It is a beautiful piece of singing and recording. Concerning it, the Edison supplement writer said: "The feature of this record is the steadiness of Morton Harvey's tones as he sings this charming and catchy melody. As a singer of this type of popular song ballad, Morton Harvey is unsurpassed."

It's worthy of mention that Harvey's records exhibited a considerable price range. His Victors and Columbias sold for 75 cents each and his Edison discs for $1.50, but the seven-inch Emersons which he made later were only 25 cents a copy. The Edison cylinders were 60 cents.

The baritone (or tenor as Victor insisted) wasn't represented in the Victor list again until October, 1916, when he came through with one of his best waxings, the mock-tragic, irresistibly funny "If You Don't Want Me Send Me To My Ma" coupled on 18108 with "Morning, Noon and Night." To my ears his singing improved consistently and considerably as he gained maturity and experience and one of the best of all his records was 18151, "Melody Of My Dream" (composed by "Unknown") combined with "I'm Going Over the Hills to Virginia." "Melody of My Dreams" is an exquisite bit of ballad singing, done in a serious style that wouldn't be expected of the warbler of "Memphis Blues" and "If You Don't Want Me Send Me To My Ma."

The final Victor record by Morton Harvey was 18206, "From Me to Mandy Lee," doubled with "Down at the Huskin' Bee," by the Peerless Quartet. It was issued in September, 1917. Meanwhile, his only Columbia disc had appeared in February, 1917, and was a great seller, No. A2143, "They're Wearing 'Em Higher In Hawaii," with George O'Connor (subject of a 1955 HOBBIES series) being heard on the other side in the rowdy, roistering and slightly ribald "Pray for the Lights to Go Out."

I'm afraid my list of Harvey's seven-inch Emerson records of 1916 and '17 is far from complete. However, the following, which were issued under his own name, may be mentioned:

7130, Honolulu, America Loves You/Tho' I Had a Bit of the Devil in Me (Jim Doherty); 774, I Left Her on the Beach at Honolulu/On the Beach at Waikiki (both by Harvey); 729, Shoeboot's Serenade/Turkey in de Straw (Billy Golden); 759, I've Got the Army Blues/Old Flag Never Touched the Ground (Manuel Romain); 788, There's a Little Bit of Bad in Every Good Little Girl/She is the Sunshine of Virginia (Sam Ash); 791, Pretty Baby/Tennessee Blues (Gene Rogers); 773, Old Black Joe/My Old Kentucky Home (Henry Burr); 785, Turn Back the Universe and Give Me Yesterday/Ireland Must Be Heaven/For My Mother Came From There (Herbert Morley); and 776, You're a Dangerous Girl/Loveland, Beautiful Land of Love (both by Harvey).

These were sung by Morton Harvey under the assumed name of Gene Rogers:

7136, O'Brien is Tryin' to Learn to Talk Hawaiian/Wearin' of the Green (John W. Myers); 787, Pray for the Lights To Go Out/They Made It Twice as Nice as Paradise and They Called It Dixieland (Herbert Morley—whoever he was!); and 791, the already mentioned Tennessee Blues, coupled with Pretty Baby.

It has been a pleasure to tell the life story of Morton Harvey, whose career as a phonograph singer, though comparatively brief, produced so many good records. Here's wishing him and his treasured helpmeet, Betty, many happy years in their charming California retreat.

SOLVING THE MYSTERY OF "SHOEBOOT'S SERENADE"

By Jim Walsh

Several months after the Morton article was written, I found the mysterious "Shoebot's Serenade" listed in a 1917 Emerson record supplement. The composer's name was given as Handy. Surmising that this must be my friend, W. C. Handy, the beloved blind "Daddy of the Blues," I wrote a letter of inquiry and received the following reply, dated July 25:

"For the past year I have spent very little time at the office, having lost my sight, and yet being called on to go here and there to meet the demands of a public that likes to hold on to these old numbers. I forgot my old age and tried to crowd too much into life, and the doctor took me to the hospital to slow me down. Later I had a light stroke that put me in a wheel chair for several months and about all I do now is take it easy.

"While 'St. Louis Blues' is about to enjoy its 41st year of existence, I still feel about my 'Memphis Blues,' which was my first, like a mother does toward a wayward son. When I was leading a band in Memphis we rehearsed all the popular music, committed it to memory and played our dances without music stands, so they got it into their minds that we couldn't read music. In discussing the matter I asked a gentleman to name a classical number and I would put blues lyrics to it, and give it a modern treatment. He challenged me with 'Schubert's Serenade.' I came back with 'Shoebot's Serenade,' a copy of which I will send you. . . I am improving daily, and managed to go to the office on July 11th for our annual meeting of the Board of Directors, where I presided four hours. I will be glad to receive the Morton Harvey article and thank you in advance for it. Wishing you life's blessings to the fullest. . ."

So that solves the mystery of "Shoebot's Serenade." And I'm sure all HOBBIES readers wish a full bounty of life's blessings to that modest genius, W. C. Handy, and hope he will recover his health and sight.

CORRECTION

We wish to correct an error on page 36 of the November issue. The caption under the picture should read, "Betty and Morton Harvey in their stage days" not "Ruby and Morton Harvey . . ." as appeared on some copies.

MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina 15 1/2", 20 3/4", 27", 32", Criterion 20 1/2", Mira 6 3/4", 9 1/4", 18 1/2", Monarch 15 1/2", New Century 18 1/2", Orphenion 16 1/4", Polyphon 24 1/2", Stella 14" 17 1/4", Imperial Symphonion 13 1/2", Thorens 4 1/2". State size wanted. Lists—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, New Jersey. d3867

12" REGINA penny-in-slot with discs. Fascinating paper-roll-operated full size concertina (old fashioned type accordion) "Tanzbar," or will buy additional 2 1/4" rolls for same. Handsome 12" 1906 model Victor phonograph, mahogany trimmed with gold, large wood horn, Queen Anne mahogany stand with record cabinet. Photos 25c.—Phillips, 2335 W. 3rd, Los Angeles 57, Calif. d1044

CURRENT COLLECTORS' RECORDINGS

By ALLEN G. DEBUS

There is one great disadvantage in collecting the recordings of "personalities." Many of the greatest artists on the vaudeville stage should have been seen as well as heard. I recently purchased two records by the very famous English music hall star, Albert Chevalier. These were a great disappointment to me, and I subsequently found out by corresponding with other collectors who had seen Chevalier that although the records are excellent sound reproductions of two of his most famous songs, they just do not do justice to him because he had to be seen to be truly appreciated.

Several times I have sent tape recordings of famous vaudevillians to Jack Norworth and often he has written the same reply. Among them were records by artists of such caliber as Elizabeth Murray, Vesta Tilley, and Elsie Janis. Now the collector of operatic recordings has fewer disappointments such as these because although many singers of the "Golden Age" must also have been great "visual artists," nevertheless in nearly all cases it was the voice which really counted.

Similarly the collector who specializes in the standard popular vocalists of the acoustic era such as Billy Murray, Henry Burr, and Collins and Harlan will rarely be disappointed with the recordings of their favorites. But with the great vaudevillians there are times when the novice collector will wonder why some stars had such a great reputation. It is true that most of these artists of the big time made superb recordings—certainly it is hard to find a bad record by Harry Lauder, Jack Norworth, Nora Bayes, Vesta Victoria, Raymond Hitchcock, Bert Williams, to name a few—but is there a collector who, having a star-studded vision of George M. Cohan singing the "Yankee Doodle Boy" or "Grand Old Flag," found a copy of his "Life's a Funny Proposition After All" and didn't have his dream somewhat deflated?

Only sound motion pictures could remedy this situation, but this is obviously out of the question for the earlier artists. However, about fifteen years ago motion picture "juke boxes" attained some popularity as they have had ever since. For these instruments some of the foremost stars made sound films and used prints may be obtained from photographic supply stores that specialize in motion picture films for the camera enthusiast. A current catalog of available prints may be obtained from Imperial Enterprises, Inc., 34 Park Row, New York 38, N.Y. The prices for these musical shorts 16 mm. 100 ft. - each one plays about three minutes) are reasonable and range from six for $5.00 for prints which have their opening titles reversed (because they were made for rear projection originally) to three for $5.00 for regular prints. Brand new copies are more expensive. Personally I think these are a good buy for any collector who also has a sound motion picture projector. Just to see how they look, I bought 6 for $5.00 and picked up these interesting films:

GENE AUSTIN

"I Want to Be Bad"

BENNY FIELDS

"I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now"

WILLIE HOWARD

"Comes the Revolution"

(Continued on page 37)

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

BUY, SELL or trade mechanical pianos, Hurrys Gurdys, Calliopes, Band Organs, Kongs, Write—R. C. Lambert, Mountcello, Iowa. d12000.

WILL PAY CASH for Cylinder Phonographs and Records, Also Horn type Phonographs and anything pertaining to early phonographs. Write—Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Santa Cruz, Calif. d3614

ARMSTRONG Player Piano Co. has bellows cloth, tubing, leather. New 88 note rolls, $1.00.—222 S. Vassar, Wichita 6, Kansas. ap10111

WANTED: Edison, Columbia Cylinder Phonograph Reproducers. Best prices paid.—August, 12 North Third, Richmond, Virginia. d6084

BUY SELL OR TRADE Coin operated pianos-rolls. Expert repairing all makes. Satisfaction guaranteed.—Dodge House Museum, 2208 W. Chestnut, Dodge City, Kansas. d3863

FOR SALE: Acme Earphone Edison coin operated. Write—Marg. Paape, 602 E. Bdwy., Winona, Minn. d1021

1928 BROCKWAY fire engine truck, equipped with Tanglely Calliope, all in good condition.—B. D. Williams, 3400 Conn. Ave., Chevy Chase, Md. d1671

OLD STREET PIANO, new strings, 6 tunes. Hurdy Gurdy, 27" Regina automatic, also 21" Beautiful Swiss box, large drum, 6 bells castnets, $150.00 Swiss box, oak, 6 extra rolls, $110.00, perfect.—B. L. Williams, 3400 Conn. Ave., Chevy Chase, Maryland. d1023

WANTED: Old bugle in good condition, no dents, no parts missing. Also one leaf of an old bellows.—E. R. Lemper, 712 W. Huron, Ann Arbor, Mich. d1612

FOR SALE: Reginalpha, plays 15 1/2" tune discs and 78-RPM records; also has zither attachment. Has mahogany case with serpentine front. Size 48"x20"x20". Price $350.00. If interested send for free photo. Also have large Classcal Ampico expression rolls like new—$10.00 per doz. Transportation collect.—Colonial Craft Shop, Mounted Route, Bryan, Ohio d1614

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: JOLSON MATERIAL.—Dick Bonesteel, 1409 McGilvra Boulevard, Seattle, Washington. j12046

WANTED: Radio Transcriptions, Airshots, Armed Forces radio recordings, recordings of all kinds by "Sammy Kaye," "Guy Lombardo," "Bill Kenny," "Ink Spots," "Blue Barron," "Ted Lewis."—Paul Scriven, 129 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. ja3215

WANTED TO BUY: Will pay $5 each for fine copies of 9-inch, single-faced Zon-o-phone records of "Jenny Lee," sung by Atwood Twitchell, and "Chocolate Drops," played by Hager's Orchestra. Both wanted for sentimental reasons only. Will pay $3 each for good copies of the February, 1912, and February, 1914, Columbia monthly record supplements. I need most Columbia supplements prior to 1912.—Jim Walsh, Box 476, Vinton, Virginia. ttx

DOES ANYONE HAVE any Pathe cylinder records for sale? Especially need the 3" diameter size. Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Santa Cruz, Calif. ja3863

See other ads on Too Late to Classify page?

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

By JIM WALSH

FRED VAN EPS

(NOTE—It is a pleasure to dedicate this series of articles to a gifted young banjoist and painter who is probably Fred Van Eps' most ardent admirer—Howard Weilmuenster of Ballwin, Missouri, his wife, Alma, and their baby son, David Michael, born November 7, 1955. Howard says David "will be ONE boy, in his generation" who will know who Fred Van Eps is!") J.W.

I. Introduction

January, 1956, marks the fourteenth anniversary of my beginning to write for HOBBIES. And never, since my first article appeared under the short-lived heading of "The Coney Island Crowd," have I felt more pride in telling the life story of any singer or musician than I now have in presenting this "profile" of the man conceded by virtually every authority to be the greatest living master of the five-string banjo.

There are several reasons why I am proud of this series. For one, I consider Fred Van Eps not only the greatest contemporary banjoist, but also the most important pioneer recording artist whose life story has not yet been told by me. It is a story for which I have had dozens of requests over the years.

For another, Mr. Van Eps is the first celebrity who has made a special trip to my home to be interviewed for a HOBBIES biographical sketch. After attending a banjoists' convention in Lewisburg, Pa., Fred drove to Roanoke, arriving Monday, September 19th, 1955, and spent the greater part of two days with me. He brought with him an Edison cylinder phonograph which he had equipped with an electric motor and pick-up, on which he had played banjo records for the enthusiasts at Lewisburg. The day before he left to return home to New Jersey, I sat him down in front of a tape recorder and, by asking innumerable leading questions, elicited, in effect, the spoken story of his life. That same day I had him talk by long distance with two of his enthusiastic admirers—A. R. Via, Jr., and N. G. Terry, Jr., well known South Boston, Va., record collectors. I recall Fred's humorous greeting to "Jack" Via was: "Good afternoon, Mr. Via. This is Fred Van Eps. I play banjo. What crimes do you commit?"

There was nothing egotistical or vainglorious in Fred Van Eps' attitude as he recalled the lights and shadows of his 76 years. Instead, he quietly, modestly and patiently answered questions as I asked them. Because of having used the recording device, I shall, for the first time, be able to tell the greater part of an artist's life story in his own words.

I shall do this by setting the tape in motion and transcribing Fred's statements. Naturally, some editing will be necessary. I shall not include the questions I asked which brought out the transcribed information. For the sake of greater clarity and structural coherence, I shall not always publish his remarks in the order in which they turn up on the tape, but shall rearrange them in order to provide a more connected narrative. Some of the reminiscences I shall include have no direct bearing on Fred Van Eps' life story, but in my judgment should be included because they possess musical and historical value as a revelation of his unusual experiences, colorful personality and individual mental patterns.

Too, I shall take the liberty of continuing to write in the first person when I include something my dear friend told me when we were casually conversing but not speaking into the Recordio. Letters and material which he thoughtfully prepared for me will be treated in like manner. After his reminiscences have been concluded, I shall round out the series with a review of the distinguished banjoist's recording achievements.

I offered to submit the manuscript to Mr. Van Eps for his approval, but he said that wasn't necessary, for he was sure anything I wrote would be fair-minded and accurate. I shall do my best to live up to his estimate. You may be sure I shall not tamper with the statements contained on the tape and that, in quoting from unaided memory, I shall use great care not to distort anything he said or misrepresent him in any way. I consider myself extremely fortunate that, because of Mr. Van Eps' gracious cooperation, I have an unusually interesting collection of photographs from which to choose in illustrating his memoirs. One thing I regret keenly is that Fred's beloved wife, Florence, who had been his devoted companion for 43 years, did not live to see this HOBBIES tribute.

For the sake of simplicity, I shall refrain from placing the printed matter that follows in quotation marks. But I think you will understand that, from now on, until I speak again in my own right, the "I" with whom you are about to become acquainted is Fred Van Eps and not Jim Walsh.

II. Fred Van Eps' Own Story

My name is Fred—not Frederick—Van Eps, but the birth certificate which was issued when I was born in Somerville, N. J., on December 30, 1878, doesn't list any given name. I am identified merely as a "male". When my wife and I decided to visit Europe in the spring of 1954 I had trouble getting a passport until I produced a program which mentioned a violin performance I gave when I was a small boy.

Somerville is exactly half way between Jersey City and Easton. My father, John Perry Van Eps, was a watchmaker. On my father's side I am descended from some of the old Dutch settlers of New York State. The family came originally from the Mohawk Valley near Herkimer, and one of my ancestors, who was also a John P., outfitted and commanded a company in the Revolutionary War. So you see there have been Van Epses around for some time—and, judging by the way the grandchildren are coming along, they'll be around for quite a while yet! My parents had one other child—my brother William, five years younger than I, who now lives in Arizona.

My mother's maiden name was Jenny A. Bergen. It seems that in the 1600's a man named Hansen came over from Bergen, Norway, and changed his name to Bergen. Whether there's any connection with Bergen county, New Jersey, is something I don't know. Anyway, I'm Dutch on one side and Scandinavian on the other—probably with a sprinkling of other nationalities. My father and mother died in 1926, within 12 days of each other. He was 81. She was 77. That's the way devoted married couples ought to go—within a few days of each other. Then neither is left behind long to grieve for the other.

I grew up and got most of my schooling in Somerville. Then we moved to Plainfield, which is still my mail address, although I live in Warrentonville, on a Plainfield RFD, high up in the Jersey mountains. I was 13 when we went to Plainfield in 1892, but I was still in Somerville when I began studying the violin at the age of seven. That violin study was very much my father's idea instead of my own. A few years later, when I wanted to give up the violin for the banjo, he didn't like the idea and wouldn't buy me an instrument. Finally my mother broke down and bought me one.

Maybe you wonder how it happened I decided I wanted to play a banjo. Well, I just happened to hear one and liked it much better than the violin. I still like it better after all these years. The banjo is a peculiar instrument. It's almost the easiest if you want to get certain effects, but the hardest of all if you set out to master its maximum possibilities. It's harder than the violin because when you draw the bow on a violin you have control of the tone from start to finish, but when you hit out with your right hand on your banjo if you don't hit right there's nothing you can do about it—it's gone.

And there's always room for a ban-joist to improve his technique. After playing in one way for around 40 years I worked out a new technique in the 1930's. It seems that before then no one had ever taken stock of the banjoist's working tools and tried to find out what the hands could and could not do. My investigation showed that of the three basic motions of the right hand, two were unnatural and awkward, therefore tiresome, and contrary to the design of the hand. What I did was to retain the one good move and use in place of the awkward two a highly natural move—thumb, first finger, second finger, in rotation, in this order. That is the natural sweep of the hand and is very fast, bringing the banjo up to violin or flute velocity. I can now play 14 notes per second.

This is what makes it possible to play rapid numbers such as "William Tell Finale," Chopin's "Minute Waltz," "Dizzy Fingers," etc. That reminds me that the "William Tell Finale" has been the joke of the banjo for as long as I can remember. All the vaudeville players used it—but the violins in the orchestra did the work. My changed technique has made it possible for the banjoist to play it in proper tempo.

I don't remember just how many years I played the violin. I do remember I used to play at school exercises on Friday mornings. I was a bad boy on the repeats. The girl who played the piano was always prepared to hop over if I skipped them. I'd like to have a record of that scratch. I'll bet it was something awful!

I was 12 when the banjo began to fascinate me. I heard a conductor on the Jersey Central Railroad, George W. Jenkins, play and it sounded so musical I knew I wanted to play a banjo, too. Although Jenkins didn't read music he was a very musical man, and my mother engaged him to teach me. He taught parrot fashion—played it over and over and showed me where to put my fingers. It didn't take long to learn all his numbers, and I was at a dead end until I heard a record by Vess L. Ossman, who was called "The Banjo King." Then I began to run around, looking for more music and to take a greater interest in my playing.

IV. Fred's First Banjo Record and Phonograph

The first Ossman record I ever heard was "The White Star Line March." I had been trying to play that myself by ear. I decided I had to have a phonograph to listen to the records by Ossman and other banjoists—and right now I'd like to say that at his best Vess Ossman was a wonderfully fine player. His work deteriorated in his later years—largely, I suppose, because he didn't keep practicing consistently—but I have been listening lately to some of his very old records and many of them are amazingly good. Ossman had a certain rhythmic facility that I don't think any other banjoist has ever equaled.

"The White Star Line" wasn't an Edison record. I heard it in 1893 before Edison began to make cylinders. It was a New Jersey Record made by the old United States Phonograph Company at 87-91 Orange Street, Newark. The U. S. Company was upstairs above Swift's meat house. They had the hams and carcasses downstairs and the records upstairs. Of course some "hams" went upstairs occasionally to make records! The first time I visited the studio I heard a band playing so loud and clear I thought surely the musicians themselves must be up there, but it was just a record!

"So I bought a Type M Edison two-minute cylinder phonograph. It cost me $100—a lot of money then—but I paid for it the next week by attaching 14 ear tubes, taking it to the Firemen's Fair and letting people listen at five cents a play. I've got those tubes yet that fit in your ears. Lots of people came up who had never heard a phonograph before. Mine was the first in Plainfield, which even then was quite a decent sized city. To tell the truth, the machine was something of a nuisance because it was so much of a curiosity. People would come to my home and ask to be allowed to listen to it. We couldn't very well refuse them, but all such favors took time.

"Well, anyway, I bought all the Ossman records, and soon I was able to play them and write out the copies. My chief purpose in getting the machine was to practice making my own records, and I began to do home recordings almost as soon as I obtained it. Incidentally, I still have some of the wax cylinder recordings I made more than 60 years ago and they are in as good condition as the day I made them. I have preserved them by protecting them from moisture and extremes of heat or cold. Dampness and temperature extremes will cause a fungus to form on the surface and spoil the records. Mine have always had the best care. I imagine I am the only artist with records made by himself three score years ago.

I got my blanks from the U. S. people—20 cents each. All the machines in those days had a shaving attachment. If you didn't like the results you simply shaved them off and tried again. Plainfield is 17 miles from Newark. It would have been quite a trip by horse and buggy, but there were direct train connections. Victor and Clyde Emerson were with U. S. then. I don't remember whether Harvey Emmons was there at that time or not. He was later. Still later he went with Edison and, among other things, made chimes records under the name of Henry Nesbit. Frank Capps, who had such a long career in various phases of the phonograph industry, was also there. As late as the 1930's he was manufacturing a recording stylus, but back in the '90's, while he was still in Washington, he built the first successful spring motor for Columbia. He was suited to be a recording technician because he had been a tool maker for the watchmaking trade, and if anything has to be exact, watchmaking does. And, speaking of watchmaking, I worked a considerable time in my father's shop, helping him with his watch repairing and practicing the banjo in between. I had a banjo at home and one alongside my repair bench. I remember a garbage collector who heard me playing at home told my mother I was pretty good but not as good as the watchmaker's son downtown. He didn't dream I was the same boy! I wish my father hadn't taken me out of school so soon to help him, but he didn't set much value on higher education.

After a great deal of experimenting and home recording, I decided the time had come to try my luck as a professional recording artist. I made two cylinders at home that sounded fairly decent, so I put them under my arm and went to the Edison plant at West Orange. This was in 1897, and Edison had begun to issue brown wax cylinders regularly the year before.

V. First Recording Experiences

The Edison people weren't at all enthusiastic when I first showed up. They gave me a fairly good brush-off, but I finally induced a man to listen to them. I know Walter Miller was in charge of recording, but I don't remember just who it was that I talked into listening. Anyway, I got a job for every Wednesday afternoon, making 40 cylinders, one after the other. They paid me the usual rate—$1 for each "round." If that doesn't seem much for making 40 records, remember I was making only $16 a week helping my father repair watches, and $40 for one afternoon a week wasn't bad. It probably would be the equivalent of $150 a week now.

My first accompanist was the father of the present-day famous pianist—Frank Banta. He was Frank P. Banta, while his son, who plays for the National Broadcasting Company, is Frank E. I never knew what the P. stood for. The elder Banta was a real old-timer in the phonograph game. He had been at it for years before I got in, and at one time or other he conducted bands and orchestras for practically all the pioneer record companies. You know, Frank—the elder Frank—got his preliminary musical training as a "rough tuner" in a piano factory. That is, he would do the first part of the tuning, and somebody else would come along and put on the finishing touches. In that way he learned to play the piano and was finally good enough to go out and get engagements. I don't think he had any formal musical training. He was just a "natural." He died in 1904 at the early age of 33.

Incidentally, Mrs. Banta is still living and is a very active old lady. When I first saw her she was employed by Walcott and Miller, who were record makers on 14th Street. I went there to buy records and she demonstrated them for me. That was when she was a young girl, before she was married. You asked me if

Fred Van Eps and Jim Walsh, in Roanoke, Va., Tuesday, September 20, 1955

I remember a firm called Burke and Rous that used to make cylinders in Brooklyn, and you say that Rous was a brother of Sam Rous, who made so many records under the name of S. H. Dudley. No, I never heard of them or of the cylinders they were turning out for slot machine use in the early 1900's. I'll bet you never heard of Reed and Dawson, who made lots of cylinders in Newark.

I worked a long time for Edison on that Wednesday afternoon basis. Of course I had competition. Vess Ossman was making lots of records, and Ruby Brooks made some, but Brooks—he was a member of the vaudeville team of Brooks and Denton, and died of lung cancer around 1906—wasn't any real competition. I remember a pair of banjoists, Cullen and Collins, made records for Columbia in Washington, D. C., before Columbia moved its headquarters to New York in 1897.

I continued recording through the early 1900's. I don't know just how many records I made and I doubt that I have books, that would show it, but I know a lot of my banjo records were sold. I was also teaching and playing with orchestras. Sometimes we banjoists would go out and play with orchestras until 2 A.M., then come home and have to prepare a couple of numbers for 10 o'clock that morning. You notice this 1902 Edison record catalog you showed me lists several selections by me, and this copy of "The Columbia Record" for January, 1904, mentions a seven-inch disc of another banjoist, William Bowen, and myself playing Sousa's "Jack Tar March." That was probably the first disc I made. I don't remember that Bowen and I ever recorded any more duets, and it seems odd that they don't appear to have put this one out in the ten-inch size. Bill Bowen, who is still living in New Jersey and I worked for Vess Ossman one summer, filling engagements Ossman obtained through his booking office. It must have been during that period that we recorded "The Jack Tar March." I didn't do any work for the early Berliner discs, but around 1916 or 1917 some of us recording artists began going to Canada about every six weeks and recording for Berliner, Victor's affiliate there. I don't recall making any cylinders for Columbia. I did lots of work for Zon-o-phone when Eddie King was manager of their artist and repertoire department. When Zon-o-phone folded around 1913, he went with Victor as assistant to John Macdonald (record collectors know him better as the tenor, Harry Macdonough), who was then the head of the "popular" division of Victor's A.

& R. Calvin Child of course headed the Red Seal section.

You asked if I was nervous during my first recording engagement. No, I don't think so. I always practiced slowly, to gain sufficient accuracy, and I was already used to making records at home. They had six or seven horns lined up in racks, because in those days there was no duplicating. Every record was an original. The one in dead center usually was best and brought a higher price. Actually, I didn't pay much attention to the size of horns, the thickness of diaphragms and other technical subjects. I wasn't supposed to. If I had carried tales from one recording laboratory to another I would have been in a hornet's nest.

However, some of the artists weren't above doing that. There was one fellow who slipped parts away from the old U. S. Record Company plant, one part a night, and would slip them back the next morning. They were parts from a duplicating machine which allowed several dozen records to be turned out from each original. Edison didn't have a duplicating device at that time, but he was able to build one with the help of that skulduggery. Of course, there were lots of things about the phonograph that Edison didn't originate, though usually his product was the best of its kind. For instance, he didn't invent the indestructible cylinder, but his Blue Amberol was better than any of the others. I've often wondered just what were the secrets that let him get such marvelous quality into his Diamond Discs. No other company had anything like it. No doubt part of it came from using the hill-and-dale recording method, but what accounted for the rest—some recording method that only he knew, the construction of the reproducer, or what? I believe the Edison reproducer diaphragm was built up with 40 very thin layers of rice paper, coated with shellac. He made thousands of test models before he was satisfied. Incidentally, I've never understood why, when long-playing records were brought out in 1948, they weren't made hill-and-dale instead of lateral cut. The music would have been better and it would have been possible to put almost twice as much on a side. Technicians have tried to explain to me why the change wasn't made, but in view of my own experience manufacturing recording equipment none of their arguments are convincing.

A great improvement in cylinder recording occurred somewhere around 1909 or '10. Edison made the big improvement when he stopped clamping the glass recording diaphragm between rubber gaskets and floated it with wax on the outside. That allowed the whole glass to vibrate. They used just a small aluminum tube connection instead of a lot of mechanism, such as levers and links. Right away the records were twice as good—very clear and natural.

(To be continued)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

By JIM WALSH

FRED VAN EPS

(Continued from the January issue)

VI. Free-Lance Recording Days

Still relating Fred Van Eps' life story and recording experiences in his own words:

I think my first big break occurred when my first Victor record, "The Burglar Buck," came out in April, 1910. Although the Victor Talking Machine Company had been founded only nine years before, it had already become the dominant American phonograph and record company. The fact that I was good enough for Victor made every other company want me, too. I made my first Columbia solo record a few months after my Victor debut, and soon I was free-lancing for, I suppose, just about every record company of the day. Several years later, when I was one of the Eight Famous Victor Artists, Henry Burr tried to persuade me to sign an exclusive Victor contract. He argued I'd make as much money as I did playing for all comers and wouldn't have to work so hard.

But I couldn't see it his way. I had set a minimum fee of $100 for any recording engagement, and I collected a good deal more from larger companies like Victor. I figured that if I could make three records in the morning and another two or three in the afternoon at $100 or more a playing I was doing all right. It certainly seemed good in comparison with the $1 a round Edison had paid me when I started out—and especially good by contrast with that $16 a week I used to get, working in my father's watch repair shop.

As you remarked just now, I became the dominant banjo recording artist in this country from about the time I began to work for all the companies. Olly Oakley, who has been dead a long time, had the same status in England, and in my estimation he was the best of the English players. He came closer to having an American style than any of the others. It's sad to think of all the talented instrumentalists who have died while I am still going strong at 76. Really, I have never been sick enough to go to bed in my life. Most sickness is in the mind, and I've succeeded in keeping myself convinced I'm in excellent health. An infected tooth is about the worst physical ailment that has ever happened to me. . . . But about those instrumentalists you mentioned men like Samuel Siegel, Valentine, Abt (pronounced AHBT) and Eugene W. Page, who made mandolin records in the early days, and the guitar players—Roy Butin (pronounced Bew-TIN), and Ramseyer, whose first name you said you didn't know but have always imagined to be Hugo. Well, it wasn't Hugo. He used to work with me and his name was Dave. They're all gone now. I always considered Sam Siegel the best of the mandolin men. But I was talking about my becoming, as you said, the leading recording banjoist from 1910 on. Vess Ossman had begun moving around the country a great deal, providing music for hotels in various places, and that probably had something to do with his not making many records between 1910 and his death in 1923, although he did make quite a comeback in 1916-17, when he was with the Eight Famous Victor Artists. (I succeeded him as the banjoist of the troupe when he couldn't get along with the manager, Henry Burr).

And, as I have already said, Ossman no longer practiced consistently and his work began to deteriorate. I still practice at least two hours a day and, if I am a judge of my work, I'm playing better, thanks to my changed fingering methods, than I did in my younger years.

You were asking me why practically all the Ossman records that had stayed in the Victor catalog a good many years were made over by me. To some extent, it was because of accidents happening to the original masters or defects appearing in the matrices. Then, too, as time went on the methods by which Ossman had recorded became outmoded. However, the records were still popular, and Victor wanted them remade by the latest processes. But since Ossman wasn't readily available and his playing no longer was what it had been, they had me do the remakes, usually with young Frank Banta at the piano. Some of those I made over were "Turkey in the Straw Medley," "Silver Heels" and "Keep Off the Grass." You asked me who played in the Plantation Trio, aside from myself, when it remade the Ossman-Dudley Trio records of "The St. Louis Tickle" and "Dixie Girl March" in the early 1920's. I don't remember just who was with me. The catalog shows "The St. Louis Tickle" was played by a banjo, mandolin and guitar, and "Dixie Girl March" by two banjos and one guitar. My brother Bill was originally a mandolin player, and he may have been one of the group. He also could have played the second banjo in "Dixie Girl." Dave Ramseyer may have been the guitar player. Audley Dudley used to work with me but since he died in 1916 he was out of the question, of course, for recording done in the '20's. I always called Audley "Al." I'm glad to learn his brother George is still living in retirement in Florida.

Oh yes—that Victor record called "A Little Bit of Everything Medley," by Ossman, which you had me listen to, hoping I could identify the songs. The last one, of course, is "Auld Lang Syne," and the second, which takes up most of the record, is an old-time banjo favorite, "Nigger in a Fit." But I can't remember ever hearing the first selection. (Note by Jim Walsh—The song at the beginning of the record has since been identified as "Angel Gabriel").

Fred Van Eps' father, John Perry Van Eps, on his high-wheeled bicycle in the 1880's. The elder Van Eps, a watchmaker, died in 1926, aged 81.

Fred Van Eps as a youthful banjoist

Because of the frequency with which Fred Van Eps mentions Billy Murray in his reminiscences, this seems an appropriate time to publish a picture of a rare poster showing young "William Murray" in blackface as a member of the Al G. Field Minstrel Troupe. The poster probably was printed around 1900—a few years before Murray, on Field's advice, changed his first name to Billy, and began his phenomenal recording career. In 1902 his photo appeared, still as William Murray, on the front cover of a song, "A Little Boy in Blue," written by Raymond A. Browne and Theodore Morse. "Teddy" Morse was the first pianist of the Eight Famous Victor Artists, but, at Van Eps' suggestion, was succeeded in 1918 by young Frank Banta.

VII. Van Eps Trio and Banjo Orchestra

One of the great successes of my recording activities from about 1912 to 1922 was the Van Eps Trio. The country was dance crazy in the decade from 1910 to 1920 as it never had been before, and hasn't been since, and I got the Trio together to furnish music both on records and for dances. Our first Victor record was "The Florida Rag." The instrumentation was two banjos—one played by me and the other by my brother Bill—and a piano, played by Felix Arndt. When the next Van Eps Trio record was made we dropped one of the banjos and, at John Macdonald's insistence, substituted drums played by Eddie King. The Victor people thought drums gave a steadier, more insistent rhythm than a second banjo, but I wasn't "sold" on the drums idea. However, since King was assistant manager of the Victor artist and repertoire department, I felt there wasn't anything I could do except go along. That set-up lasted several years.

I think your readers will be interested in the story of my association with Felix Arndt. He was just a youngster demonstrating music for the Witmark song publishing firm at $20 a week when we first met. In spite of his German sounding last name, his racial strain was Latin. His father was Italian and his mother a mixture of Spanish and French. She had the French attitude toward being thrifty and playing it safe. When I first proposed to hire Felix to work with me she didn't want him to give up his sure $20 a week to take a chance on anything else. She consented though, when I told her I would guarantee the boy $50 a week, but that if he couldn't make $100 I didn't want him. Poor Felix had a short life. He died in the 1918 flu epidemic. Before his death he had trouble with his hands and had to stop playing with me. Today he is best remembered by his song, "Nola," named for his wife, which served so long as a theme song for Vincent Lopez. Felix's widow has a studio in Steinway Hall, and Variety recently carried a news item telling of her suing a music publishing company for $11,000 which she claims are due as royalties from the sale of "Nola."

Soon after his association with me began, Felix started making piano and celesta records for Victor, and some of the piano numbers—especially "From Soup to Nuts," "Desecration Rag," "An Operatic Nightmare" and "Nola,"—were big sellers. He also made a great many player piano rolls. It was because the trouble with his hands kept him from playing consistently that I took young Frank Banta out of high school in 1916 to become my duet partner and the pianist of the Van Eps Trio. The youngster, whom Billy Murray used to call, jokingly, "Solid Ivory, the Boy Wonder," was a ten-strike. His playing was a little rough at first, but he soon smoothed out. His father had been dead since 1904, but his mother had gone into the corset business and done a fine job of rearing Frank and a daughter, who has since died. Frank has never married. He still lives with his mother and earns a handsome income as a pianist for NBC. As you remarked, anybody who attended the "John Bieling Day" reunions of recording artists and record collectors in 1948 and 1950 must remember what a brilliant player Frank is, and how willing he was to play accompaniments for everybody who wanted to sing, as well as solos by himself.

To anticipate a little, I was responsible for Frank's becoming the pianist of the Eight Famous Victor Artists. He did so well with me that when I took Ossman's place with the troupe I suggested that young Banta should be hired in the place of Theodore Morse. Teddy Morse was a swell fellow and one of the greatest writers of popular songs this country has known, but he simply couldn't play the piano the way Frank Banta could. Besides, his time was tied up to some extent not only with his own song writing but with being a music manuscript reader for Leo Feist. Frank clicked immediately and stayed with the Eight until Henry Burr disbanded the group some time late in 1927 or early in 1928. That latter year, Frank went abroad as pianist for The Revelers. . . . Speaking of pianists, George Gershwin, before he was famous, used to play sometimes with me at dances. I never used him on records. Getting back to the Van Eps Trio days, I kept on being dissatisfied with using a drummer, but for several years I couldn't convince John Macdonald that the saxophone, which had become extremely popular, would be a more suitable instrument. But at last I got the best of him. Russell Hunting, the famous pioneer "Casey" monologist, had returned to this country after years abroad as supervisor of Pathé's European recording activities, and was manager of Pathé's New York studio. I talked Russell into letting me make a Van Eps Trio record of a fox-trot called "The Hawaiian Blues," with Nathan Glantz (pronounced GLAHNTZ) playing a sax, in place of the usual drums. It went over well, and when Macdonald heard it he told me to go ahead and use a saxophone from then on in my Victor recordings. The good results we got on Pathé were a challenge to him and he felt he had to meet the challenge. He thought he just couldn't let Pathé get ahead of Victor! Our first Victor with Glantz on the saxophone combined "Teasin' the Cat" and "On the Dixie Highway." From then on, the Van Eps Trio was composed of Banta, Glantz and myself. Afterwards I added Joe Green as a xylophonist and the group was known as the Van Eps Quartet or the Van Eps Specialty Four. Nathan Glantz is dead now, but his son, Nathan, Jr., is a successful musician. Joe Green also is dead, but his brother, George Hamilton Green, who used to be famous as a xylophone player, is still active—as a cartoonist rather than a musician. His drawings frequently appear in Collier's and other publications.

The Trio played with almost metronomic precision. I remember that once we made half a dozen "takes" of the same number, and our timing was so exact there was less than three seconds difference between the fastest and the slowest.

In 1914 I came along with what the record companies called the Van Eps Banjo Orchestra, although that term was somewhat misleading. There never were more than five instruments—hardly enough for an orchestra. The make-up of the group, as well as the membership, varied from time to time. Nearly always there were two banjos—sometimes my brother played the other one—and of course we had Felix Arndt at the piano. You just mentioned that the Banjo Orchestra played accompaniments for some of Arthur Collins' Pathé records. Even though you've shown me the records I still don't remember anything about playing those accompaniments. In fact, there's a lot that at this late date I don't remember. No, I don't remember, either, playing accompaniments for Collins and Harlan duets and Porter and Harlan comic sketches on Victor.

But you've got the records to prove I did. I do remember, though, that we took a lot of classics and made dance numbers of them. Chaminade's "Scarf Dance" was one, and there was another we called "Tambourines and Oranges." Then there was a prohibition number—oh yes, "The Alcoholic Blues!"—in which we played "How Dry I Am" and other time-honored drinking songs. You say you have a sapphire ball record of the Trio playing "The Alcoholic Blues" on a Meteor disc, put out by the Meteor Record Company of Piqua, Ohio. No, we never played for any company with a name like that. That was probably one of the several disguises under which Pathé records were issued—just as Columbias used to be sold under all sorts of labels. I am constantly meeting people who tell me they have records by me on Superior or some other brand I know I never played for. And then I know they have got hold of an off-brand which is just some formerly famous line disguising itself behind false whiskers.

VIII. Phonograph Boom Days

After the first World War began in 1914, the phonograph and record business began to boom. The "Big Three"—Victor, Columbia and Edison—couldn't increase production enough to meet the demand, and something like 50 new companies sprang up to make "talking machines" while there was also a large increase in the number of firms making records. However, since Victor and Columbia between them controlled the patents on the more popular lateral type record, the newcomers—Aeolian-Vocalion, Starr, Okeh, Paramount and others—had to make their discs on the hill-and-dale principle, like Edison and Pathé. Henry Burr even had his own company for a year or two—the Paroquette Record Company, which turned out seven-inch double-faced Paroquet records that sold for a quarter. I made some for them. He lured away Victor's recording director, Walter B. Rogers, but the market was too limited for that type of record and it wasn't a success. Burr made huge amounts of money as a recording artist and as manager of the Eight, but he also lost scads in such schemes as running a silver fox farm and starting a music publishing business. He and I had a banjo factory together, but I'll tell more about that later.

Anyway, as I said, the record business boomed. I remember the Victor figures for 1918. Their gross business was $204,000,000, and they thought that could never be beaten. It seemed the saturation point had been reached. That's the more surprising because both Victor and Edison turned over much of their factory space that year for defense work. . . . No, I don't remember making any Little Wonder records—those 5½ inch, single-faced discs that sold in ten cent stores for a dime each. Since, as you say, they were made under Columbia patents, they probably copied the first half of an ordinary Columbia record onto a Little Wonder.

I was speaking of Victor and Columbia having a strangle hold on lateral-cut patents. The only fellow who was able to get around them, until Gennett brought a suit in 1919 that broke the patents monopoly, was Victor Emerson. You'll remember I mentioned Vic Emerson was with the old U. S. Record Company in Newark the first time I went there back in the '90's. When U. S. folded he became a Columbia recording expert. He left Columbia in 1916 and started the Emerson Record Company. In order to make a record that would play in the ordinary Victor or Columbia position, he developed a way of cutting the grooves at a 45-degree angle and called it the universal cut. Theoretically, an Emerson record would play either laterally or vertically, but the thing was a makeshift compromise. You could hear it fairly well in a lateral position, but the vertical rendition was barely audible. As far as I know, that was the only "compromise cut." Of course, there never was a lateral cut cylinder.

The Van Eps Trio (sometimes called the Van Eps-Banta Trio) about 1919: Fred Van Eps, banjo; Nathan Glantz, saxophone, and Frank Banta, piano. In those days Van Eps signed his photos, "Trio'-ly Yours."

The recent Davy Crockett furore should add interest to this photo of the Eight Famous Victor Artists at the Alamo in 1919. Top row, left to right: Frank Banta, Monroe Silver, Frank Croxton, Henry Burr, Billy Murray and an unidentified man—probably a Victor dealer. Front row—John Meyer, Albert Campbell, and (in striped shirt) Fred Van Eps.

As best I can remember, I recorded for 14 or 15 companies between 1916 and 1922, when I virtually gave up recording work. There may have been more. I'm sure there weren't many in the Eastern United States that I missed. Of course I had worked for Edison from the very beginning of my recording career, except for a period of two or three years. I had an argument with them about the numbers to be recorded, and it ended with my "going on strike" until they saw things my way. Frank Banta was my accompanist on nearly all my recording dates, except that Edison insisted on using John F. Burkhardt. They reasoned that since they had a staff accompanist on salary, there was no sense in paying Frank to play in Burkhardt's place. Bill Cronkhite was Edison's critic, and he was always gumming the artists up with his odd ideas.

As I know you've often heard, Cronkhite was so conscientious and so fault-finding—and maybe so afraid of Thomas A. Edison—that he almost worked Edison artists to death. I saw a group that included Ada Jones, Billy Murray and a male quartet work all day to make a cylinder that satisfied Cronkhite. It contained a lot of sound effects. Maybe it was "Come, Josephine, In My Flying Machine." Anyway, something went wrong every trial, and they were all worn out before it was done. Ada Jones never troubled to learn a song until she had a date to record it, so that slowed them up.

Another odd thing I remember is that elaborate duplicating device Pathé had. I don't mean I was allowed to examine it—the Frenchman who had made it and brought it to this country didn't allow anybody to operate or even look at it but himself—but it was a wonder. It recorded on cylinders 14 inches long, and from these they dubbed discs that were 10¾, 11½ and 13¼ inches in diameter. The playing time was the same, but the larger records were louder. Those were the hill-and-dale Pathés, played with a sapphire ball, but they could also dub lateral cuts or cylinders if they wanted to. The Pathé dubbing system was much better than the Edison. After Edison had his disastrous factory fire in 1915, they quit recording Blue Amberol cylinders direct and started copying them from the Diamond Discs. This was often poorly and carelessly done, and the cylinders lost tone quality in consequence. But that Pathe dubbing system was amazing. Not even Russell Hunting knew how it worked—he just knew it did!

Before I tell of my experiences as a member of Eight Famous Victor Artists, I'd like to say something about the fun we had in the old recording days. I have an affectionate recollection of McGirr's restaurant at 37th Street and Sixth Avenue. It's still there. That was where most of the recording talent ate lunch during engagements. Several studios were in the neighborhood, so the gang got together to chew the fat, discuss the recording news and occasionally swap a few scandals! Victor's recording laboratory was on 38th Street. Columbia was across the street in the Joseph W. Stern Music Publishing building, and Pathe's lab was on 37th, about half a block away. Edison was at 79 Fifth Avenue, and Aeolian-Vocalion also was not far away on 43rd Street, back of Aeolian Hall.

There was another restaurant we frequented at 42nd Street and Sixth Avenue. I can't remember its name, but it's out of business now, so nobody's feelings will be hurt by my telling this anecdote. We used to call it "The Greasy Spoon." One day Frank Banta's mother called up, wanting to speak to her son. She couldn't remember the name, so, unable to think of anything else, she asked: "Is this the Greasy Spoon?" Whoever took the call didn't relish the title, and hung up on her without saying whether or not it was the Greasy Spoon!

(To be continued)

MORE ON DOUBLE TAKES

(Continued from page 31)

Renato Zanelli (as tenor): Otello-Dio mi potevi Gramola DB1173 (2-052381) (CR2095 11 A)
 Renato Zanelli (as tenor): Otello-Niun mi tema Victor Orth. 7020B (CR2094 111 A)
 Renato Zanelli (as tenor): Otello-Dio mi potevi Gramola DB1173 (2-052380) (CR2094 111 A)

ADDITIONS:

1. a) Lucrezia Bori Victor 12" 88475 Boheme-Mi chiamano Mimi (Take 2) without "narrative" at end of aria.
 b) Lucrezia Bori Victrola 12" 6048A Boheme-Mi chiamano Mimi-with narrative at end of aria.
2. a) Apollo Granforte 10" Gramola DA1053 (7-52433) Zaza-Zaza, piccola singara (BM 809 1)
 b) (Apollo Granforte 10" Eng. HMV DA1053 (7-52433) Zaza-Zaza piccola singara (BM 1188 1) (Apollo Granforte 10" Mauve & Gold HMV AGSA23 (7-52433) Zaza-Zaza, piccola singara (BM 1188 1)
3. a) Amelita Galli-Curci Victor 12" 74499 Rigoletto-Caro nome-with recitative (Take 4)
 a) Amelita Galli-Curci HMV 2-053126 (A18596) Rigoletto-Caro nome with recitative (Take 4)
 a) Amelita Galli-Curci HMV DB257 Rigoletto-Caro nome-with recitative (Take 4)
 b) Amelita Galli-Curci Victrola 12" 74499 Rigoletto-Caro nome-without recitative (Take 6)
 b) Amelita Galli-Curci Victrola 12" 6126 Rigoletto-Caro nome-without recitative (Take 6)

(While most collectors already know of the acoustical versions of Galli-Curci's Caro nome, I felt that they might be interested in knowing that they were carried over on the European pressings, too. However, Victor 74499 (Take 4) was never doubled on American Vict.)

Kindest regards,
 Bill
 William Vlod

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

By JIM WALSH

FRED VAN EPS

(Continued from February issue)

VIII. The Eight Famous Victor Artists

Fred Van Eps continues his reminiscences, with most of this installment being devoted to his experiences as a member of the Eight Famous Victor Artists troupe:

My memory goes back a long way, but sometimes, like everybody's memory, it fails me. I clearly recall the blizzard of 1888—probably the worst storm ever recorded in the Eastern United States—and the trouble I, a boy of about ten, had getting around for several days after the big snowfall.

But up to now I've forgotten to mention that I made a few records under an assumed name. They were made for Pathé, which went in more strongly for aliases than any other record company, and they were duets with an accordion player, Dan Boudini. I was called "Edward Boynton." I notice that here in Roanoke you have an architectural firm by the name of Smithey and Boynton. But I don't have any idea who chose that name of Boynton for me to use when I played with Boudini. We made "Down South" (20433) and "Silver Heels" (20382).

Speaking of names, assumed and real, of course I'm resigned by this time to having the Eps in my name misspelled Epps. And frequently people call me Mr. Epps, seeming to think Van is my middle name. Shakespeare said "What's in a name?" but sometimes having the right name means a lot to a professional musician.

I think I'll talk now about my years as a member of the Eight Famous Victor Artists one of the most interesting periods of my musical life. I joined the troupe late in 1917 or early 1918 when it was still known as the Record Makers. The title identifying the aggregation with the Victor Talking Machine Company didn't come into use until five of the members—Billy Murray, Henry Burr, Albert Campbell, John Meyer and Frank Croxton—signed exclusive Victor contracts in the summer of 1920. The other three—Frank Banta, Monroe Silver and I—continued to free-lance. Some observers said the Eight had the most talent and the most remarkably varied gifts ever packed into one small concert ensemble. At the height of his fame Rudy Vallee remarked that the Eight Famous Victor Artists were his "ideal of show business."

When I joined I took the place of my fellow banjoist, Vess Ossman, who didn't get along with the manager, Burr. As I have already said, that swell fellow Teddy Morse, the song writer, was the pianist, but he gave way in 1918 to young Frank Banta, who had begun working as my accompanist when he was 17. Arthur Collins and Byron Harlan, the famous "coon song" comedians, were also with the troupe, but Collins and Burr never did hit it off, and Burr didn't consider Collins' style of singing well adapted to work with the Peerless Quartet, although Collins had been its baritone since 1907. Their bickering came to a head, and Collins was dropped. John Meyer, who had been singing bass, became the quartet baritone, and Frank Croxton stepped in as basso.

Harlan left with Collins and was succeeded by Monroe Silver, a brilliant comedian who specialized in monologs about "Cohen." He also sang well in a mock-Yiddish style. I used to tell "Mike" Silver (Billy Murray, with whom he roomed on tour, had nicknamed him Mike) that he had ability enough of his own not to need to copy the "Cohen on the Telephone" act which Joe Hayman had made popular, but Mike always insisted on doing a telephone skit in his public appearances.

Before I get down to telling of my travels with the Eight, I'd like to answer a question I am often asked: "How did the Peerless Quartet (Campbell, Burr, Meyer and Croxton) and the Sterling Trio (Campbell, Burr and Meyer) ever find time to rehearse so many numbers when they were free-lancing, and where did they meet to rehearse?" I don't know exactly myself how they found the time except that, as Al Campbell used to say, they rehearsed and recorded in three shifts almost around the clock, but I can tell where they rehearsed. John Meyer had an uncle, John Wilbur, who gave him a florist shop, on Third Avenue, New York. In gratitude to his uncle, John called himself John Wilbur when he first made records but soon changed to his right name. Throughout the years he was with the Peerless, from 1911 through 1925, he continued to operate this shop and he went back to it after he left the quartet. While he was on tour somebody managed it for him. Well, anyway, John had a piano in a back room, and it was there that the members of the troupe used to get together and practice. John Meyer was a very good pianist and he made many of the trio and quartet's arrangements. Sometimes he and Frankie Banta played duets in our concerts.

One thing I learned was, we didn't have to rough it with the Record Makers or the Eight Victor Artists. We weren't allowed to. Burr insisted that we wear evening clothes in giving our performances, and that led the impishly irreverent Mike Silver to dub us "The Pallbearers." After I left, I understand, it was decided to appear in street clothes as a touch of informality designed to loosen up the audience, but we were strictly formal in my day. When we went on our three-month tours throughout the United States and Canada we stayed at the best hotels, and were never allowed to carry baggage. Even if the concert hall or theatre was only a few blocks from our hotel we went in taxis. I remember one time we were in Houston, Texas, and I told a taxi driver I wanted to go to the Municipal Auditorium where we were to appear that night.

"Why," the driver said, the Auditorium is just across the street from this hotel."

"O. K.," I said. "Drive me there!"

Although Burr was the organizer and manager of the troupe, its business affairs were in the hands of an Allentown, Pennsylvania, Victor dis-

A Francene's Original MUSICAL CARRY-ALL Only $5.95 Postpd.

Lift cover and listen! Lovely melodies automatically play on a fine imported Swiss music box which stops when cover closes. Carry-All is handmade in peasant fashion from native ash wood trimmed in gleaming black. Self-locking cover is beautifully decorated in color and personalized with your name. Measures 9 1/4" long, 7" wide, 6" high. Send check or m. o. (No COD's, please), also name to be personalized.

FRANCENE'S

Dept. H

Warren, R. I.
myc

tributor - Philip W. Simon - who maintained a booking office at 1658 Broadway, New York. Simon was a nice fellow whose assistant, L. C. Mountcastle, attended to the actual booking. After Burr's recording career ended he was for a time the program director for the Columbia Broadcasting System and Mountcastle was his right-hand man.

Henry Burr had a genius for making money, but almost as much ability to lose it in fantastic ways. For a year or two he had the Paroquette Record Company, which was a failure. He sank a lot of money in a silver fox farm, and lost even more heavily in a sheet music publishing venture. But he and I did well for several years, manufacturing and selling a banjo I had designed, and of course the Eight was very profitable until the "talkies" came along and, for a long time, killed the appeal of "live" attractions. Too, he was one of the highest paid recording artists.

On one occasion, after the troupe had filled an engagement, the manager of the theater handed me a check. For some reason he had got the impression I was managing the show. I looked at the check and almost fainted. It was for exactly twice as much as the maximum I had imagined Burr could possibly be getting for our services. When I told the other boys, human nature asserted itself and we decided to strike Henry for a raise. At Mike Silver's suggestion, we put on false beards, to make us look like anarchists, and, so to speak, "bearded the lion in his den." Ever afterwards, whenever we decided Hank was becoming too prosperous for his own good and that we should have more money, we put on our beards—some red and some black—and went in for a heart-to-heart talk. I never tried to find out what the other fellows were getting, but it was generally understood that Billy Murray's take was tops. And it should have been. He was not only a marvelous master of ceremonies but also the most popular recording artist this country has ever known.

That business of putting on false facial fungus was the start of the Order of Beards, about which you were telling me. That was after my time, but I got a laugh, Jim, out of your story of how the Eight used to put on those false beards and parade through trains, brandishing hatchets and scaring passengers by pretending to be Russian anarchists. Finally, as you said, Burr decided he wanted to be a member and asked to be allowed to join. The boys kept him waiting in an anteroom for two hours and then Billy Murray came out and showed him a hat into which seven black pellets had been dropped. Every body in the troupe had blackballed Burr! (Mike Silver had slipped off the train at a convenient spot and bought some pieces of licorice that were rolled up into balls.) And, as you say, Hank became so furious the other seven decided in a hurry to let him become a full-fledged member of the Order of Beards.

Burr insisted on paying off in cash on Saturday nights. The boys used to kick about that because they considered the display of so much money an open invitation to a stick-up, but Burr argued that a hotel lobby was a good pay-place and handing out stacks of greenbacks was good business because "it looks prosperous." Then, as you say, someone slipped into Monroe Silver's room in a Columbus, Ohio, hotel, while he was taking a bath and not only stole his week's salary but also took a ring his dead mother had given him. Mike didn't mind the money so much—there would be another pay-day next week—but he did mourn for the ring, which he never recovered. Burr lost a $700 ring in the Hotel Muhlenbach in Kansas City, but later got it back.

FRED VAN EPS, lower right, in an unidentified recording studio with other artists of that period.

Henry and his wife were both fat and heavy eaters. One day down in Texas we watched them packing away a huge meal. Mike remarked: "They're reducing."

"Reducing?" somebody else said incredulously, and Mike replied: "Yes, reducing the food supply!"

I got many a laugh from Billy Murray's ability to make off-the-cuff funny remarks. Sometimes Billy talked a slang that was almost a form of shorthand. On one occasion he was telling about somebody buying a good second-hand Cadillac car for a thousand dollars.

"Gee, just think of it!" Billy exclaimed. "A Cad for a thou!"

Al Campbell and Mike Silver liked to roam, after the show, about any city in which we were playing. When they got tired of sightseeing they'd drop into a movie, picking what looked like the worst picture they could find. Then they'd take turns watching and sleeping. One would watch the picture a few minutes while the other slept, then wake up, briefly outline the plot up to then, and go to sleep himself. Maybe they'd watch and sleep through a couple of screenings rather than get up and go to the hotel.

Neither Mike or Al drank, and neither did Billy. Burr had been a heavy drinker as a very young man, but he had sworn off and he never touched a drop when I was with the troupe. I'll bet you didn't know that before he came to New York and began his musical career he was a candy salesman in his native Canada. He must have been a very young salesman, for he was only 20 when he began making Columbia records in 1902.

As for myself, I used to go to the beer-and-beefsteak parties which Victor gave each year for its male artists, but nowadays I don't touch anything alcoholic. Neither do I smoke. A specialist who has performed autopsies tells me that nobody would ever inhale cigarettes if the lungs of dead smokers were put on public display. He says the mass of black tar and other harmful substances revealed by a lung autopsy is really frightening.

In spite of looking, as Billy Murray used to say, as if I don't have a spare pound of flesh on me, I've always been remarkably healthy. I've never been ill except that I once had an infected tooth. Most illness is in the mind. I'm still looking forward to the future and still have a zest for living. Never let yourself feel you're old and washed up or you'll lose your incentive for keeping on. There's always something worth doing around the corner. That's why I've kept up my banjo practice, and why I can truthfully say I'm playing better today, thanks to my change of technique, than I did when I was at the peak of my recording career.

One thing I'm proud of is the fact that I've never had a traffic accident, and I've been driving since 1910. Whenever I'm driving over unfamiliar territory and know I'm going back that same way, I make a point of looking back and seeing the territory unroll behind me. In that way, I remember what it looks like and am not likely to lose my way when I begin the return trip. . . I wish I could have kept my hair as thick and glossy as Al Campbell did. His hair was jet black, and when he died, aged 76, in 1947, there were very few traces of gray.

IX. Van Eps - Burr Corporation

During my years with the Eight, Henry Burr and I formed the Van Eps - Burr Corporation and marketed the Van Eps Recording Banjo, modeled after the one I used in my recording and concert work. There was a popular impression that I used a steel-back banjo, but this one had an aluminum resonator with a sound hole in the head, which was made of calfskin.

When I left the troupe in 1922 I took over the sale of the banjo, and it remained on the market until about 1930, when the depression showed up. By that time recording had become electrified, and the loud volume produced by that type of banjo wasn't needed any more. Better results could be obtained with a solid head. I gave banjo lessons for a time, but as the instrument, which had once been so popular, lost its appeal I went into my present business. I'll tell more about that later. I'm happy to say it has been a great success, and I've made most of my money in it. Luckily, I've done so well that if I should live to be 108 I'll still have more money than I'm likely to spend.

I ceased to consider myself a recording artist after I left the Eight, but it seems I did some recording I've forgotten about. You've mentioned several Edison records, such as "Darkies' Dream" and "Darkies' Awakening" and "The Lonesome Mama Blues" which I made for Edison in 1923, and I even made Edison records of "I'm Sitting On Top of the World" and "Dinah" in 1926. I know I did because you played the records for me, but I don't have any recollection of making them.

And now I believe this would be a good place to insert, for the benefit of HOBBIES readers, some notes I jotted down on March 12, 1935, about the history and development of the five-string banjo. I headed it, "America's Own."

X Van Eps Article On Banjo

Not everyone knows the banjo is a native instrument and the only one developed in this country; and when I say banjo I mean the original form, having five gut strings and played with bare fingers—the only type used up to 30 years ago.

The so-called dance era brought into use numerous variations—tenor, plectrums, etc.—all strung with wire and played with some kind of a tool. These were easy to play.

The earliest form of musical instrument was a tree stump hollowed out, with a vibrating string stretched across the top. If you sawed this off and put a handle on it you would have a sort of banjo. Almost from man's first attempt to build an instrument, banjo-shaped affairs were used.

The Van Eps Quartet photographed in an unidentified recording studio. Left to right: Frank Banta, piano; the late Joe Green, xylophone; the late Nathan Glantz, saxophone, and Fred Van Eps, banjo. The photo was probably taken in 1920.

The banjo has been associated with the Negro, and while it is true that the slaves brought it from Africa in the form of the "banya," it took an Irishman, Joe Sweeney, to put it in its present form with its five strings and rim. . . There's a memorial to Sweeney at his home town, Appomattox, Virginia.

No other instrument has a more interesting history. It grew up with the minstrels and you had better try to make a ham sandwich without ham than stage a minstrel show without a banjo. . . Starting about 1885 and lasting about ten years the banjo became a fad and everybody plunked one. The then Prince of Wales, who later became King Edward VII, started the craze in England, and was promptly dubbed "Prince Tum-Tum."

The next stage was that of the college clubs; you need only ask Dad to find out what an institution the Banjo Club was and what it meant to belong to one. The man who graduated from college twenty years ago is still either playing a five-string banjo or longing to hear one played.

WHO MADE HIGHEST TYPE BANJOS?

S. S. Stewart of Philadelphia was a manufacturer who spent his life improving and elevating the banjo. He was tireless in his efforts and intolerant of the scoffers, and told them that at one time the violin was said to be no musical instrument. Stewart said the banjo was limited only by the performer's ability, and time has proved him correct.

Since the symphony orchestra is supposed to contain all musical colors, the time is not far distant when the banjo will be a part of these organizations. You can't get that certain timbre without the combination of catgut and calf skin.

After the before-mentioned banjo craze there was the usual reaction, but when the old-time Edison recording artist, Ruby Brooks, began playing in Tom Gould's cafe, which was a rendezvous for fashionable people, New York society began using banjos as an accompaniment for dancing. Brooks teamed up with Harry Denton, and not to have them at your party was the worst social blunder.

The banjo has been crossed with other fretted instruments. If you put a mandolin neck and strings on a banjo body, it becomes a banjo-mandolin. If you reverse the process and put a banjo neck and strings on a mandolin body it becomes a mandolin-banjo. In 1898 there appeared an automatic banjo housed in a glass case and operated with a perforated paper roll which controlled buttons for stopping the strings and vacuum bellows which operated steel picks. This was a popular piece of saloon furniture.

PROFESSIONAL JEALOUSY

An extremely odd thing about the professional banjo players was their jealousy—not ordinary professional jealousy, but an ACUTE variety. If you were an advanced student and paid for tuition you would not be shown anything if there was danger of your becoming too good. During (Continued on page 35)

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

THE OLD MUSIC HOUSE Buys, Sells, trades, coin operated pianos, Reginas, hand organs, rolls. The largest collection in Middle West.—R. C. Lambert, Owner, Monticello, Iowa. d122511

ACCESSORIES, Music & Studies for the Banjo, Mandolin, Guitar & Ukulele; Steel, & Spanish Plectrum Guitars and other fretted instruments. — Gima's Guitar Salon, Box 2235, Colorado Springs, Colorado. mh3844 in its "Old Curiosity Shop" album. But in the last few months Victor has reissued five more of her recordings on its Label "X" including the following "When a Woman Loves a Man," "I'd Rather Be Blue," "Cooking Breakfast For the One You Love," "Second Hand Rose," and "If You Want the Rainbow."

A FANNY BRICE DISCOGRAPHY— Columbia Records recorded in 1916

A1973 (name spelled Fannie Bryce) 1
- Don't Know Whether to Do it or Not/Rhoda Bernard - Nathan.
A2122 (name spelled Fannie Brice) If We Could Only Take Her Word (2 parts).

Victor Records recorded 1921-2.
45263 Second Hand Rose/My Man
45303 I'm An Indian/O, How I Hate That Fellow Nathan

45323 Becky is Back in the Ballet/ The Sheik of Avenue B

Victor records, electrically recorded from 1928-30.

21163 My Man (two versions released)/
The Song of the Sewing Machine
21211 Mrs. Cohen at the Beach (2 parts)
21815 If You Want the Rainbow (You Must Have the Rain/I'd Rather Be Blue)

22310 When a Woman Loves a Man/
Cooking Breakfast for the One You Love

Capitol Records, c. 1947

Album No. DC 3081 (78 rpm) includes the following:

Baby Snooks Learns to Tell the Truth
Baby Snooks Learns to be Good
Baby Snooks Learns to be Clean
Baby Snooks Learns Table Manners
Baby Snooks Learns About Crossing Streets
Baby Snooks Learns to Be Kind to Animals

Fanny Brice Reissues:

Blumore 1016 My Man (1921 version)/

Helen Morgan - Bill

RCA Victor Album LCT 1112 "Old Curiosity Shop." Includes the 1921 version of "My Man." (12 inch 33-1/3 rpm; also available in 45 rpm).

Label "X" LVA 1006 (12 inch 33-1/3 rpm) Fanny Brice - When a Woman Loves a Man, I'd Rather Be Blue, Cooking Breakfast for the One You Love, Second Hand Rose, If You Want the Rainbow/Helen Morgan - Body and Soul, Why Was I Born, Mean to Me, Frankie and Johnnie, Can't Help Loving That Man, Something to Remember You By.

A NOTICE TO ALL COLLECTORS OF CYLINDER RECORDINGS:

For a considerable amount of time now Duane Deakins and Tom Grattelo on the West Coast have been engaged in the Herculean task of trying to compile a complete list of all the cylinder records issued in this country. The first part (Edison 4 minute wax amberol records - popular series) has now been completed and indexed and should be available this Summer to all those who are interested. Duane Deakins (1057 Paloma St., Stockton 4, Calif.) would be interested in hearing from all collectors and dealers who would be interested in subscribing to this series so that he can have some idea of how many copies to have printed. They are now engaged in completing the regular Blue amberol series and are lacking information on Numbers 2960, 3210, 3743, 4791 and 4819. They have information on all of the Edison 2 min. wax gold moulded records from 8000 to 10575 except No. 8002. If anyone can supply information on any of these numbers would you please write Dr. Deakins at the above address. I feel that this is a most important undertaking and that they should be assisted by collectors as far as possible.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 32)

the first days of the phonograph the banjo was about the only instrument that recorded well and was used extensively. Violin records were out of the question - the sound went in so sweetly and came out so sour!

George L. Lansing, a well known banjoist of Boston, wrote "The Darkies' Dream" as a solo and it became such a hit that nearly all the bands in the country played it.

Now let's tell our right names and have an understanding as to just what a banjo is:

It's an instrument with five strings (four long, one short) and not what you have heard in the dance orchestras. Those steel strings instruments played with picks or plectrums I just can't call musical instruments, but they filled a gap in the dance orchestras of the '20's. They were a part of the rhythm section and supposed to add to the band. Harry Reser, I think, was, and is, the best player of the so-called tenor banjo. During the several years following World War I more tenor banjos were made and sold than any other music-making tool. Since then the tenor banjo has largely given way to the superior tone of the guitar.

THE NATIONAL INSTRUMENT

Practically everyone knows that the Stars and Stripes is our national emblem. Almost every moron knows the goldenrod is our national flower, but if you were to walk up the street and ask the first six men you met what our national instrument is you would probably get little information. If, after you told them what it is you asked what a banjo really is, you would be apt to get much less information.

Scotland has its bagpipe; Italy the violin, and so on down the line. So it is high time everyone knew our national musical instrument, the only one developed in the United States, is the banjo - especially so since it has had the most interesting career of any.

The foregoing was written more than 20 years ago when the banjo was near its lowest ebb. During the past year there have been gratifying signs of a revival of interest in the orthodox five-string variety, as was evidenced last summer when the August 15 issue of LIFE contained an article on "The Banjo Boom." The article didn't mention a fellow named Fred Van Eps, who has probably been actively booming the banjo longer than anyone else now alive. But, Jim, you took care of that to some extent by writing a reply that appeared in the September 5 issue. You say they cut your letter of more than a page down to five lines - but, at any rate, it let LIFE'S readers know that I am still living and playing the time-honored five-string banjo!

(To be continued)

A "Limited Edition" Record By Edith Helena and Domenico Russo

By JIM WALSH

When I attended the John Bieling Day Memorial observance at Garden City, New York, in September, 1948, I met a charming lady who had won world-wide fame as the operatic soprano, Edith Helena. As one of the organizers of the party I was so busy with many duties that I had less opportunity to talk with Madame Helena than I liked, but I still hope to have the happiness of meeting her again.

Meanwhile, I was recently overjoyed to receive an autographed copy of a ten-inch long-play record constituting a recital by Edith Helena and her late husband, Domenico Russo, a noted Italian tenor of the past generation, who was born in 1874 and died in 1932. The record is, without exaggeration, a limited editions production because the pressing has been restricted to 100 copies—which means it undoubtedly will become a choice collector's item. It is obtainable for $5, postpaid, from Arthur E. Knight, 81 Edgewood Avenue, Cranston 5, Rhode Island, a gifted young pianist and authority on operatic and concert recordings, who frequently contributes to that fascinating English publication, The Record Collector.

Included in the two faces of the long-player are three solos by Russo, which were made in 1907 and 1911, but have never hitherto been published; re-recordings of 4 numbers sung by Madame Helena from 1903 to 1923; three songs electrically recorded by her for private use from 1953 to 1955, and a spoken introduction in which the wonderful little lady of almost 80 graciously expresses her pleasure at authorizing the issuance of her beloved husband's legendary recordings. Mr. Knight furnishes the piano accompaniment for the electrically recorded solos.

Despite the technical defects, such as fairly high surface noise and occasional pitch wavers in the old records' piano background, this LP is a joy to hear in well nigh its entirety. My one disappointment was in the copying of the 1923 Edison Diamond Disc originally issued as "Novelty Imitation Medley," and containing Madame Helena's famous imitation of a violin playing "Kiss Me Again," and her singing of "The Last Rose of Summer" in which she introduces an amazing high note of F above high C. This record is more "forward" and "realistic" than any other of the acoustically recorded numbers, but the tone is rather coarse and the scratch seems more pronounced than when the Edison record is played on a New Edison phonograph. However, I have never yet heard dubbings of Diamond Discs that seemed entirely satisfactory, so there is no wonder that to my ears this one falls somewhat short.

The Russo numbers are heard first on side one. They include "La donna é mobile," from "Rigoletto," which the tenor sings with the proper rollicking abandon and gusto. It is very well recorded by 1907 standards. To my perception the best of the Russo records is the second, "O Paradiso," in which the beauty and passion of his voice are genuinely thrilling. I wonder how many other hearers will find a resemblance, as I thought I did, between his voice and that of another great Italian singer, Giovanni Zenatello. Tosti's "Ideale," a song for which I have never especially cared, is sung extremely well with consummate mastery of the melodic line. These last two numbers were recorded in 1911.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

By JIM WALSH

FRED VAN EPS

(Continued from March issue)

VIII. The Eight Famous Victor Artists

I have had and am still having, an interesting and what I suppose most people would consider a successful life, but the things that give me most pleasure nowadays are the knowledge that my children are doing well and the memories of the 43 years companionship I had with my beloved wife, "Flossie."

I had four sons. One, John, named for my father, was killed in a car wreck in 1945. Of the remaining boys, Fred, Jr., is the oldest. He was the arranger for Paul Whiteman until Whiteman went out of the orchestra business. Now he arranges for Raymond Scott's "Hit Parade" telecast seen on Saturday nights. He is in New York.

The two other boys are in California. Robert, a gifted pianist, is with M-G-M, where he is an arranger. George, who has been well known for many years as a dance band musician, is free-lancing with his guitar. He is the author of "The Van Eps Method" of guitar playing. He's been in a lot of films lately, but I haven't seen them. One is "The Pete Kelley Blues," starring Jack Webb. People frequently tell me, "I saw George in the talkies last night." Although I've lived in New Jersey all my life, I'm planning to move my laboratory to California, where I can be with Rob and George. Rob is well known as a writer on musical subjects and has written a book, "The Physics of Piano Technique." He has been my accompanist in the recordings I have made privately during recent years.

Which reminds me that this would be a good time to list the accompanists I have had, in the order in which they played for me. They are: William E. Mac Clymont, Frank P. Banta, Charles L. Van Baar, Belle Harty, Charles A. Prince, Felix Arndt, George Gershwin, Frank E. Banta, and Robert Van Eps.

My wife was Florence Schoffstall, of Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania. Her father was a contractor who took out the coal pillars from the mines and substituted wooden supports. At first the coal pillars were left in the mines for safety's sake, but then it was found that they could be removed and the wooden ones left in their place.

Now I come to the trip Flossie and I took to Europe. It was a wonderful experience, but it had what I suppose playwrights would call a tragic ending, at least a sad one for me.

You know, Flossie had almost an obsession for England and everything English. All her life she had wanted to go there. Mention almost any castle or cathedral and she could tell you its history. She used to read Pepys' Diary in bed before dropping off to sleep. It was her Bible. Well, we talked for years about going abroad, but somehow never actually made the start. Then something seemed to tell me: "If you are ever going to take that European trip you'd better get busy!" So I told Florence to get ready—we were going.

And we did. We sailed on the Queen Elizabeth on April 7, 1954. But we had plenty of preliminary trouble. As I've already mentioned, my birth certificate didn't give my first name, but merely said I was a male whose last name was Van Eps. Finally, I found a program of a recital in which I played the violin when I was eight years old. It was dated, and it gave my full name, Fred Van Eps, and mentioned my age. I had it photographed, sent it to Washington, and the trouble was cleared up. I never was able to find any proof that my wife had ever been born, but everything eventually worked out.

We had a wonderful time abroad. British hospitality is marvelous. No one has ever been treated any better than the English treated us. My fellow musicians gave two dinners in our honor and we were beautifully entertained at many private parties. A friend, Mrs. Fay Shields, went with us. Both Flossie and I were a hundred per cent Americans, but we certainly fell in love with England. That is, I did; she had always loved it.

We were abroad almost nine weeks. We went to Land's End and Southdown, and made a trip to Scotland, where we went up above Loch Lo-

JIM WALSH WANTS TO BUY

Old phonograph record catalogs and supplements (mostly prior to 1915); back copies of phonograph publications and all sorts of reference material dealing with the history and development of sound recording that will provide background information for Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Please do not send me lists of records for sale. I am not interested in buying phonographs and records by mail and do not want "The Victor Book of the Opera." Do not submit material without being instructed by me. I will not pay for or return unsolicited items. If I do not reply I already have the material you offer. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. Address:

JIM WALSH

Box 476

Vinton, Va.

tfx

Trend of the times is to glamorize the 1920 days of prohibition Dixieland and the Charleston. I have hundreds of Dixieland Jazz Band, Charleston records. A little later on radio got its start and the record business fell flat on its face. The greatest musical stars like Ellington, Jolly Roll, Morton, Fats Waller, King Oliver and other great artists appeared on independent labels such as Harmony, Brunswick, Okeh, and many others. I have thousands of these rare items.

AL McREA, SR.

Box 182, Westville, New Jersey

"F. R. P."

Famous Records of The Past
2060 1st Ave., New York, N.Y.

Jack L. Caidin

Re-issues and re-recordings of rare and unusual phonograph records. Operatic, Theatrical, Political, Instrumental. The finest in quality and true reproduction. Ten inch long playing records $3.98 each. Tax and postage prepaid.

SEND FOR FREE BULLETINS!

my65c

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

mond. Here are some pictures I made of that famous scenic spot. It's so far north you can read a newspaper without artificial illumination at 11:30 at night. We made side trips to Stratford-on-Avon and to Windsor Castle. Fourteen days were spent on the continent of Europe. It was a perfect trip. I'm so glad Flossie was able to fulfill her life's ambition.

We were impressed by the gallant way the people of Great Britain kept going so many years under great difficulties. They have an income tax of a straight 45 per cent and there's a 50 percent sales tax on virtually everything they buy. Yet they survived the horribly grim days of World War Two and the British Isles are now prospering. Tourists are able to buy things at a large discount by having them delivered to the boat. The material of this suit I am wearing was delivered to my boat. (We came home on the Queen Mary.) A suit of this material would cost at least $200 over here.

And now I think I can best tell the story of our return from that wonderful trip by quoting the following "Notes and Comments By the Editor" from the August, 1954, issue of B. M. G. That's a magazine which has been published more than 50 years in England for banjo, mandolin and guitar players. It carried a long interview with Vess Ossman when he went to England and gave a command performance for his fellow banjo enthusiast, King Edward VII, in 1903.

The people who had the pleasure of meeting the Van Eps on their recent visit to this country will not disagree with me when I say that Mrs. Van Eps has probably made the greatest conquest of any visitor to these shores. Her charm, her grace, her obviously "pleased to meet you" attitude to all she met did much to cement the "Hands Across the Sea" spirit in the course of her all-too-short stay.

It will therefore come as a shock to many to hear that this gracious lady suddenly died from massive coronary occlusion on June 8, within an hour after returning to her home in Plainfield, N. J.

Every reader of B. M. G. will want to join with me in extending sincerest condolences and the deepest sympathy to Fred Van Eps in his loss.

On their return to America, Mr. and Mrs. Van Eps and Mrs. Shields were met by a handful of friends, including Mr. and Mrs. Magee, who had arranged a welcoming dinner at the Red Coach Inn at Gloster, N. J. During the dinner, following a toast, the guests of honor gave snatches of their experiences and impressions and Flossie and Fred made a speech in which she spoke most highly of the people she had met in England.

Mr. and Mrs. Longacre, who live near Pittsburgh, decided to drive the Van Eps home. Within an hour Flossie was dead. They arrived in Plainfield: Mrs. Van Eps alighted from the car and kissed the neighbors' children who ran out to welcome the returning travellers. Stepping into the house, she sat down and suffered the heart attack that brought immediate death.

Fred Van Eps, in a brief note received a day or so ago, tells me that although his wife had suffered from a heart ailment for some time, the shock of her passing has left him prostrate. The only consolation he can find is that, as his dearly beloved wife had to go before him, she has been saved the utter grief he is suffering had he passed away first.

Yes, that's the way it was. We went into our home. Flossie sat down, said, "Our trip was the most wonderful experience of my life, but it's good to be back"—and was dead within just a few minutes. It seems that her strength held together just long enough for her to take the trip she had dreamed of all her life. Then, when her ambition was accomplished, it suddenly gave way. And I'm sure you understand what I meant when I said my father and mother went the right way when they died within 12 days of each other back in 1926.

XII Van Eps Laboratory

Now, let's talk about something else. I have already mentioned my laboratory at my home near Plainfield, and if I don't do some explaining your HOBBIES readers will probably be scratching their heads, trying to figure out what sort of a business I'm in.

Back in 1940, I was still trying to perfect my new technique for playing the banjo but was uncertain whether to keep on experimenting with it or to go back to the old method. The result was, I swung back and forth like a pendulum and for a while I didn't play the banjo at all. I had always been interested in the technical processes of sound recording, and so, during this period when my banjo stood idle, I developed some devices that are the foundation of my successful business.

The pictures on this circular will give you a clear idea of what we make. One of our specialties is the Van Eps vacuum system for drawing the chip in disc sound recording. We make this for the big recording companies. The vacuum system, which consists of four bellows vacuum pump mounted on a base, (a slow speed motor driven by a V belt), prevents the tangling of the thread with the stylus. Thread tangling, I'm sure you know, is the most common cause of failure in disc recording. My apparatus is efficient and quiet and can be placed directly beneath the recording machine.

Then here's a photo of the Van Eps patented eccentric fixture which cuts the eccentric circle that actuates record changers. It includes an eccentric cam that grips the pin of the turntable and actuates the swinging arm carrying the advance-ball and stylus. A magnifier and lamp are included, and with this fixture it does not take more than 30 seconds to make a cut that adapts the record for use on automatic changers.

It isn't necessary for me to have a large number of workers to turn out my recording devices in adequate volume, but the business, as I have said, has proved very profitable. One of these days I'll be operating it from California.

Speaking of California. I have another plan on the fire. Not so long ago I received a phone call from a man in New York who identified himself as a nephew of Vess Ossman. He had what I think is a great idea—a plan for getting one of the big movie companies to make a feature film based on the history of the banjo with prominent attention paid to the life story of Joe Sweeney, its inventor, who lived at Appomattox, Virginia, Where Lee surrendered to Grant. There could be also mention of Sweeney's brother, another skilled banjo player, who was attached to the staff of the Confederate General, "Jeb" Stuart. When I go to California in December, as I have been doing for years, I shall get in touch with some of the movie magnates and try to interest them in this scheme. A marker honoring Joe Sweeney has been placed at Appomattox, but he deserves more recognition than that.

XIII New Photography Method

One thing seems to lead to another, rambling along like this. You asked me to tell HOBBIES readers something about my method of—as you said—photographing nothing and making it come out something. For instance, taking a picture of a clear pane of glass and by careful attention to developing methods coming out with a finished print of intricate design and, often, of remarkable beauty. Well, the process is secret, and I don't think anybody else has done anything like it, but I'll tape record a description which I'll try to keep as non-technical as possible.

To begin with, it's not strictly a photographic process, for the reason that a camera lens is not used. It's a manufactured negative, starting with a piece of plain glass, 2½ inches by 4. The original idea was to make crystal negatives, with art effects like snow, frost on the window and what-have-you? I made a few of those and found that if you made one you made all. There was no variety. They were all alike. Then I got to floundering around and ran into a process that seemed to afford infinite variety. Finally, I got a method of making a rather remote form of crystallization that could be controlled. The results were astounding. The prints range from apparent photographs of the solar system to what appears to be luxuriant South American scenery. That's about all the detail I feel I can give, but I showed you some of the prints and you agreed they are really "out of this world." I think I can truthfully say nothing just like them had ever been seen before I hit on my secret process.

XIV New Recordings

Making records is far easier today than it was in 1897 when young Fred Van Eps first walked over to the Edison laboratory with two homemade cylinders as samples of his work, but a conscientious artist still will often make lots of "takes" before he achieves anything that satisfies him.

A few years ago, after I had perfected my new method of playing, I went back to recording. I issued an album which you remember, Jim, you reviewed in the April, 1952, issue of HOBBIES. The descriptive notes on the inside album cover were reproduced from your review in Variety. The records came out under the Five String Banjo label, and the recording was done on equipment designed and built by me. The playing was done at Robert's home, with Rob serving as accompanist.

The album includes "Maple Leaf Rag," "Ragtime Oriole," "Smiler Rag," "Nola," "Dell Oro" and Moszkowski's "Bolero," and it was quite successful. Right now I have plans for issuing another album of five-string banjo music and I'm giving you some test pressings of numbers that may appear in it. I call your special attention to one called "Cubist," recorded in Rob's home after several hours hard work. This is the sixth take. "Cubist" is an enormously difficult thing to play properly, but I believe this is the best record I have ever made.

You asked me the names of some of my favorites in the old recording days. Well, I like "Persiflage," which I made for Victor and other companies. I also like a Victor by the Van Eps Trio, "Oh, Susie, Behave." And I think one of the brightest and most sparkling things I recorded is an Indestructible cylinder which I played for you with my electrified cylinder machine. It has the odd title of "Powder Rag and Dope," and seems to be rather a hard record to find nowadays. Probably my biggest seller was the one called "Dixie Medley" on Edison discs and cylinders and a good many other brands. Edison used it as its "standard" banjo record—that is, the one that all banjo recordings were supposed to equal in skill of performance and naturalness of tone. I was amused by this excerpt from instructions to Edison dealers, which you showed me in the Edison house organ, Diamond Points, for May, 1917:

You should have a supply of No. 50195, "Dixie Medley" and "Infanta March." A dancing expert tells us that the Dixie Medley is the best one-step she ever heard. This was news to us. But the expert was right; we proved it. Moreover, this is a superb demonstration record. Van Eps plays the Dixie Medley for a well-known talking machine. Compare Van Eps' talking machine record with Van Eps' New Edison Re-Creation. We don't know anything deadlier in comparative demonstration.

No, I'm not going to say what brand of "talking machine record" the Edison writer was thinking about. I honestly don't know. "Dixie Medley" was called "Turkey in the Straw Medley" on Victor. I re-made it around 1920, after it had originally been recorded by Ossman. As I remember, Charlie Prince, the recording director for the old Columbia Phonograph Company, arranged that medley.

One of the most popular records the Trio ever made was Victor 17575, "Too Much Ginger and The Smiler Rag." They were both one-steps and they were played good and loud. I was amused when you showed me that description in the June, 1914, Victor supplement:

"A REAL DANCING NOVELTY. Here are two novelty selections, which can be used for dancing purposes if desired. They are simply tremendous in volume, and are just the thing for dancing on the porch or lawn, or in a large hall. If you play them in a small room you should use a half-tone needle or you are likely to break the windows!"

"The players in this new combination are the best in their respective lines—the best banjoist, the best ragtime pianist and the best drummer in America!"

That was quite a compliment for Felix Arndt, Eddie King and Fred Van Eps!

In September we came through with two more rowdy one-steps on Victor record 17601. One side was "Chinese Picnic" and "Oriental Dance," and the other "The Notoriety Rag." The supplement remarked:

"To say that the two records by this organization of 'noise makers' which were listed in June have made a hit is putting it very mildly indeed, as the effort to supply the demand has in fact taxed the capacity of our record factory. Here are two more lively numbers, just as loud and in perfect time for one-stepping. They will be found ideal for open-air dancing, as they can be heard at almost any distance."

We gave the old "William Tell" warhorse a ragging in August, 1915, when the Trio's record of "I Wonder What Will William Tell" came out in one-step form. It was on 17799, backed with "Chicken Reel Comedy Medley" by the Six Brown Brothers Saxophone Sextet. Once more we were lively and loud—but all this time I still didn't like using drums and wanted to do what I eventually did—substitute a saxophone.

I have always been a strong believer in restricting the banjo to the type of music for which it's suited. To my way of thinking, the late Alfred A. Farland, my Plainfield neighbor who died May 5, 1954, at the age of 88, was a pathetic example of the banjoist who goes wrong. All his professional career Mr. Farland tried to adopt the banjo to types of classical music for which it was unfitted. When Vess Ossman was interviewed by B. M. G. more than 50 years ago he pointed out this fallacy of Farland's. I once paid Farland for a course of instruction and when he wanted me to play Hauser's "Cradle Song" I quit in disgust. It isn't the question of classical or otherwise, it's the type. There are plenty of rhythmic numbers that are effective in both classes.

Mr. Farland and I were friends and used to attend get-togethers of five-string banjoists. In his late years when he had trouble with his hands (he also became deaf) and couldn't keep playing, he was a ticket-taker at a theater. He had a great admiration for my wife—everybody admired Flossie—and he would always "pass" her in. The old gentleman was an impressive looking figure with a shock of snow white hair, but his house on East Second Street in Plainfield was the most abandoned appearing place in the city. It was never painted and the grass on the lawn was never cut. I used to hear Mr. Farland practicing on the banjo inside the house when he would have been far better occupied outside, getting some wholesome exercise by cutting the grass. Yet he certainly lived to an advanced age. It seems he made only one record—an Edison of "Carnival of Venice." I heard it for the first time when you played it for me, and it was obvious that Farland's banjo was out of tune! . . . Speaking of banjoists, I was very sorry when Joe Morley, the best English player of his time, died back in 1937.

XV Random Reflections

Jim, I want to tell you I've been very much pleased by the warm love you so evidently have for your two beautiful cats, Roger and Gray, and the devotion they show you in return. One of my tests of a man is whether he cares for animals. If you didn't like animals I couldn't like you. I have never seen better cared for pets than black-and-gold Roger, and Gray, who lives up to his name, and I don't think I ever saw two cats whose sweetness and goodness made them more worthy of the best of everything.

My wife was extremely fond of animals. She was devoted to our Collie, dog, Nellie, and taught her to "sing." Flossie would say "pianissimo, Nellie," and Nellie would bark very softly. "Fortissimo!" would bring a loud outburst, Nellie actually understood, and still understands, a number of musical terms. Some people insisted she merely learned a routine and gradually barked louder as Flossie worked up from pianissimo to fortissimo. To disprove that, she would mix up the instructions, and Nellie would obey them in whatever order they were given.

I know a cat 25 years old, and I hope Roger and Gray will reach that fine old age. But I must tell you about a black cat owned by some friends of mine in England. We'll call him Tommy. My friends lived in one of the heavily bombed sections of England during World War Two, and the lady of the house got into the habit of listening for the bomb "alert." When it sounded she would pick

A Francene's Original MUSICAL CARRY-ALL Only $5.95 Postpd.

Lift cover and listen! Lovely melodies automatically play on a fine imported Swiss music box which stops when cover closes. Carry-All is handmade in peasant fashion from native ash wood trimmed in gleaming black. Self-Locking cover is beautifully decorated in color and personalized with your name. Measures 9 1/4" long, 7" wide, 6" high. Send check or m. o. (No COD's, please), also name to be personalized.

FRANCENE'S

Dept. H

Warren, R. I.

myc

FRED VAN EPS

(Continued from page 32)

in banjos. An instrument came out called the "Encore" automatic banjo. It was more or less like the tenor banjo, with the four strings tuned in fifths—C, G, D, A,—and it was activated with a paper roll, perforated just like a player piano roll. It was run by a vacuum. They had little knobs to stop the strings and there were four little vacuum bows with steel picks on the ends that picked the strings. You could make a single stroke or a tremolo continuous stokes. When they were in order they sounded pretty good.

The first automatic banjo I ever heard demonstrated was at a concert in Chickering Hall—that's an old place long since gone—at 18th street and Fifth Avenue, New York. One of those things out of tune was the most god-awful things you ever heard in your life—they were terrible! Well, anyway, there's a player out in Venice, California, who's supposed to be the originator of the tenor banjo. He was called in to tune this automatic banjo. He was a violinist, but he thought that if he could tune a banjo in fifths the way he did a violin, in a week or two he could become a banjo player.

About that time there were a lot of mandolin players who came to New York from Chicago, looking for business, but they found there wasn't any demand for the mandolin. Everybody wanted the banjo. They stayed until their money gave out, then went back to Chicago and came back with banjos tuned in fifths. And that was the start of the tenor banjo, which is used as a rhythm instrument in orchestras. But it never was, and never will be, a solo instrument!

So much for that. You asked me if I listen to present-day popular music. Yes, I tune in "Hit Parade" programs and that sort of thing and listen as long as I can stand it, but I usually wind up turning the knob violently to shut the set off and muttering to myself. Popular music today undoubtedly is the worst in American history. When the disc jockeys play the so-called ten most popular songs of the week they select almost entirely the moronic junk picked by teen-agers who will fall for any new fad. This "rock and roll" and all that sort of rubbish is terrible beyond belief. In the old days music was for the whole family, but it was usually the grown-ups who did the buying. Nowadays it's the kids who bring home the records and tune in the radio and tv—and it's largely they who make eating in a restaurant a nightmare for a civilized person by dropping coins into juke boxes.

But if I keep talking in this vein, the younger set among HOBBIES readers will accuse me of being an old fogey—or, maybe, even a "square!"—and we don't want that to happen. I don't want to conclude our recorded interview on a note of bitterness and disillusionment. Life has been too good to me for that. So suppose, Jim, we bow ourselves off the stage gracefully by quoting that paragraph you wrote about me in Life for September 5, 1955:

SIRS: "Strummin' Up a Banjo Boom" (Life, Aug. 15) should have mentioned the virtuoso most connoisseurs consider the greatest living master of the five-string instrument—Fred Van Eps of Plainfield, N. J. He made his first phonograph records at the age of 16 on Edison's wax cylinders, and is still going strong, playing and recording, at the age of 76. JIM WALSH, Vinton, Va.

Going strong! That's what I am doing and hope to be doing for many years to come—even up to the age of 108 and beyond! Regardless of whether I am in New Jersey or California or paying another visit to you and Roger and Gray here in Roanoke I'm going to keep on trying to make the most of every passing moment, for only in rightfully directed action can progress be made. And, as Thomas A. Edison used to say: "I'd rather wear out than rust out!"

THE END

CURRENT COLLECTOR'S RECORDINGS

(Continued from page 32)

of these was issued a few years ago by Coral and the record is titled "I'll Cry Tomorrow" (Coral EC 81103). Besides the title song, the record includes three other songs closely identified with Lillian Roth: "Eadie Was A Lady," "Did You Ever See A Dream Walking," and "Please Tell Me When."

In connection with the current motion picture Epic has released a twelve inch long playing record that is truly a Lillian Roth cavalcade of hits:

Epic LN 3206 (also available on PG 9010) Lillian Roth:
Love Thy Neighbor
Ain't She Sweet
Let's Fall In Love
If I Could Be With You
When The Red, Red Robin Comes
Bob Bob Bobbin' Along
Sing You Sinners
Honey
Goody, Goody
As Time Goes By
Don't Take Your Love From Me
Happiness Is A Thing Called Joe
I'd Climb The Highest Mountain
* * *

HELEN KANE: In June, 1954, in this column I mentioned some of the recent recordings that had been made by Helen Kane for the MGM and Columbia labels. Since then she has again recorded for MGM, this time a record titled "Boop Boop a Doop Girl."

MGM X1164 (45 rpm extended play)
Do Something
When I Get You Alone Tonight
That's My Weakness Now
When My Sugar Walks Down The Street

For all collectors of the music of the late twenties and the early thirties, I am sure these recent records by Lillian Roth and Helen Kane will be of importance.

OLD VEHICLES

THE GAD-WHIP

By D. TUDOR HARRELL

At Caistor in Lincolnshire, England, there existed a custom on Palm Sunday, whereby a person representing the proprietor of the estate of Broughton came to the porch of Caistor Church while the first lesson was being read and cracked the Gad-Whip three times. He then folded it up neatly and returned to his pew until the reading of the second lesson.

He then approached the minister with the whip held upright. At the upper end was a purse holding 30 pieces of silver. He knelt before the

(Continued on page 37)

WANTED

WANTED AUTOMOTIVE ITEMS: Anything pertaining to the early automotive industry, all kinds of automotive trade publications, catalogs, instruction books, technical books, automobile hand books, pictures, framed or suitable for framing. Brass lights, oil or acetylene, bulb horns, acetylene generators, some accessories, emblems, name plates, hub caps, license plates, motor meters, old cars, trucks, bought anywhere, clothing, dusters, goggles, etc., or what have you.—B. J. Pollard, 14300 Prairie, Detroit 38, Mich. je 36311

WANTED TO BUY OR TRADE automobile radiator name plates.—Wallace Huffman, 610 South Webster, Kokomo, Indiana. ja124201

WANTED: Genuine stagecoach.—Wm. Gannon, Mabton, Washington. ap12654

OLD AUTO LAMPS, horns, books, old cars, etc., wanted.—D. D. Way, P. O. Box 372, San Mateo, California. ap6015

WANTED:—License plates; Automobile magazines; Old automobile; all before 1920. —Anthony Shuplenus, Newport, New Jersey. je3042

UP TO $10.00 each paid for early license plates in good condition, more for 1st issues. —Linville Jewelry Store, Winterset, Iowa. au6276

WANTED: Old Automobile magazine "MOTOR" prior to 1925.—Paul N. Woehler, 572 Enright Ave., Cincinnati 5, Ohio. my3272

REWARD Wanted old time automobiles or parts of same regardless of condition. Especially interested in old Stutz or Mercers. $25.00 Reward for discoveries, if such information results in a purchase by me.—F. W. Edwards, 839 Marsh Road, Menlo Park, California. ap1823

AUTOMOBILIANA FOR SALE

COLLECTORS ITEM: 1920 Lincoln Motor Co. stock certificate, original Henry Leland issue. Also two 8x10 glossy photos of the Leland Lincoln, items are original not copies. While they last $2.00.—Wylie S. Boley, 11707 Mendota, Detroit 4, Michigan. ap3046

WANTED

Antique Automobilia: Brass Head and Side Lamps, Horns, etc. Also old prints, sheet music, posters pertaining to old autos.

Toys:

Tin and iron automobiles, Iron horse drawn carriages, circus wagons, fire engines, etc. Also Bell Toys.

W. S. McKELVY

McKelvy & Company
1146 Union Trust Building

Pittsburgh 19,

Po

ltc

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

By JIM WALSH

Joseph Tunnicliffe Pope, Jr.

The title of this month's article is just a little joke of mine. It amuses me to imagine HOBBIES readers wondering "Who is Jim writing about this month?" And then to think I hear them exclaiming: "Joseph Tunnicliffe Pope, Jr.! Who on earth was he?"

Not one record collector in a thousand, I am sure, would be able to give any information, off-hand, concerning the subject of this sketch. But when I explain that Pope was famous in vaudeville for a generation as one of the brightest, breeziest and cleverest of rapid-fire monologists and that he used the stage name of Murry K. Hill, I can visualize some irate readers and a concerted exclamation something like this:

"Murry K. Hill! Of course we know him! Why didn't you say you were talking about Murry Hill in the first place!"

Now that I've had my joke, I'll say it's truly a pleasure to be writing about Murry K. Hill, whom I have admired nearly as long as I can remember. Although the genial comedian's recording span was only a brief five years, he made a long series of comic talking and singing records, many of which remained popular for nearly a generation. In my opinion they are among the most amusing specialties ever recorded by any professional funny man.

Even though he used the "Jr." suffix until he died, Joseph Pope lived to an advanced age. He was 65 when he retired, and he survived for 12 years after that. I hope his sunset years were happy, for his stage appearances and records had given pleasure to such a multitude of listeners that he deserved to enjoy his days of leisure. Surely the veteran fun-maker found some consolation in the knowledge that his discs and cylinders, made 30 to 35 years before his death, would keep him from being forgotten.

Let's consider the relatively little known about "Murry K. Hill" himself before entering into a detailed consideration of his recordings. The November 11, 1942, Billboard contained this obituary notice:

"POPE—JOSEPH T. (Murry K. Hill) 77, vaude actor for 30 years before his retirement 12 years ago, October 23 in Chicago. He toured the country in black face roles and also made comedy phonograph records."

Note that The Billboard spelled

Hill's assumed first name as "Murray." So did some of the record companies in the beginning, but Hill must have told them he preferred the shorter spelling, for the name was soon changed to Murry.

II. Biographical Details

Joseph Tunnicliffe Pope, Jr., to use his full name for the last time, was born in New York City on April 15, 1865—just six days after Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox, Va. His father was born in England, and his mother, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Bradley, in New York State.

Even though he was born in the East there is some reason to believe the comedian lived most of his life in the Middle West. He may have grown up in Indiana, for an old Victor record supplement refers to him as "the Indiana humorist." However, his home appears to have been in Chicago from the beginning of his vaudeville career until his death at 4:30 p. m., October 22, 1942—not October 23, as given in The Billboard's "Final Curtain." I know little of his early life, but a U. S. Everlasting cylinder record catalog for 1912 says he "began as a traveling salesman, then decided to tell his funny stories in vaudeville." I question the statement that he did blackface comedy. Hill didn't use Negro dialect in his records, and pictures of him in his stage make-up show him as a tall, slender, hatchet-faced middle-aged man, wearing an enormous high hat and having something of the appearance of a farcical school teacher.

The comedian was married. His wife's first name was Nellie, and she was 65 when he died at the age of 77 years, six months and four days. Dr. Alex J. Azar, who treated Pope in his last illness, recorded that he attended the elderly humorist from September 8, 1942, until his death. The physician attributed his patient's fatal illness to an acute cardiac dilatation caused by chronic myocarditis (inflammation of the muscular part of the heart wall) and to hypertension. Pope had been ill a year. He was cremated and buried in Acacia Park cemetery, Cook County, Illinois, on October 24, 1942.

And now, as we proceed to a consideration of Pope's recording activities, let's abandon the name his parents gave him in favor of the much better known assumed one of Murry K. Hill.

III. Edison and Other Cylinders

I have often wondered what caused Joe Pope to take the stage name he made famous. Conceivably, it may have come from the Murray Hill section of his metropolitan New York birthplace, with the K. placed in the middle to balance the sound.

If Hill was a comedian for about 30 years before he retired, he must have given up toting a drummer's sample case to enter vaudeville somewhere around 35. He was 42 when his first record appeared—rather a late start. This Edison cylinder, "In the Good Old Steamboat Days" (No. 9619), was announced in August, 1907, the month that also saw the debut of Harvey Hindermeyer and Reinald Werrenrath as Edison soloists. Here's what The New Phonogram said of Hill's first offering:

A comic song telling of the days when the old Mississippi used to carry a different type of river boat from what she bears now. In those days, if the singer is to be believed, existence was far from monotonous. . . . There are five verses on the record. The enunciation though rapid is so distinct as to be easily understood. Murry K. Hill, who wrote it and sings it, although a new addition to our artists, is a well known singer on the vaudeville stage.

"In the Good Old Steamboat Days" is the only Murry K. Hill record I can recall that is entirely sung, instead of featuring a rapid-fire monolog. It has a catchy, haunting, jig-like tune, and the words are amusing. Here are two stanzas I find especially funny:

In the good old steamboat days,
When the river would not raise,
The old Miss-sip she got so slow
In the bottom of the river
the ducks would blow.
Fish called pikes and cats,
they all were acrobats;
They'd stand on their heads to wet their gills
In the good old steamboat days!
In the good old steamboat days
Draw poker was the craze.
My grandad played a game
one night,
Held five kings—that was not right!
That started up the fun,
for the captain held a gun,
And the coroner held an inquest
In the good old steamboat days!

Many listeners who heard this first Hill record observed that the comedian had a high tenor voice and detected a certain resemblance in his singing style to Bill Murray's rendition of rapid-fire George M. Cohan patriotic and comic songs. There was perhaps even a greater similarity to Cohan himself, but without the nasal, out-of-the-side-of-the-mouth effect that Cohan's singing always had. Years later, anyone seeking a comparison would have found a kinship between Hill's carefree style and that of Frank Crumit. His best work also had much of the fresh and seemingly spontaneous air of Billy Jones and Ernest Hare. But Murry K. Hill was no imitator. He was a personality in his own right, with a manner so refreshing and inimitable that, in spite of the outmoded subjects around which his monologs are largely based—woman suffrage, prohibition, "trust-busting," etc. (and of course, like all comedians, he adverted often to the infelicities of married life) his satiric

Murray K. Hill is shown wearing his vaudeville high hat, in this advertisement of U. S. Everlasting Records.

Illustrated from the May, 1911, Talking Machine World discussions remain entertaining today.

But, since this first record had no monolog, I am anticipating a bit. Edison seemed in no hurry to issue a second two-minute cylinder by Hill, for the next, No. 9940, "Oh, Glory!" didn't appear until September, 1908. It was described as "one of Mr. Hill's comic song successes. The funny words and Mr. Hill's droll manner combine to make it an instant hit with his vaudeville audiences."

Rather surprisingly, neither of Hill's wax cylinders was in Edison's best-seller list. To the contrary, both were listed in a special catalog of 500 "slow sellers" which dealers were privileged to sell at a reduced price before they were cut out of the catalog on September 15, 1911.

The comedian's remaining Edison cylinders are all four-minute. He is well represented in the first list of Amberol wax cylinders dated November, 1908. Amberol No. 16 is "The Stranded Minstrel Man," of which the description said: "One of the cleverest acts now in vaudeville, consisting of two very good humorous songs and a 400 word monolog. The monologist must of course knock somebody and on this occasion, (1) the manager of a minstrel troupe who left his company stranded, (2) the B. & O. Railroad and (3) the Inside Inn of the Jamestown Exposition all get 'theirs.'"

In the same list Hill was again on hand with No. 41, "A Bunch of Nonsense." Said the supplement writer: "Another crack-a-jack vaudeville sketch by Hill, which includes a couple of his latest song hits. The first is a neat parody on 'Goodbye, Little Girl, Goodbye.' The second, a parody on 'Blue Bell.' This is very funny. It tells the short life story of 'Our Hired Gal, Sal,' after she used coal oil for starting a fire. Her history was very short indeed. Another feature is a short recitation about a piece of cheese. This also is a remarkably 'strong feature.' Judging from the titles of the two songs he parodied, Hill could hardly have been singing 'two of his latest song hits' on this record for both 'Blue Bell' and 'Goodbye, Little Girl' go back to 1904—which was probably the year he began to use the parodies in vaudeville. I suspect that Hill's records were largely composed of material which he had discarded after preparing new acts. The Inside Inn of the Jamestown Exposition of course flourished in 1907, the year the exposition was held.

In January, 1909, the monologist was represented by another four-minute cylinder, No. 66, "A Comedy Dream," which I consider one of his less amusing efforts. However, the Edison writer was just about correct in saying: "It would be difficult to find a more nonsensical lot of matter than Mr. Hill repeats for this record. It includes some of the brightest, best things picked from his several vaudeville acts."

Two months went by without another Hill cylinder, but when one appeared in April it took rank with the best records he ever made. It was No. 101, "A String of Laughs." The opening song, "Don't!" now sounds too outmoded to be especially funny, but the ludicrous account of Columbus' discovery of America (in which Queen Isabella of Spain meets Columbus while walking down Broadway and takes him into the bar of the Waldorf-Astoria, where she buys him "three schooners" will always bring a laugh. So will "400 Nursery Rhymes Brought Up-to-Date," sung in Hill's inimitably breathless manner. A typical excerpt:

Mary had a little lamb;
Its fleece was white as snow, sir.
She took the lamb to Pittsburgh -
Now it's blacker than a crow, sir.

But there aren't 400 nursery rhymes, I counted them.

Hill probably was away on tour several months, for his next Edison record, No. 185, "There's a Woman in the Case," didn't appear until August, 1909. I haven't heard it.

Another hilarious concoction came out in November - No. 291, "Grandma's Mustard Plaster." The catalog editor said: "A monolog on everything in general and a goat in particular precedes a song recital of the wonderful drawing qualities of "Grandma's Mustard Plaster..." This is followed by more talk and another humorous song containing advice on how to successfully handle a bumble bee."

Still another excellent concoction came out in March, 1910 - No. 370, "A Monolog On Married Life," described as "a vaudeville specialty following the usual lines of this artist's always acceptable contributions. In this number he injects an amazing amount of sometimes sage and always side-splitting advice to married men, the wisdom of which he avers was gained by personal experience. At the conclusion of the monolog he gives a neat little recitation in which he compares life to a game of cards."

An absence of almost a year and a half followed before Hill was again represented in the Edison catalog. I have never heard No. 748, "Back to Arizona," which made its bow in August, 1911, but its description sounds as if it would be highly amusing:

A bunch of nonsense, pure and simple, but very funny and told in his happiest vein by this prime favorite of monologists—with a sprinkling of song thrown in. It's all about Arizona—a truly wonderful place if credence can be given to the somewhat weird tale of its productivity that Mr. Hill recites. For instance, who would believe that German catfish could be raised on an alkali plain? Mr. Hill solemnly avers that he raised such a crop and moreover would try to have us believe that they were all drowned in a rainstorm. There are plenty more such absurdities, all combining to make one of the most entertaining records of its kind we have ever placed in our catalog.

Notice that this cylinder was described as "a bunch of nonsense." That must have been a favorite expression with Hill, for it is frequently used to describe his records. Judging from the quoted description, I suspect he used some of the same material in this Edison record that went into his Victor, "Burbank the Wizard."

Another likely claimant for the honor of being Hill's best Edison cylinder was announced in June, 1912. It was No. 1019, "Seated Around an Oil Stove," and was described as "a clever and original vaudeville sketch, almost telling of the sad fate of 14 children who were seated around an oil stove." Hill rambles along, getting away from the subject of the 14 children and being heckled so much by Ed Meeker that in disgust he finally sings a song to "kill these kids off."

That concludes the list of Hill's four-minute Amberol cylinders with one exception. Edison set aside ten records which were not to be sold by dealers but were given away to everyone who bought a gear-shift attachment that made it possible to play four-minute cylinders on a two-minute machine. One of these, identified by the letter B, instead of by number, was "Father's Eccentricities," which, I'm not sure, but what I consider the very best of Hill's comedy effusions. It includes a song poking fun at "Father's" chicken heartedness when war was declared and a monolog telling how absent-minded

Father was. It seems Father had a dog he thought the world of and every night before he went to bed he would kick the dog downstairs. But one night, instead of kicking the dog downstairs and going to bed, Father put the dog to bed and kicked himself downstairs. He then prowled around all night through alleys, looking for cats, rats and other dogs and didn't know the difference until morning came and he couldn't bark. Hill dryly commented: "We're going to put a muzzle on Father in the morning." He also sang a song illustrating the method Father, as a school teacher, used in explaining the alphabet.

When the Blue Amberol unbreakable cylinders came out, several of Hill's efforts were incorporated into the B. A. list. "Father's Eccentricities" remained as B. Others were: 1909, "Seated Around an Oil Stove;" 1969, "Grandma's Mustard Plaster;" 2112, "String of Laughs," and, finally, one which I haven't found in the wax Amberol list, 2166, "The Honest Hold-Up Man and Billy Beans." All these were issued in 1913. Hill never made another Edison cylinder, but it's strange he didn't record for the Diamond Discs.

Hill's other cylinder activities may be disposed of briefly. He made at least four U. S. Everlasting cylinders. These appeared in 1910 and 1911. One was two-minute - No. 374, "Oh Fiddle!" and the others four-minute: 1172, "A Bunch of Nonsense," 1175, "Married Life" and 1242, "The Trusts." He also made one four-minute Indestructible cylinder (the Indestructible brand at that time was being sold and issued under the Columbia name) - 3230, "A Bunch of Nonsense." Possibly he made others that haven't come to my attention.

IV. Hill's Disc Records

As far as I know, Hill didn't make any Zon-o-phone records, and his Columbia list is so short it may as well be disposed of now.

The first appeared in June, 1911 - A991, "The Old Jokes" and "Some Talks and Songs." The supplement writer was downright effusive:

Introducing to Columbia audiences one of America's cleverest and most versatile monologists and comedy entertainers, Mr. Murry K. Hill, whose work on the big vaudeville circuits the country over has made many thousands laugh. There is individuality to spare in each of these recordings by Mr. Hill. A generous measure of the artist's own cheerful and optimistic personality has found its way into the heart of the record itself, which results in the auditor receiving an impression of intimacy with the performer such as it is impossible to resist. In labeling his first number "Old Jokes," Mr. Hill has himself indulged in a joke at the expense of his audience, as the jokes (the way he tells them) are not half as old as they are extremely amusing. On the reverse side Mr. Hill runs the gamut from grand opera to burlesque, leaving the listener with a feeling that he has never in his life been better entertained.

Hill's only other Columbia disc was announced the following month: A1011, "A Discourse on the Trusts" and "Father Was Out." It was thus described:

Murry K. Hill's first Columbia Double-Disc made an instantaneous hit in our list last month, something in his easy, nonchalant manner of presenting the humorous side of a situation appealing strongly to the thousands who are able to separate the wheat from the chaff in lines of comic recitation and descriptive specialty. Mr. Hill's natural and unforced manner stamps him as an artist in this peculiar line of work. In this month's double disc we have two of the very best specialties in his repertory, "The Discourse on Trusts" in particular having many unexpected humorous twists in it such as will provide entertainment for everybody. . . . "Father Was Out" is an amusing potpourri of song monologs in which Mr. Hill's versatility as a comedian is again conspicuously evident.

Years ago I asked the late Frank Dorian, a veteran Columbia official, why that company issued so few Murry Hill monologs. Mr. Dorian, with whom I maintained a long and intimate correspondence, replied that Hill was an amusing comedian but his stock of material was too limited to provide of many records being arranged from it. However, judging from the length of the humorist's Edison and Victor lists, scarcity of material could hardly be the right explanation.

The first ten-inch Victor record by Murry K. Hill didn't come out until January, 1910, when he was already well established as an Edison favorite. It was No. 16436, "Father Was Out," coupled with "Flanagan's Motor Car," by Steve Porter.

Catalog editor Sam Rous wrote: "A new entertainer is here introduced to the great Victor audience. Mr. Hill is a vaudeville favorite and always keeps his hearers in roars of laughter by his droll delivery of a very witty store of jokes, parodies and nonsense in general."

That same month, January, also brought a 12-inch Hill record, No. 35093, "The Tale of the Cheese," coupled with "Hortense at Sea," a comic monolog by another great vaudeville favorite, Nat M. Wills. The comment on the Hill offering was: "Mr. Hill presents one of his inimitable nonsense specialties, which contains a parody, some comic conversation, a melodramatic recitation and a song about a boy and a bumblebee. The scene in which the cheese suddenly appears, unaided, in the courtroom to testify for the prisoner is most affecting."

In February, Hill was on hand with his favorite title, "A Bunch of Nonsense," coupled on No. 16446 with "Down Where the Big Bananas Grow," by Collins and Harlan. Victor had started out mispelling Murry as Murray, and the supplement note read: "Murray Hill has become a favorite Victor entertainer at one jump, his January records making a big hit. Here is another frivolous collection of 'Hillisms,' augmented by another of those real darky shouts by the ever welcome 'Kings of Comedy.'" The April issue brought No. 16463, "A Talk On Married Life," with "Negro Medley," by the American Quartet, on the B side. In this record Hill said his wife's hair was so red that if she went into the yard at night the roosters would begin to crow, thinking it sunrise. He also recited "Life is a Game of Cards."

A year went by before Hill was heard of again in the Victor lists. Probably he was on one of those coast-to-coast vaudeville trips that used to take so much out of the old-time variety artists. His ten-inch offering, No. 16838, was "A Bit of Grand Opera," coupled with a Harry Von Tilzer song, "I Love It," sung by the American Quartet. Sam Rous warned: "Don't imagine from the title that this is a grand opera selection—it isn't!" By this time Hill's first name was being spelled "Murry."

On the same supplement page was a twelve-inch Hill record, 35186, "Seated 'Round an Oil Stove," inappropriately combined with "Jolly Jingles Two-Step" by the Victor Dance Orchestra. Remarkably Rous: "Under this absurd title, Mr. Hill has given us a large chunk of pure nonsense—that is all it can be called. However, you must laugh in spite of yourself, as it is undeniably funny."

May brought two more Hill recordings: 16844, "Through the Hole in the Fence," a rather below par offering dealing largely with baseball, coupled with "Come, Josephine, In My Flying Machine," by Ada Jones and the American Quartet; and 16846, "A Bit of Drama," with a rather unsuitable coupling, "That's Yiddisha Love," sung by Monroe Silver. A few weeks before the present article was completed, the death was announced of Hans Wagner, the great old-time shortstop of the Pittsburgh Pirates. In "Through the Hole in the Fence," it is rather amusing to note that Hill refers to Wagner's being paid the fabulous salary of $10,000 a year! But he predicted that when "The Dutchman's" eyes grew dim and his legs began to fail, some ten years from then, the only way Hans would see baseball would be "Through the Hole in the Fence." In "A Bit of Grand Opera" he said he would sing something written by the great Wagner—"the greatest shortstop who ever lived." "A Bit of Drama" was described as "a mock melodrama, in each act of which he forgets his characters and invents new ones. It is all very funny."

In June, Hill made two more appearances in the Victor list. He occupied the A side of 16849, with "Burbank, the Wizard," while Steve Porter and Byron Harlan on the reverse gave an impersonation of "Two Rubes Swapping Horses." The supplement said: "We have all heard of Mr. Burbank's achievements in creating new varieties of fruit and flowers, but some of the marvels which Mr. Hill relates will astound even Mr. Burbank." Hill was allotted the B side of 16861, his "Adventures in a Department Store" playing second to "My Yiddisha Colleen," sung by Walter Van Brunt.

July brought another Hill record, No. 16867, "The Old Jokes" (which had been issued the month before by

(Continued on page 35)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 33)

Columbia) with "Steamboat Bill," a big hit as sung by Arthur Collins, sharing the honors. "Mr. Hill," the supplement commented, "relates some antediluvian jokes in so clever a manner that they seem better than new ones!"

There was a lapse of a month before the next Hill record came chuckling from the presses. It was 16903, "A Talk on Trusts," "The Old-Time Street Faker" on the other side, represented the combined talents of Porter and Harlan with Fred Van Eps playing a snappy banjo accompaniment. In October, Porter, Harlan and Van Eps combined on 16890 to depict "The Village Barber," while Hill told "How Columbus Discovered America." The supplement editor said: "The true history of Columbus' discovery is now for the first time made public. It is quite interesting, but Mr. Hill must be mixed in his periods, as he mentions a meeting between Isabella and Columbus at the Waldorf!" Incidentally, on this Victor record Hill referred to the hotel as the "Waldorf-Castoria!"

The list of Hill's Victor records was now complete, except that four titles were soon given different numbers and couplings from those they had originally had, in the belief that the weak songs with which they had been coupled were slowing their sales. "Adventures in a Department Store" and "A Bit of Drama" were divorced from their Yiddish pairings and combined on 16944. "A Bit of Grand Opera" and "Through the Hole in the Fence" were coupled on 16954.

Thenceforth, the name of Murry Hill never appeared in another Victor supplement, but most of his records remained good sellers for several years. An odd thing happened when the November, 1916, catalog of Victor records was issued. Up to that time Hill had never been given an annotation in the complete alphabetical Victor lists but—probably in the belief that his excellent comedy sketches were being pushed into the background by newer records—the catalog said:

"Murry K. Hill is a vaudeville favorite, and always keeps his hearers in roars of laughter by his droll delivery of a very witty store of jokes, parodies and nonsense in general. There is individuality to spare in each of these recordings by Mr. Hill. A generous measure of the artist's own cheerful and optimistic personality has found its way into the heart of the records which results in the auditor receiving an impression of intimacy with the performer such as it is impossible to resist."

Until I copied the foregoing commentary I had never noticed the most amazing thing about it. The lead-off sentence is lifted from the January, 1910, Victor supplement description of Hill's first Victor record, but the other two sentences are taken bodily from the description in the June, 1911, Columbia supplement, which I quoted a few paragraphs before this. George Jell, the Columbia writer, no doubt would either have laughed or become purple with indignation if he had noticed the "swipe." Those descriptive lines were retained for several catalog editions. By 1920, Hill's Victor titles had dwindled to three—"Burbank the Wizard," "Tale of the Cheese" and "Talk On Married Life." The "Cheese" effusion was dropped in 1921, but the other two remained until 1924 when the name of our truly gifted comedian disappeared from the Victor catalog.

V. Summing Up

Just why so brilliant an entertainer as Murry Hill ceased to make records is hard to understand unless we assume that, like many vaudevillians, he went on using much the same material year after year and didn't do much about changing his act. In that event, his supply of recordable humor would have become exhausted. He remained a headliner for a good many years after his recording engagements ceased.

Everyone who enjoys real comedy of the old-fashioned type should collect Murry K. Hill records. However a word of warning is advisable. The titles under which his discs and cylinders appear seldom mean anything. Don't assume that "A Bunch of Nonsense" on his Victor, Edison, U. S. Everlasting and Indestructible records are the same thing. They are not. The Indestructible "Bunch of Nonsense" is with minor changes the same thing as the Edison "String of Laughs." Part of the Victor "Bunch of Nonsense" went into the Edison "Stranded Minstrel Man" and the remainder into Hill's first Edison record, "In the Good Old Steamboat Days." The Victor of "Father Was Out" is the song which is introduced in the Edison of "Father's Eccentricities."

The Victor record of "The Alphabet Song," which I am sorry to say I overlooked in its chronological order (it is No. 16458 and appeared in March, 1910, coupled with "Lyna, Oh Miss Lyna," by Collins and Harlan) is much the same as the song about the alphabet which Hill sings on the Edison about "Father's Eccentricities." The Victor monolog, "How Columbus Discovered America," is incorporated in the Edison "String of Laughs" and the Indestructible "Bunch of Nonsense." And so it goes. Names mean nothing whatever in checking on Murry K. Hill records.

Even so, one thing is certain: The New York-born humorist who lived to the age of 77 was one of the best comedians of his generation and should be long and gratefully remembered for his wholesome fun and general gaiety.

CURRENT COLLECTORS RECORDINGS

(Continued from page 33)

key as a recording artist is a special announcement in the Edison record catalog for October, 1899, which Jim Waish kindly copied for me:

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Ira D. Sankey is singing the famous Moody and Sankey Gospel hymns and Sacred Songs for the Edison Phonograph. The records are manufactured at the Edison Laboratory, which is a guarantee of their excellence, exclusively for the Bigelow and Main Co., 135 Fifth Avenue, New York. For sale at retail by all dealers in Phonographs, from whom lists and further particulars can be obtained.

Unfortunately none of these special lists seem to have survived, but a few of the records can exist. In the January, 1943 issue of HOBBIES it was announced that John L. Norton, Jr. of the Woodmay Record Co. owned a badly moulded copy of Bigelow and Main cylinder No. S-18 "The Mistakes of My Life" sung by Ira D. Sankey. And last year I had the good fortune to pick up a superb copy of Bigelow and Main No. S-15 "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," from Mrs. Coppernoll of Coppernoll's Antiques. This recording is made of light brown wax and still has the original insert slip on which the number and the artist are printed. On this slip it is called a Bigelow and Main record and there is no reference to the fact that the cylinders were turned out by Edison.

Actually Bigelow and Main was a hymn book company. Furthermore there was a very logical reason why Ira D. Sankey associated himself with them in 1899. His son, Ira Allan Sankey, who also composed sacred songs and compiled hymnbooks, had associated himself with Bigelow and Main in 1898. A great number of this company's publications from the turn of the century are preserved in the Library of the Moody Bible Institute, but in none of them is reference made to the series of wax cylinders sold under their name.

It is of interest that one of these early Sankey records was reissued on a 78 rpm National Vocarium disc about twenty years ago. Denis Reichman has written me that he once had the item in a list of his.

12-inch National Vocarium TNV 124 — "Immortality" by William Jennings Bryan, preceded by Ira Sankey singing one of his famous hymns.

In conclusion may I suggest that anyone who is interested in the music used by Moody and Sankey should strive to acquire the medley of Moody and Sankey Hymns as sung by the Victor Mixed Chorus and issued about the time of the First World War.

12-inch Victor 35510 Victor Mixed Chorus — Moody and Sankey Hymns (Full for the Shore, In the Sweet Bye and Bye, Almost Persuaded, Hold the Fort, Where Is My Boy Tonight, Beulah Land, God Be With You Till We Meet Again), Billy Sunday Hymns (I Am Coming Home, solo; I Walk With The King, If Your Heart Keeps Right, De Brewer's Big Hosses, duet; Sweeter as the Years Go By, Since Jesus Came Into My Heart, Brighten the Corner Where You Are.

Could it be possible, now that the ball is rolling in the right direction, to have all future RCA long play releases of old vocals receive the same careful treatment in this respect? Please?

A.F. - A.

* * *

RCA - HMV SPLIT

After a union of over half a century, RCA Victor and His Master's Voice have agreed to disagree! The reason for this break is not yet clear, but the fact is that in April, 1957, they will come to the end of their relationship begun in 1901. On top of this, it is announced that in May of next year RCA will enter into an agreement with the English Decca, while HMV will release its records here through other subsidiaries of the British EMI (Electric and Musical Industries Ltd.), probably Capitol Records and Angel Records.

The situation, at the moment seems quite involved. Among other things, just imagine reworking the catalogs. That in itself is a tremendous task. And what about the pooch? The dog trade-mark is owned by the HMV, so any RCA records released in England will bear the RCA monogram alone, while on the RCA label in America Rover will continue to sit before the horn as if nothing happened.

This is unexpected news indeed, and rather disturbing. Almost from the onset of recording, Victor and His Master's Voice, originally Gramophone and Typewriter) worked together, issued each other's records; and as a result their names became synonymous to all interested in discs. Now, to have them parted, and even affiliated with other recording companies, sort of marks the end of an era in recording. But then, as all things go, it won't be long before this surprising event will become accepted, and the ex-Victor-HMV alliance just another "historical fact." (Sniff-sniff, has anyone a recording of "Hearts and Flowers?")

A.F. - A.

PIANO & ROLLS

FOR SALE: Three Reproducing Mahogany Grand Pianos in excellent rebuilt condition, beautiful tone and playing quality: 6 foot, 2 inch Steinway Duo-Art with forty rolls, $1200.; 5 foot, 6 inch Chickering Ampico with thirty-five rolls $800.; 5 foot, 6 inch Ellington Welte-Mignon (the most difficult make to obtain in good repair) with thirty-five rolls $800. Crating and shipping extra.—Dean Howe, 219 Oxford Road, Franklin, Ohio.

NEW ROLLS and repair supplies (belows cloth, tubing, leather) available for all types of automatic pianos.—Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Co., 223 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. ap124661

MELODEONS

EXPERT RESTORATIONS at reasonable prices. Also buy and sell.—C. Lamper, C-sharp Hobby Shop, 1365 Bristol, N. W., Grand Rapids, Mich. 06046

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR Sheet Music to 1850. Catalog 15c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. ap12698

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. au3263

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

The Champion Duet Singer

By JIM WALSH

Not long ago a HOBBIES reader asked a couple of questions that struck me as so interesting I decided to write an article based on them. "What," he inquired, "do you consider the most successful duet team in the history of the phonograph? And what singer made more duet records—that is, sang with more different artists—than any other?"

On first thought, these inquiries seemed hard to answer. My mind ran down a long list of famous duos—Ada Jones and Len Spencer, who worked together from 1904 until Spencer's death in December, 1914; Ada Jones and Billy Murray, from 1907 to 1922; Albert Campbell and Henry Burr, who made one duet for Columbia in 1906, "While the Old Mill Wheel is Turning," then didn't sing as duet partners again until 1912, after which they kept it up through 1925; Charles Hart and Elliott Shaw; Billy Golden and Joe Hughes; Irving and Jack Kaufman; Vernon Dalhart and Carson Robison; Billy Jones and Ernest Hare; Gus Van and Joe Schenk; Frank Stanley and Henry Burr; Stanley and Corinne Morgan; Stanley and Elise Stevenson—the names flashed through my memory.

Of those listed in the foregoing paragraph, Campbell and Burr undoubtedly made more duets than any of the others, unless possibly they were equaled by Jones and Hare. But we still haven't come to the champion duet team. In my opinion that honor belongs without question to those brilliant interpreters of black-face and rural comedy, Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan, who started making records together in 1902 and kept it up until 1926. Then the independently wealthy Collins retired and went to live in Tice, Florida, where he remained until his death in 1933. Throughout their career of nearly a quarter of a century, Collins and Harlan free-lanced, singing for every company that wanted their services, and they made thousands of big-selling—often, best selling—records. No other duet team stayed together so long or with such sustained success.

But when it comes to picking the singer who recorded with more duet partners than any other the honor doesn't go to either Collins or Harlan. I had little doubt of what research would reveal, and my initial belief was amply confirmed by a search of catalogs. Nearly every performer who worked regularly in the pioneer recording days believed, or still believes, he made more records than anybody else. However, documentary evidence proves the champion was the late Henry Burr, whose career covered almost 30 years, from 1902 to around 1930. During most of this period Burr was a free-lance.

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

THE OLD MUSIC HOUSE Buys, Sells, trades, coin operated pianos, Reginas, hand organs, rolls. The largest collection in Middle West.—R. C. Lambert, Owner, Monticello, Iowa. d123511

WILL PAY CASH for Cylinder Phonographs and Records. Also Horn type phonographs and anything pertaining to early phonographs. Write.—Pollard, 4109 Sopuel Dr., Soquel, Calif. je3614

WANTED: Reproducers for Edison and Columbia cylinder phonographs. We repair reproducers—details for 3c stamp.—Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. jly3023

ASTONISHING reproduction on Edison disc records with new Electronic Tone Arm. Fits any motor or player capable of 80 R.P.M. speed, uses magnetic or crystal cartridge, $40. P. P. Reproducers electrified $15. Edison disc records, catalogs bought, sold, exchanged.—Clyde B. Haines, Box 1442, Reading, Pa. jly3867

WANTED: Hurdy Gurdy for my private collection. Also any rare musical piece.—Walter, 214 East Holmes Road, Lansing, Michigan. je3403

1901 EDISON ILLUSTRATED CATALOG showing machines, accessories, parts and supplies. Reprint of original only $1.50. Send to—Dick Davis, Mentone, California. je3683

AL JOLSON MEMORIAL CLUB, 1320 West Morgan Avenue, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Dues $1.25/year ap12333

RARE Old Orchestron over 100 years old. Barrel piano, base and snare drums, cymbals and bells. A real museum piece. Case all walnut. Perfect. 10 new Wurlitzer 165 band organ rolls. Never been played.—R. C. Lambert, Monticello, Iowa. je1213

FOR SALE: Edison standard cylinder phonograph, with 45 records $35.00 cash or will trade for picture buttons.—Clarence Staudenmayer, Portage, Wis. je1252

AUCTION: Complete Sept. 1935 - April 1948 Hobbies "Historical Record" articles. Closes June 30.—Knight, 81 Edgewood, Edgewood, Rhode Island. je1461

Henry Burr, as he appeared at the beginning of his recording career that led him to make more records than any other singer. This picture was taken in 1904 when he was 22.

What with his solos, duets, work with the Sterling Trio, and innumerable performances as lead of the Peerless Quartet, he probably made twice as many records as any other singer. And, by the same token, he sang duets with more vocalists than any of his rivals.

I have no idea that the list I have compiled is absolutely complete, but it is reasonably so, even though the names of some of Burr's duet associates no doubt have escaped me. According to my notes, Burr sang, as Henry Burr and Irving Gillette and under his real name, Harry McClaskey, with the following:

Henry Burr, who made more duet records than any other singer, is shown here as he appeared from 1934 to 1941 as "The Dean of Ballad Singers," on the National Barn Dance, Chicago. He is looking at some of the thousands of records he made from 1902 to 1932.

Elsie Baker, Rose Bryant, Albert Campbell, Edith Chapman, Helen Clark, Miriam Clark, Ethel Costello, Frank Croxton, Sibyl Sanderson Fagan, Frances Fisher, Marcia Freer, Lt. Harry Gitz-Rice, Charles Gordon (better known as Percy Hemus), James Hall, Edmund A. Jahn, Mae Jennings, Ada Jones, Grace Kerns, Agnes Kimball, Louise King, Ruth Lenox, Lucy Isabelle Marsh, Margaret Mayew, Louise McMahon, John H. Meyer, Gwilym Miles, Clara Moister, Elida Morris, Billy Murray, Grace

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED: JOLSON MATERIAL.—Dick Bonesteel, 1409 McGilvra Boulevard, Seattle, Washington. je12046

WANTED TO BUY: Will pay $5 each for fine copies of 9-inch, single-faced Zon-o-phone records of "Jenny Lee," sung by Atwood Twitchell, and "Chocolate Drops," played by Hager's Orchestra. Both wanted for sentimental reasons only. Will pay $3 each for good copies of the February, 1912, and February, 1914, Columbia monthly record supplements. I need most Columbia supplements prior to 1912.—Jim Walsh, Box 176, Vinton, Virginia. tfx

WANTED: Radio Transcriptions, Airshots, Armed Forces radio recordings, recordings of all kinds by "Sammy Kaye," "Guy Lombardo," "Bill Kenny," "Tink Spots," "Blue Barron," "Ted Lewis."—Paul Scriven, 129 Vienna Ave., Niles, Ohio. je3216

RECORDS FOR SALE

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought. —E. Hirschman, 100 Duncan Ave., Jersey City 6, New Jersey. o122511

CYLINDER RECORDS For Sale: Cylinder phonographs and horn type disc phonographs, also parts, repairs, horns and catalogues. Send 25c for all three lists. Your 25c will be refunded on first purchase.—Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. je3219

COMPREHENSIVE MONTHLY LISTS of 78s, including hundreds of unusual out-of-print and rare vocals, mailed on request. Collections bought.—The Record Album, 208 W. 80th St., New York 24, N. Y. d128862

Auction Sales: Rare and cut-out vocal (G. & T., Zonophone, Polydor) and instrumental records. Free lists.—Arthur May, 85 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn 26, N. Y. mh120042

EDISON, COLUMBIA cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 44 Church St., Norwich, Conn. je3084

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS: Collectors items to just good "listening." Operatic, historical & personality discs. "Wants" Located. Send for free lists or visit store.—Record Collectors Service, 2322 Biscayne Boulevard, Miami, Florida. je3446

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs.—Ted's Second Hand Store, 1128 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia 23, Pa. au3638

RARE VOCAL RECORDS—Monthly mail auctions & special lists at set prices. Offering only items in good playing condition, domestic & imported. We know you will be pleased with your purchases. Free lists.—Georg Pluck, Waterloo Village, Grass Lake, Mich. jly3046

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. je120061

RARE Operatic vocal records; send for free mail auction lists.—Robert J. Nathan, 5480 Broadway, New York 63, N. Y. au3084

OPERATIC, vocal, instrumental records. Free lists on request.—John A. Seely, Box 101, Millerton, Pa. au3042

ROCCO RECORDS now available—Caruso recital—12" L.P. Rerecordings of four fabulously rare 1902 Zonophones and eight G&Ts including Adriana Lecouvreur and Iris arias. Write—Rococo Records, 121 Simcoe Street, Toronto, Ont., Canada. jly65501

FOR ADVANCED COLLECTORS: Free listings, hundreds vocal operatic records G&Ts, Fonotipias, Odeons, Pathes, Zonophones by Golden Age Singers.—Collectors Haven, 1131 Bergen Street, Brooklyn 16, N. Y. au3004

PIANOS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Peters, Webb & Company square grand piano about 100 years old. For details write.—Mrs. K. R. Stickney, R. R. #2, Assumption, Illinois. au3863

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Edison, Victor and Columbia Phonographs. Hundreds of Cylinder and Disc Records, many rare, hard to find numbers. Send dime for either two or four minute cylinder, or Disc record list. All three lists for 25c.—Coppernol's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. jly3883

MUSIC ROLLS WANTED

WANTED: Duo-Art, Ampico, and Welte-Mignon rolls. Will buy your complete stock or collection. Send titles and prices wanted in first letter.—Dean Howe, 219 Oxford Road, Franklin, Ohio. je3464

MUSIC ROLLS FOR SALE

ORCHESTRA rolls for Marquette piano. 6 - 10 tunes per roll. 18 rolls good price for lot.—G. T. Merriken, 112 Lynnmoor Dr., Silver Springs, Maryland. jly4405

ORGAN WANTED

WANTED: Hurdy-gurdy organ, type with bellows and reeds used only for charitable purposes entertaining orphans, the aged and helping raise money for charitable purposes. Need in good working order, cheap.—Reinhardt N. Ausmus, 1102 Buckingham St., Sandusky, Ohio. je3426

MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina 15½", 20¾", 27", 32" Criterion 20½"; Mira 6¾", 9¼", 18½"; Monarch 15½"; Orphenion 16½"; Polyphon 24½"; Stella 14"; Imperial Symphonion 13½"; Thorens 4½". State size wanted. Lists.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, New Jersey. je3886

SWISS 10 tune, cylinder playing music box (14x27") oak case, perfect condition, drums, bells, etc.—M. Swartz, 1093 Lincoln St., Santa Clara, Calif. jly3663

REGINA music cabinet. Solid mahogany case 73" high, 34" wide, 12 records 27" round. Perfect condition. Put a nickle in to play. Picture on request.—Wenger's Antiques, 409 S. Sixth St., Reading, Pa. je1462

These snapshots are probably the last ever taken of Billy Murray, whose total of duet records was second only to Henry Burr's. They were made by a young tenor and admirer of Murray, Howard Thain, who is now studying in Rome, Italy, for an operatic career. They were made about a year before Murray's death, aged 77, in August, 1954.

Nash (Grace Kerns), Alvah Nichols, Maude Randolph, Homer Rodeheaver, Andrea Sarto, Elizabeth Spencer, Frank C. Stanley, James Stanley, Jean Sterling, Elise Stevenson, Edgar Stoddard, Merle Tillotson (Merle Alcock), Caroline Vaughn, Nora Watson, Albert Wiederhold, John Wilbur, Elise Wood and Beulah Gaylord Young.

Truly an impressive showing!—somewhat more impressive in appearance than it actually is, because the list includes some artists who used more than one name. I suspect for instance that Nora Watson was Elsie Baker; Ethel Costello was Edith Chapman; James Hall was Andrea Sarto (who was also Edgar Stoddard); and some of the "mysterious" women, such as Frances Fisher, Mae Jennings, Louise King, Ruth Lenox, Jean Sterling and Caroline Vaughn may have been stalwarts of the recording studios—Helen Clark for instance—recording under assumed names. Elise Wood, in private life Mrs. Rusling Wood of East Orange, New Jersey, was Elise Stevenson. John Meyer and John Wilbur also were one and the same basso.

Burr made more records for Columbia than for any other company, and a great many of these duet performances were done for that pioneer firm. Among the singers with whom he seems to have recorded only for Columbia are Rose Bryant, Edith Chapman, Miriam Clark, Ethel Costello, Frances Fisher, Charles Gordon, James Hall, Grace Kerns, Lucy Isabelle Marsh, Louise McMahon, Gwilym Miles, Margaret Mayew, Clara Moister, Alvah Nichols, Andrea Sarto, Edgar Stoddard, Merle Tillotson, Carolyn Vaughan, "Nora Watson" (if she was not Elsie Baker), Albert Wiederhold and Beulah Gaylord Young (Mrs. Charles Harrison).

Burr duet partnerships restricted to Victor were with Elsie Baker, Marcia Freer, Billy Murray, Homer Rodeheaver and James Stanley.

The "Dean of Ballad Singers" sang with Frank Croxton for Victor and Columbia; made an Okeh record to Sibyl Fagan's whistling obligato; was with Gitz-Rice on Victor and Columbia; with Edmund A. Jahn, Mae Jennings and Agnes Kimball on U.S. Everlasting cylinders; with Louise King on Emerson; Ruth Lenox, on Columbia and Pathé; Elida Morris, on Pathé; Maude Randolph, on Okeh; Elizabeth Spencer, on Edison cylinders and Victor discs; Jean Sterling, on Pathé; and John Wilbur, on U.S. Everlasting.

Wilbur, as already said, was John H. Meyer, who became the base of the Peerless Quartet after Frank Stanley's death in 1910. There are many oddities associated with Burr's duet activities. One is, why, during his free-lancing days, did he and Albert Campbell make duets together for nearly every company, whereas he sang frequently with Meyer for the smaller firms, such as Pathé, Aeolian-Vocalion, Emerson and Okeh, but never teamed with him for a single Victor or Columbia duet? And why, when Meyer switched to singing baritone and Frank Croxton became the quartet's basso, was Croxton used in duets for Victor and Columbia but virtually never with other companies?

Incidentally, the partnership between Burr and Frank Stanley began in 1907 with the issuance of "Iola," sung by them on Columbia cylinders and discs, and their association continued with increasing momentum until Stanley's death three years later. Had that great basso lived there probably would never have been a Campbell—Burr duet partnership, and Stanley and Burr would have gone down in phonograph history as the most prolific of all duet teams. Some Stanley-Burr duets were issued by English Columbia as by "H. C. Parker and Irving Gillette."

But the list of duet partners doesn't exhaust the catalog of Burr's association with other singers. He was briefly a member of the Columbia Stellar Quartet, with Charles Harrison, Sarto and Croxton as his fellow members. He, Campbell and Will Oakland constituted for a short time the Lyric Trio. He sang in the Metropolitan (also called Manhattan) Trio, whose other members were Stanley and Elise Stevenson. One of the few times Burr ever sang opera on records occurred when the Metropolitan Trio recorded the Trio from Faust issued in the first list of four-minute Edison Amberol cylinders in the autumn of 1908. He also sang in the Soldiers' Chorus from Faust, by the Columbia Quartet, on Columbia cylinder No. 32694, issued in May, 1905.

Nor should it be forgotten that as a member of the Peerless Quartet (also known on occasion as the Columbia Quartet and the Invincible Four) Burr sang in support of a good many other singers. The first of these seems to have been Bob Roberts, whose "Down in de Chinguapin Lane," made with Columbia Quartet assistance, was issued in April, 1906. Others with whom the quartet worked were Mr. and Mrs. Cal Stewart, Billy Murray, Molly Ames (Beulah G. Young), Charles Harrison, Maurice Burkhart, Arthur Fields (who also called himself Eugene Buckley on Columbia records), Lewis James, Lew Dockstader, Ada Jones, Manuel Romain, George H. O'Connor, Ned LaRose, Clara Moister, Eddie Morton and Harry C. Browne. As the Invincible Four the quartet sang with Marie Morrissey, contralto, on a Pathé record. The Sterling Trio (Campbell, Burr and Meyer) assisted Russell Hunting in a Pathé, "Christmas Eve in the Toy Shop."

By this time you probably are wondering who came second to Burr in the ranks of those making duet records. The answer again is no surprise. It's Billy Murray, who was second to Burr in the number of individual titles recorded, but who was an all-around bigger seller than his old friend, "Hank," because the average Murray record for many years had a larger sale than those by Burr. (This trend was somewhat reversed during the later years of their careers).

Murray entered into duet associations with Joe Belmont, Edna Brown (another name for Elsie Baker), Burr, Helen Clark, S. H. Dudley, Rachel Grant (Gladys Rice in disguise), Marion Harris, Ada Jones, Irving Kaufman, Kathleen Kingston, Margaret McKee, Elida Morris, Will Oakland, Isabelle Patricola, Steve Porter, Gladys Rice, Bob Roberts, Frederic Rose, Victor Roberts, Walter Scanlan, Monroe Silver, Ed Smalle, Len Spencer—and he and an obscure performer, Harry West, did incidental comic talking in an Edison two-minute cylinder of an orchestral selection, "The Darkies' Dream." Billy also did the Italian dialect monolog in an Edison cylinder of a "Street Piano Medley," by August Molinari, who presumably was turning the street piano crank.

Murray made more duets for Victor than for any other company. Among them are those with Edna Brown, Burr, Dudley, Marion Harris, Kaufman, McKee, Morris, Oakland, Patricola, Rose, Victor Roberts (who was much better known under his real name of Billy Jones) and Silver. Most of his Ed Smalle duets were for Victor. "Kathleen Kingston," who sang "You're Here and I'm Here" with Billy on an Edison Blue Amberol cylinder, was the noted concert soprano, Mary Carson.

As a trio member, Murray sang Victor Herbert's "Whistle It," from "The Red Mill," with Ada Jones and Frank Stanley on Columbia; Jones and S. H. Dudley (Frank Kernell), Victor; Jones and Steve Porter, Zonophone; and Helen Trix and Edward Meeker, Edison cylinder. Murray, Harlan and Porter were the Victor Vaudeville Company; and Murray, Harlan and Joe Belmont got together for a whistling specialty on Victor. The Weary Willie Trio on one Edison Diamond Disc was Murray, Meeker and Donald Chalmers.

The quartet of which Murray was a member, known as the American on Victor and the Premier on Edison, sang in support of a number of other artists, including Edward M. Favor, Arthur Clough, Frederic H. Potter, Manuel Romain, Anna Chandler, Joseph Phillips, Walter Van Brunt and Charlotte Kirwan. With the addition of Will Oakland the foursome was known as the Heidelberg Quintet. Be-

(Continued on page 33)

This photo, taken by John F. Gilbert, television photographer for WSLR Roanoke, Va., shows Jim Walsh, author of "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists," as he appears when giving his program from WSLR (Channel 10) at 2:30 p. m. each Tuesday. The phonograph is a 45-year-old Edison Concert (or Opera) model, playing four-minute cylinders. Gilbert's achievements as an outstanding television photographer are well known in a wide area of Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky and Tennessee. For the past two years he has won first place in the annual Virginia State contest for TV photographers.

CURRENT COLLECTORS' RECORDINGS

By ALLEN G. DEBUS

Frank Bush

Today the dialect comedian is almost a thing of the past, and yet any collector of the comedy records of fifty years ago cannot help but admit that the wide use of dialect humor is one of the most appealing features of that era. The masters of the dialect monologue were many and perhaps the best known of these was Walter C. Kelly who had the opportunity of making both acoustic and electric recordings for Victor in the twenties. But rather than Kelly, or Edwin Whitney or any of the other recording stars of this medium, I prefer to discuss Frank Bush who is probably an unknown to the average collector. He is an interesting personality for several reasons, and his present day obscurity must rest to some degree on the fact that he seems to have only made one record, a two minute wax cylinder.

Edison's New Phonogram for December, 1905, (which incidentally, introduces the Collins and Harlan classic "Nigger Loves His Possum") gives this information on cylinder No. 9163 "Short Stories by Frank Bush."

This is a talking record made by Mr. Bush himself, who is one of the best known vaudeville artists on the American stage. The stories are extremely funny, and the manner in which Mr. Bush tells them adds to their humor. The stories given on this record were written for this special purpose and have not been published in any form.

I was lucky to obtain a copy of this cylinder from the well known West Coast dealer, Thomas Pollard, who has done so much to help me locate rare "rollers." The record itself is a perfect example of the best of this type of comedy and Mr. Bush switches back and forth with ease from one dialect to another. The first story is with a Hebrew dialect, the second Irish, and the third Irish and German. The stories are all good, but they would lose so much in being read rather than listened to that it seems pointless to transcribe them here.

Although there are many notable exceptions to the rule, it may be stated that relatively few top notch stars of the vaudeville stage made records before 1909. This date is an approximation to be sure, but certainly no one will deny that "personality recordings" dating from 1905 or earlier are few and far between. If for no other reason, his early entrance into the recording field should make Frank Bush an interesting artist for the collector. He was a top name in variety in the 1880s and 1890s, and with the greater appreciation of his type of humor after the turn of the century he became even more in demand. Thus, his Edison cylinder of 1905 represents him at the very height of his career.

His performance is described in Douglas Gilbert's American Vaudeville. First he opened in an accented Jewish makeup telling stories and singing comic songs with English and Yiddish intermixed. The latter were embellished with an absurd shuffling dance. Next he made up as a German "with a mop of iron gray hair, a walrus mustache to match, a straw hat, and a long linen duster." As a third character he impersonated a Yankee farmer and then closed with a tin whistle solo. For extra income he used to sell these whistles on the street between shows. In its original form with grotesque makeup his act must have been a joy to see as well as hear. But as his audiences became more refined he decided to drop his makeup and after 1910 he appeared on the stage dressed in a tuxedo and merely told a series of dialect stories. His popularity soon declined and little more was heard of him in succeeding years, but he should be remembered not only as one of the greatest dialect comedians from the turn of the century, but also as one of the earliest headliners to make recordings.

DO YOU REMEMBER WHEN?

By EDNA C. ARMSTRONG

A penny bought a tiny tin skillet filled with marshmallow fried eggs?

Women wore "fascinators" made of wool yarn?

Hearing aids were long black tubes?

Milk was delivered at 20 quarts for a dollar?

Well-to-do families had a stuffed peacock in the parlor?

Part of every fireworks display was a fleet of several colored balloons, lighted by candles?

Country papers published a list of a young couple's wedding gifts with names of donors?

Butter was often bought in stone crocks?

Young women wore gold elastic braid belts?

No man was considered dressed until he spread a heavy watch chain across his vest?

A confection somewhat like cactus candy was popular and called Egyptian Paste?

Many cities furnished cyclists with cinder paths at the side of the main streets for safe travel?

Boys and girls wore sailor blouses, with the fullness held by a tape?

MECHANICAL BANKS

Repaired, buy, sell, trade; parts furnished, coin traps for all banks. Will buy broken banks and parts.

V. D. HOWE

395 W. Utica St., Buff-lo 22, N. Y. tfo

WANTED

Registering banks
and

Old mechanical penny banks
Send description and price wanted.

C. R. HOWELL

Plentywood Farm Bensenville, Ill. tfo

$100 and up paid for many kinds of mechanical banks, List of prices I pay for 235 different banks only 25c.

E. L. ROMEY
Box 291
Bluffton, Indiana tfo

We are accepting orders for
REPAIR SERVICE

on
MECHANICAL BANKS and TOYS
We Also Buy Old Banks

GEORGE W. BAUER
P. O. Box 145
Pottstown, Pa. tfo

MECHANICAL BANKS & TOY PISTOLS

Especially Want:

MECHANICAL BANKS:

- TURTLE (Sticks head out)
- BOW-ERY BANK
- PRESTO (Money on roof)
- WIMBLEDON
- JONAH & WHALE (Jonah emerges from whale)
- BOWLING ALLEY BANK
- RED RIDING HOOD
- FOOTBALL (Colored man kicks ball)
- SCHLEY BOTTLING UP CERVEZA
- MONKEY & PARROT (Tin)
- PRESTO (Penny changes to quarter)
- JAPANESE BALL TOSSE (Tin, wind-up)
- CAMERA
- MOON FACE
- TURTLE
- SAILING SHIP
- TWO DOGS ON BENCH
- BULL & BEAR BANK
- COASTING BANK
- MUSICAL SAVING BANK (You pay—I play)
- PREACHER IN THE PULPIT
- TARGET
- WINNER SAVING
- JUMBO
- RIVAL
- NATIONAL
- AMERICAN BANK (Sewing Machine)
- SNAKE & FROG
- BRITISH LION (Tin)
- TOAD IN DEN (Tin)
- LITTLE MOE (Tips Hat)
- PERFECTION
- REGISTERING BANK
- OSCAR WILDE
- BOMB
- DEVIL'S HEAD
- BOMB

PISTOLS:

Also want Cast Iron horse drawn carriages, animated bell ringing pull toys, old toy automobiles and old catalogs showing banks and toy pistols.

F. H. GRIFFITH
HARRIS PUMP & SUPPLY CO.
Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfo

F. L. BALL

COLLECT - BUY - SELL - EXCHANGE

High Grade Banks and Toys for Collectors

Mechanical Penny Banks - Still Banks

Cap Pistols - Bell Toys - Engines & Trains

Fire Apparatus - Circus Items - Cannons

Old Tin and Iron Toys of Every Description

Largest stock of old Banks
and Toys in United States.

Correspondence Invited

45 Fresh Pond Lane,

Cambridge 38, Massachusetts tfo

MECHANICAL BANKS

WE ARE EAGER TO ADD TO OUR COLLECTION AND WILL PAY YOU TOP PRICES

JIM & MELUS CUSHING
16426 EMERALD HARVEY, ILLINOIS

Ja57c

I will pay top prices for
MECHANICAL BANKS

Damaged Banks if rare will be accepted.

HARRY G. MILLER, Collector
1418 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo. tfo

WANTED
MECHANICAL BANKS
AND TOYS
M.E. MILLER
29 Lincrest St.
Hicksville, N. Y. tfo

MECHANICAL ANTIQUES WANTED

PLEASE NOTE my mechanical bank display ad in this section, listing various wants.—F. H. Griffith, Harris Pump & Supply Co., Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfo

WANTED: Old electrical devices, motors, fans, batteries, lamps, sockets, switches, medical batteries, telephones, battery radio sets, TV sets, rectifiers, radio tubes, fuses, wood molding, wood lamp holders, electric cars and chargers, books, send me your list and the price you are asking.—George N. DeLaplain, P. O. Box 861, New Brunswick, N. J. Ja66961

WANT POPCORN STEAM ENGINES from old peanut, popcorn stands or wagons.—Vic Wintermantel, Bellevue, Pa. Jdy6084

UNUSUAL banks, toys, trains.—J. E. Nevil, 234 East Fourth Cincinnati, Ohio Jly6483

WANTED: Catalog showing threshing machines and steam traction engines.—Vic Wintermantel, Bellevue, Pa. Ja12238

PLEASE Refer to my display ad in Old Automobile Section regarding toys wanted.—W. S. McKelvey mh12881

BANKS & BOOKS, High dollar paid for: Used Books on, and, Old Mechanical Banks. Also want ceramic Razor Blade Banks. Send description and prices desired to — S & H Distributors, 11392 Lenore Ave., Detroit 39, Mich. Je3675

TRAIN MUSEUM can use OLD toy trains preferably steam, electric and brass locomotives, also trolleys.—Alexander Train Museum, Yardley, Pa. my120361

MECHANICAL BANK BOOKLET

A new booklet useful to both dealer and collector. Complete listings and new grading system. In seven parts covering the complete field of American, foreign, semi-mechanical, patterns, recasts, fakes, and variations.

NOW AVAILABLE. PRICE $2.

F. H. GRIFFITH

Harris Pump and Supply Co.
Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfo

Mechanical Banks Wanted

Freedman's Bank
Merry-Go-Round
Dinah
Motor Bank
Mikado Bank
Old Woman in The Shoe
Clown, Harlequin and Columbine
Initiating Bank First Degree
Camera
Hindu (Bust with Turban)
Light of Asia (Elephant on Wheels)
Red Riding Hood
Little Moe (Tips Hat)

MRS. MARY H. GERKEN
Middle Road, Allison Park, Pa. tfo

OLD MECHANICAL BANKS

By INA HAYWARD BELLOWES
Price $2.50

THE ONLY BOOK OF ITS KIND, designed for the antique dealer and the collector. Descriptions and evaluations make this a valuable edition.

Order your copy from

LIGHTNER PUBLISHER CORP.

1006 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Illinois

(See our Mechanical Bank offerings on page 67
Grimes Antiques)

CHICAGO ANTIQUES EXPOSITION & COLLECTORS' FAIR

Conrad Hilton Hotel

OCT. 28 — NOV. 1

12:00 to 11:00 P. M.

A round up of collectors and dealers from all over the U. S.

RECORDING ARTISTS FAVORITE PIONEER

(Continued from page 31)

sides this, Murray probably sang in the choruses of half the Edison records in which an ensemble was used to assist the soloist. He also took part in virtually all the Edison comedy sketches by the Empire Vaudeville Company.

So there they are—the champion duet ensemble recorder of all time—Henry Burr—and his worthy runner-up—Billy Murray. And let's not forget the most prolific and popular of all duet teams—Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

By JIM WALSH

Taurino Parvis

As I sit on my shaded front porch, a portable typewriter in my lap, and prepare to write this article on a pleasantly warm May afternoon (Sunday, May 6, to be exact) I am projecting my consciousness into the future and visualizing a series of lifted eyebrows a few months from now.

And I admit there is reason for seasoned readers of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists to be surprised at seeing, after all these years, a biographical sketch from my Underwood about an operatic artist. Up to now, that is a theme I have scrupulously left for the consideration of my brilliant colleague and friend, Aida Favia-Artsay. However, here is a reassuring note for readers who fear this department is going permanently classical. I have no intention of abandoning my customary "profiles" of comedians, ballad singers, popular instrumentalists and other performers whose records were issued under the Black Label, or its equivalent, rather than the Red Seal. My choosing an opera singer is strictly a "one shot" affair and is done because I feel I owe the formerly eminent baritone, Taurino Parvis, a debt of gratitude.

Perhaps my choosing to write about Parvis, concerning whom I have only a scant stock of information, can be best explained by quoting from an article, "Personal Preferences," which I contributed to the April, 1948, issue of The American Record Guide. The Guide's editor, Peter Hugh Reed, had asked me to send him an article discussing a dozen records in my collection that had special significance for me. Near the beginning of the survey I wrote:

Many readers know me as a veteran advocate of the theory that the pioneer "popular" recording artists were, for the most part, great performers in their specialized fields, and I believe there is a common impression that I enjoy no music other than the popular tunes of the 1890's and early 1900's. Hence it may come as a surprise that my first selection is:

MEYERBEER: L'Africana — Adamastor Re dell' onde profonde; and VERDI — Otello — Era la notte. Sung by Taurino Parvis (baritone). Columbia disc A-715.

I have chosen this double-faced disc, made in 1909 by the once-tamous Italian baritone, Taurino Parvis, because over the years it has meant more to me than any other operatic record ever issued. It was, in fact, the first "grand opera" record I ever heard. My parents acquired a phonograph when I was about six years old, and the discs which came with it included this Parvis one. Probably the dealer in the little Virginia town was sure he would never sell it and gladly "threw it in."

Not being of Italian descent, I had no idea of the words, but Parvis' dramatic singing of both sides made a powerful appeal to my childish imagination. That was particularly true of the "Otello" excerpt. I can't think of anything more calculated to inspire terror than the way in which Parvis as Iago, relates to the jealous Othello the things he malignantly represents Cassio to have murmured about Desdemona in his dreams. For years I didn't have the slightest conception of the story behind the record. Instead, I tried to make English of the foreign words and thought I detected a phrase about someone suffering from "a cruel yellow fever." The thing fascinated, while it frightened me.

The "Africana" side, I realize now, is a curiosity. It plays for only a minute and a half, whereas Ruffo's version of the same aria required a 12-inch Red Seal. Obviously, Parvis has recorded only a fragment of the African slave, Nelusko's, account of the fearful Adamastor; but the brief passage has always seemed to me a fascinating combination of terror and exhilaration. I still have a childish tendency to shudder when the baritone breaks into a wild laugh, but revel in the rapid-fire portion which follows when he seems to "go into his dance."

Some years ago I found a green-label Columbia on which Parvis sings an entirely different version of "Adamastor." It is considerably longer and is taken in a rather restrained and subdued style that I do not like half so well.

Since the preceding pages were written, the threat of a storm with points of resemblance to those which Adamastor, Ruler of the Ocean, conjured up for his own amusement, accompanied by the belligerent buzzing of a hornet on the sidelines, has compelled me to retreat from the porch and come indoors. But I think the quotation makes it clear why I am, this once, overstepping the boundary line between Aida's department and mine, and writing about an opera artist.

For further justification, I may point out that, although Parvis was an esteemed singer, he never achieved the eminence of Victor Red Seal or Columbia Symphony labels. There is no reason to think he ever sang for Victor and his Columbia records were sold at the same price as those of "popular" artists. From the price standpoint he belongs in my bailiwick. However, I am not belittling Taurino Parvis. Although he never received quite the acclaim of his Italian contemporaries — Caruso, Martinelli, Bonci, Zentalleo, Scotti and the others — he was nonetheless a fine artist. And he has two individual claims to distinction:

He apparently was the first performer to make a 12-inch Columbia record, and he seems to have been the first singer to record commercially with accompaniments by the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra. (That statement disregards, of course, the cylinders by opera stars which Lionel Mapleson recorded in the early 1900's back stage of the Metropolitan).

II. Trying to Trace Signor Parvis

Throughout childhood, Taurino Parvis' rich baritone voice and the mysterious Italian sounds it produced were often in my ears and influencing my imagination. On occasion I dreamed of him, as I did of Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Frederic Martin and other record makers. I recall one dream in which I learned that Mr. Parvis was to give a recital in front of (not inside) a barn. I went to hear him and appeared to be the only person in the audience. Of course he sang "Adamastor" and Iago's aria. I could not have been more than eight at the time of that dream.

Years before I began to write for HOBBIES, I asked George Clarence Jell, then manager of Columbia's artist and repertoire department, if he knew what had become of Parvis. He replied:

"As to Taurino Parvis, it must be at least 20 years since I have heard anything about him whatever. I doubt very much if he is singing now and have not the slightest idea where he might be located. If I should hear about him, shall let you know."

Mr. Jell must not have heard anything, for he never was able to give me more information about Parvis.

Taurino Parvis in one of his favorite baritone roles—Figaro in "The Barber of Seville."
Taurino Parvis as the scheming, malignant lago in "Otello."

Even today, after prolonged intermittent research, I still have discouraging little information about the singer and do not even know whether he is still alive. The chances, I suppose are, he is not, but if he is yet with us, his age is about the same as that of another artist—Fred Van Eps, the banjoist, whose biography has recently appeared in these pages.

Actually, the chief reason for my writing about the baritone, aside from paying that debt of gratitude, is the hope that the sketchy biography will be read by someone who knows more about him than I do, and result in my receiving more information which can be published later in HOBBIES. As recently as September, 1955, I had a request in that fine English publication, The Record Collector, which everyone interested in classical vocal records should read, for European readers to send me any information they have concerning Parvis. To my disappointment, no one has yet replied.

But let's pass on to the relatively little I do know. The Edison Diamond Disc catalogs for years contained the following:

"Taurino Parvis, one of the greatest baritones the world has ever known, was born and educated in Italy. His success has been of the highest character and with the greatest operatic organizations in the world. He has sung leading roles at

BORNAND
ANTIQUE MUSIC BOX COLLECTION
open to visitors
Week-day mornings during July and August or by appointment
BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.
139—4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y.
(half hour from N. Y. C.)
Pelham 8-1506
Choice items for sale
Expert repairing

"F. R. P."
Famous Records of The Past
2060 1st Ave., New York, N.Y.

Jack L. Caidin

Re-issues and re-recordings of rare and unusual phonograph records. Operatic, Theatrical, Political, Instrumental. The finest in quality and true reproduction. Ten inch long playing records $3.98 each. Tax and postage prepaid.

SEND FOR FREE BULLETINS! my65c

FREE RECORD LIST—Mostly Victor Red Seal. 191 Records by Abott, Alda, Amato, Brasciau, Calve, Battistini, Caruso, Cavalleri, Clement, Eames, Farrar, Galli-Curci, Garden, Gigli, Hempel, Homer, Melba, Nordica, Sembrich, etc. — Lucille Hughes, 2204 Lawrence Avenue, Toledo 6, Ohio. jlyc

I HAVE JUST PURCHASED a large collection, including Sir Harry Lauder, Victor Herbert's records from first pieces he did. Also many Fats Waller, rare hillbilly and race and many operatic, classic gems and just like new. Many rare organ by Jesse Crawford and others. Many Banjo, Xylophone, Bells, and the most beautiful lot of Red Seal Classics by Mischa Elman, Fritz Kreisler, Artur Schnabel, Horowitz, Paderewski, and many others. Send for lists.

AL McREA, SR.

Box 182

Westville, N. J.

jco

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION

RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G. & T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIAVTE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

JIM WALSH WANTS TO BUY

Old phonograph record catalogs and supplements (mostly prior to 1915); back copies of phonograph publications and all sorts of reference material dealing with the history and development of sound recording that will provide background information for Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Please do not send me lists of records for sale. I am not interested in buying phonographs and records by mail and do not want "The Victor Book of the Opera." Do not submit material without being instructed by me. I will not pay for or return unsolicited items. If I do not reply I already have the material you offer. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. Address:

JIM WALSH

Box 476

Vinton, Va.

tfx

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

the Metropolitan Opera House, New York; Covent Garden, London; La Scala, Milan; The Colon, Buenos Aires, and at Petrograd, Russia. His voice is of a wonderful, brilliant, rich quality and his interpretation is of the highest."

On January 27, 1955, I wrote to John Mundy, manager of Orchestra Personnel of the Metropolitan Opera, asking what information there was in the opera company's files concerning Parvis. A week later Mr. Mundy replied:

"In answer to your letter of January 27th, 1955, for which I thank you, I herewith give you all that I can find re Taurino Parvis, Italian baritone. He was born in Taurino on September 15th, 1879, and made his debut on November 23rd, 1904, at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York as Enrico Ashton in Lucia Di Lammermoor and sang here for two seasons (1904-1905, and 1905-06).

"The other roles he sang in his two seasons at the Metropolitan were: Morales (Carmen), Schumard (Boheme), Silvio (Pagliacci), Mercutio (Romeo and Juliette) and Germont (Traviata). . . .

Sincerely yours,

JOHN MUNDY."

A letter to William H. Seltsam, of Bridgeport, Conn., president of the International Record Collectors Club and compiler of a book listing bygone Metropolitan Opera performances, brought essentially the same information. Oddly enough, neither Mundy nor Seltsam mentions any Metropolitan appearances by Parvis after 1906, but there is some evidence that he was singing with that organization during the late World War I period and perhaps a year or so afterward. Both Edison and Pathé, which issued Parvis records in 1918, said in their publicity material that the baritone was then singing with the Met. I quote from the Edison Amberola Monthly for October, 1918:

"Taurino Parvis, the prominent Italian operatic baritone, has had a wonderful musical history. He is now singing at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York City and looks back upon his long and successful engagements at Covent Garden, London, La Scala, Milan for six seasons, Teatro Colon, Buenos Aires and seven seasons in Petrograd."

Edison publicity of the same period describes Parvis as "a young singer with his future all before him." The truth is, the baritone had already attained his peak and was teetering on the verge of 40, if he hadn't quite reached it. The photo which Edison published showed him as worried looking and rather haggard, with deep lines in his forehead, in contrast to the handsome, carefree appearing younger man of his earlier career. Another photograph, dated 1920, and inscribed by Parvis to the distinguished baritone, Giuseppe La Puma, lacks the worried look, but depicts him as hatchet-faced and with a cleft chin. This picture was taken by a photographer with studios in San Francisco and Mexico, and that may possibly throw some light on places in which Parvis was singing shortly after the First World War.

It would be interesting to know if Parvis was a member of the Metropolitan staff in 1918 and the years immediately preceding or subsequent, and if so what roles he sang. Judging from his records he sang almost entirely the standard Italian arias for baritones, though presumably his Carmen role was in French. He made at least one record in French, a Zonophone of "The Marseillaise," but he seemingly never attempted Wagnerian roles or anything else in German. He also appears to have sung nothing in Spanish or English.

I have no knowledge of Parvis' activities after his last Edison and Pathé records appeared. Probably he returned to Italy and resumed his singing career. Incidentally, his birthplace is not Taurino, as Mr. Mundy wrote it, possibly from confusion with the singer's Christian name, but is called Torino in Italian and Turin in English. A community of more than 600,000, it is the capitol of Torino province, is situated on the Po river and is the chief city of Piedmont, northwest Italy.

In other efforts to learn more about the first opera singer whose name ever meant anything to me, I wrote to the music division of the New York Public Library, but was told nothing I didn't already know; and I also asked Aida Favia-Artsay, if her good friend, Giovanni Martinelli, had known Parvis. Aida replied she doubted that the two had ever sung together or that Martinelli would recall the baritone. However, if Parvis was singing at the Met in 1918 and afterward it appears likely the two would have come into professional relationship.

MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina 15 1/2", 20 3/4", 27", 32" Criterion 20 1/2"; Mira 6 3/4", 9 1/4", 18 1/4"; Monarch 15 1/2"; Orphenion 16 1/4"; Polyphon 24 1/2"; Stella 14"; Imperial Symphonion 13 1/2"; Thorons 4 1/2". State size wanted. Lists.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, New Jersey. s3386

SWISS 10 tune, cylinder playing music box (14x27") oak case, perfect condition, drums, bells, etc.—M. Swartz, 1093 Lincoln St., Santa Clara, Calif. jly3663

FOR SALE: "Stella" Swiss made Music Box 22 1/2x28x13 1/2 and 24 circular records—excellent condition. Best offer. Write—Miss Adelene Assaly, 99 Willie Street, Lowell, Mass. jly1002

PIANO & ROLLS

NEW ROLLS and repair supplies (belows cloth, tubing, leather) available for all types of automatic pianos.—Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Co., 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. ap124661

MELODEONS

EXPERT RESTORATIONS at reasonable prices. Also buy and sell.—C. Lamper, C. Sharp Hobby Shop, 1365 Bristol, N. W., Grand Rapids, Mich. o6046

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR Sheet Music to 1850. Catalog 15c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. ap12698

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. au3263

WILL OAKLAND DIES OF HEART ATTACK

Will Oakland, one of the most popular pioneer recording artists, died Tuesday, May 15, of a heart attack, on a Bloomfield, N. J., bus enroute to Newark.

The funeral for the world-famous counter-tenor was held at 10 A.M., Saturday, May 19, in St. Philip's Church, Clifton, N. J.

Will Oakland's career was comprehensively detailed in a Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists article in HOBBIES for November, 1949. Since that article was published, Mr. Oakland lived largely in retirement in Glen Ridge, N. J., but he sang in vaudeville for a week at the Palace Theater, New York, in 1951. He also made a number of television guest appearances—notably on the George Jessel and Ed Sullivan programs. A note was found on his person, asking that Sullivan be notified in the event of his death. A Newark physician said Oakland died of coronary occlusion.

The tenor's voice retained its high vibrant quality up to the time of his death. Two years ago he issued a limited edition long-playing record as a memorial to his 50 years of show business. More recently he had been preparing another LP dealing with his minstrel experiences, but apparently he died without bringing the task to fulfillment.

MUSIC—MISCELLANEOUS

THE OLD MUSIC HOUSE Buys, Sells, trades, coin operated pianos, Reginas, hand organs, rolls. The largest collection in Middle West.—R. C. Lambert, Owner, Monticello, Iowa. d122511

PIANOS. coin operated buy, sell or trade, expert repairing; all coin operated machines, rolls all kinds.—Dodge House Museum, 2208 W. Chestnut, Dodge City, Kans. s3004

WANTED: Reproducers for Edison and Columbia cylinder phonographs. We repair reproducers—details for 3c stamp.—Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. jly3023

ASTONISHING Reproduction on Edison disc records with new Electronic Tone Arm. Fits any motor or player capable of 80 R.P.M. speed, uses magnetic or crystal cartridge. $40. P. P. Reproducers electrified $15. Edison disc records, catalogs bought, sold, exchanged.—Clyde E. Haines, Box 1442, Reading, Pa. jly3867

REED ORGAN catalogues and price lists wanted. Also books and literature on reed organs.—Robert Whiting, 5811 Chew St., Philadelphia 38, Pa. s3253

1901 EDISON ILLUSTRATED CATALOG showing machines, accessories, parts and supplies. Reprint of original only $1.50. Send to—Dick Davis, Mentone, California. s3663

1905 EDISON MACHINE CATALOG (reprinted) $1.50.—Dick Davis, Mentone, Calif. s3633

AL JOLSON MEMORIAL CLUB, 1329 West Morgan Avenue, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Dues $1.25/year ap12238

FOR SALE: Pump type player pianos, also rolls for them. Write—Marg Paape, 602 E. Broadway, Winona, Minn. je1441

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

By JIM WALSH

Taurino Parvis

PART II

III Parvis' Recording Career

I have no intention of attempting a detailed analysis of Taurino Parvis recordings. Despite my lifelong admiration, I have heard only a few of his discs. However, I have been at great pains to compile perhaps the most nearly complete list of his records anyone has so far undertaken, and I shall quote a few comments from record catalogs, trade publications and similar sources. Since I have anything but a comprehensive knowledge of the singer's native language, proofreading and correcting my typewritten copy of his Italian titles has been agony, and I fear that some errors will find their way into print, even though I have done my best to be accurate.

Parvis' first records appear to be the single-faced Zon-o-phones with dark green labels, which he made in the United States from 1904 through 1906. It is conceivable that he had done earlier recording work in Italy, but I have no knowledge of any. When Parvis made these records, Zon-o-phone had already come under Victor control, but for some reason he, Eugenia Mantelli, Luisa Tetrizzini and other afterwards famous singers were not added to the Victor Red Seal galaxy. Since Parvis was only 24 or 25 when he began making Zonos, he may have been looked on merely as a promising youngster who might some day have a great future instead of an already established star.

Zon-o-phone publicity, however, hardly bears out that speculation. A September, 1906, Zono catalog published in Spanish refers to him as a "celebrated artist" and says that to obtain a "dignified" accompaniment, suitable to an artist of his eminence, the services of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra had been secured.

Another distinction Parvis reached was that of being the only duet partner on records of the fabulous Mantelli. In the April, 1949, issue of The Record Collector (published by J. Dennis, 61 Fore Street, Ipswich, England, and sold to American readers at $2.50 a year), Albert Wolf published a Mantelli discography, from which I shall extract his comments dealing with the Mantelli-Parvis duets.

Of Zon-o-phone 12572, "Favorita—Ah, l'altro ardor," Wolf says: "The voices blend to perfection, the vocal line is beautifully preserved throughout—a finely controlled and successful version of this duet."

Since January 27, 1956, marked the 200th anniversary of Mozart's birth, there is topical interest in what Wolf says about 12573, "La ci darem la mano" from "Don Giovanni": "Both performers display lack of finesse and understanding, essential to sing the music of Mozart well. Mantelli, much at ease in the soprano range, contributes a few pretty ornaments."

Zono No. 12574 contained "Duetto delle Rondinelle" from "Mignon." The comment: "Mantelli's voice is light and limpid, Parvis better than competent and the result is a duet sung with grace and charm." No. 12575 was "Dunque io son," which was afterwards listed as double-faced record No. 40072A. Wolf says: "Leaning strongly upon the score as well as upon tradition, Mantelli's vocal flexibility is brilliantly in evidence. This contrasts with the rather colorless singing of Parvis, who restricts himself to outline the music instead of singing it with precision."

This photo of Taurino Parvis was inscribed by Parvis in 1920 to another great baritone, G. La Puma. It is reproduced through the courtesy of the present owner, Arthur Knight, of Edgewood, R. I.

These four duets were made with piano accompaniment. I might add I have thought it unnecessary to indicate in the discography which follows this article whether records had piano or orchestral accompaniments.

Next to the Zon-o-phones in possible order of issue come more than 20 Columbia single-faced discs with black and silver labels. Arthur E. Knight of Edgewood, Rhode Island, who generously aided me by copying numbers and titles of Parvis records from the famous Bauer catalog, says Bauer lists these Columbias as having been made in Milan, Italy, in 1905. Since Bauer is an authority, I suppose the odds are he is right, but in view of the fact that Parvis was singing with the Metropolitan in 1905, the time and place are open to question. I have an idea that instead of being sung in Milan in 1905, these discs were recorded in London, after Parvis had already made a long series of American Columbia records.

LLOYD G. KELLEY
Successor to

MUSIC BOX COMPANY

P. O. Box 355

Hanover, Massachusetts

CHRISTMAS TUNES for the 15 1/4" REGINA MUSIC BOX at $5.00 each. No. 1028—Still Night, Holy Night (Christmas Song); No. 1029—O Sanctissima (Christmas Song); No. 1162—Adeste Fideles (Hymn); No. 1423—O Tannebaum (known in German as "O Christmas Tree"); No. 3020—Come Hither Ye Children; No. 3023—White Christmas; No. 3029—Jingle Bells; No. 3030—The First Noel; No. 3031—Hark! The Herald Angels Sing; #3032—Santa Claus Is Coming To Town.

Include sufficient postage for mailing.

We manufacture 200 other tunes for the 15 1/4" Regina. A tune list will be furnished on request.

FOR SALE: Many fine disc type music boxes ranging in size from 3" diameter discs to 27" diameter discs. Also have a large assortment of Swiss Music Boxes from one and two tune musical numbers to large table music boxes with extra cylinders playing as many as 60 tunes.

We also have a catalog on new music boxes we manufacture and new music boxes imported from all over the world. Catalogs furnished on request.

"F. R. P."

Famous Records of The Past
2060 1st Ave., New York, N.Y.

Jack L. Caidin

Re-issues and re-recordings of rare and unusual phonograph records. Operatic, Theatrical, Political, Instrumental. The finest in quality and true reproduction. Ten inch long playing records $3.98 each. Tax and postage prepaid.

SEND FOR FREE BULLETINS!

my86c

I HAVE JUST PURCHASED a large collection, including Sir Harry Lauder, Victor Herbert's records from first pieces he did. Also many Fats Waller, rare hillbilly and race and many operatic, classic gems and just like new. Many rare organ by Jesse Crawford and others. Many Banjo, Xylophone, Bells, and the most beautiful lot of Red Seal Classics by Mischa Elman, Fritz Kreisler, Artur Rubinstein, Horowitz, Paderewski, and many others. Send for lists.

AL McREA, SR.

Box 182

Westville, N. J.

jeo

The following appeared in the Talking Machine News of London for December 15, 1906.

Taurino Parvis, the eminent Italian baritone, has entered into an exclusive contract with the Columbia Phonograph Company. He is an experienced record maker, having sung several operatic arias into the Graphophone in America while fulfilling an engagement at the New York Metropolitan Opera House. During the Covent Garden season, just closed, Parvis was the principal baritone star and won most favorable notices in the press for his splendid voice and acting. Before leaving London he made some more Columbia records which will be published later. He has insisted that none of his records shall be published until he has tested them.

A few months later the English Columbia Company began to issue a series of Parvis records and they were precisely the ones which Bauer lists as having been made two years earlier in Milan! Several appeared in the English list for March 1, 1907.

Early in 1905 Parvis began singing for the Columbia Company in New York. Here again he won distinction by being the duet partner of a noted Italian soprano, Gina Ciaparelli, or Gina C. Viafora, as she was called, by her married name, on her later Victor records. The baritone's first Columbias came out in April, 1905, and were issued as both two-minute cylinders and 10-inch discs. They were "Occhi di Fata" (cylinder 32662; disc, 3080), and the Pagliacci Prologue—cylinder 32663; disc 3079.

The June, 1905 Columbia Record contained a picture of Parvis, handsome, youthful and debonair as Figaro in "The Barber of Seville". Under the heading, "Columbia Records for June", the following appeared:

Taurino Parvis, baritone, who has a voice of wondrous beauty, has displayed it to good advantage in Denza's beautiful composition, "Giulia." The solo is in Italian—cylinder No. 32711. The same artist appears on the June list of disc records: his Prologue from I Pagliacci—12-inch disc record No. 3141—with orchestra accompaniment—being so realistic as to make you imagine you are at the opera and listening to the real singer. It is a fine illustration of the latest progress in the art of record making. All of the Prologue is rendered with the orchestral effects exactly as in the opera. Parvis also sings the famous Toreador song from "Carmen", with orchestra accompaniment—disc No. 3140.

The 10-inch disc and the cylinder of the Prologue issued two months previously had piano accompaniments. This orchestrally accompanied Prologue appears to be the first 12-inch record Columbia ever made in the United States; at least it is the only one in the 1906 catalog, although there are twelve 14-inch records to furnish music for dancing. In the list compiled by Arthur Knight, the 12-inch Prologue appears as No. 30000, and it may have been reissued later under that number, although I have been unable to find it, so numbered. It certainly originally appeared, and was catalogued, as 3141, in the same sequence as the 10-inch records.

Parvis may have been the most prolific operatic recording artist of 1904-07. At the time he began singing for Columbia, that company, which had made a splurge early in 1903 with 10-inch recordings by Marcella Sembrich, Eduard De Reszke, Ernestine

Schumann-Heink, Giuseppe Campanari, Suzanne Adams, Antonio Scotti and Charles Glibert, had no other operatic singer. Ciaparelli was added in June, 1905, and she and Parvis continued for the next year to hold the operatic fort as far as Columbia was concerned. The 1903 records were poorly recorded and a financial failure, which led Columbia's president, E. D. Easton, to decide "there's no money in opera," and let Victor have a monopoly of celebrities.

The July list contained several other Parvis solos, and the Record said: "Signor Parvis has gained great popularity with Columbia patrons and his magnificent voice is heard to good advantage in the above selections. All are in Italian." Apparently, it didn't occur to Columbia to give "Signor Parvis" celebrity rating. His records were sold at the same price as ordinary discs and cylinders. So were those of Ciaparelli and, a little later, Marcel Journet. Perhaps the 1903 debacle of trying to sell celebrity discs at $2 per single-faced 10-inch had persuaded Mr. Easton there would be a better market if the price was held down to $1. That same month, Columbia also issued a six-inch cylinder by Parvis of the Prologue. It could be used only on a Columbia machine with a specially long mandrel and had a playing time of about three minutes.

Several months elapsed before Parvis was again mentioned, but the March, 1906, Columbia Record said: "Six standard songs by Taurino Parvis of the Metropolitan Opera House are listed, among which are selections from Carmen, Ernani, Rigoletto and La Traviata. Mr. Parvis is gifted with a clear baritone voice of great range and excellent quality. His low tones are smooth and melodious, and the high tones are given with perfect ease and splendid artistic effect." In April, there was this comment on Parvis' disc record of "Giulia": "Mr. Parvis has a superb voice which he uses with all the grace and charm that come from study when combined with the fine musical taste that marks the true artist."

When Columbia began to issue double-faced records late in 1908, Parvis' single-faced discs were placed on the market in two-faced form. Then nothing was heard of the baritone in domestic listings from 1909 until the March, 1913, supplement appeared. Under the heading of "Popular Priced Operatic Vocal Recordings," was combined on A1258, a duet from Boheme by Giuseppe Armanini, tenor, and Parvis, with a Rigoletto selection by Rita D'Oria, soprano. This was described as "a popular priced operatic double disc sung by some of the best artists of Italy, two of whom, Armanini and D'Oria, are singing with signal success this year on the Pacific Coast. Parvis is also well-known to the American public as a baritone of exceptional ability."

In April, record A1262 contained "A Brilliant Operatic Duet By Italian Artists." This was a two-part Traviata aria sung by D'Oria and Parvis, and was described as: "A new popular priced record from Italy sung by two of the best artists available. . .

The duet is given a forceful and artistic rendition of Mme. D'Oria and Mr. Parvis."

Parvis also was represented by several selections (to be found in the appended discography) in the March, 1914, supplement. The supplement said: "The twelve selections here listed of Columbia Blue Label Double-Disc Records are the first of a new series of Grand Opera recordings at popular prices. They were made in our recording laboratories in Milan under the shadow of famous La Scala, that great temple of music whose very bricks and mortar have become sanctified through the long years of a glorious career as the world's greatest temple of Opera—the Mecca of every devotee, the ambition of every artist, the foundation of Grand Opera itself. In no other institution are the highest traditions of Grand Opera so reverently preserved, for this is their birthplace. The artists who have made this new series of records are singing leading roles in La Scala today; it is more than likely that at least some of them will be heard in this country before long. Each is an artist by training and by instinct, with the real artist's knowledge of the technique, and the real artist's deep understanding of the spirit of his art."

Others of the La Scala series were issued in March, 1915, and that ended Parvis' appearances in the American Columbia catalog, unless other records of which I have no knowledge were included in the green label international series. The last catalog in which any Parvis records appeared was dated 1918.

The baritone's disappearance from the Columbia catalog coincided with his debut in the American Pathé and Edison repertoires. His hill-and-dale recordings probably were made during his farewell visit to this country. Years ago I found an old copy of the long gone humorous magazine, Judge, which published a record review department conducted by "Disco." The date was either 1919 or 1920. I recall "Disco's" reviewing one of Parvis' Pathé records (I've forgotten which) and saying it was the best thing Pathé had done in a long time. And I remember the concluding sentence of his review: "Parvis, a most accomplished baritone, sings it splendidly."

That brings us to the end of this brief consideration of that "most accomplished baritone's" career. As I said earlier, I do not even know whether he is dead or alive. If alive, he can hardly be singing or even, at the age of 77, teaching. Even so, I thought at once of Parvis a few months ago when a contributor to the New Yorker related a visit he had paid to a home for retired opera singers at Milan. He said that as he strolled along he met two elderly men, one of whom threw his head back and vociferated some operatic aria in a wonderfully well preserved, rich baritone voice. I found myself wondering, "Can that have been Taurino Parvis?" And as I conclude this article I find myself hoping it may have been!

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

George Alexander (CLIFFORD ALEXANDER WILEY)

By JIM WALSH

One of the most rewarding moments of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists' long history occurred in the mid-afternoon of Saturday, February 5, 1955, when I opened post office box 476 in Vinton, Virginia, and removed an envelope with the name of the City of New York Department of Health in the upper left hand corner.

I opened the envelope with a grimace of anticipatory disappointment, but my mood quickly changed. Instead of the form letter apology I had expected, I found myself clutching something I had almost given up hope of obtaining — a photostatic copy of the death certificate of Clifford Alexander Wiley. I can't dance, but I felt like executing a few impromptu steps as I realized a search of more than twenty years had come to a successful end and I should be able to write a HOBBIES article about a singer once highly popular, but now one of the most bafflingly obscure of all early-day record makers.

Most likely there are few readers of this department to whom the name of Clifford A. Wiley has a significant meaning, but when I explain he was the baritone who made so many fine records under the assumed name of George Alexander you will understand why I felt elated. Despite his former prominence, there are few bygone phonograph stars about whom less is known today. I believe my research concerning George Alexander and his career has involved more prolonged effort and Sherlock Holmes technique than has been required to track down information concerning any other artist.

Up to now I have never mentioned Alexander to any other performer who made records during the same period in which he "flourished" and brought forth any sign of recognition. "Never heard of him; what did he do?" has been the stock reply. I once asked Billy Murray if he remembered George Alexander, but "The Denver Nightingale," who was not a student of record catalogs wrinkled his brow in perplexity as he said he couldn't recollect having ever before heard that name. Billy also said he had never heard of the accordion playing jigs and reels specialist, John Kimmel, concerning whom I have carried on an investigation almost as long and extensive as that dealing with Alexander.

Yet, although the singer himself is so dimly recalled, there is no doubt concerning his popularity as a recording artist in the first decade of the present century. From 1902 to 1907 no Columbia monthly supplement was thought complete without at least one Alexander recording of a ballad, a hymn or a patriotic number. His fame extended overseas. In the Talking Machine News for February 15, 1906, a writer said, in commenting on the influence of the phonograph upon British musical tastes:

"If George Alexander or Henry Burr or J. W. Myers were to advertise a concert in the Albert Hall next month, nine-tenths of their audience would be talking machine users."

A once highly esteemed artist but for more than a generation a mystery man — that was George Alexander. No wonder my heart pounded joyfully at the knowledge that, after almost a quarter of a century of off-and-on research, I was at last prepared to write this article, which I now take a properly modest pride in submitting.

II Preliminary Investigation Failures

I have pored over record catalogs since I was six or seven years old, and even as a tot I was mystified by the abruptness with which George Alexander's name had dropped out of the Columbia monthly supplements, even though many of his discs held their place among the company's best standard sellers. When I later obtained old Columbia catalogs I was intrigued to find each artist assigned a code letter, to save the space that would be needed for printing a performer's name in full after each record. An A after the title indicated a record by George Alexander; a B, one by Henry Burr, and a Z, a soprano unknown to me, Hedwig Zimmer. The lady obviously was given a Z because no other singer whose name began with "zed," as our English friends call it, was making records.

This photograph of George Alexander is made from a Columbia display poster of 1907.

A few instrumental soloists also were single-letter men. These included the xylophonist, Charles P. Lowe; Thomas Mills, who played orchestra bells and xylophone, and Edward F. Rubsam, also a bells and xylophone virtuoso. But other performers, no matter how popular were given longer designations. As an example, take the letter M. Lucy Isabella March was shortened to "Mar"; Corinne Morgan, "Mor"; Emil Muench, "Mue"; Billy Murray, "Mu," and J. W. Myers, "My." You probably are thinking "What a silly system!" and I concur. The catalog from which I am quoting is the 1909 issue, containing the first listing of Columbia double-faced records. In the preceding years there was an even sillier method. Most of the artists weren't identified by name, but were dismissed as "tenor," "baritone," "soprano" and the like. Hence, figuring out who made any given disc in Columbia single-faced record catalogs is often a matter of heartrending difficulty — sometimes an impossibility!

For a while I toyed with the belief that the George Alexander who had made records was the same man as a noted English theatrical producer, Sir George Alexander. The idea suggested a certain versatility, since theatrical producers, I assumed, ordinarily didn't sing a large repertoire of gospel hymns. Nevertheless, the conception pleased me, and seemed plausible enough to delude me into thinking I could hear an English accent in the Alexander records.

My first sustained effort to find out something about George Alexander occurred when I struck up a friendship by correspondence with the late Frank Dorian, then assistant to the president of the Columbia Phonograph Company. Mr. Dorian, who had been with Columbia during most of his 40-year business span, answered my innumerable questions with a gracious patience I have never ceased to marvel at and glowingly recall. He once wrote he suspected I was "the destined historian of the phonograph" and he therefore was glad to help me all he could.

I mentioned to Mr. Dorian I was puzzled why no new records by George Alexander appeared from about the time double-faced discs were introduced. I also asked for any information he could give me concerning the baritone. Although I have tried to keep all Frank Dorian's letters, valuing them as a storehouse of first-hand information about the antique phonograph days (they would make fascinating reading for recorded music enthusiasts), I seem to have mislaid the one in which he answered my Alexander questions. However, I recall his saying that Alexander was "a young concert singer" when he began making Columbia records, his real name was Clifford Wiley and he was a native of Baltimore.

Mr. Dorian said the reason why new Alexander recordings ceased to be issued was simple. The singer, he said, had a painful lingering illness and died about the time double-faced records were introduced. In making that statement, Mr. Dorian's usually reliable memory led him somewhat astray. The death certificate photostat which I clutched that memorable February afternoon revealed Clifford Alexander Wiley didn't die until several years after Columbia's first double-disc record catalog appeared.

Frank Dorian's statement was the only George Alexander information I was able to obtain for a long time. I had never even seen a photograph of Alexander. Then another veteran Columbia executive, Walter A. Forbush, gave me a large poster of "Some Columbia Talent," which had been sent to record dealers in 1907. Among the artists depicted was George Alexander, who didn't look much like the young singer described by Mr. Dorian. The photo had no resemblance to my mental conception of a clean-shaven, hatchet-faced man wearing a black felt hat. The man on the poster seemed to be rather stout, with what used to be called "walrus" mustache, and gray hair.

That remains the only picture I have ever seen of George Alexander, aside from reproductions of the same photo in old record supplements and the company's "house organ," The Columbia Record. Perhaps because he was well known in the recital and concert field as Clifford Wiley, the singer wasn't proud of his phonograph affiliations (many recording artists weren't in those days) and didn't encourage any extensive use of his likeness. I have had his photo copied from the old poster and hope it is clear enough to be reproduced.

III Fruitless Baltimore Research

As time went on and I began to write for HOBBIES and other publications, I was never free from a desire to fathom the mystery and tell the romantic life story I was sure lurked behind the commonplace assumed name of "George Alexander," but none of my occasional efforts to learn more about Baltimore's native son were successful. For the purpose of this narrative, I shall disregard my earlier efforts and concentrate on attempts made in the past few years that eventually brought success.

In October, 1952, I wrote to the Reference Library of The Baltimore Sun, telling why I was interested in Clifford Wiley and asking if the newspaper "morgue" contained a death notice or any other information concerning him. More than two years later, I received the following letter, dated January 23, 1955, from the librarian, Weldon Wallace — a letter which came, ironically, after I had finally achieved my objective through another source but still with the Sun's help:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: Tonight, among some other papers, I found your letter of December 16, 1952, which somehow got misplaced. You made inquiry about a singer named George Alexander, also known as Clifford Wiley. In case you are still seeking information about this oldtimer, I am sorry to disappoint you, for I have been unable to find anything in the library of this paper — either in the clippings or in our books — about the gentleman. My apologies for the delay in answering."

Apparently I forgot that I had already written to the Sun without receiving a reply, for on August 4, 1954, I tried again, saying: "I believe Wiley to have died around 1910, and he presumably was in his forties. I believe he was buried in Baltimore, but have no trustworthy information. He was well known on the concert stage in 1900 and for several years thereafter. Since he was a notable, I imagine your files will contain something about him and would very much appreciate either a typewritten copy or information as to what a photostat would cost." This brought a brief reply from "M. B." of the Information Bureau: "We regret we have no record on Clifford A. Wiley, known as 'George Alexander,' in our files, and none of our sources have been able to help us. One of our sources suggested that you write to the New York Public Library." Alas! I had already tried the New York Public Library with no luck.

Still thinking that since Wiley was born in Baltimore he was likely to have been taken there for burial, I wrote to the Bureau of Vital Records of the Baltimore City Health Department and had a search made of the years 1908 through 1916 — the span during which I was reasonably certain the singer must have died. The result was negative. There was no record of Wiley's death and burial, for the good reason, as I learned later, that he neither died in nor was buried in Baltimore.

Well, I thought, perhaps the Enoch Pratt Library would have something on its shelves dealing with Baltimore's once famous resident. But a letter of inquiry brought the following let-down from James K. Dickson, head of the Fine Arts Department:

"Your letter . . . regarding a Clifford Wiley has passed about the various departments of this library, which might have information, in vain. I am sorry to report that we cannot help you."

Eager not to overlook any possible source of information, I tried the Haskin Information Service in Washington. This effort also was without success, though it brought me an unexpected compliment which I had no reason to anticipate:

Dear Mr. Walsh: We have done more than the usual amount of research on your inquiry . . .

"Your articles in HOBBIES about former phonograph recording artists have always been of great interest.

"Unfortunately in 1910 and earlier the record companies did not keep the biographical material that is available today for present-day singers. You might write to RCA Victor or Columbia and ask if they have any information. . . It will be a pleasure to hear from you again."

I appreciated the friendly spirit of the reply, and if this article chances to be read by the lady who dictated the latter, I assure her that if the Haskin Service should receive any inquiries it is unable to answer concerning pioneer recording artists I stand ready to help.

IV Success At Last!

Then I took what proved to be the most sensible step in the whole of my sleuthing. I wrote a letter to the editor of the Baltimore Sun, asking any reader with information about Clifford Alexander Wiley, who made phonograph records under the name of George Alexander, to write to me. I thought it barely possible somebody might still be living and reading the Sun who had known, or at least known of, the elusive artist.

I was right. On August 16, 1954 — just ten days before I moved from the house I had occupied in Vinton, Virginia, for the preceding eleven years, I received a letter from a gentleman to whom I owe an abject apology — Harry F. Klinefelter of 19 Commerce Street, Baltimore. I shall beg Mr. Klinefelter's pardon by mail, but I herewith also apologize in public. His letter brought me almost as great a thrill as receiving the death certificate photostat, for it was the letter that made it possible to obtain the photostat and write this article.

"I am writing this from bed where I have just read your letter inquiring about my old friend, Clifford Alexander Wiley, who possessed just about one of the grandest natural baritone voices I have ever heard, and had he studied French, Italian and German they couldn't have kept him out of grand opera, but he, like my very intimate friend, James W. Clayton, who also had a magnificent baritone voice . . . wasn't a linguist. I was fortunate enough to appear in many concerts with both Wiley and Clayton.

"In 1904 I spent a week in Mountain Lake Park, Md. Wiley and I appeared twice daily in the Chautauqua, and I still at 78 am able to do my specialty, although I have long since stopped appearing in public. Nobody enjoys hearing an ugly woman sing, and I am too . . . old to whistle in public.

"Actually, I began whistling before I was three years old and for many years appeared in concerts. I am not a bird imitator. I whistle popular and classical music, otherwise I could have not appeared with such singers as Wiley and Clayton.

"I once visited Cliff in New York. I was 24 at that time (1904.) Cliff was about 30 or so. That would make him about 85 were he alive. He couldn't have been 50 when he died. I also have appeared with John Charles Thomas and many other great singers, and even now I appear in the musicals of the University Club of which I am a member, but am not a university man as I never got past the eighth grade.

"A contemporary of Cliff's, a fine tenor singer who used to teach locally said that Wiley had the greatest natural baritone voice he had ever heard. I can hear him now and I am sure I can remember most of the songs he sang in Mountain Lake Park. Two years ago I visited Mountain Lake. The Chautauqua has gone with the wind. A gas well occupies the site, but I am sure is not giving off as much gas as the Rev. Dr. _____, who ran the Chautauqua. . . .

"The vocal teacher who taught Wiley was Clifton Andrews, long since dead, whose wife survives him and who was quite a soprano with whom I have appeared.

"I hope I have been able to furnish you with at least a part of what you desire. . . . Just where is Vinton? I get down to Winchester occasionally and expect to be down that way in the fall. HARRY F. KLINEFELTER."

In spite of being almost distracted, and with good reason, by the worry of my impending moving, I replied immediately to Mr. Klinefelter, asking if he knew whether Clifford Wiley had any surviving relatives and where he died and was buried. He replied on August 19. I had mailed my letter to him in an insurance company envelope, and his opening sentence shows he took me to be an insurance man, like himself, instead of a radio-TV newsman and free-lance writer:

"Dear Jim Walsh: So you are in the insurance business. Well, I'll be damned!

"When I tell you how I found out the following you will think me a Pinkerton. We have represented the Employers' Group for over 50 years.

. . . In their office was a girl named Bowland. One day she told me her mother's maiden name was Wiley. I told her that I once knew a very great baritone singer named Clifford Alexander Wiley. 'Why,' she said, 'he was my uncle—my mother's brother!' For the life of me I couldn't remember her name, but I remembered the name of her chum in the Employers' office, a Miss Sheely, so I called up her father, the agent of Moore and McCormick Steamship Lines, whom I know quite well, and he gave me the name of Mrs. W. A. N. Bowland, 3507 North Charles St., Baltimore, whom you can write, but she knows very little about Cliff, whose brother, Maurice Wiley, was quite successful in the lumber business. . . . Cliff was married. I visited him and his wife at their apartment in New York. He did die in his forties, is buried somewhere on Long Island, but his sister doesn't know where. They had no children.

"I hope this will be some help. I shall never forget the way Cliff sang Valentine's song from 'Faust,' (he interpolated a high A). 'The Publican' and the Toreador Song from 'Carmen.' Then Mr. Klinefelter added a colorful postscript:

"I am sorry you can't whistle, but I can't sing worth a damn, and, believe it or not, I can't play a single musical instrument, and I can't read a note, but I know hundreds of songs and instrumental pieces to whistle in concerts. I am quite a musical freak. Excuse this penmanship. It's hard to write in bed with an electric light coming over my right shoulder. I should be left-handed."

Now comes the regrettable part of my correspondence with the candid and kindly Harry Klinefelter. When his second letter reached me I was in the throes of packing. The letter together with much other correspondence, was tossed into a box, became misplaced and was found only a few days ago when I ransacked my new house for the material I needed to write this long-delayed biographical sketch of George Alexander. Mr. Klinefelter must have thought me ungrateful, to say the least, because I didn't reply. I couldn't remember his address. However, I shall send him a copy of this article and have the issue of HOBBIES containing the published version mailed to him, and perhaps that will make amends. I hope so, for had it not been for his thoughtful reply to my letter to the editor this article would still be in the dream-plan stage.

VA Letters From Alexander's Niece

Feeling myself on the way to success, I wrote to the lady Mr. Klinefelter had mentioned. I told her of my long search for information about her uncle, Clifford Wiley, and also said that my WSLS news department associate, Ed. Thomas, the station's sports director, expected to be in Baltimore within a short time and had offered to phone to her and take down all the information she could recall concerning her illustrious uncle. The letter which I received a few days later was dated August 29, and signed Elizabeth Bowland Gillet (Mrs. Bowland Gillet). It was rather disappointing, for it revealed little I hadn't already known:

"My dear Mr. Walsh," Mrs. Gillet wrote, "this is in reply to your letter of August 24th. . . . My mother, who . . . is quite ill at the moment, feels it should have an answer at once.

"You suggested Mr. Thomas . . . would call mother, and while she would be very glad to receive him, she has no real information to give. Her illness is a respiratory infection, and it is very difficult for her to talk, so the doctor has ordered complete rest and quiet.

"In her telephone conversation with Mr. Klinefelter, she answered his questions as best she could. However, mother was the youngest of seven children, while uncle Clifford was the eldest, and there were many years difference in their ages; in fact, the next in age to mother, uncle Maurice, was a grown man when mother was still a little girl. Thus, as you can readily see, dates and other pertinent data such as you might want for your biography have become considerably hazy. Further, uncle Clifford died in New York City approximately 40-45 years ago. However, she does remember, that he sang under the name of Clifford Alexander rather than 'George Alexander,' as your letter mentions.

"Mother says that in addition to her many pleasant childhood memories of her very talented brother, it is nice to know that he is remembered by others after so many years.

"We are indeed sorry that we cannot help you further and hope you can appreciate the difficulty made by the many years difference in their ages."

This was a charming letter, but it was, as I have said, to some extent disappointing, and it contained one piece of unintentional misinformation—the statement that Clifford Wiley used Clifford Alexander, rather than George Alexander, as his professional name. The memory of Wiley's sister had played her false here, as reference to any old Columbia catalog would show. Nevertheless, there was one valuable piece of information—the statement that Clifford Wiley died in New York City. Having that knowledge, I was able to ask the Bureau of Records and Statistics of the Department of Health of the City of New York (to quote its round-about title in full) to send me a photostat of the death certificate. And it was that photostat which I was so happy to receive on that February afternoon.

VI What the Photostat Said

Now that I had it, the photostat didn't absolutely dazzle me with the variety and extent of its information, but it did give the date of Clifford Wiley's birth and death, the cause of his death and some other pertinent information—enough to make it possible for me to produce the article I had long hoped to write.

Applying a magnifying glass to the photograph of the death certificate (filled out in handwriting instead of the typewriting that is more common nowadays) I found that Clifford Alexander Wiley died in his apartment at 2469 Broadway, New York City, at the age of 45 years, seven months and 21 days. He was born July 9, 1867. His birthplace is given as Baltimore and his profession as "vocal instructor." His father was Alexander Wiley and his mother's maiden name was Anne Wells. Both were born, like their son, in Baltimore.

Wiley died March 2, 1913, and was buried March 5 in the New York-New Jersey cemetery. The undertaker's name appears to be Frank Calyer, of 154 East 23rd Street. I make the doctor's signature out, rightly or wrongly to be John Henry Wychett, Jr. He says he attended Wiley from February 21 to March 2, 1913, and death occurred at 4:15 p.m. of the latter day. Complex medical terms are used to indicate that the singer died of chronic Bright's disease and a heart condition, from which he had suffered for four years, with "general arterial sclerosis" (hardening of the arteries) as a secondary cause. From this it appears safe to deduce that Wiley became chronically ill about the time his records ceased to appear in Columbia supplements (roughly speaking, the period in which single-faced records began to be succeeded by double-faced), but that he seems to have been able to teach singing even though he was no longer (with one or two exceptions to be mentioned later) making records.

And now, with the statistical data out of the way, we may proceed to a consideration of Wiley's recordings. However, first I should like to

(Continued on page 34)

CURRENT COLLECTORS' RECORDINGS

By ALLEN G. DEBUS

Grace La Rue was one of the most popular stars of musical comedy from shortly after the turn of the century until the mid twenties. Her death on March 12 of this year at the age of seventy-five made me pause a moment to review her career and her recordings.

She was celebrated as being the first woman performer to earn $1500 a week and her style was so distinct that she was a common subject for imitators. Grace La Rue had studied voice on the continent and she was well known on the concert stage as well as in vaudeville. In musical comedy she starred in such productions as "The Tourists" (1906), "Ziegfeld Follies of 1907," "Ziegfeld Follies of 1908," "Madame Troubadour" (1910), "Betsy" (1911), "Hitchy Koo" with Raymond Hitchcock in 1917, "Dear Me" (1921), and the "Music Box Revue" of 1922.

The only recording I know of by her is Columbia A904 which has two numbers by her: "Clap Hands" and "Has Anybody Here Seen Nancy?" This recording was released in 1910, and although neither of the songs seem to have become "hits", she sang them well, and it is evident that her voice was well suited for acoustic recording. Her photograph was printed in the 1912 Columbia catalog, and it is mentioned that "Grace La Rue, one of America's foremost light opera comedienues, under exclusive Columbia contract, has sung some of her most successful numbers." This recording seems to be quite rare today and it evidently had a rather small sale. It is probably because of this reason that no more discs were released by her.

In the last year or two several collectors have written in to give additional information in reference to some of the artists I have discussed in this column. I am always most happy to hear from my readers and it seems particularly worthwhile to devote some space this month to these letters because of the additional information that has come in to me concerning other recordings made by Elsie Janis for HMV than those I mentioned in my July column.

First, Alan H. Mueller wrote to me that he had in his collection a copy of the twelve-inch HMV recording of "I've Got Everything I Want But You" from the "Passing Show." This disc is a duet made by Elsie Janis and Basil Hallam. The number is 04116. After receiving this information, I received a letter from Marvin Smismman of St. Louis who had consulted his extensive collection of catalogs and had come up with the following.

January, 1916 HMV catalog:

10-INCH RECORDINGS

- B485 Janis & Hallam - Keep Smiling/Hallam - Balling the Jack
- B488 Janis & Hallam - Florrie Was a Flapper/Janis - You're Here and I'm Here
- B489 Janis - I Want a Dancing Man/Janis - When We Tango to the Wearing of the Green

12-INCH RECORDINGS

- C566 Janis & Hallam - Prudence/Janis - Same Old Song
- C569 Janis - Yip I Addy I Ay/George Grossmith - The Fortune Teller
- C597 Janis and Hallam - Piccadilly/De Groot and the Piccadilly Orch. - I've Got Everything I Want But You

The October, 1917 catalog, besides the above recordings, lists the following twelve-inch solo records by Elsie Janis:

- 03512 Along the Rocky Road to Dublin
- 03526 I'm Not Prepared
- 03516 When You're in Louisville
- 03511 Yaaka Hula Hickey Dula

Mr. Smismman also consulted the 1922, 1924, and 1925 HMV catalogs. The last two had no Janis listings, but the 1922 catalog, which I did not think had any of her records actually lists two twelve-inch discs by her.

- D388 Smiles/Yaaka Hula Hickey Dula
- D435 Give Me the Moonlight (Two parts)

Back in March, 1955, I discussed the records of George Jessel and Gus Van. Larry Kiner was quick to write me that I had left out some items by both artists. On George Jessel he offered the following information:

- Operaphone 21186 - Marcelle
- Pathe 22418 Dolls/Marcelle
- COLUMBIA
- Unissued - You Know What I Mean (made on 10-11-1919)
- Unissued - Give Me the Sultan's Harem (10-28-1919)
- Unissued - When They're Old Enough to Know Better (10-28-1919)
- Banner 2094 Professor Labermacher (2 parts)
- 2097 Toastmaster (2 parts)

With Gus Van, Larry was able to supply me with a list of solos he made for the American Record Co., whose masters appeared on such labels as Oriole, Banner, Perfect, Melotone, etc.

MATRIX

- 10434 In a Cafe on the Road to Calais (2-19-1931)
- 10543 I've Gotta Heavy Levee Date With Mandy (4-7-1931)
- 10544 Please Don't Cut Out My Sauerkraut (4-7-1931)
- 10699 Roll On Mississippi, Roll On (6-15-1931)
- 10700 When Yuba Plays the Rumba on the Tuba (6-15-1931)

In regard to the Jolson series which began in the April, 1955, issue of Hobbies, it should be mentioned that it seems almost positive now that the quoted Victor sales figures on the Jolson records are incorrect. A letter from Jim Walsh dated May 5, 1955 gives some interesting data on Jolson's Brunswick releases:

Looking through a scrapbook I came across a couple of Al Jolson items that should interest you. One is a 1924 clipping from the Roanoke Times headed "Jazz Worth More Than Caruso's Tones." A cut shows Jolson singing into a phonograph recording horn with Isham Jones, behind him, playing a saxophone, and the cut lines read:

"Caruso's golden tones have turned into baser metal (metal) and Al Jolson, jazz king, supplants the famous tenor as the gold getter, for Jolson, shown here, making his first record has signed a contract with P. L. Deutsch, of the Brunswick Phonograph Company, which agrees to pay the blackface comedian $30,000 a month for four years to make phonograph records—a total of $1,400,000. Playing the saxophone for Jolson is Isham Jones, jazz millionaire, who has made his million in the past five years with his saxophone and his syncopation compositions."

If that contract was real and not a press agent's imagination, Brunswick must soon have experienced a terrific headache whenever it thought of Jolson, for partly, because of the general decline in record sales from radio competition, he was a flop as a Brunswick singer and didn't have a big selling record until "Sonny Boy" and "There's a Rainbow 'Round My Shoulder" were paired. His first Brunswick was "California, Here I Come" and "I'm Goin' South" (he had previously recorded the latter for Columbia) and the "Melody Mart" department of the Billboard remarked, after the record had been out a few months: "There are no songwriters on Broadway making more of a holler than the writers of 'California' and 'Goin' South.'" These two numbers were backed upon first Brunswick record made by Al Jolson. It was hoped that 200,000 would be sold. According to the statements rendered the writers, 85,000 was all."

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 33)

mention the sixteenth annual catalog of the Henry Wolfsohn Musical Bureau of 131 East 17th Street, New York, which has recently come into my possession. Covering the seasons of 1901 and 1902, it lists Clifford A. Wiley as one of the baritones under Wolfsohn management—an indication that at about the time he began to make records he was already well established in his career. Other Wolfsohn artists who made records and whose names will be familiar to some, if not all, collectors, are:

Soprano—Mrs. Hissem De Moss (Mary Hissem De Moss); tenors—Evan Williams, John Young and Ellison Van Hoose; baritones—Gwilym Miles (who did a little duet singing for Columbia with Henry Burr); Albert Jampolski (spelled Iampolski in the catalog); cellists—Leo Schultz and Hans Kronold; accompanist—Bruno Huhn; and one ensemble—the Kneisel Quartet. Some of the others may have recorded, possibly under different names, but their catalog identifications don't click with me.

(to be continued)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

George Alexander (CLIFFORD ALEXANDER WILEY)

(Continued from the September issue)

By JIM WALSH

VII Was Alexander "Atwood Twitchell"?

Having told the little that is known about George Alexander's family history, his life and death, let us proceed to a consideration of his records. First, though, I must mention a "wild surmise" that has struck me since the earlier pages of this sketch were written in the first few days of September, 1955.

For virtually ever since I can remember, my parent's record collection included a badly cracked nine-inch single-faced Zon-o-phone of a sentimental ballad, "Jennie Lee," sung by "Mr. Atwood Twitchell." The disc has the black center with white lettering that characterized all Zon-o-phones until paper labels were substituted in 1903—presumably as a result of Victor's acquiring the old Universal Talking Machine Company, which had begun making Zon-o-phone records in 1901. (See Roland Gelatt's fascinating new book, "The History of the Phonograph," for a lucid explanation of the interlocking of the Berliner, Victor and Zon-o-phone concerns). Although the record has such a wide crack that only a few words can be understood when it is played, I have never thrown it away, largely because I have been bemused by the mystery surrounding Atwood Twitchell. "Jenny Lee," which was written by Arthur J. Lamb and Harry Von Tilzer and published by Shapiro, Bernstein, Von Tilzer and Company in 1902, remained the only record I had ever seen by Twitchell until I came across Zon-o-phone No. 933, "The Holy City," 15 years ago while rummaging through Jack Caidin's record shop in New York City. To this day I have never seen any others or found them listed in print.

Who was Atwood Twitchell? That I have wondered over and over. Many years ago I wrote to my faithful, already mentioned friend, Frank Dorian, and asked him if he knew of such a singer in the early 1900's. Mr. Dorian replied he had never heard of any baritone named Twitchell, and had referred my question to his Columbia associate, J. O. Prescott, whose brother, F. M. Prescott, had been instrumental in founding the Zon-o-phone business. "If anybody now living would know about Atwood Twitchell," Mr. Dorian wrote, "Mr. Prescott should. But he says he never heard of anyone with that name."

Other inquiries proved equally fruitless and I decided "Atwood Twitchell" must have been an assumed name for one of the established recording baritones.

But which? For a time I leaned strongly toward the English singer, Alan Turner, who spent much time in American recording studios. Singers of the acoustic era were fond of using noms de disques whose sound or initials resembled their real names (as witness Elsie Baker calling herself Edna Brown and Gladys Rice reversing her initials and becoming Rachel Grant), and it probably was more than a coincidence, I thought, that Alan Turner and Atwood Twitchell had the same initial letters. Fred Hager, who was in charge of Zon-o-phone's early recording activities, told me he believed Turner sang for the company and did some announcing, although John Kaiser was the chief announcer. I thought I detected traces of Turner's characteristic intonations and accent in Twitchell's singing, as best I could judge by one badly cracked and one seriously worn record. I still haven't given Alan Turner up as a possibility, but as best I can learn Turner did no American recording until 1906. That would leave him out as the 1902 Twitchell.

More recently I have toyed with the idea that the late Emilio de Gogorza might be responsible for the Twitchell recordings. After all, Emilio wasn't above singing "The Holy City" and probably wouldn't have caved, either, at "Jennie Lee." He made Victor and Zon-o-phone records under such names as Carlos Francisco, Herbert Goddard, M. Fernand and Ed. Franklin—so why not Atwood Twitchell? By shifting the speed of "The Holy City" to what I hoped was the right number of revolutions, I thought I detected a resemblance to de Gogorza's voice. Again, that still isn't impossible.

But while writing this article, the

LLOYD G. KELLEY

Successor to

MUSIC BOX COMPANY

P. O. Box 355

Hanover, Massachusetts

CHRISTMAS TUNES for the 15 1/2" REGINA MUSIC BOX at $5.00 each. No. 1028—Still Night, Holy Night. (Christmas Song); No. 1029—O Sankelssina (Christmas Song); No. 1182—Adeste Fideles (Hymn); No. 1423—O Tannebaum (known in German as "O Christmas Tree"); No. 3026—Come Hither Ye Children; No. 3028—White Christmas; No. 3029—Jingle Bells; No. 3030—The First Noel; No. 3031—Hark! The Herald Angels Sing; #3032—Santa Claus Is Coming To Town.

Include sufficient postage for mailing.

We manufacture 200 other tunes for the 15 1/2" Regina. A tune list will be furnished on request.

FOR SALE: Many fine disc type music boxes ranging in size from 8" diameter discs to 27" diameter discs. Also have a large assortment of Swiss Music Boxes from one and two tone musical numbers to large table music boxes with extra cylinders playing as many as 60 tunes.

We also have a catalog on new music boxes we manufacture and new music boxes imported from all over the world. Catalogs furnished on request.

"F. R. P."

Famous Records of The Past
2060 1st Ave., New York, N.Y.

Jack L. Caidin

Re-issues and re-recordings of rare and unusual phonograph records. Operatic, Theatrical, Political, Instrumental. The finest in quality and true reproduction. Ten inch long playing records $3.98 each. Tax and postage prepaid.

SEND FOR FREE BULLETINS!

my56c

AL McREA, Sr.

Box 182

Westville, N. J.

oc

FOR SALE

OUTSTANDING MUSICAL COLLECTORS ITEM MILLS DOUBLE VIOLIN VIRTUOSO

This machine is considered the Queen of all automatic musical machine collectors. In A#1 Mint condition. Mahogany case, bevel glass, 5 rolls music, 30 selections. New roll available on order Price F. O. B. Dallas, $2500.00

Also CALLIOPE'S NEW USED RESTORED PARTS WHISTLES

Seeburg Bar Room Automatic Piano with rolls $850.

ROY C. LEE

934 N. Lancaster

Dallas 3, Texas

np

thought seemed to come out of nowhere; Wasn't George Alexander the most likely candidate for the Twitchell title?—always assuming there really was not, as there may have been, a singer by that name. The Twitchell records appear to have been issued shortly before the Alexander name appeared in the Zon-o-phone catalog, and it may be that Clifford Wiley at first for purposes of disguise chose to call himself Atwood Twitchell before becoming the better known George Alexander. Twitchell's name doesn't appear in the oldest Zon-o-phone catalog I have—the date is June, 1905—and "Jenny Lee," which apparently didn't sell, has been expunged. But there is a record of "The Holy City," sung by George Alexander! Either in 1903 or 1904, the Zon-o-phone seven and nine-inch records were renumbered apparently so that the new 10-inch series could begin with No. 1, and the smaller records were shifted to the 5,000 group. Perhaps those remained in the catalog were remade by the Victor process and there was later some altering of speeds, but a great many stayed in the active list under new numbers until the seven and nine-inch discs were discontinued a year or so later. What more natural than for the company to have transferred "Twitchell's" recording of the popular Stephen Adams composition to the new 5,000 series and catalogued it under Wiley's new assumed name of Alexander?

One thing is obvious. The Alexander records didn't begin to appear until after the older numbers had been given up for the new. In transferring the numbering system, rec-

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

PIPE ORGAN AND PIANO PLAYER, takes standard 88 note rolls, separate cabinet with blower and pump. Two keyboards and bass pedals. Excellent condition.—G. T. Merriken, Briggs Chaney Rd., Rt. 2, Silver Spring, Maryland. Ja3826

WURLITZER BAND ORGAN Double tracker Callola, 4 ranks of pipes with brass trumpet. Complete with Organo and pneumatic pump. Takes bass and snare drum.—G. T. Merriken, Briggs Chaney Rd., Rt. 2, Silver Spring, Maryland. Ja3065

SPONHOLZ

Importers

770 Madison Ave.,
N. Y. C.

Imports from 6 European countries
MECHANICAL
SINGING BIRDS IN CAGES AND FINE BOXES.
WHISTLING CARVED FIGURES.
ANIMATED
MUSIC BOXES, old and new.
AUTOMATONS.
CHILDREN'S
MUSIC BOXES.
MUSICAL AND REVOLVING
XMAS ANGELS.
REPAIRS.

dc

JIM WALSH WANTS TO BUY

Old phonograph record catalogs and supplements (mostly prior to 1915); back copies of phonograph publications and all sorts of reference material dealing with the history and development of sound recording that will provide background information for

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Please do not send me lists of records for sale. I am not interested in buying phonographs and records by mail and do not want "The Victor Book of the Opera." Do not submit material without being instructed by me. I will not pay for or return unsolicited items. If I do not reply I already have the material you offer. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. Address:

JIM WALSH

Box 476

Vinton, Va.
tfx

WE BUY SELL OR TRADE COIN OPERATED ELECTRIC PIANOS— MILLS VIOLIN MACHINES ROLLS FOR MECHANICAL PIANOS The World's Largest INDIAN TRADING POST

Sikeston,

Missouri

Box 542

Phone 1347

Stop & See Us If You're Passing op

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION

RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G. & T., etc.)
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts. Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York
tfx

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES

LARGEST ASSORTMENT of all sizes and types for sale. EVERY mechanism completely overhauled and GUARANTEED. Send for free lists.

EXPERT REPAIRING of all music boxes - original factory methods and materials. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. No charge for Estimates & Appraisals.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. Pelham, N. Y.

Pelham 8-1506

(Originally established in Switzerland in 1825.)

tfo

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

BRASS TUNING ARM FOR MILLS VIOLANO

$10.00 EACH

FOR SALE: Mills Violanos and other types coin-operated musical instruments. ALSO, WANTED: All types of this equipment and rolls for same.

WALBOX DISTRIBUTING CO.

3909 Main St. — Dallas, Texas — Tel. Victor 1671

jlj75c

ords already in the catalog were grouped in blocks. Band selections were numbered from 5000 to 5119; orchestra, 5120 to 5213; duets by Collins and Harlan from 5440 to 5452, etc. But after a group of Dan Quinn records (5574 to 5578), the discs receive numbers regardless of the classification into which they fall. Alexander's first, 5589, is "Believe." His name should appear only on Zon-o-phones with the paper label and the trumpets and harp trademark. Those of Twitchell, on the other hand, will be met with solely on the black-and-white etched type. Hence, it appears reasonable that the mysterious "Alexander" was the successor to the even more mysterious "Twitchell."

De Gogorza doesn't appear in the 1905 Zono catalog. The only other baritones engaged by the company whose repertoires were like Twitchell's were J. J. Fisher, James F. Harrison, John W. Myers and Frank C. Stanley, and Twitchell's tone production methods could never have been mistaken for those of Stanley, Myers or Harrison. I know too little of Fisher to deliver a positive pronouncement, but a 1904 Columbia Record seems to dispose of him as a possibility. It says that he had just returned to record making after several years spent in other business, and was "singing better than ever." Presumably, then, he wasn't recording in the Twitchell era of 1901-02. Until there is evidence to the contrary—and I shall welcome Atwood Twitchell information of any kind from any source—I shall please myself with the possibility that Twitchell was merely a try-out for the Baltimore baritone who became internationally noted as "George Alexander," even though almost none of his admirers knew who he actually was.

After typing the foregoing, I got out a magnifying glass and submitted to a searching scrutiny the only two nine-inch Zon-o-phone records with paper labels which I have by Alexander. And I found something that strengthens my belief he began his recording career as Twitchell. As already mentioned, the label number of "Jenny Lee" is 1123. Well, the number, of Alexander's "Home, Sweet Home" under the new system is 5680, but the original number, 1192, is etched into the smooth material surrounding the label. That makes it obvious Alexander was singing for Zon-o-phone shortly after Twitchell's offerings appeared. Alexander's version of "Always in the Way," a Charles K. Harris "child ballad" issued in 1903, has a label number of 5798, but the original recording number is 2216.

If anyone has a nine-inch Zon-o-phone record of "The Holy City," (No. 5757), sung by Alexander, and finds the original "Twitchell number," 933, scratched into the inner rim, that should just about make the Alexander-Twitchell-Clifford Wiley identification complete. Now let's turn to a consideration of George Alexander's records.

VIII Records by Clifford Wiley

As far as careful checking has revealed, the assumed name of George Alexander didn't appear in any American record list before 1902. Some of the songs he recorded were written at an earlier period. Dr. Alfred Robyn's "Answer," for instance, goes back to 1885, and the Alexander list was largely composed of "standard" numbers of even greater antiquity, but none of the so-called "popular" selections he recorded became known before 1902 or some time in 1901. Alexander's name is missing from the 1901 and 1902 Victor catalogs. Columbia didn't begin to make discs until 1902, when it bought the business of the Globe Record Company and issued several hundred Globe recordings, identified in their new guise as "Climax Records, made by the G. R. Co. for the Columbia Phonograph Co." Zon-o-phone was a struggling beginner in 1901 and soon got into financial difficulties that suspended its operations for several months. Alexander doesn't show up in its lists with any songs, other than "standard" numbers, published before 1902. Apparently he began making Zon-o-phone and Columbia records at about the same time, for identical titles frequently appear in the lists I am appending at the end of this sketch.

Incidentally, included in the list are three discs I doubt are by Alexander, although he made Columbia cylinders of the same selections. Question that he was recording early enough to sing Nos. 10, 302 and 657, which probably were pressed from original Globe Record masters. However, since the Columbia cylinder catalog does contain titles of those numbers by Alexander, I'm giving him the benefit of the doubt and placing (?) after the disc numbers. I have already explained that until Columbia began making double-faced records, the catalog didn't give names of singers but only identified their voice quality.

The first Columbia disc definitely identified as by Alexander is 1098, "Three Roses Red." The number clearly indicates a 1902 record, since one of the earliest duets by Collins and Harlan, who began their recording association that year, is 1141, "Closing Time in a Country Grocery." "Three Roses Red" is followed by 1099, "Entreaty" and 1100, "The Rosary." Already the type of song by which "George Alexander" was to be typed has been established. Columbia was using him for good "safe," conservative numbers that didn't display the extreme range and power of his voice. And, like his great tenor contemporary, Henry Burr, who also began in 1902, he was to be called on frequently for recordings of hymns. It may be said he was Columbia's "baritone gospel singer," just as Burr was the "sacred tenor," and Harry Anthony and James F. Harrison were the "gospel duo."

Alexander, however, is shown singing occasional comic opera numbers, such as "The Toreador" and "The Coo Song," the latter from Ross and Monckton's "Country Girl." Occasionally he was allowed to tackle something more difficult, including the Drinking Song from "Martha" (which he sang on a cylinder though I doubt his making the disc) and "The Publican" fondly recalled by his old friend and associate, Mr. Klinefelter. Note that he sang, among others, "Answer," "The Coo Song," "A Dream of Paradise," "The Drinking Song from 'Martha,'" and "The Toreador Song" for both Columbia and Zon-o-phone. In fact, there are two "Toreador Songs" in the Zono list. They aren't differentiated, but probably one is from "Carmen" and the other from Francis Wilson's comic opera, "The Toreador."

I have a personal interest in two of Alexander's Columbia records. His rendition of "My Old Kentucky Home," with a spoken announcement, is one of the first discs I can remember hearing. And when I heard the cylinder of "Mighty Lak' a Rose," it seemed to me the announcer (who may or may not have been Alexander himself) started to announce it as an Edison record, but after saying "Edi—" changed to Columbia. As far as I know, however, Alexander never sang for Edison. When I mentioned the apparent announcing "goof" to Frank Dorian, he replied he couldn't see how the experts who tested Columbia records before they went into market could have overlooked a stumbling announcement that began as "Edison" and ended as "Columbia," and indicated his belief I was mistaken. "But," the genial old gentleman humorously added, "plenty of funny things happened in the record business in those old days" (For the sake of preserving a historical fact, it may be worth mentioning here that Mr. Dorian's wife, Mrs. Mary Dorian, was the first person hired by the pioneer Columbia Company when it opened its offices in Washington in 1889. She may still be living. She was, half a dozen years ago).

IX The Baltimore Baritone's Victor Records

George Alexander made only a few Victor records, although of course Zon-o-phone was owned and its output anonymously controlled by Victor from 1903 until the name was abandoned some ten years later. The baritone's first Victors came out in the September, 1903, bulletin, with this comment: "Mr. Alexander is a well known concert singer and robust baritone who sings with intelligence and taste." His first two Victors were 2414, "Thy Beaming Eyes" (MacDowell) and 2415 "Under the Rose" (Hawley), which he had already sung for Zono and Columbia. During the next few months he made six others, but they apparently lacked the popularity of his Columbia and Zonophone offerings.

Only two—"Danny Deever" and "One Sweetly Solemn Thought"—survived into the 1906 catalog. All were gone by 1908, with none moving on into the double-faced era. What happened to the masters is a mystery. A mimeographed Victor list issued more than 20 years ago, listing the single-faced Black Label recordings of which the masters were still safe in the vaults, includes only one by Alexander—"The Toreador Song"—from the comic opera, not "Carmen."

X More About the Columbians

But if Alexander's Victor experience was a failure, he was a brilliant success with Columbia. I have files of The Columbia Record from the beginning of 1904 through April, 1907, and they are full of praise for the popular baritone. Here are a few typical excerpts:

June, 1905—George Alexander's sacred songs have placed him in the front rank of religious singers for the graphophone. . . . This month he is heard in Gounod's beautiful composition, "Nazareth."

November, 1905—Mr. George Alexander is a baritone of great reputation. . . . His particularly powerful voice is well known to Columbia patrons.

December, 1905—A song famed the world over. . . . "Oh, Holy Night" . . . is sung . . . by Mr. George Alexander, and the exquisite treatment of the theme so beautifully expressed is characteristic of Mr. Alexander's work. . . . This conscientious artist also renders our national air, "The Star Spangled Banner" . . . We esteem Mr. Alexander's records as among the choicest in our catalog.

January, 1906—John Howard Payne's "Home, Sweet Home" . . . is sung by Mr. George Alexander. (His careful and brilliant work is the ideal of vocal excellence for the graphophone. . . . The sentiment is given with peculiar tenderness.

April, 1906—Mr. George Alexander's rich baritone voice is universally appreciated.

July, 1906—Mr. George Alexander, the great baritone, appears this month in three splendid records.

October, 1906—One of the most popular baritones of today is Mr. George Alexander. (The November issue mentioned Alexander's "noble baritone.") January, 1907—"In the Gloaming" . . . by one of the most captivating baritones on record, George Alexander.

Yet, in spite of this praise The Record never devoted any space to telling something of Alexander's life and personality as it had done about Henry Burr, Vess Ossman, Bob Roberts, J. J. Fisher and others. No photograph of the baritone appeared until the April, 1907 issue. The inference is irresistible that the concert singer, Wiley, although not averse to receiving additional income as a recording artist, preferred to conceal, as far as possible, his identity with "George Alexander."

Meanwhile, the sands of his recording career were about to run out. There is an unfortunate gap in my Columbia supplements between the August, 1907 issue, in which Alexander is represented by two records, and the first catalog of double-faced discs, issued early in 1909. Somewhere in that period, owing no doubt to the illness that was creeping upon him, Clifford Alexander Wiley ceased to make Columbia records. His Zonophone career had already closed with the issuance of a few ten-inch single-faced discs in 1906. All the double-faced Columbias, which remained a prominent part of the catalog for years and a few of which were retained after the advent of electric recording, were taken from previously listed single-faced offerings. As time went on, George Alexander became more and more a man of mystery and few of the Columbia patrons who bought his records consistently year after year knew the mellow-voiced baritone had died, after a lingering illness in 1913.

XI The Summing Up

As I prepare to sum up and conclude this survey of Clifford Alexander Wiley's recording career, several random thoughts occur.

First Wiley (or Alexander) was what I call, in no derogatory sense, a "lone wolf". That is, he worked on records with no one beside himself. He never took part in duets, though he and Henry Burr probably would have made a fine pair, and he did not sing in quartets. I can't even recall his ever being assisted by a chorus. Aside from one dubious instance, to be mentioned a bit later, I can think of no example of his being associated in record making with anyone else. That, no doubt, is the chief reason why his contemporaries who survived him seemed to know nothing about him.

Because of the blank spaces in my Columbia files between August, 1907, and early 1909, I do not represent the list of Alexander cylinders and discs which follows this article to be absolutely complete, but it is very nearly so. As an indication of the relative popularity of his double-faced records, I have broken them down into classes. One shows records which appeared in the first double-faced compilation in 1909, but which, because of declining sales, had been discontinued by 1912. (In a few instances they had been re-coupled with more appropriate companions and given new numbers). Then there is a group which, because of still dwindling sales, couldn't make the grade in 1913. After that come the staunch sellers that survived into 1913.

Carrying this breakdown further, we find that in 1929, four years after the introduction of electric recording, time had taken its toll and only one Alexander record was left, A236, "Abide With Me." By 1933, when Columbia issued its pitifully thin catalog of Royal Blue records, even that was gone. Thus, no George Alexander record has been offered for general sale, aside from those obtainable from dealers in second-hand stocks, for more than 20 years.

Going down the list of double-faced couplings, I am amused by some of the wildly inappropriate matings Columbia saw fit to give Alexander's performances. What was the idea of coupling his sonorous rendition of Victor Herbert's "I Want What I Want When I Want It" with Arthur Collins' "Parson and the Turkey"? The two songs were on entirely different planes. A champion bit of perhaps unconscious comedy may be detected in the teaming of Alexander's "Let Me Like a Soldier Fall" with Lew Dockstader's famous rendition of "Everybody Works But Father." "Love Abiding" doesn't seem to go well with "I Just Can't Make My Eyes Behave," by Ada Jones; "Bendemeer's Stream" is not a natural companion of an obscure popular song, "Make Believe"; "Home, Sweet Home" is grotesquely unsuited to mating with "Reuben and Cynthia"; and "The Minstrel Boy" has nothing in common with "Down on the Brandywine."

Most of the couplings that survived to 1913 and later are suitable enough, but "America" doesn't go very well with Henry Burr's "Sweetest Girl in Dixie" (the latter was remade in 1917 and coupled with Burr singing "Little Alabama Coon"); "Dearie" has no business being on the other side of "The Rambler Minstrels" and "The Star Spangled Banner" could have had a more suitable companion than "In the Valley of Kentucky." Why, indeed, weren't "America" and "The Star Spangled Banner" coupled unless the idea was to make a customer buy two records if he wanted both of the two great American patriotic airs?

But the most amazing piece of grotesquerie in the lot is one of the records that couldn't make it to 1912: No. A444, which put into partnership "Killarney" with "The May Song," sung (in Greek) by the Royal Greek Quartet. In the entire history of the phonograph business is there a more side-splitting piece of mismatching? Critics who give some of the Edison Diamond Discs top honors for inappropriate couplings should first examine George Alexander's double-faced Columbia list before awarding the championship!

Although he made phonograph history, "George Alexander's" active recording career covered only five years. And there is a sad indication in the double-faced list that Columbia felt there would be no new Alexander records. In an apparent effort to space his recordings as far as possible, each was coupled with a selection by some other singer or singers. I haven't found any double-faced record of which both sides were sung by Alexander. Apparently none of his Zonophone records was taken into the double-faced Zono list. Few would have been suitable, since most were in the seven or nine-inch size.

XII In Conclusion

I have just come across a letter, dated February 9, 1955, from the veteran Merrill, Wisconsin, Edison dealer, Clarence A. Ferguson. He reminds me that, seemingly several years after ill health compelled him to quit singing for Columbia, Alexander made one four-minute cylinder for the U. S. Everlasting Company. The number was 1254, and the title, "Lorna," a song which he had previously recorded several years before.

Mr. Ferguson also told me something I didn't know, that Alexander made one or more cylinders for a Jewish firm in New York (he didn't remember the firm's exact name), "who hired singers in the summer when all the theaters were closed. They sold the masters to Columbia and Lambert. They just gave the name of the song, but not any name of the record company. He made one for them that I am sure of—"Riding on the New Electric Car"—but never gave his name, just the name of the song."

So says Clarence Ferguson. Since I know nothing of the activities of the firm he mentioned, I have not been able to include any George Alexander records it issued in my list.

I said there was one possible example of the baritone's having worked with another artist. In the Talking Machine World for November 15, 1910, is a list of new vertical-cut records, played with a sapphire and issued by the Sonora Company. I've never seen any of these discs, but they probably were made for Sonora during a few months by the Phono-

Cut Record Company, which the veteran Fred Hager was operating in Boston for a Massachusetts millionaire. One coupled two "Uncle Josh" specialties. The "B" side was "Uncle Josh and the Sailor," by our familiar friend, Cal Stewart. The "A" side is listed as "Uncle Joseph at the Dentist's," by "Stewart and Alexander." Clifford Alexander Wiley during his entire phonograph career never had done spoken comedy work, but it's possible that in this instance, Stewart asked him, because of his deep voice, to take the part of the dentist who mistakenly pulled a tooth "Uncle Josh" would have preferred to keep.

And so, on that puzzling and rather depressing fade-out, we have reached the end of the story of Clifford Wiley, who probably had no idea, as he lay dying more than 40 years ago, that the events of his life would some day provide mental stimulation for record collectors and cause one of them at least to go to a great deal of work and worry in trying to trace the details of his, by this time, obscure career. However, in spite of my regret that the Maryland singer had to be ill for years and died when he should have had a long and prosperous career ahead of him, I am glad I have been able to learn enough about him to share what I have learned with the readers of HOBBIES. Now, perhaps I shall be able, one of these days, to do appropriate justice to other elusive biographical subjects such as Corinne Morgan, Charles D'Almaine and John J. Kimmel. . . .

And just one reminder in closing: If you know ANYTHING about Atwood Twitchell—whether he was, or was not, "George Alexander," I'd like to hear from you!

THE GEORGE ALEXANDER DISCOGRAPHY SINGLE-FACED COLUMBIA RECORDS (1902-1907)

(Note—All these Alexander records, up to and including 1585, "Mighty Lak' a Rose," were made in both 7-inch and 10-inch size. The last Columbia record supplement containing 7-inch records was dated January, 1904. From that time all records were 10-inch or 12-inch. It is doubtful that Alexander made records No. 10, 302 and 657, which are listed here because he made Columbia cylinders of the same titles. However, Columbia frequently re-made old recordings, and it is possible Alexander sang these numbers after they had been originally recorded by someone else. Columbia did not issue any domestic records in the 2,000 series, which accounts for the jump from 1899 to 3048.)

- 10 (?) Drinking Song from "Martha"
- 302 (?) A Dream
- 657 (?) The Palms
- 1098 Three Roses Red
- 1099 Entreaty—A Love Song
- 1100 The Rosary
- 1134 The Toreador—from Francis Wilson's comic opera of the same name
- 1143 Coo Song—from "The Country Girl"
- 1585 Mighty Lak' a Rose
- 1670 Love's Sorrow
- 1671 Happy Days
- 1708 If I But Knew
- 1709 Answer
- 1827 A Dream of Paradise
- 1838 Afterwards
- 1873 The Publican (Composer: Beardsley Van de Water)
- 1874 Because
- 1898 Oh Lord, Be Thou My Light
- 1899 Lorna
- 3048 Nothing But A Rose
- 3054 Fear Not Ye, O Israel
- 3092 Maryland, My Maryland

- 3098 Hosanna
- 3099 America
- 3152 Nazareth
- 3184 Columbia, The Gem of the Ocean
- 3200 From the Depths (Composer: Pablo Campana)
- 3211 Bendemeer's Stream
- 3235 Killarney
- 3269 O Holy Night
- 3270 One Sweetly Solemn Thought
- 3280 I Love You
- 3285 Star-Spangled Banner
- 3293 Men of Harlech
- 3294 Loch Lomond
- 3295 Anchored
- 3312 When Stars Are In the Quiet Skies
- 3318 Song That Reached My Heart
- 3351 Battle Hymn of the Republic
- 3352 Flee As a Bird
- 3353 Home, Sweet Home
- 3354 My Old Kentucky Home
- 3364 Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms
- 3365 In the Sweet Bye and Bye
- 3378 Dearly
- 3443 I Want What I Want When I Want It—from Mlle. Modiste
- 3444 When the Right Little Girl Comes Along
- 3455 Little Dustman (Johannes Brahms)
- 3456 Low-Backed Car
- 3484 Minstrel Boy
- 3516 Abide With Me
- 3595 In the Gloaming
- 3613 Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me

30069 The Holy City COLUMBIA DOUBLE-FACED RECORDS

(The following records, all made up of couplings from the single-faced list, appeared in the 1909 catalog but had been discontinued by 1912.)

- A330 Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean; In the Village By the Sea (J. W. Myers)
- A238 Flee As a Bird; Nearer My God, to Thee (Chimes)
- A329 Goodbye: Just Before the Battle, Mother (Myers)
- A243 In the Sweet Bye and Bye; Ring the Bells of Heaven (Columbia Quartet)
- A293 I Want What I Want When I Want It; Parson and the Turkey (Arthur Collins)
- A444 Killarney; May Song (Royal Greek Quartet)
- A306 Let Me Like A Soldier Fall; Everybody Works But Father (Lew Dockstader)
- A349 Love Abiding; I Just Can't Make My Eyes Behave (Ada Jones)
- A315 Men of Harlech; For All Eternity (Henry Burr)
- A333 My Old Kentucky Home: When the Fields Are White With Blossoms I'll Return (Henry Burr)
- A337 When the Right Little Girl Comes Along; When the Mocking Birds Are Singing in the Wildwood (Frank C. Stanley)

The following, listed in 1912, did not survive to 1913:

- A739 Anchored: The Homeland (Mrs. A. Stewart Holt)
- A442 Bendemeer's Stream; Make Believe (Elise Stevenson—Frank C. Stanley)
- A886 Flee As a Bird; Ring the Bells of Heaven (Columbia Male Quartet)
- A578 Home, Sweet Home: Reuben and Cynthia (Contralto and baritone—probably Corinne Morgan and Stanley)
- A666 Killarney: Where the Silvery Colorado Wends Its Way (Myers)
- A312 Loch Lomond; Tannhauser—O Star of Eve (Horatio Connell)
- A455 Minstrel Boy: Down on the Brandywine (Arthur Collins—Byron G. Harlan)
- A269 One Sweetly Solemn Thought; Holy City (Myers)
- A311 Song That Reached My Heart; Tempest of the Heart—Trovatore (J. J. Fisher)

The following, still active in 1913, did not survive to 1919:

- A336 America: Sweetest Girl in Dixie (Henry Burr)
- A332 Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms; Clang of the Forge (Listed as "baritone solo," but sung by Fisher.)
- A469 Dearly; Rambler Minstrels

- A258 Fear Not Ye, O Israel; Beyond the Smiling and the Weeping (Stanley Burr)
  - A5034 (12-inch) Holy City; Crucifix (Stanley-Burr)
  - A5035 (12-inch) Holy, Holy, Holy; Looking This Way (Harry Anthony-James F. Harrison)
  - A262 Hosanna; Yield Not to Temptation (Burr)
  - A495 In the Gloaming; Sweet and Low (Columbia Mixed Quartet)
  - A246 Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me; Refuge (Columbia Mixed Quartet)
  - A328 Low-Backed Car; Wearin' of the Green (Myers)
  - A325 Maryland, My Maryland!; Last Night (Corinne Morgan)
- The following, listed in 1919, were dropped by 1925:
- A237 Oh! Holy Night; Star of Bethlehem (Henry Burr)
  - A263 Oh Lord! Be Thou My Light; Just As I Am (Burr)
  - A326 Star-Spangled Banner; In the Valley of Kentucky (listed as tenor solo but sung by Byron G. Harlan)
- The following were still active in 1925:
- No. A249 survived until 1927 and A236 to 1929
  - A236 Abide With Me; Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight? (Henry Burr)
  - A248 All Hall the Power of Jesus' Name; The Sabbath Day (Columbia Male Quartet)
  - A335 Battle Hymn of the Republic; Old Folks At Home (listed as "tenor solo" but sung by Henry Burr, until remade by George Meador for the 1923 catalog)
  - A249 Just As I Am; Lead, Kindly Light (Columbia Male Quartet)
  - A235 Nazareth; The Ninety and Nine (Burr)

VICTOR SINGLE-FACED RECORDS (1903-04)

- 2550 Danny Deever
- 2426 Long Ago
- 2523 One Sweetly Solemn Thought
- 2414 Thy Beaming Eyes
- 2549 Toreador Song (From the comic opera, "The Toreador")

2415 Under the Rose

- 2576 Years Touch Not the Heart
- 2427 You'd Better Ask Me

Sonora vertical-cut record by "Stewart and Alexander" (1910)

- 5010 Uncle Josh at the Dentist's; Uncle Josh and the Sailor (Cal Stewart)

SEVEN AND NINE INCH ZON-O-PHONE RECORDS (1902-05)

(All the following Zon-o-phone records were made in both seven and nine-inch single-faced styles. After No. 6018 was reached, the seven-inch series was discontinued, and the nine-inch gave way in 1905 to a new 10-inch series.)

- 5798 Always in the Way
- 5634 Anona
- 5653 Answer
- 5589 Believe
- 5661 Coo Song
- 5799 Dream of Paradise
- 5670 Drinking Song—Martha
- 5671 Entreaty
- 5615 For All Eternity
- 5819 Girl of My Dreams
- 5674 Good-bye (Tosti)
- 5756 Happy Days
- 5757 Holy City
- 5680 Home, Sweet Home
- 5828 If I But Knew
- 5844 Last Farewell
- 5696 Last Night
- 5698 Loch Lomond
- 5699 Long Ago
- 5701 Love's Sorrow
- 5600 Maybe
- 5831 Message of the Violet
- 5702 Mighty Lak' a Rose
- 5609 Rosary
- 5624 Since I First Met You—from "The Sultan of Sulu"
- 5722 Soldiers of the Queen
- 5725 Three Roses Red
- 5610 Thy Beaming Eyes
- 5726 To My First Love
- 5727 Too Late
- 5641 Toreador Song
- 5753 Toreador Song
- 5728 Under the Rose
- 5651 Violets
- 5613 What's the Matter With the Moon Tonight?
- 5628 Witch Behind the Moon—from "The Wizard of Oz"
- 5854 Winsome Winnie
- 5734 You'd Better Ask Me

(Continued on page 37)

POLITICAL CAMPAIGNS ARE NOT NEW

(Continued from page 25)

anti-Democrat scrip of 1952, good for "One hundred paper cartwheels" based upon a "mink standard of value." And, it won't be a bit surprising if 1956 produces more such scrip lambasting one candidate or the other.

Campaign Slogans

In connection with the various political tokens and badges, it is interesting to read a list of some of the campaign slogans that have appeared in past campaigns:

ANDREW JACKSON: Democrat, 1st campaign, 1828. "The Hero of New Orleans" (This is worded in various ways). 2nd campaign, 1832. "The Advocate of the American System."

MARTIN VAN BUREN: Democrat, 2nd campaign, 1840. "Martin Van Buren & Democracy" (or similar references to democracy). "The Independent Sub-Treasury." An interesting token of this period pictures Van Buren and reads "Democrats to the polls & victory is ours." His opponents (the Whigs) also issued a token showing Van Buren but the reverse pictures a scale with the inscription, "Weighed in the balance and found wanting." The Democrats issued similar tokens against Harrison and the Whig who was running against Van Buren.

WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON: Whig, 1840 campaign. The Whigs made great use of Harrison being born in a log cabin and campaign tokens usually picture a log cabin and cider barrel. One of the tokens shows the cabin with the words "To Let, 1841." and was taken to mean that he would be in the White House and could rent his cabin. He was called "The Hero of Tippecanoe." Another slogan was "Tippecanoe and Tyler Too." "Go it Tip/Come it Tyler." Also used was "He Leaves the Plow to Save the Country." An interesting Whig token against Van Buren shows Harrison on the obverse, with a steamboat on the reverse which is entitled "Steamboat Van Buren, Loco Foco Line - for Salt River Direct." As you can see, it isn't new to "go up Salt River," nor is the word "O.K." new. It is said to have first been used at a political convention in 1840 and stands for "Oil Correct." The expression evidently received immediate favor for it appears on at least two Van Buren tokens, one of which reads "The Sober Second Thoughts of the People are O.K."

JAMES K. POLK: Democrat, 1844 campaign. "Young Hickory, Dallas & Victory." (Jackson was "Old Hickory" and Polk received the nickname because he was from the same state of Tennessee. Dallas was the vice-presidential candidate.) "Fifty-Four Forty or Fight!" which was another slogan, refers to the Oregon boundary dispute with Great Britain.

HENRY CLAY: Whig, 1844 campaign. "The American System" or "Protection to American Industry," etc. "The Millboy of the Slashes." "Henry Clay Will Carry the Day."

ZACHARY TAYLOR: Whig, 1848 campaign. "A little more grape, Captain Bragg." (This refers to grape shot in one of his battles.) Battle pictures of the Mexican War were used in this campaign of "Old Rough and Ready."

MARTIN VAN BUREN: Free Soil Party, 1848 campaign: "Free Soil, Free Labor, Free Speech, and Free Men."

JOHN C. FREMONT: Republican, 1856 campaign. "Free Speech, Free Soil, Free Men and Fremont!" "Fremont and Jessie." (Jessie was Fremont's wife.)

ABRAHAM LINCOLN: Republican, 1860 campaign. Much use was made of Lincoln's nicknames, "Honest Abe," "The Rail Splitter," etc. "Vote Yourself a Farm" refers to the Government lands to be given to settlers in the West, 1864 campaign: "Don't swap horses."

U. S. GRANT: Republican, 1868 campaign. "Let us have peace."

HORATIO SEYMOUR: Democrat, 1868 campaign. "Reduce Taxation Before Taxation Reduces us."

HORACE GREELEY: Liberal-Democrat, 1872 campaign: "Turn the rascals out!"

1884 CAMPAIGN: The campaign of 1884 between James G. Blaine and Grover Cleveland was possibly the dirtiest in American history. They had political slogans, plenty of them, but most were not for themselves but used against the opposite party. For example, the Democrats called Blaine (Republican candidate), "The continental liar from the state of Maine" and made references to his connections with financial scandals. "Rum, Romanism, and Rebellion" was another anti-Blaine slogan. In turn, the Republicans used such slogans as "Ma! Ma! Where's my Pa." To which the Democrats answered, "Gone to the White House, Ha! Ha! Ha!" However, there were a couple pro-Cleveland slogans: "Grover the Good." "A Public Office is a Public Trust." "We Love Him for the Enemies He Has Made."

WILLIAM MCKINLEY: Republican, 1896 campaign. "The Full Dinner Pail." 1900 campaign: "Fou! More Years of the Full Dinner Pail." (This refers to the hard times of 1893 under the Democrats followed by Republican prosperity.)

WILLIAM J. BRYAN: Democrat, 1896 campaign. "Sixteen to One." (This refers to free coinage of silver.)

WOODROW WILSON: Democrat, 2nd campaign, 1916. "He Kept Us Out of War."

WARREN G. HARDING: Republican, 1920 campaign. "Back to Normalcy."

CALVIN COOLIDGE: Republican, 1924 campaign. "Keep Cool with Coolidge."

GRACE NOTES

(Continued from page 27)

—and again with the joint sponsorship of the Metropolitan Opera Guild. The price of this second book has not yet been made known to me.

* * *

The following communication has come in: "The New York Gramophone Society meets the fourth Wednesday of the month in Freedom House—20 West 40th St., New York City, at 8 P.M. Interested collectors may attend three meetings without any obligation to join or make any payments whatever. Those wishing to join for the second half of the 1956 season may do so at a reduced rate. Further information may be obtained from the secretary: Robert J. Nathan, 5480 Broadway, New York 63, N. Y."

Another organization devoted to historical records has been formed in New York City under the name of The Vocal Record Collectors Society. The following principles motivated its establishment:

"1) The first responsibility of the Society is towards the membership as a whole. This requirement must not be compromised by a desire to benefit individuals, deserving or otherwise.

"2) The actions of the Society itself must be of unimpeachable integrity, and free of any questionable practices, such as the staging of artificial biddings at society auctions (if the latter take place).

"3) If any member feels that these principles are being violated, that member has a right, and a duty, during the business portion of any meeting, to state the facts and call for a vote on the question.

"4) These principles are held to be so important to the welfare of the Society that membership is offered exclusively to persons in accordance with these principles, and who have not demonstrated incompatibility with them."

At its August 3rd meeting the members elected the Rev. J. Edward Vesper as chairman, Ben Lebow as vice-chairman, John Secrist as Secretary-Treasurer; and Ted Fagan, Marty Sokol, Joe Martel and Sam Weinfeld as directors.

Arrangements have been made for meetings to be held at Freedom House, 20 West 40th St., New York City, at 8 P.M. on the following dates: 1956—Friday, October 5th; Wednesday, November 14th; Friday, December 7th; 1957—Wednesday, January 9th; Friday, February 1st; Wednesday, March 13th; Friday, April 5th; Wednesday, May 8th; and Friday, June 7th. For details please get in touch with the secretary: John Secrist, 70 Morning-side Dr., New York, N. Y.

THE GEORGE ALEXANDER DISCOGRAPHY

(Continued from page 33)

10-INCH ZON-O-PHONES (1906)

588 Bendemeer's Stream
566 Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean
550 Yes, Let Me Like a Soldier Fall
573 The Minstrel Boy

TWO-MINUTE COLUMBIA CYLINDERS

BY GEORGE ALEXANDER
(1902-07)

24005 The Palms
32038 Three Roses Red
32039 Entreaty
32340 The Rosary
32043 A Dream
32063 Under the Rose
32070 The Toreador
32079 Coo Song
32080 Drinking Song—Martha
32296 Mighty Lak' a Rose
32378 Love's Sorrow
32379 Happy Days
32401 If I But Knew
32400 Answer
32537 Dream of Paradise
32538 Afterwards
32587 The Publican
32588 Because
32597 Oh Lord, Be Thou My Light
32610 Lorna
32617 Nothing But a Rose
32630 Fear Not Ye, O Israel
32600 Maryland, My Maryland
32697 Hosanna
32637 America
32657 From the Depths
32760 Bendemeer's Stream
32791 Killarney
32826 O Holy Night
32809 One Sweetly Solemn Thought
32741 I Love You
32760 Star-Spangled Banner
32827 Loch Lomond
32757 When Stars Are In the Quiet Skies
32915 Battle Hymn of the Republic
32916 Flee As a Bird
32854 Home, Sweet Home
32864 My Old Kentucky Home
33056 In the Sweet Bye and Bye
32928 Dearie
32957 Let Me Like a Soldier Fall
32813 Little Dustman
32991 Minstrel Boy
33019 Abide With Me
33064 In the Gloaming

SIX-INCH COLUMBIA CYLINDERS

(1906-07)

85003 Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean
85004 Bendemeer's Stream
85045 Rose Marie
85113 Holy, Holy, Holy
85127 O Loving Father

U. S. EVERLASTING FOUR-MINUTE
CYLINDER (August, 1911)

1254 Lorna

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Mary Jordan

By JIM WALSH

Mark Twain often argued that the first action taken by a human being after the creation of the world was the initial link in a chain of circumstances that led, logically and inevitably to everything else which has occurred since the dawn of time.

If Twain were still living he could cite the way in which this article has come to be written as good evidence for his theory.

In October, 1951, HOBBIES published my biographical sketch of a famous recording tenor, Charles W. Harrison, and his wife, professionally known as Beulah Gaylord Young. The article was illustrated with a photograph showing Harrison and five other singers enacting the Lucia Sextet for a 1912 Edison talking film.

One of the group was a lovely young contralto, Mary Jordan. I quoted Charlie Harrison as saying he had lost track of Miss Jordan, but believed she "married an oil man and moved to Texas." That was the first link in a new "chain" of the kind Mark Twain envisioned.

The second came when a friend of Mary Jordan's read the Harrison article and sent her a copy of HOBBIES. That in turn led Miss Jordan to write me a letter of thanks, which was published in the issue of April, 1952. She referred to the group in the photograph as "the old Edison Sextet" and recalled having sung as a member of many other Edison organizations. The eminent contralto also said, "I am still living in my beautiful home, which I came to as a bride, in San Antonio. My beloved husband, Colonel Charles Clement Cresson, died February 27, 1949."

Naturally, I added a link of my own by writing to Mrs. Cresson and telling her how much pleasure her letter had given me. I also said I should like some day to write a biographical sketch of her. For a long time it seemed there were to be no more links in the chain, for I heard nothing more from Mrs. Cresson for several years. Then she sent me a mass of clippings and several charming photos of herself, together with a letter explaining ill health had been the cause of her silence. She also revealed that she is the fifth woman on the front row in a group of Edison artists whose pictures were published with the Elizabeth Spencer article in September, 1951. That leaves just two unidentified persons in the photo—the second and fourth women.

Here is what Mary Jordan Cresson wrote on December 16, 1955:

Dear Jim Walsh: Will you ever forgive me for not writing you before this? You were so kind and if it were possible I would have written you a note.

I am a cripple with arthritis - have been in the hospital most of this year - and now my eyes are dim and can scarcely see. I travel in a wheel chair in my home; at times I cannot hold a pen. On Nov. 27 last I was 76 years young. My friends from all over the country write me recalling happy times together.

I am physically crippled but mentally stronger than ever—also have my keen sense of humor. Please forgive my writing. God Bless You! And enjoy a Happy Christmas. Mary Jordan Cresson . . . You will hear from me soon again. Let me know if you receive this and the large envelope.

It goes without saying that I replied warmly to this appealing letter and that I was elated when the "large envelope" containing biographical material and photographs arrived a short time later. Obviously, in view of her physical condition. I have not been in constant communication with the lady in San Antonio, but I do have enough information to tell something of her life and recording activities in this article, which will appear in this November HOBBIES as a 77th birthday "gift".

II Biographical Sketches

We may as well begin our study of Mary Jordan's career by considering a couple of brief biographical sketches. The one-volume MacMillan Encyclopaedia of Music and Musicians, published in 1938, contains the following alphabetical entry:

JORDAN, Mary. Welsh dramatic and concert soprano, born Cardiff, Nov. 27, 1879. She studied under d'Auria, J. H. Stewart, Saenger and Maurel, in 1911 and made her debut with the Boston Opera Company, and remained with that company until 1914. She has appeared frequently in recitals and in oratorios at the principal music festivals.

The catalog of Edison Blue Amberol cylinders for April, 1914, says:

As the leading contralto of the Century Opera Company, New York City, which is giving notable productions of Grand Opera in English, Mary Jordan occupies a prominent place in the operatic world. She was born at Cardiff, Wales. She studied under many of the most prominent teachers, and before entering opera, appeared with many of the leading concert orchestras. It is in the field of English Grand Opera, however, that Miss Jordan has made her greatest success. In addition to her present engagement at the Century Opera House, New York, she has appeared with the Aborn Grand Opera Company, and the Henry W. Savage production of "Parsifal." Her voice is of great soul quality, richness and power.

Items in the Edison Phonograph Monthly show that Mary Jordan was a famous White House singer during the administration of President Woodrow Wilson. The following is from the issue for May, 1916:

Mary Jordan, the prominent contralto whose Blue Amberol reproductions have delighted owners of Mary Jordan as she appeared at the height of her career. She inscribed the photograph "To Jim Walsh with sincere appreciation of all he has done for the artists of yesteryear. Sincerely, Mary Jordan Cresson."

Amberolas in all parts of the world, was one of the artists who appeared in the last musicale that was given at the White House in Washington this season. The artists associated with Miss Jordan in the concert were Percy Grainger, pianist; Paul Reimers, tenor, and Charles Gilbert, accompanist at the piano. Miss Jordan was among those who enjoyed a dinner with President and Mrs. Wilson, the social affair following the concert.

Miss Jordan narrowly escaped injury in an elevator accident in New York recently. She was leaving the Mishkin photograph studio when the elevator, which she occupied with two other passengers, dropped several stories. In order to rescue the occupants of the car it was necessary to cut a hole through the top of it and reach them with a ladder. Miss Jordan was shaken up badly but received no serious injuries.

In May, 1917, the Edison Amberola Monthly said:

Mary Jordan, the popular American contralto, who makes Blue Amberol records, recently had presented to her a beautiful pin in the form of a laurel wreath, with lyre and arrows, surmounted by an eagle with wings spread. The gift was from Mrs. Woodrow Wilson as a memento of Miss Jordan's singing at the White House.

A much more detailed account of Mary Jordan's career may be found under the heading of "Interesting Service Women" in The Army and Navy Journal for March 17, 1928. It is an excellent brief biography in itself:

"The services may well be proud of their women who, in spite of the handicap of constant moving, have found time to make places for themselves in the business world, and in fields of science and art. There is no doubt about the fact that the Army has in its midst one of the foremost contralto singers in the world—Mary Jordan, who in private life is Mrs. C. C. Cresson, wife of Major Charles C. Cresson, J.A.G.D., U.S.A. At present Major Cresson is stationed in the Office of the Judge Advocate General and he and his charming wife are living at 1661 Crescent Place, Washington, D. C.

Has Traveled Extensively

"Though born of English parents in Cardiff, Wales, Mary Jordan has spent all her life in America, and it was in this country she received her entire musical education which has equipped her so splendidly for the opera, oratorio and concert stage. She has traveled extensively from one end of the country to the other and has sung from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Alaska to the Gulf of Mexico. She insists that America contains everything an artist needs for development and inspiration, and the fact that she now holds an elevated position among the leading singers of the world amply bears out her contention.

"Mary Jordan has an astonishingly large repertoire, and as leading contralto of the Century Grand Opera Company and other organizations of similar standing she has sung such roles as Amneris in 'Aida,' Dalilah in 'Samson et Dalilah,' Azucena in 'Il Trovatore,' Laura in 'La Gioconda,' Ortrud in 'Lohengrin,' and Carmen in 'Carmen.' Her recital programs have special interest as she sings in no less than eight different languages. Few singers before the public are in more constant demand, and fewer still have greater artistry.

Mary Jordan Cresson's home in San Antonio, Tex.

Gave Recitals at White House

"This delightful artist has been twice summoned by requests to appear in recitals at the White House. The first summons was during the Wilson regime, and the second was during the present (Coolidge) administration, when she appeared in connection with the most distinguished annual social function in Washington the state dinner given by the President and the First Lady of the Land to the members of the Cabinet and their wives.

"For about twelve years Mary Jordan was soloist for the Jewish Synagogue, Temple Emmanuel, 5th Avenue, New York, and also for the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn. She has also been soloist for leading orchestras of America, among which are numbered the Boston Symphony, New York Philharmonic, Philadelphia Orchestra, New York Symphony, Cincinnati Orchestra, Cleveland Orchestra, Montreal Orchestra, and the San Francisco Orchestra, and has also been soloist on tour throughout the United States in the great oratorios such as the Messiah and Stabat Mater.

Made Concert Tour Through Orient

"During the past two years she has been in the Philippines, stationed at Fort William McKinley, where Major Cresson was on duty, and was soloist for the Philippine Orchestra, and also a professor of singing at the University of the Philippines. She was on an extended concert tour throughout China and Japan, giving large concerts in Hong Kong, Tientsin, Peking and other points. She also gave a number of recitals throughout the Philippines, and on the occasion of her concert in Manila on Sept. 30, 1925, the Manila Times of the next day said in part:

"Mary Jordan for ten days was heralded by her press agent as second to no other contralto in the world. . . . She sang to an audience of over six hundred, which is the biggest audience that any single artist has ever had in Manila, and there was not one of the entire audience who last night did not agree with her press agent and conclude that she has no superior. . . . Mary Jordan came, she saw and she conquered."

"On many occasions Mary Jordan has been soloist for conventions of the American Legion and has been selected to act as such for the large annual convention in San Antonio in October. During her stay in the Philippines, she learned many songs in various native dialects which she has sung in concerts since her return, dressed in native Philippine costumes."

III Press Comments

The critical reviews of Mary Jordan's singing published in newspapers large and small were so uniformly laudatory it will not be necessary to quote many as evidence that she was an artist of far more than ordinary merit. Regardless of time or place, the reviewers seemed of one opinion concerning her distinctive abilities.

A critic for the nation's most influential newspaper The New York Times, said: "Mary Jordan, an admired contralto, filled Aeolian Hall with a gala audience. She introduced not only French, Russian and old Hebrew airs, which were re-demanded, but also, by request, some Negro folk-songs which she sang with much sympathy."

The New York World said: "Mary Jordan, popular American contralto, was in fine voice, and made a stunning picture. Intelligence and charm marked the delivery of all her songs." The New York Evening Mail termed the recital "a triumph," and remarked, Mary Jordan as she appeared for her solo, in the "Flower Maid," given by the Henry Savage Opera Co.

"Miss Jordan knows how to sing and how to interpret." The New York Sun said her voice was one "of velvety beauty," and in the Mid-West, The Chicago Herald and Examiner commented: "Miss Jordan has a voice that is at all times round and smooth, and full throughout its entire range. There is a well-thought-out purpose behind every one of her beautifully produced tones." The Indianapolis Star praised "her artistry and personal charm," saying: "Hers is a big voice of generous compass, with the deep contralto notes so generally adored. It is refreshing to see a singer so free from self-consciousness."

Probably one of the most eloquent tributes to the contralto was paid by the Sacramento, California, Union, which said on March 4, 1921: "Her voice is exquisite. It has all the beautiful sonorous sweetness of a deep-toned cello, and with it there is a haunting cadence that remains long after the voice is stilled. Added to the warm mellowness of tone there is a remarkable range, and the charm of perfect production and clear diction."

And in 1923 the reviewer for a Mexico City paper said: "Mary Jordan, beautiful and gracious, is a contralto of widespread recognition, both for her work in concert and opera. Miss Jordan possesses the thrilling lower notes of the true contralto. Yet for a voice of such great depth her high notes are astoundingly fine and beautiful. Miss Jordan has great temperament, which is always under control of her fine mind. It would have been impossible to select a more enjoyable or varied program, including as it did songs in French, English, Russian, German and Spanish. Miss Jordan sang in a manner most thrilling, receiving an ovation after each number."

The remarkable versatility of Miss Jordan's programs was a quality often commented on by the critics. A good example is the recital given in Manila on November 1, 1926. In the beginning she sang four numbers in German, "Ehre Gottes," (God's Glory in Nature), by Beethoven; "Ave Maria" (Schubert); "Sapphische Ode" and "O Liebliche Wangen," both by Brahms. Four French songs followed, "Beau Soir," by Debussy; "Serenade Italienne," (Chausson); "La Vagabonde" (Bloch) and "Tes Yeux" (Rabey). Then came four in English: "Deep River," an American Negro spiritual dedicated by the composer, Harry T. Burleigh to Miss Jordan; "Water Boy," an American Negro convict song; Cyril Scott's "Lullaby," and "Moon Marketing," by Powell Weaver. Finally three Richard Strauss numbers in German: "Allerseelen," "Traum Durch Die Dämmerung" and "Cecilie."

The intellectual quality in Mary Jordan's approach to music was shown in a series of lecture-recitals on "Music and How to Listen to It," which she gave in her San Antonio home. The first recital interpreted and explained the music from four operas. In the second, Miss Jordan sang and analyzed French and German classics of song, old and modern. The third recital dealt with folk music of many nations, including songs of Little Russia and the Philippines, sung in the original dialects.

Perhaps Mary Jordan never received a more appreciated compliment than was paid to her when Ann Farrell, a young girl from Scranton, Pennsylvania, which Miss Jordan considers her "home town," was awarded a musical scholarship. Speaking at a dinner for Miss Farrell before she left Scranton to study in New York, Dr. D. E. Jones, the music critic of the Scranton Tribune, said:

"She has a God-given voice of superb quality, the nearest to my ideal, Mary Jordan, that I have heard in this city. Whenever I see or hear Ann Farrell, I am reminded of another little girl (Mary Jordan), whom we are proud to call a Scrantonian, and who went out into the great musical world and won honors for this city."

In her adopted home of San Antonio, Miss Jordan's voice was one of the first ever heard by radio. There was no local station in San Antonio, shortly after the first World War, but a man named Sam Woolford arranged for some broadcasting to be done through what he has described as "a primitive loud speaker system which resembled a combination of an old Edison morning glory horn, a series of condensers and other radio paraphernalia." The broadcasting was done from the Fort Sam Houston signal corps laboratory. Radio trucks from the post, Camp Travis Kelly and Brooks field were stationed downtown, in front of the Alamo, in Travis park and in front of the city hall. Woolford recalls that "ten or twelve amateurs in the residence districts rigged up horns which extended from windows and doors of backyard radio shacks, and the neighbors were invited to hear the voices come over the air."

Mary Jordan as Amneris in "Aida," second act, Boston Opera House, 1911

Miss Jordan sang from 8 to 9 the first night, and said Woolford: "That night 5,000 persons jammed Travis park. Alamo plaza was crowded. Perhaps I had been too enthusiastic about the new radio, for despite all the signal corps could do, the radio voice could only be heard at a maximum distance of about 30 feet. Yet people crowded closer to hear the music and seemed to be satisfied as others moved in to listen."

(Continued in the December issue)

for your CHRISTMAS MUSIC

The Original Authentic "OLD MUSIC BOX MELODIES"

From the finest old music boxes -
To Your Modern Record Player
AB-3 - 12" HI-FI 33 1/3 Microgroove, play 45 minutes of exquisite Xmas tunes including Silent Night, Adeste Fideles, First Noel, Tannenbaum, Jingle Bells & many more
ONLY $3.95 Postpaid

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. Pelham, N. Y.

Pelham 8-1506
Send for complete list of our music box recordings.

do

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Mary Jordan

Continued from the November Issue

By JIM WALSH

IV Mary Jordan's Records

In view of her admitted artistry, it is a pity that only one of Mary Jordan's records - "My Heart At Thy Sweet Voice" - can be considered to give a fairly adequate idea of the gorgeous opulence of her contralto tones. Looking back, it is hard to find any reason why the Edison company, apparently the only one for which she ever made records, used this luscious voice almost entirely in ensemble work. Not all the fingers of one hand are required to enumerate her solo cylinders and her duets also were few. And why, as far as I can determine, did she never sing for the Diamond Discs? Her name doesn't appear in any disc record catalog that I have examined, although there is a chance, of course, that her voice is heard in some of the choral groups.

Research indicates the first mention of Mary Jordan's name in phonograph publicity occurs in the Edison cylinder record list for March, 1911. The front cover shows a photo of the Metropolitan Quartet, which must be one of the most unusual pictures ever taken. The four artists are lined up in profile and snapped from an angle that makes it hard to tell the women from the men. Page 2 contains this descriptive sketch:

METROPOLITAN QUARTET — The exquisite Barcarole from Offenbach's "Tales of Hoffman," appearing in the March list of Amberol Records, is a striking example of the lovely harmony which results from the blending of voices whose natural beauty has been enhanced by careful, intelligent cultivation. Each member of this well-known organization is an artist of the very highest calibre, with an enviable and far from local reputation. All have appeared at various times upon the concert platform in this country and Canada, and all are soloists of prominence in the church circles of New York and vicinity.

Their previous contributions to the Amberol catalog are No. 28, "Quartet From Rigoletto"; No. 131, "Come Where the Lilies Bloom"; No. 338, "Flow Gently, Sweet Afton"; and No. 352, "Juanita."

The members of the Quartet are: Edith Chapman, soprano; Mary Jordan, contralto; Harry Anthony, tenor, and James F. Harrison, bass.

Edith Chapman was better known in concert circles by her married name of Edith Chapman Goold. "Harry Anthony" was really John Young, and "James F. Harrison" (a baritone, rather than bass) was Frederick J. Wheeler. His death was announced in the issue of HOBBIES that carried the photo of Miss Jordan and Wheeler among the singers of the Lucia Sextet.

And now I must mention an oddity. The March, 1911, issue of Edison's little "fan magazine," The New Phonogram, also contained a write-up of the Barcarole record. It concluded: "The members of the Metropolitan Quartet, each of whom has won an enviable reputation on the concert platform, are: Florence Hinkle, soprano; Margaret Keys (sic!), contralto; Harry Anthony, tenor, and James F. Harrison, bass. Apparently the Phonogram writer had confused the personnel of the Edison Mixed Quartet with that of the Metropolitan. When the two ensembles were formed the Mixed Quartet was ordinarily used for recording church music and the Metropolitan for secular songs. After the Diamond Discs began to appear the Edison Mixed Quartet name was dropped, and the Metropolitan sang both sacred and secular music. The Metropolitan soon ceased to have a permanent personnel. Any four singers whose voices blended harmoniously and who were available for a recording date appeared for the occasion as the Metropolitan Quartet."

Because of this shifting personnel, it would be wasted effort to discuss in detail all the Metropolitan Quartet recordings of the late wax Amberol and early Blue Amberol periods. Instead we move up a month and come to the first duet record in which Mary Jordan's name is given as one of the singers—the familiar "Home To Our Mountains" from "Trova-tore." This was four-minute Amberol No. 652. After a description of the action leading up to this number in the opera, the New Phonogram said: "Miss Jordan and Mr. Anthony have given us an interpretation . . . that vocally and dramatically is beyond criticism."

In September, 1911, Miss Jordan took part in a two-minute version of "Every Little Movement," from "Madame Sherry." The contralto sang with an Australian young lady, Marie Narelle, whose voice was considered around 1906 to be the only soprano that reproduced with undistorted naturalness. The monthly supplement said: "The big song hit of 'Madame Sherry,' and one which seems destined to enjoy continued popularity. It is a satirical description of a new dancing fad, set to a particularly captivating melody. This record is an abridged edition, so to speak, of Amberol No. 482." The Amberol record was sung by Miss Narelle and a little known tenor, Frederick H. Potter, and since a contralto assisted in the refrain, Miss Jordan probably was the contralto.

Here I shall remark parenthetically that the four-minute Amberol (re-issued in December, 1913, as Blue Amberol No. 2098), deserves special mention because of being the only record I know in which the noted vaudeville comedian, Bert FitzGibbons, sang. He was a member of the chorus which also included J. F. Harrison and W. F. Hooley.

During the next few months Mary Jordan sang in a variety of Edison records, though usually her presence can be detected only by reading the catalog descriptions. She and Elizabeth Spencer, soprano, and Anthony and Harrison constituted the Edison Mixed Quartet which sang No. 808, "When the Roll Is Called Up Yonder"—a far remove from Miss Jordan's recital renditions of Beethoven, Brahms and Strauss! She also took part in a series of four records containing airs from "Pinafore," the other singers being Miss Spencer, Anthony, Harrison, Walter Van Brunt and William F. Hooley. In January, 1912, she had the incidental part of Ivonne in No. 876, "Music Caressing of Violins," from "The Sirens," a duet by Miss Spencer and Mr. Anthony.

There appear to have been no Mary Jordan solos until No. 2158, "My Heart At Thy Sweet Voice," from "Samson and Dalila," was issued in February, 1914. Then in June came No. 2307, "Sweet Thoughts Of Home," described as "the song hit of 'Love's Lottery,' the comic opera in which Mme. Schumann-Heink, the Wagnerian contralto, starred a few seasons ago. Mary Jordan, a prominent figure in grand opera at the present time, through her position as one of the leading contraltos of the Century Opera Company, New York City, is heard at her best in this rendition."

Apparently those two Blue Amberols are the only solo records ever issued by Mary Jordan, although the quotations I have copied from the New Phonogram seem to indicate she was still singing for Edison in 1916 and 1917. If she was, she must have been heard in concert work on Diamond Discs, for Edison gave up direct recording of cylinders after the disastrous factory fire of December, 1914.

Mary Jordan in 1912 as Laura, the Doges' wife in the opera, "La Gioconda."

Just how long the contralto's recording career continued is a matter of uncertainty. It may have continued until she married Colonel Cresson and moved to Texas.

Regardless of how long or short that career may have been, the lady now bedridden and with failing vision was a great artist on the testimony of all the qualified judges who heard her. It is my sincere hope that this article will be a source of pleasure as her birthday nears and that both her health and sight will improve so that she may enjoy many more pleasant years. I am sure that all her admirers who read HOBBIES will join me in this wish.

The foregoing article was submitted in manuscript to Mary Jordan, who has graciously approved it. However, in expressing her approval and appreciation, she has provided so much more valuable information. I am submitting this "appendix," to quote the greater part of what the contralto wrote. For the sake of musical history, it deserves inclusion:

June 14, 1956. Dear Jim Walsh: I scarcely know how to begin to answer your kind letter and article, showing you have spent a lot of time reading the notices I sent you. I will look forward, God willing, to the Nov. & Dec. issues of HOBBIES—and what a birthday gift!

I found this list of records I made for Edison and Columbia in an old book yellow with age and falling apart. This is marked "continued." Where the first part is I don't know. (The list is quoted at the end of the article—J. W.)

I was with the Edison Company when they changed to the discs. We had to make three perfect ones, in case one or more would be broken in transit to the factory. My voice was too full and round for solos; in fact, the voice had to be pointed, like a tenor or soprano; the whiter and more nasal the tone the better it would cut into the record. John Young, Fred Wheeler, Charles Harrison, Marie Narelle, Elizabeth Spencer, were perfect for recording solos, but I was in almost every combination where the voices had to blend and sing accurately. For instance, the Sextet. It took us three months to make a perfect record, with Mr. Edison in charge. He was trying to synchronize the vibrations of tone color and action, and he stayed with it until he accomplished it.

Records were sent to every silent moving picture house in America. I saw it 'way out in Columbus, Ohio. It was the beginning of the moving pictures with sound. The colors are not perfected yet.

However, my goal was opera. I was told that unless I went to Europe and had the stamp of approval of Germany, France and Italy, I would not stand a chance. I grit my teeth and said if America could not develop the talents of her own people without dictation of foreign countries it was too bad, and so my first effort was to use the music of our American composers. I never gave a concert that I did not have a group of American compositions. I talked it up in public and to all press men. Then Louise Homer fell in line, as her husband, Sidney Homer, wrote songs but could not get them started, only when she or I sang them. I was not too proud to sing opera in English, and the people loved it because they knew what it was all about.

Just at that time, Hammerstein came back to New York and threatened to produce opera in English, so the Metropolitan organization paid him one million a year to stay out for ten years. The Met leased the century theater for a period of years, and gave operas every Monday night in their original language and the rest of the week in English, so we had to learn every opera in two languages. They engaged Mr. Milton Aborn as manager and a fine one he was. He spent his life trying to bring opera in English to Americans. The conductors were foreigners and all stage equipment and costumes were furnished by the Met. I bought and owned my own, but they were made and designed by Mme. Museur, wardrobe mistress at the Metropolitan. We had the same stage manager, etc., so we always felt we were part of the Met. I had an opportunity to go there in minor roles, but I could make more money in one month, and they asked a percentage on all concerts, etc. Some like Miss Jordan as the "Flower Maid," Parsifal, in 1904.

Miss Jordan as "Amneris" in Aida, in her debut at the Boston Opera House in 1911.

Werrenrath, a poor actor, and some of the others took it but dropped it later — Sophie Braslau, for one.

I finished my opera career satisfied I could make the goal without some Europeans' say-so. During the war, all foreign performers were ordered out of the country and the American talent had a chance. Some had better voices but lacked training.

I sang ten years as contralto soloist in Temple Emanuel, 43rd street and Fifth avenue, — highest paid salary for churches in New York City; 12 years in Dr. Auyless' Presbyterian church in Brooklyn, and 12 summers in the Elberon, New Jersey, Moses Taylor Memorial church. The church quartet was John Young, Marie Stoddart, Grant O'Dell and myself. Robert Gaylor was organist. He also was with the Edison Company. People came from long distances to attend our services. Dr. and Mrs. Baruch (Barney Baruch's mother and father) never missed a Sunday. I became known as an oratorio singer and every year sang with Frank and Walter Damrosch in Carnegie Hall, creating many first performances.

I sang the voice in the Greek dramas given by Margaret Anglin and the Damrosch Orchestra in Carnegie Hall. Edith Chapman and I had a standing engagement to sing in Das Rheingold, the Rhine Maidens, with Damrosch. I sang a group of Ernest Bloch's songs with the Philharmonic, Strinsky conducting — the first time this weird and difficult music was heard in this country. I opened the new auditorium in Portland, Oregon, with Louis Graveure, and sang in many combinations of quartets, among them Reed Miller, Florence Hinkle, Frank Croxton and myself, and Inez Barbour, Will Wheeler, Herbert Witherspoon and I.

You have aroused my memory of contemporaries. I could go on and on. Frederic Martin, bass; Royal Fish, tenor of St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York; Elizabeth Tudor and I sang the first oratorio, "The Messiah," in San Antonio, before I ever knew my husband.

At Manila in the Philippine Islands, I established the voice department in the University. Quezon gathered 60 voices from every part of the Islands. I learned and sang their native songs in native costume presented to me by my class. I went on the theory that music is a universal language. I developed one native soprano with the most beautiful quality, not native but western, and coached her in Madame Butterfly and Aida. She went to Milan, Italy, and made her debut in Butterfly. Her husband was a painter, and Quezon financed them. She was a sensation. Another, Inez Gonzales, then only 18 years old, is singing with the American Opera Company in New York City. I sang all over China - Hongkong, Shanghai, Tien Tsin, Peking and in Japan, and sang in the first Wagnerian concert ever given in Manila. I sang the Rienzi aria and helped organize the orchestra.

(Continued on page 53)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 35)

Alexander Lippay came from Vienna to take over the music in the university and we started to organize an orchestra. He had to send for an expert tuner of instruments to teach them how to tune - they all played out of tune. But he organized a magnificent orchestra and gave an all-Wagner program - a program Toscanini would have been proud of.

The Negro spirituals, considered our American folk songs, were sung by me on one of my New York City recitals - the first white woman to sing Negro spirituals on the concert stage.

The radio concert you described was intended mostly for hospital patients. They attached ear phones to every hospital bed, and I sang the program from the shed through the huge brass megaphone. The following week,

Rosa Ponselle, who was my guest, and I gave a lovely concert for the patients. All who were able to come to the auditorium on the first filled the hall. The others heard it over the ear phones. We both sang solos and they went wild over the duets. Our voices blended beautifully. The nurses could hardly get the patients back to the hospital. They shouted, "More! More!"

My good friend, I love your sentiment over your two cats, Roger and Gray. Mine went for dogs and birds - Hartz Mountain canaries. My prize canary, "Peppo," was given to me in a flower covered cage at one of my recitals in New York City, in 1917. I heard gentle, low, rolling tones when I sang, and could not imagine where they came from. When I came back to sing an encore, Kurt Schindler, my accompanist, said, holding up the cage, "Your competitor is a canary." The audience went wild over it - the first time I ever knew of such a gift presented over the footlights. I brought him to San Antonio and left him with my husband's mother to take care of while I was off to sing a few concerts. When I returned I found a little grave in my back yard. On the tombstone was engraved, "Here Lies 'Peppo,' the sweet singer." Her pet cat was jealous and jumped on the cage and killed the canary.

My Pekinese dog was Singo Wang, a thoroughbred. We always said he was going to talk before he died, and he did, in his own language. He lived 14½ years with us. He too has a tombstone - "Our Friend and Companion for Many Years."

So ends Mary Jordan's informative and charming addenda. Her list of records in which she took part includes the two solos mentioned—"My Heart At Thy Sweet Voice" and "Sweet Dreams Of Home." One record, "Adeste Fideles," is identified as a Columbia. It probably was one by the Columbia Mixed Quartet. Other titles, presumably all made for Edison as an ensemble member or in support of a soloist, are: "Old Black Joe," "Hymns and Bells," "My Old Town," "It's A Long Lane That Has No Turning," "The Siren," "Nearer My God, To Thee," "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" "There's A Girl In Havana," "Chimes of Normandy," "The Enchantress," "Oft In The Stilly Night," "Shall You, Shall I?" "O Be Happy," "Hail Columbia," "Where The Silvery Colorado Winds Its Way," "Excerpts From 'Patience,'" "Crossing The Bar," "Softly And Tenderly," "Darling Nellie Gray," "Gypsy Maid," "Beautiful Isle Of Somewhere," "How Fair Art Thou," "Excerpts From 'Erminie,'" and "Inflammatus From Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.'"

With her letter, Miss Jordan sent a copy of the October, 1923, National Magazine, edited by Joel Mitchell Chapple. It contains an article, illustrated with four photographs of the contralto, and headed, "American Musical Advantages Supreme." The subtitle reads: "One of the foremost of our opera and concert stars, who received her training in the United States, dispels the illusion of European instruction as the 'open sesame' to fame and an artistic career." The article reveals Miss Jordan was just 11 months of age when her parents left Wales and that she began her

(Continued on page 65)

CIRCUSIANA

By DANA STEVENS

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Q: How many circus performances did Merle Evans participate in before he retired from the Ringling show?

A: I think the figure comes to around 22,000 successive performances.

Q: What is considered the worst wreck in circus history?

A: I am assuming you have reference to circus trains. There have been many disastrous circus train wrecks down through the years. One of the earlier disasters occurred on May 30, 1893, at McCanns Crossing Pennsylvania. The Walter L. Main show was enroute to Tyrone, Pa., from Osceola, Pa., when it was wrecked at this crossing. Some thirty cars were demolished and smashed into splinters. Fortunately only five persons were killed. Cause of the accident was never determined.

Q: What happened to the Al G. Barnes Circus? Did it just quit, or what?

A: The Al G. Barnes Circus was merged with the Ringling Brothers and Barnum Bailey Circus in 1938.

Q: I've heard a lot about the duties of an anchor elephant with an elephant herd. Exactly what is an anchor elephant?

A: An anchor elephant is literally the disciplinarian of the herd. When anchored or tied to another elephant she can lead the other elephant wherever she pleases. An anchor elephant, however, is not necessarily stronger than her charges, but is simply more astute in throwing her weight around.

Q: What is meant when they call an elephant a jughead?

A: Jughead is the name they give a circus work elephant. Today the tractor has largely taken over the jughead's duties in putting up and taking down the big tents and spreads of canvas.

Q: Has the Sparks Circus been important in circus history?

A: Yes, indeed. the early Sparks show, in its heyday, was considered the model show of America. It inaugurated a new era in show business when it became the first circus to exchange its 54 foot flatcars for 72 foot all-steel cars.

Q: When and where was Barnum's famed African elephant Jumbo killed?

A: Jumbo was killed in a train accident in St. Thomas, Ontario, September, 1885.

DOLLS FOR SALE

COLLECTOR'S DOLLS, Bisque Chinas and wax. Stamp for list.—K. Vent, 1036 Lowerlene, New Orleans, La. ap6215

OLD DOLLS, German painted, Bisque heads, kid bodies. All repaired in excellent condition. Special in large lots. Goodwill Industries, 1218 New Hampshire Ave., N.W., Washington, D. C. Ja3614

BISQUE ball-head, closed mouth, long shaped shoulder, glass eyes, no mark; 17" doll; $58. Bisque shoulder head unusually high molded bust, no mark; 21" doll, $14. Mirror (in chest) china, black hair, 13"; $20. Finest Heuback molded-hair boy (see Willoby in Fawcett's "Guide for Collectors" 11"; $20. French bisque Indian, closed mouth, Belton-like head, pierced ears; 18"; $45. This is just a sampling; please write other wants to Angell Doll Shop, 117 Peterson St., Mankato, Minn. d1236

DOLL RECORD FORMS - developed by a doll collector for doll collectors - the perfect Christmas gift. Check list for every detail of each doll, printed on two sides of sheet, with space for photo. Can be kept in ring binder. Excellent for insurance and inventory purposes. 20 sheets for $1.00, 50 for $2.00 postpaid. Money back guarantee.—Mrs. Emil Muuss 1724 North First, Sheboygan, Wis. d1215

MARKED jointed Jumeau - open mouth paperweight eyes, pierced ears & earrings, all original clothes. 24". dk. hair wig $85. No C. O. D. Cartage extra.—Mrs. Mark Burch, 15160 Auburn, Detroit 23, Michigan. d1842

CHOICE 16" French Bisque closed mouth. 2 Bisque head, hands, kid body. 1. 14" Alma. 16" Schoenhut baby. 20" closed mouth Bisque head. Quaint turkey red Mother Hubbard. Choice. 2 large wax over mache. 2 bisque head - nude. Many more. Reasonable prices.—Lucille Miller, 308 N. Madison St., Nappanee, Indiana. d1004

BUNDLE of Gay 90 materials $3. Kid body Bisque head doll dressed 13" tall $9. Bisque shoulder heads 3½" tall $3.50. 7" Sawdust body china head, arms & legs dressed $7.—Florence K. Grower, Rt. 5, Vernon, New York. d1213

WHOLESALE FURNITURE . . .

Dealers lists on request. Walnut, pine, maple, etc. . . . priced for resale, refinished or in the rough. Write or come to my shop—Roy Caidwell, Antiques, 326 East Grand, McAlester, Okla. mh66351

ONE THIRD OFF ON FOLLOWING:

Paper dolls, Antique China & Bisque, European dolls, Edison Phonos, cylinder and disc records. Hatpins, Souv. Spoons, Calendars, Chinese paintings, fans, old lace. Lists 10c.—Florence Nelson, 1613 Buys Rd., Muskegon, Mich. d3676

HUGE old pine butter bowl 23" d.a., 8" deep, refinished $12. Old fashioned wall telephones in working order, oak cabinets $7.00 ea. Early brass candlesticks with push-ups and octagonal bases highly polished 8" high $11. Large brass schoolmasters bell 6 1/2" d.a., 10 1/2" high, polished $9. Ansonia Spun brass kettle 11 1/4" dia., 7 1/2" high, iron bale, Pat. 1851. Polished and lacquered, dented around bottom $12.50. Individual thumbprint saits Flint snow wear, 7 at $1.25 each. Davenport ironstone 6 sided pitcher, blue and white, Friburg, Proof 13" tall $13. Oval Bennington vegetable dish 11 1/4" long, 2 1/4" deep $10. Satisfaction guaranteed. Transportation extra.—Millbrook Antiques, Irma E. Weeks, R. 2, Norwiche, New York. d1009

ANTIQUE GUNS: Percussion Fowling gun $20. Napoleonic Flintlock .69 cal. $45. Parker-Snow .58 rimfire rifle $50. Remington Rolling-block .45-70 cal. $25. Colt Model 1860 Richards conv. .44 cal. $50. Colt "Frontier" .44-40 cal. $65. Miscellaneous: Iron Toy circus wagon $10. Book-Gasoline & Kerosene carburetors, 1919 edition $2.50. Old playing cards $2. Views of World War I for stereoscope $2.50. French World War I helmet $5. Mexican flag $5. World globe $10. Brass handled sword bayonet $5. Tiffany punch bowl set $35. If further information or photo of any above items is desired, please write. Transportation extra.—John K. Marshall, 36 Court St., Morristown, New Jersey. d1468

FOR SALE: 42 drawer pine cabinet, Cut glass. Colored glass tumblers & Pitchers, Butter pats, Lamps of all kinds. Stamp.—Kietzer's, 609 Wall, Mankato, Minn. d1861

FREE Monthly Antique List, reasonable prices.—B. Bell, Rte. 3, La-Grange, Indiana. ja3882

WEDDING BAND China, partial set, Napoleon, Toby type, large pitcher, France $20. Blue glass ink well, enameled cover $5. 2 Deep D & B sauces each $2. D & B sauce Vaseline $5. Blue Onion sauces, 6, England, 1 chipped, lot $6.50. 2 Blue Onion platters or trays, English, each $6.50. Match boxes, tin and iron—Tin melon mold, cover $2.25. 12 tiny melon molds each 25c. same heart shaped 25c. Fireplace utensil holder, birds, vines, etc., ornate $9. Grape pattern iron shelf brackets $4 pr. - others lacy designs $2.50 pr. 46" Fireplace crane $10. Toy Stove, 2 covers missed, utensils $7. Metal foot tub, grape handles $2.50. 3 very old copper pots, handled, one covered, Colonial Exhibition items, books, sample cloth, razor - Declaration of Independence kerchief, early 1800, offer please. 1876 Centennial Picture, Liberty, Presidents, etc. $10. Red End fringed towels $2.50. Milk Glass Sawtooth creamer $15. open sugar, same $12. T. Roosevelt books, Scott Stamp catalogue - 1901 or 1902 $2. Peterson's Book, 1874 $3. Atlantic Monthly, 1860, $2.50. Large general stock. Transportation extra.—Maple Leaf Shop, Cape Neddick, Maine. d10041

MECHANICAL BANKS - Eagle and Eaglets $40. Tammany $20. Registering Banks - Beehive $25. National Recording $15. Kingsbury (tin) $10. Copper Luster Pitcher 5 1/2" H., 1 1/2" yellow band $24. Log Cabin spooner $4. butter lid, chip inside rim $2. Postage extra. Wanted to buy - Occupational Shaving Mugs. —John W. Reed, 243 East Orange St., Shippensburg, Pennsylvania. d1234

10% DISCOUNT (anything unsold) Oct. Nov. Ads under Antiques, (Special $2.00 holiday buying plates, some H.P., lovely bowls, colored glass, colored vases.) Five Gay Dancing Girl prints, different countries $1 each, all for $4.50. 7"x5" "Little Triumph" iron stove 16"x12", salesman's sample $12. Head Study Founder Salvation Army, plate dated 1912, unusual $6. Lovely large shades of green vase, Austrian H.P. flowers, 1 finial missing $10, bargain. Flo Blue gravy boat & tray some IRR. on bottom of gravy, otherwise very fine $6.50. Lovely pr. boy & girl book ends in salt, snow white, quaint & sweet $6. Large 33"x28" print, little girl in blue gown seated, ornate chair, pretty $10. Blue Violin bottle $2. Sweet oak wash stand all original, small old varnish $10. Lots of small antiques for resale or gifts. Everything guaranteed old. Carriage extra.—A. Dolaway, 7 Cromwell St., Wheeling, West Virginia. d14811

CLUNY LACE curtains, beautiful medallion in corner, 2 yards x 46 inches wide, $25. 15 Chanticleer buttons. B. C. Pl. 51, No. 4, $18 for lot.—Mrs. George L. Elliott, 735 N. LaGrange Rd., La-Grange Illinois. d1042

SCRAPS IN SHEETS Santa heads, Bible quotes, Scenic Floradora heads.—Wilgoeki, 14837 Sussex, Detroit 27, Mich. f3652

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

ATTENTION Country scout buying from farm homes, auctions, attics, etc. Reasonable prices. Write me your wants. All letters answered.—Edward Sheppard, 221 Water St., Catskill, N. Y. d3234

COLOR SLIDES

2x2 COLOR SLIDES. Antique automobiles, covered bridges, old locomotives, trolley cars, band stands, old houses, churches and many other unusual slides. Also scenic New England.—Weldon Color Slides, Monson, Mass. f3084

REFINISHING & REPAIRING

REPAIR CHINA, ceramics, permanently, with pure white Faience. No firing or riveting. Can be sanded, filed, washed in hot water, mixed with oil paints. Materials, complete instructions $2.00 - Faience Ceramic Laboratory, 2135 Maplewood, Toledo, Ohio. mh60211

IRONSTONE PUTTY, successful for repairing china, pottery, dolls, bisque. Filling holes, cracks and building missing parts. Adheres permanently to china, metal and wood. Dries hard in few hours. Will not shrink, crack or crumble. Can be carved, sawed, sanded, painted or glazed. Keeps indefinitely without waste. 8 oz. with directions. Postpaid, $1.45 - Frank C. Williams, Box 281, Colchester, Illinois. f3449

REPAIR your old rush seat chairs. Sufficient fibre rush to weave one chair with instructions, $1.25 postpaid. Add 25c west of Rockles.—Nelson Rapids Co., 1924 Nelson Ave., SE, Grand Rapids, Michigan. f3215

STRIP NICKEL, Iron, brass, copper, Instructions & formula $1. It does the job.—Russell Fegley, Box 372, Sinking Springs, Pa. an120821

AT LAST! Clear, boilproof cement No. 200 for china and glass! Cemented china can be used with hot tea and coffee and washed in hot soapy water. No firing required. Complete kit and instructions. Unconditionally Guaranteed $4.00 P. P.—A. Ludwig Klein and Son, Adhesive Specialists since 1786, 621 S. Ninth St., Philadelphia 47, Pa. d3388

CANE THAT CHAIR YOURSELF. The Newell Workshop has a complete caning kit containing tools, supplies, natural cane, and "easy-to-follow" instructions. With this kit, anyone can restore his favorite antique or heirloom caned chair. Kits available $2.00 postpaid. Additional chair-lots of cane $1.00 (covers approximately one square foot). If possible enclose a piece of the old cane you plan to replace.—Newell Workshop, Woodstock, New York. d34011

MUSEUM NEWS

(Continued from page 45)

Syracuse China Corporation and the Ferro Corporation, Cleveland, Ohio. The Ceramic National has exerted great influence on the field of ceramics and new talent is discovered each year through its efforts. It is the only exhibition of its kind in the world.

* * *

The Rochester Museum Association, Rochester, N. Y., is sponsoring Audubon Screen Tours in its Youth Lecture Series for the 1956-1957 season. Six of North America's best known wildlife photographers and lecturers are being featured on successive Saturday mornings at 10:30 A.M. The Series began on Oct. 27, 1956 and will be completed March 2, 1957.

* * *

The Newark Museum, 43-49 Washington St., Newark 1, N. J., is holding its "Fifth Annual Christmas Exhibition—Sale of Work by New Jersey Artists and Craftsmen" through January 6. Items in the exhibit such as ceramics, jewelry, woodenware, weaving are priced from $1 to $25. Prints, paintings and furniture may be priced up to $50.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 53)

musical career in Scranton when she was only 14. One of the photos was taken in the music room of the singer's beautiful San Antonio home and another shows her in front of the house, "Here," say the cutlines, "some of the country's most famous celebrities have been entertained, among them General Pershing, Rosa Ponselle, Frances Nash, General John L. Hines and Major E. M. Lewis."

I find the following quotation from the magazine article especially appropriate to conclude with:

"In addition to her strictly professional work and duties Miss Jordan is a wonderfully well educated woman, being a profound student of history, biography and religious theology. To be a true artist one must know life from all angles. Her theory of success is that it is three-fourths hard work and one-fourth natural ability. 'Hard work is the master-key that unlocks every door' is one of her favorite self-coined quotations. 'Success did not come easy with me,' she confessed in a reminiscent mood. 'Of course, one must have a voice, next to that brains and good health, to sing. You must have the urge of genius or you will never get anywhere without work.'"

REAL ESTATE

FOR RENT OR SALE: Colonial brick building, pine panelled, large stone fireplace—ideal for Antique Shop. Intersection Highways 55, 522, and 340. Northern entrance to Skyline Drive. 70 miles from Washington, D. C. Heavy tourist travel. No Antique Shop in town.—Front Royal, Virginia. P.O. Box 935. ja32511

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Sir George Robey

By JIM WALSH

Few American collectors realize the British phonograph companies had a galaxy of pioneer recording artists entitled to rank with the best our country has produced.

Billy Williams, "The Man in the Velvet Suit," might fairly be called the British Billy Murray. Before his death in 1915 Australian-born Williams dominated the popular record output in Britain more completely even than Murray did in the States. King Edward's favorite tenor, Ernest Pike, was the English equivalent of Henry Burr; Peter Dawson corresponded to Frank C. Stanley, and Florrie Forde was the British Ada Jones. Hundreds of other British artists won their share of popularity and fame. Some, like Harry Lauder, were as successful in America as at home. So it seems only fair that the achievements of some of their more outstanding performers should be chronicled on occasion in HOBBIES.

The subject of this article was one of the most popular of old-time British comedians; one whose gallant work in behalf of the Empire's war efforts caused him to be knighted—Sir George Robey. Never so big a seller on records as Billy Williams or Billy Whitlock, he was as popular on the stage as Lauder and his career ended only when he died a few years ago, aged 87. That career also included a "trial by ordeal" with a phonograph association which is amusing to look back on now but must have been peculiarly exasperating to the comedian who, although he delighted to appear in music halls wearing outlandish attire and ludicrous wigs, was a man of innate personal dignity. I shall relate in its proper place the sad story of George's sufferings from the "Robeyphone."

But first a confession. I believe this is the first article I have written about an artist without having heard some of his records. As far as I can recall, the only time I ever listened to George Robey's voice was when I tuned in a short wave program from London and heard him singing. This "Music Hall" offering was broadcast in October, 1952, and Robey was the only performer whose name meant anything to me. Variety later commented: "The bill was distinguished by the inclusion of vet George Robey, who that day celebrated his 83rd birthday. He made a gallant but brief contribution which garnered sturdy mittings from the studio audience." (The production also was given on TV). I wrote to the comedian telling him of the pleasure it had given me to hear him, recalling some of the events of his remarkable career and asking if he could spare me an autographed photo. Instead of a photo he sent a brief note saying: "Thank you for your kind letter. Thought you would prefer this self drawn sketch." The other side of the card contained a caricature of himself in blue ink, with the exception of the nose, which is a vivid red. It is worth mentioning that, aside from being a comedian, Robey won recognition both as a painter and cartoonist.

I was glad to receive the first person caricature of so eminent a humorist but I still wanted a photo, and was delighted when Mrs. C. K. Fletcher, a London dealer in autographs and celebrities' letters, sent me two fine signed photographs of Robey, with a note saying she believed they would give me "endless amusement." One look when the pictures came by registered mail made me sure Mrs. Fletcher was right. They amused me so much, in fact, that I felt I must share them with HOBBIES readers even though I couldn't give any firsthand information about Robey recordings. So I have sent the likenesses along with this biography and have also included Sir George's pen-and-ink misrepresentation of himself in the hope that they can be reproduced and add to the word's merriment. That is an appropriate thing to do, for Robey called himself—or at least the music halls termed him—"The World's Fun Provider" and "The Prime Minister of Mirth." Those who are interested in obtaining specimens of his recorded voice no doubt can obtain them from a Canadian HOBBIES advertiser—Ross, Court—or some of the other firms that import rare English records.

Now, if I can stop laughing long enough at the replica of Robey in his monstrous wig and sour-pickle expression, depicting the part he took in some unidentified "pantomime," we'll consider some details of his career.

II "Grand Old Man of the Music Halls"

George Robey was born September 20, 1869, at Herne Hill, London, and by the time he died November 29, 1954, in his home in Saltdean, Sussex, he had become known as "The Grand Old Man of the Music Halls." He had also been knighted and dubbed Sir George Robey by Queen Elizabeth II in the 1954 New Year's honors list for his war-time services to the Empire. But before his knight-ing and the death that followed less than a year later, George Robey had enjoyed, or endured, some 63 years, first as a struggling drudge and then as a star of the British stage. His achievements had ranged from grotesquely comic parts in music hall, pantomime and harlequinade, to portraying Falstaff on the stage and Sancho Panza on the screen.

Robey's real name was George Edward Wade. His family wanted him to be an engineer and didn't approve of his theatrical ambitions. When he decided to go on the stage he thought it would be undignified to use his real name so called himself George Robey, from the name of one of his school-boy friends.

The comedian used to recall that he got into the theatrical profession almost by accident at the age of 21 in 1891 when he volunteered to be a subject for a hypnotist and convulsed the audience by singing comic songs in a pretended trance.

Many admirers of the man who played such broad comedy roles were surprised to find he was exceptionally well educated and had been educated in Germany and at the University of Cambridge. He made no apologies for being what he called "a red-nosed comedian" and said: "I was never afraid of the bellylaugh. I believe in honest vulgarity. So did Shakespeare. Honest vulgarity is the finest antidote I know of to present-day hypocrisy." An ambitious young comedian who called himself Charlie Chaplin partly modeled his famous tramp act after Robey's stage costume of baggy black clerical dress, shallow derby and small cane.

Robey's appearance as Sancho Panza was made in a film of "Don Quixote," starring the great Russian basso, Feodor Chaliapin and he appeared on the stage in 1935 as Falstaff in Shakespeare's "Henry IV." The comedian collected stamps and Chinese porcelain. Some of his amateur paintings were exhibited at the Royal Academy, and one of his hobbies was making excellent violins. Beginning at small salaries, his fee for music hall appearances rose to approximately $4,000 a week. The people of Britain, proverbially warm-hearted toward their variety favorites, loved him all the more after he gave hundreds of charity performances and raised large sums for British and French relief organizations in World War I.

The foregoing is a broad outline of George Robey's career. The following more detailed information was obtained from "Music Hall Parade," a book written by M. Willson Disher and published in England some 20

George Robey, as he appeared wearing a ludicrous "Clarkson wig," in an unidentified Christmas pantomime.

